T. N. THE TRANSLATOR TO THE READER.

GOod Reader, here is now offred you the fourth time prinsed in Englishe, M. Caluines booke of the Institution of Christian Religion, a booke of great labour to the author, and of great profit to the Church of God. M. Caluine first wrote it whē he was a yongman, a booke of small volume, and since that season he hath at sundry times published it with new encreases, still protesting at euery edition himselfe to be one of those qui scribendo proficiunt, & proficiendo scribunt, which with their writing do grow in profiting, and with their profiting do procede in writing. At length hauinge in many his other works trauailed about exposition of sundry books of the Scriptures, & in the same finding occasion to discourse of sundry common places and matters of doctrine, which being handled according to the occasiōs of the text that were offred him & not in any other methode, were not so ready for the readers vse, he therefore entred into this purpose, to enlarge this booke of Institution & therein to treate of all those titles and common places largely, with this entent, that whensoeuer any occasiō fell in his other bookes to treate of any such cause, he would not newly amplifie his bookes of Commentaries and expositions therewith, but referre his reader wholly to this storehouse and treasure of that sort of diuine learning. As age and weakenesse grew vpon him, so he hastened his labour, and according to his petition to God, he in maner ended his life with his worke, for he liued not long after. So great a iewell was meete to be made most beneficiall, that is to say, applied to most common vse. Therefore in the very beginning of the Queenes Maiesties most blessed reigne, I translated it out of Latine into Englishe, for the commoditie of the church of Christ, at the speciall request of my dere frendes of worthy memory Reginald VVolfe & Edward VVhitchurch, the one her Maiesties Printer for the Hebrewe, Greke, & Latine tongs, the other her Highnes Printer of the bookes of cōmon Prayer. I performed my worke in the house of my sayd frende Edward VVhitchurch, a man well knowen of vpright hart and dealing, an auncient zelous Gospeller, as plaine and true a frend as euer I knew liuing, and as desirous to do any thinge to common good, specially by the aduauncement of true religion. At my ſaid firſt editiõ of this booke, I cõſidered how the auth thereof had of long time purpoſely labored to write the ſame moſt exactly and to packe great plenty of matter in ſmall roome of wordes, yea and tho ſo circumſpectly and preciſely ordered, to auoide the cauillations of ſuch, for enmity to the trueth threin contained, woulde gladly ſeeke and abu all aduantages which migh be found by any ouerſight in penning of it, th the ſentences were thereby become ſo full as nothinge might well be adde without idle ſuperfluity, & againe ſo niely pared that nothing could be mi niſhed without taking away ſome neceſſary ſubſtance of matter therein ex preſſed. This maner of writinge, beſide the peculiar tearmes of artes and f gures, and the difficulty of the matters themſelues, being throughout ente laced with the ſchoolemens controuerſies, made a great hardnes in the a thors own booke, in that tong wherin otherwiſe he is both plentiful & eaſi inſomuch that it ſuffiſeth not to read him once, vnleſſe you can be conte to read in vaine. This conſideration encombred me with great doutfulne for the whole order & frame of my tranſlation. If I ſhould follow the word

I ſaw that of neceſſity the hardneſſe in the tranſlation muſt nedes be gre ter than was in the tonge wherin it was originally wrytten. If I ſhould lea the courſe of wordes, and graunt my ſelfe liberty after the naturall maner my owne tonge, to ſay that in Engliſh which I conceaued to be his meani in Latine, I plainely perceiued how hardly I might eſcape errour, & on t other ſide in this matter of faith and religion, howe perillous it was to err
For I durſt not preſume to warrant my ſelfe to haue his meaninge witho his wordes. And they that wœe what it is to tranſlate well and faithfull ſpecially in matters of religion, do know that not the only grammaticall con ſtruction of words ſuffiſeth, but the very buildinge and order to obſerue aduantages of vehemence or grace, by placing or accent of wordes, make much to the true ſetting foorth of a wryters minde. In the ende, I reſted v pon this determination, to followe the wordes ſo neere as the phraſe of th Engliſhe tonge would ſuffer me. VVhich purpoſe I ſo performed, that if th Engliſhe booke were printed in ſuch paper and letter as the Latine is, ſhould not exceede the Latine in quantity. VVhereby, beſide all other com modities that a faithfull tranſlation of ſo good a worke may bring, this on benefit is moreouer prouided for ſuch as are deſirous to attaine ſome know ledge of the Latine tongue (which is at this time to be wiſhed in many thoſe men for whoſe profeſſion this booke moſt fitly ſerueth) that they ſha not finde any more Engliſh than ſhall ſuffice to conſtrue the Latine witha except in ſuch fewe places, where the great difference of the phraſes of th languages enforced me: ſo that comparing the one with the other, they ſha both profit in good matter, and furniſhe themſelues with vnderſtanding that ſpeach, wherin the greateſt treaſures of knowledge are diſcloſed. In th ding hereof, I did not only truſt mine owne wit or bility, but examined my whole doinge from ſentence to ſentence throughout the whole booke with conference & ouerlooking of ſuch learned men, amy tranſlation being allowed by their iudgement, I did both ſatisfie mie owne conſcience that I had done truly, & their approuing of it might be good warrant to the reader, that nothing ſhould herein be deliuered him ut ſound vnmingled and vncorrupted doctrin, euē in ſuch ſort as the auth himſelf had firſt framed it. All that I wrote, the graue, learned & vertuus mā M. Dauid VVhitehed (whom I name with honorable remembrāce did among other, compare with the Latine, examining euery ſentence throughout the whole booke. Beſide all this, I priuately required many, & generliy all men with whom I euer had any talke of this matter, that if they foud any thing either not truly tranſlated, or not plainly Engliſhed, they woud enforme me thereof, promiſinge either to ſatisfie them or to amende it. Snce which time I haue not bin aduertiſed by any man of any thing which hey would require to be altered. Neither had I my ſelfe, by reaſon of myprofeſſion beinge otherwiſe occupied, any leaſure to peruſe it. And that is ne cauſe, why not only at the ſecond & third time but alſo at this impreſſionyou haue no change at all in the worke, but altogether as it was before. In dde I perceiued many mē wel minded & ſtudious of this booke, to require table for their eaſe and furtherance. Their honeſt deſire I haue fulfilled n the ſecond edition, & haue added thereto a plentifull table, which is alp here inſerted which I haue tranſlated out of the Latine, wherin the princ ball matters diſcourſed in this booke are named by their due titles in order of Alphabet, and vnder euery title is ſet forth a briefe ſumme of the wholedoctrine taught in this booke, concerning the matter belonging to that titt or cōmon place: and therwith is added the Booke, Chapter, and Section or diuiſion of the Chapter, where the ſame doctrine is more largely expreſſed and proued. And for the redier finding thereof, I haue cauſed the number of Chapters to be ſet vpon euery leafe in the booke, and quoted the Section alſo by their due numbers with the vſuall figures of Algoriſme. And nove at this laſt publiſhinge, my friendes by whoſe charge it is nowe newely imprinted in a Romaine letter and ſmaller volume, with diuerſe other Tables, which ſince my ſecond edition were gathered by M. Marlorate, to be tranſlated and here added for your benefite. Moreouer, whereas in the firſt edition the euill maner of my ſcriblinge hande, the enterlininge of my Copy, and ſome other cauſes well knowen amonge workemen of that faculty, made very many faultes to paſſe the Printer, I haue in the ſecond impreſſion cauſed the booke to be compoſed by the printed copy, and corrected by the written: whereby it muſt needes be that it was much more truely done than the other was, as I my ſelfe do knowe aboue three hundred faultes amended. And now at this laſt

Printinge, the composinge after a printed copy bringeth some ease, and i diligence vsed about the correction, hauing bin right faithfully looked v to, it can not be but muo more truely set forth. This also is performed, th the volume being smaller, with a letter fayre and legible, it is of more ea price, that it may be of more common vse, and so to more large communic tinge of so great a treasre to those that desire Christian knowledge for i structiō of their faith, & guiding of their dueties. Thus on the printers b halfe and mine, your eae and commodity (good readers) is prouided f
Now resteth your owne diligence for your own profit in studying it. To spe many words in cōmendin the worke it selfe, were nedelesse: yet thus mu
I thinke I may both not vntruely and not vainely say, that though ma great learned men haue witten bookes of common places of our religion, Melanchton, Sarcerius, and other, whose workes are very good and profi ble to the Church of God: yet by the consenting iudgemēt of those that v derstande the same, there's none to be compared to this worke of Caluin both for his substantiali sufficience of doctrine, the sounde declaration trueth in articles of our relyion, the large and learned confirmation of t same, and the most deepe and stronge confutation of all olde and new her sies: so that (the holy Scriptures excepted) this is one of the most profita bookes for all students of Christian diuinity. VVherein (good readers) a am glad for the glory of God, and for your benefit, that you may haue t profit of my trauell, so I beseeh you let me haue this vse of your gentlene that my doings may be construed to such good end as I haue meant them:
that if any thinge mislike you by reason of hardnes, or any other cause th may seeme to be my default, you will not forthwith condemne the worke, b read it ofter: in which doing you shall finde (as many haue confessed to that they haue found by experience) that those thinges which at the fi readinge shall displease you for hardnes, shall be founde so easie as so ha matter would suffer, & for the most part more easie than some other phra which should with greater loosnes & smoother sliding away deceiue yo vnderstandinge. I confesse in dede it is not finely & pleasantly written, n carieth with it such delitefull grace of speech as some great wise men ha bestowed vpon some fooliſher things, yet it containeth sound truth set for with faithfull plainnes without wrong done to the authors meaninge: and if you accept & vse it, you shall not faile to haue great profit thereby, and shall thinke my labour very well employed.

TO

TO THE MOST MIGHTY AND NOBLE PRINCE, FRANCISCE THE MOST CHRISTIAN KING THE FRENCH KING his ſoueraigne Lorde, Iohn Caluine wiſheth peace and ſaluation in Chriſt.

WHEN I did firſt ſet my hand to this worke, I thought nothing leſſe (moſt noble King) than to write any thing that afterwarde ſhould be preſented to your maieſtie. Onely my minde was to teache certaine introductions whereby they that are touched with ſome zeale of religion might be inſtructed to true godlineſſe. And this trauaile I tooke principally for my contremen the Frenchemen, of whom I vnderſtode very many to hunger and thirſt for Chriſt, but I ſawe very few that had rightly receiued ſo much as any litle knowledge of him. And that this was my meaning, the boke it ſelfe declareth, being framed after a ſimple and plaine maner of teaching. But when I perceiued, that the furious rage of ſome wicked men hath ſo farre preuailed in your realme, that in it there is no roome for ſounde doctrine: I thought I ſhould do a thing worth my trauaile, all in one worke both to geue an inſtruction for them, and to declare a confeſſion to you: whereby ye may learne what maner of doctrine ẏ is, againſt which thoſe furious men burne in ſo great rage, who at this day trouble your realme with ſweard and fier. For I will not feare to cõfeſſe, that I haue in this worke comprehended in maner the ſumme of that ſelfe ſame doctrine, againſt which they crie out, that it ought to be puniſhed with priſonment, baniſhement, condemnation without iudgement, and with fier, that it ought to be chaced away by lande and ſea. I knowe in deede with howe hainous informations they haue filled your minde and eares, to make our cauſe moſt hatefull vnto you: but this of your clemencie ought you to wey, that there ſhalbe no innocence, neither in wordes nor deedes, if it may be enough to accuſe. Truely if any, to bring th ſame in hatred, ſhall allege that this Doctrine whereof I nowe g about to yelde accompt vnto you, hath bene long ago condemned b conſente of all degrees, and atteinted by many iudgements alread geuen in iudiciall courtes: all that he ſaith ſhall amount to no mor but that it hath partly bin violently throwen downe by the banding and power of the aduerſaries thereof, and partly bene traitorouſl and fraudulently oppreſſed with their lies and ſuttle practiſes an ſclaunders. Herein is violence ſhewed, that without hearing the cauſ bloody ſentences are pronounced againſt it: here in is fraude, tha it is without deſeruing accuſed of ſedition and euell doing. And tha none may thinke that we wrongfully complaine of theſe things, yo your ſelfe can beare vs witneſſe, moſt noble king, with howe lien ſclaunders it is dayely accuſed vnto you: as, that it tēdeth to no othe ende but to writh from kings their ſcepters out of their handes, t throwe, downe all iudges ſeates and iudgements, to ſubuerte all o ders and ciuile gouernements, to trouble the peace and quiete of th people, to aboliſh all lawes, to vndo all proprieties and poſſeſſion finally to turne all things vpſide downe. And yet you heare ỹ ſmalle portion. For horrible things they ſpreade abroade among the peopl which if they were true, the whole world might worthily iudge with the mainteiners thereof, worthy of a thouſande fiers and ga lowes. Who can nowe maruell that a common hatred is kindled gainſt it, where ſuch moſt wrongfull accuſations are beleued. Lo, th is the cauſe that all degrees agree and conſpire to the condemnin of vs & our doctrine. They that ſit to iudge, being rauiſhed with th affectiō pronounce for ſentences their foreconceiued determinatiō which they brought from home with them: and thinke that the haue well enough diſcharged their duties if they commaunde n man to be drawen to execution, but ſuch as are founde gilty eithe by their owne confeſſion or by ſufficient witneſſe. But of what faul of that condemned doctrine, ſay they. But by what lawe condemne Herein ſhould haue ſtande the ſuccor of defenſe for them, not t denie the doctrine it ſelfe, but to mainteine it for true. But here is a libertie ones to mutter vtterly cut of from vs.

Wherefore I do not vniuſtly require, moſt victorious King, that may pleaſe you to take into your owne hande the whole hearing o
the cauſe which hetherto hath bene troubleſomly handled or rathe careleſly toſſed without all order of lawe, more by outragious heat than iudiciall grauitie. Neither yet thinke, that I here go about to make mine owne priuate defenſe, whereby I may procure to my ſelf safe returne into my natiue cõtree, to which although I beare such affection of naturall loue as becometh me: yet as the case nowe is, not miscõtentedly want it. But I take vppon me the common cause of all the godly, yea and the cause of Christ himself, which at this day lieth as it were in despeired case, and that in deede rather by the tyranny of certaine Pharisees, than by your owne knowledge. But howe that cometh to passe, it is not here needefull to tell: truely it lieth in great distresse. For thus farre haue the vngodly preuailed, that the trueth of Christ, if it be not destroyed being chaced away and scattered abrode, yet it lieth hidden as buried and vnregarded: as for the silly poore Church, it is either wasted with cruell slaughters, and so driuen away with banishments or dismayed with threatens and terrors that it dare not ones open her mouth. And yet still they cõtinue with such rage and fercenesse as they are wont, thrusting strongly against the wall already bending & the ruine which themselues haue made. In the meane time no man stepperh fourth, to set himselfe in defense against such furies. And they, if there be any such, that will most of all seeme to fauor the truth, say no more but that it were good to pardon the error and vnskilfulnesse of ignorante men. For thus the good natured men forsooth do speake, calling that error and vnskilfulnesse which they knowe to be the most certaine trueth of God: calling them ignorante men, whoes witt they see that Christ hath not so despised but that he hath vouchesaued to communicate to them the misteries of his heauenly wisedome. So much are all ashamed of the Gospell. It shalbe your office (most noble King) not to turne away your eares nor your minde from so iust a defense: specially when so great a matter is in question: namely howe the glorie of God may be mainteined safe in earth, howe the trueth of God may kepe her honor, howe Christ may haue his kingdome preserued whole among vs. This is a matter worthy for your eares, worthy for your iudgemẽt, worthy for your royall throne. For, euen this thought maketh a true king: to acknowledge himself in the gouernance of his kingdome to be the minister of God, Neither doth he nowe vse a kingdome but a robberie, which reigneth not to this ende that he may serue the glorie of God. And he is deceiued that loketh for a lõg prosperitie of that kingdome, which is not ruled by the scepter of God, that is, by his holy word: forasmuch as the heauenly Oracle can not proue vaine, whereby it is proclaimed, that the people shalbe scattered abrode where prophecie faileth. Neither ought the contempt of our baseneſſe to withdrawe you frõ this purpose. We verily knowe

right well, howe poore and abiect silly men we be, namely in th sight of God miserable sinners, in the sight of men most despise persones, yea and (if you will) certaine excrements and outcastes the world, or whatsoeuer viler thing may be named: so that the remaineth nothing for vs to glorie vpon before God, but his one mercie whereby we are without any our deseruing receiued into th hope of eternall saluation: and before men, nothing but our weake nesse, which amõg them it is taken for a most great shame to cõfes so much as in countenãce. But our doctrine must be auãced hy abou all glorie of the world, must stande vnuanquishable aboue all powe

Our aduersaries in deede do crie out to the contrary, and say that w falsly pretende the word of God, whereof we be most wicked co rupters. But how this is not onely a malicious sclaunder, but also notable shamelessnesse, you your selfe by reading our confessio may according to your wisedome iudge. Yet here it is also good t say somwhat, either to moue you to willingnesse and heedefulnesse, Rom. 12 6. or at the least to prepare you a way to the reading of it. Paule, wh he willed all prophecie to be framed to the agreableneſse of faith, hath set a most sure rule whereby the expoũding of Scripture ough to be tried. Nowe if our doctrine be examined by this rule of faith the victorie is already in our handes. For, what doth better or mo fitly agree with faith, than to acknowledge our selues naked of a vertue, that of God we may be clothed? empty of all good, that o him we may be filled? the bonde seruantes of sinne, that of him w may be made fre? blinde, that of him we may be enlightened? lam that of him we may be made streight? feble, that of him we may b vpholdẽ? to take from our selues all matter of glorieng, that he alo may be glorious on hy, and in him we may glorie? When we say the and such like things, they interrupt vs & cry out, that by this mean is ouerthrowen I wote not what blind light of nature, fained preparations, freewill, workes meritorious of eternall saluation, togethe with their supererogatiõs: becausse they can not abide that the whol

haue drawen to much out of the fountaine of liuing water: on the contrary side they are sharply rebuked which haue digged to themselues pittes, broken pittes, which are not able to holde water. Againe what is more agreable with faith, than to promise to themselues that God will be to them a fauorable Father, where Christ is acknowledged to be a brother and procurer of fauor? than assuredly to loke for al things ioiful & prosperous at his hãd, whose vnspekable loue toward vs hath proceded so farre, that he hath not spared his onely begotten sonne, but that he gaue him for vs? than to rest in sure loking for saluation & eternall life, where we thinke vpon Christ geuen of the Father, in whom such treasures are hidden? Here they steppe in against vs, and crie out that this certainty of affiance is not without arrogance and presumption. But as nothing of our selues, so all things ought we to presume of God: and we are for none other reason spoiled of vaine glory, but that we should learne to glorie in the Lorde. What is there more? Consider (most mighty Prince) all the partes of our cause, and thinke that we are worse than any kinde of wicked men, vnlesse you plainly finde that we are in trouble and railed at, bycause we put our trust in the liuing God: becaus we beleue that this is the eternall life, to knowe one trewe God, and him whom he hath sent Iesus Christ. For this hope, some of vs are bounde in irons, some are whipped, some are caried about in mockage, some are condemned without iudgement, some are most cruelly tormented, some escape away by flight: but all are distressed with trouble, all are most terribly accursed, torne with slaunders, and handled in most hainous wise. Nowe loke vpõ our aduersaries (I speake of the degree of Priests, at whose becke and will the other exercise ennimities against vs) and consider with me a little while, with what zeale they be caried. As for the trewe religion, which is taught in the Scriptures, and which ought to be holden certaine among all men, they easily geue leaue both to themselues and other to be ignorant of it, to neglect and despise it: and they thinke that it maketh small matter what euery man beleue or not beleue concerning God and Christ, so that he do with an vnexpressed faith (as they call it) submit his minde to the iudgement of the Church: neither are they much moued, if it happen that the glorie of God be defiled with manifest blasphemies, so that no man lift vp his finger against the supremacie of the Apostolike sea, and authority of our holy mother the Church. Why therefore do they with so great crueltie & feirceneſſe fight for the Masse, Purgatorie, Pilgremages, and such trifles, so farre forth, that they say that without most expressed faith (as I may so call it) of theſe things, godlineſſe can not ſtande, whereas yet they proue no that any of theſe things come out of the word of God? Why ſo, bu bycauſe their belly is their God, their kitchen is their religion: whic being taken away, they thinke that they ſhall not onely be no Chri ſtians, but alſo no men? For though ſome of them do plenteouſl glutt themſelues, & other ſome liue with gnawing of poore cruſte yet they liue all of one pot, which without theſe warming helpe ſhould not onely waxe colde, but alſo throughly freeſe. Therefor how much more euery of thē is carefull for his belly, ſo much mo earneſt warrier he is for their faith. Finally they all endeuor them ſelues to this, to kepe ſtill either both kingdome ſafe, and their bel full: but of pure zeale none of them ſheweth any token, be it neu ſo little. Neither yet ſo do they ceaſe to ſlaunder our doctrine, an by al the colours that they can, to accuſe and defame it, whereby the may bring it into hatred or ſuſpicion. They call it newe, and late forged: they cauill that it is doubtfull, & vncertaine: they demaund by what miracles it is confirmed: they aſke whether it be meete tha it ſhould preuaile againſt the conſente of ſo many holy Fathers, an the moſt auncient cuſtome: they preſſe vpon vs to confes it to b ſchiſmaticall, which moueth warre againſt the Church, or that th Church hath lien dead in many ages in which no ſuch thing ha bene hearde of. Laſt of all they ſay, that there neede no argument for (ſay they) it may by the frutes be iudged of what ſorte it is, na mely which hath bredde ſo huge a heape of ſectes, ſo many turmoil of ſeditions, ſo great licentiouſneſſe of vices. Trewly full eaſy it i for them, to triumph vpō a forſaken cauſe before the light beleuin and ignorant multitude. But if we might alſo haue our turne likewi allowed vs to ſpeake, verily this ſharpe heate would ſone be coole wherewith they do ſo with full mouth and as licentiouſly as vnpu niſhedly fome againſt vs.

Firſt, wheras they call it newe, they do great wrong to God, whoſ holy word deſerued not to be accuſed of newneſſe. To them in dee
I nothing dout that it is new, to whom Chriſt is newe, & his Goſpe Rom. 4. 25. is newe. But they which knewe that preaching of Paule to be olde that Ieſus Chriſt died for our ſinnes, and roſe againe for our iuſtifi cation, ſhall finde nothing newe among vs. Wheras it hath long lie hidden vnknowen, and buried: that is the fault of the vngodlineſſ of men. Nowe ſith it is by the bountifulneſſe of God reſtored to vs it ought at leaſt by right of full reſtitution to receiue againe the titl of auncientie.

Out of the ſame fountaine of ignorance ſpringeth this, that the

take it for doubtfull and vncertaine. This verely is it which the Lord by his Prophet complaineth, that the oxe knewe his owner, and the asse his maisters stall, but his people knewe not him. But howesoeuer they mocke at the vncertainty of it: if they were driuen to seale their owne doctrine with their owne blood, and with losse of their life, men might see howe much thy set by it. But farre other is our affiance, which dreadeth neither the terrors of death, nor yet the very iudgement seate of God. Esa. 1. 3.

Wheras they require miracles of vs, they deale vnreasonably with vs. For we coyne no new Gospell, but hold fast the selfe same Gospel for confirming of the truth wherof al the miracles do serue that euer Christ & his Apostles haue done. But this thing they haue special aboue vs, that they can euen to this day cõfirme their faith with continuall miracles. Yea but rather they alleage miracles, which may weaken a minde otherwise well stablished: they are so either trifling & worthy to be laughed at, or vaine & lying. And yet, although they were neuer so mõstruous, they ought not to haue bin of any value against the word of God: forasmuch as the name of God ought both in euery place & at euery time to be hallowed, whether it be by miracles or by natural order of things. This false colour might paraduẽture haue made the better shew, if the Scripture did not informe vs of ỹ lawful end & vse of miracles. For, Marke teacheth that the signes which followed the preaching of the Apostles were set forth for the confirming of it: Likewise Luke also saith ỹ the Lord did beare witnes to the worde of his grace, when signes and wonders were shewed by the handes of the Apostles. Wherwith wholly agreeth that saying of the Apostle, that when the Gospell was preached, saluation was cõfirmed by this, that the Lord did beare witnesse to it with signes, and wõders, & diuerse powers. But those things which we heare to be the sealings of the Gospell, shall we turne to the destroyinge of the credit of the Gospell? those things which are appointed only to stablish the trueth, shall we apply to confirming of lyes? Therfore it is mete that the doctrine, which (as the Euangelist sayth) goeth before miracles, be first examined and tried. If that be allowed, then it may lawfully take confirmation of miracles. But of a true doctrine (as Christ teacheth) this is the marke, if it tende not to the seekinge of the glory of men, but of God. Sith Christ affirmeth this to be the proofe of doctrine, miracles are wrongefully estemed which are drawen to any other end than to glorifie the name of God alone. And we ought to remẽber that Sathan hath his miracles which although they be iuggling deceites rather thã true powers, yet are such as may deceiue the Mar. 16. 20. Act. 14. 3. Heb. 2. 4. Iohn. 7. 18. and 8. 50.

despisers & enemies of the Fathers. But we do so not despise them, that if it were the matter of my present purpose, I could very easily proue by their consenting voices, the greater part of these things that we say at this day. But we so reade their writings, that we alway remember, that all things are ours, to serue vs, not to haue dominion ouer vs: and that we are Christes alone, whom we must obey in all things without exception. Who so keepeth not this choise, shall haue nothing certaine in religion: forasmuch as those holy men were ignorant of many things, do oftentimes striue one with an other, yea and sometimes fight with themselues. Not without cause (say they) we are warned of Salomon, that we passe not the olde boundes which our Fathers haue set. But there is not all one rule in the boundinge of fieldes, and the obedience of faith, which ought to be so framed that it forget her people and the house of her Father. If they haue so great delite to vse allegories, why do they not rather expounde the Apostles, than any other, to be their Fathers, whose appointed bouds it is not lawfull to plucke vp? for so did Hierome expounde it, whose wordes they haue registred among their Canōs. But if they will haue the boundes of the same Fathers, whom they meane, to be steedfastly kept: why do they, so oft as they list, so licentiously passe them? Of the number of the Fathers were they, of whom the one said, that our God eateth not, nor drinketh, and that therfore he needeth neither cuppes nor dishes: the other said, that the holy things require not golde, and that those things please not with golde which are not bought with golde. Therefore they passe the bounde, which are in the holy things so much delited with golde, siluer, iuorie, marble, precious stones & silkes, and thinke that God is not rightly worshipped, vnlesse altogether they be dissolutely set out with exquisite gorgeousnes, or rather with outragious excesse. A Father was he, which said, that he therefore did freely eate flesh on the day in which other abstained, because he was a Christian. Therefore they passe the boundes, when they accurse the soule that tasteth flesh in Lent. Fathers were they, of whom the one said that a Monke which laboureth not with his handes, is iudged as euill as a violent taker, or (if you wil) a robber: The other said, that it is not lawful for Monkes to liue of other mens goods, although they be continually busied in contemplations, in prayers, in studie. This bounde also they haue passed, when they placed the idle and barrell bellies of Monkes in stewes and brothelhouses to be fatted with other mens substaunce. A Father was he, which said, that it is a horrible abhomination to se any image painted, either of Christ or of any Sainte in the temples of

They breaking through is bound also, sticke not to affirme that the whole authoritie of the cripture, hangeth vppon the awardement of the Church. All the thers haue with one heart accursed, & with one mouth pronounced abhominable, that the holy word of God should be entangled with e subtilties of Sophisters, and brawlings of Logitiās. Do they holde emselues within these boundes, when they go about nothing else their whole life, but with endles striues, and more then Sophisticall rablinges to wrappe and encombre the simplicitie of the Scripture? that if the Fathers were nowe raised to life againe, and should heare ch an arre of brawling, which these men call Speculatiue Diuinitie, ey would beleue that nothing lesse is done than any disputation ad of God. But my talke should spred it selfe beyond due boundes, I woulde recken vp howe boldly these men shake of the yoke of e Fathers, whose obediēt children they would seeme to be. Trewly oth monethes and yeares would be to little for me. And yet they e of so extreme and desperate shamelesnesse, that they dare blame s for that we sticke not to passe the ancient boundes.

that the forme it ſelfe is not contained in that outward ſhining we, which they fooliſhly haue in admiration, but hath a farre o-right miniſtration of Sacramentes. They are in a rage, vnleſſe the is (I graunt) a horrible vengeance of God vpon the earth. But if t wickednes of men ſo deſerue, why do we ſeeke to withſtand the iu vengeance of God? In ſuch wiſe the Lord hath in times paſt take vengeance of the vnthankefulneſſe of men. For becauſe they woul not receiue his trueth, and had quenched his light, he ſuffred the gainſt the whole company of the Prophetes, to declare from the Lorde, that it ſhould come to paſſe, that the law ſhould periſhe from the prieſt, counſell from the wiſeman, and the worde from the Prophet. Did not ſuch a gliſteringe ſhewe ſhine in that Councell which the biſhops, Scribes, and Phariſees aſſembled, to take aduiſes together for the killing of Chriſt. Now let them go and ſticke faſt in the outward viſour, that they may make Chriſt and all the Prophetes of

God,

God, ſchiſmtikes: and on the other ſide make the miniſters of Sathan, the inſtrumets of the holy Ghoſt. If they ſpeake as they thinke, let them faithfully anſwere me, in what nation and place they thinke that the Church remained ſince the time that by the decree of the Councel at Baſile, Eugenius was thruſt downe and depriued from the ſtate of Pope, and Aymee ſet in his place. They can not, though they ſhulde burſt for it, deny that the Councell, for ſo much as concerneth outward ſolemnities, was lawfull, and ſummoned not onely of one Pope, but of two. Eugenius was there condemned of ſchiſme, rebellion, and obſtinacy, with the whole flocke of Cardinals and Biſhops, which had with him practiſed the diſſolution of the Councell. Yet afterward beinge borne vp by the fauour of Princes, he recouered his papacy ſafe againe. That election of Aymee, which had bin orderly made by the authority of a generall and holy Synode, vaniſhed away in a ſmoke: ſauinge that he himſelfe was appeaſed with a Cardinalls hat, as it were a barking dog with a pece of bread caſt vnto him. Out of the boſome of theſe heretikes, rebels, & obſtinates, are proceeded all the Popes, Cardinalls, Biſhops, Abbots, & Prieſtes that haue bin ſince. Here they are taken and can go no further. For, to whether ſide will they giue the name of the Church? Will they deny that the Councell was generall, which wanted nothinge to the outwarde maieſtie: namely, which beinge ſolemnely ſummoned by two bulles, and well framed in the order of all thinges, continued in the ſame dignitie to the laſt ende? Will they confeſſe Eugenius with all his company a ſchiſmatike, by whom they are all ſanctified? Therefore either lette them otherwiſe define the forme of the Church, or they all as many as are of thē ſhalbe of vs accompted ſchiſmatikes, which wittingly & willingly haue bin ordered of heretikes. If it had neuer before bin knowen, that the Church is not bounde to outward pompes, they themſelues may be to vs a large proofe, which vnder that glorious title of the Church haue ſo longe ſo proudly boaſted thēſelues, whereas yet they were the deadly peſtilences of the church. I ſpeake not of their maners, and thoſe tragicall doinges wherewith their whole life ſwarmeth full: becauſe they ſay that they be the Phariſees which are to be heard, not to be followed. But if ye will ſpare ſome of your leaſure to read our writings, you ſhall plainly know that the very doctrine, ỹ doctrine it ſelfe, for the which they ſay that they be the Church, is a deadly butchery of ſoules, the firebrand, ruine, & deſtruction of the Church.

Finally they do not vprightly enough, when they do ſpitefully rehearſe howe great troubles, vprores, and cōtentions the preaching of our doctrine hath drawē with it, and what fruites it nowe beare in many. For the blame of theſe euels is vnworthily laide vpon which ought rather to haue bene imputed to ỹ malice of Satan. Th is as it were a certaine naturall propretie of the word of God, th whenſoeuer it riſeth vp, Satan is neuer quiet or ſleeping. This is t moſt ſure and moſt truſty marke, whereby it is diſcerned from lie doctrines, which do eaſily ſhewe forth themſelues when they are r ceiued with fauorable eares of all men, and are heard of the wo reioiſing at them. So in certaine ages paſt, when all thinges we drowned in deepe darkeneſſe, the Lorde of this world made a ſpo and a play in maner of all men, and lay idle and toke his pleaſu like a certaine Sardanapalus in ſounde peace. For, what ſhould he do but laugh and play being in quiet and peaſible poſſeſſion of h kingdome? But when the light ſhining from about ſomwhat ſcatter abrode his darkneſſe, when that ſtrong man troubled and aſſailed h kingdom, then he began to ſhake of his wonted drowſines, & haſti to arme himſelfe. And firſt he ſtirred vp the force of men, whereb he might violently oppreſſe the truth beginning to ſhine. By whic whē he nothing preuailed, he turned to ſuttle entrappings. He ſtirre vp diſſentions and diſagreements of doctrines by his Catabaptiſte and other monſtruous lewde men, whereby he might darken it an at length vtterly quenche it. And nowe he cōtinueth to aſſaile it wit both engines. For he trauaileth both by the force and power of me to plucke vp that ſeede, & with his darnell (as much as in him lieth) to choke it, that it may not growe & beare frute. But all this he do in vaine, if we heare the warning of God, which both hath long be fore opened his craftes vnto vs, that he ſhould not take vs vnware, & hath armed vs with ſufficient defences againſt all his engins. But ho great maliciouſneſſe is it to lay vpon the word of God the hatre either of the ſeditions, which noughty and rebellious men do ſtir vp, or of the ſectes which deceiuers do raiſe againſt it? Yet it is no ne example. Elias was aſked whether it were not he that troubled Iſrae Chriſt was eſteemed of the Iewes a ſeditious man. The Apoſtles we accuſed of making a cōmotion among the people. What other thing do they which at this day do father vpon vs all the troubles, vprore and cōtentions that boile vp againſt vs? But what is to be aunſwered to ſuch. Elias hath taught vs: namely that it is not we that ſcatte

nd in their dismayeng to wauer. But let them, to the ende that they ay not faint with this dismayeng and be discoraged, knowe that the postles in their time felte by experiēce the same things that nowe appen vnto vs. There were vnlerned and vnstedfast men, which ested to their owne destruction, those things the Paul had written by the inspiration of God, as Peter saith. 2.Pet.3 16.
There were despisers of God, which when they heard that sinne abounded to the end that grace might more abounde, by and by obiected, We will then abide sinne, that grace may abound. When they heard that the faithfull re not vnder the lawe, they by and by, answered, We will then sinne, ecause we are not vnder the lawe, but vnder grace. There were that ccused him as an exhorter to euell. There entred priuily many false Apostles to destroy the Churches which he had builded. Some by enuie and contention, and not purely, yea and maliciously preached he Gospell, thinking to adde more affliction to his bandes. Somwhere he Gospell not much profited. All sought their owne, and not the hinges of Iesus Christ. Some wente backwarde, dogges to their omite, and swine to their wallowing in the mire. The most parte id drawe the liberty of the Spirit to the licentiousnesse of the flesh. Many brethren crept in, by whom there came afterwarde great dangers to the godly. Amōg the brethren themselues were many striues raised vp. What should the Apostles haue done in this case? Should hey not either haue dissembled for a time, or rather altogether haue geuen ouer and forsaken the Gospell which they sawe to be the edeplott of so many contentions, the matter of so many dangers, he occasion of so many offences? No. But for helpe in such distresses his came in their minde that Christ is the stone of stombling and rocke of offence, set vnto the ruine and rising againe of many, and for a signe that should be spoken against. With which affiance they being armed went forward boldly through all dangers of vprores and offences. With the same thought we also ought to be vpholden, forasmuch as Paul testifieth that this is the perpetuall propretie of the Gospell, to be the sauor of death vnto death to thē ẏ perish, although it were ordeined to this vse that it should be the sauor of life vnto life, and the power of God vnto the saluation of the faithfull: which verily we should also feele, if we did not with our vnthākfulnes corrupt this so singular a benefit of God, & turne ẏ to our owne destruction which ought to haue bin to vs the only defence of our saferie. Philip. 1.15. Luk.2. 34. 2.Cor. 2.16.

But nowe I returne to you, my soueraigne Lorde. Let those false reportes nothing moue you, by which our aduersaries trauaill to cast you in feare of vs, with saying that by this newe Gospell (for so they call it) nothing is hunted for and ſought but fit occaſion of ſeditio and vnpuniſhed libertie of vices. For our God is not the author diuiſion, but of peace: and the ſonne of God is not the miniſter ſinne, which came to deſtroy all the workes of the Deuill. And we a vnworthily accuſed of ſuch deſires, whereof we neuer gaue any ſ ſpition were it neuer ſo ſmall. It is likely that we forſoth do practi the ouerthrowing of kingdomes, of whom there hath neuer be heard any one ſedicious word, whoes life hath euer bene knowe quiet and ſimple, when we liued vnder you, and which nowe bei chaced from home yet ceſſe not to pray for all things proſperous you and your kingdome. It is likely forſoth that we hunt for licen tiouſneſſe of vices, in whoes behauors although many thinges ma be founde faulty, yet there is nothing worthy of ſo great reprochin neither haue we with ſo ill ſucceſſe (by the grace of God) profite in the Goſpell, but that our life may be to theſe backbyters an exam plar of chaſtitie, liberalitie, mercy, temperance, patience, modeſtie and whatſoeuer other vertue. Verily it is by the proofe it ſelfe euide that we do vnfainedly feare and worſhippe God, foraſmuch as we deſire that his name be halowed both by our life and our death, and enuy it ſelfe is compelled to beare of ſome of vs a witneſſe of innocence & ciuile vprightneſſe, in whom this onely thing was puniſhed with death which ought to haue bene accõpted for a ſingular praiſe.

But if any vnder pretence of the Goſpell do ſtirre vp tumultes (a hetherto it hath not bene founde that there haue bene any ſuch in your Realme) if any pretende the libertie of the grace of God to defende the licẽtiouſneſſe of their vices (of which ſort I haue knowen many) there be lawes and penalties of lawes, by which they may according to their deſeruinges be ſharpely puniſhed: yet ſo that in the meane time the Goſpell of God be not euell ſpokẽ of for the wickedneſſe of naughty men. Thus haue you (O King) the venimous vniu-ſtice of the ſclaunderors largely enough declared, that you may not with an eare of to eaſy beliefe bende to their reportes. I feare me alſo leaſt it be to largely ſet out, foraſmuch as this preface is in a maner come to the quantitie of a whole boke of defenſe. whereby I en-tended not to make a defenſe in deede, but onely to mollify your minde aforehande to geue audience to the diſcloſing of our cauſe:
which your minde, though it be now turned away and eſtranged from vs, yea and enflamed againſt vs, yet we truſt that we ſhall be able to recouer the fauor thereof, if you ſhall ones haue without diſpleaſure and troublous affection red ouer this our confeſſion, which we will to be in ſteede of a defence for vs to your maieſty. But if the whiſper-

ges of the malicious do ſo poſſeſſe your eares, that there is no place for accuſed men to ſpeake for themſelues: and if thoſe outragious furies do ſtill with your winking at them, exerciſe cruelty with priſoning, tormenting, cutting, and burning: we ſhall in dede, as ſhepe appointed to the ſlaughter, be brought to all extremities, yet ſo that in our patience we ſhall poſſeſſe our ſoules, and waite for the ſtronge hande of the Lord: which ſhall without dout be preſent in time, and ſtretch forth it ſelfe armed, both to deliuer the poore out of affliction, and to take vengeance on the deſpiſers, which now triumphe with ſo great aſſuredneſſe.

The Lord the King of Kings ſtabliſh your throne with righteouſneſſe, and your ſeate with equity, moſt noble King.

IOHN CALVINE TO THE READER.

AT the first setting out of this worke, because I did not loke for that successe, which the Lorde of his vnmeasurable goodnes hath giuẽ, I had (as mẽ vse to do in smal worke) for the more part lightly passed it ouer. But whẽ I vnderstode that it was receiued with that fauor of al the godly which I neuer durst haue desired, much lesse haue hoped for: as I verily felt in my hart that much more was giuen to me than I had deserued, so I thought it should be a great vnthankefulnes if I should not at the least after my slẽder ability endeuor to answere so fauorable affections toward me, & which of themselues prouoked my diligẽce. And this I attempted not only in the second setting forth of it: but how oft since that time the worke hath bin emprinted, so oft it hath bin enriched with some encrease. But although I did not then repent me of the labor that I had employed: yet I neuer held my selfe contented till it was disposed into that order which is now set before you. Now I trust I haue giuẽ you that which may be allowed by all your iudgementes. Truely with how great endeuor I haue applied my selfe to the doinge of this seruice to the Church of God, I may bring forth for an euident witnesse, that this last winter, when I thought that the feuer Quartane had summoned me to death, how much more the sickenes enforced vpon me, so much lesse I spared my selfe, till I might leaue this booke to ouerliue me, which might make some part of thankefull recompense to so gentle prouoking of the godly. I had rather in dede it had bin done sooner: but it is soone enough if well enough. And I shall then thinke that it is come abroade in good season, when I shall perceiue that it hath brought yet more plentifull frute thã it hath done heretofore to the Church of God. This is my only desire. And truely full ill it were with me, if I did not, holding my selfe contented with the allowance of God alone, despise the iudgements of men, whether they be the foolish & froward iudgementes of the vnskilfull, or the wrõgfull & malicious of the wicked. For although God hath throughly settled my minde to the endeuor both of enlarging his kingdome, and of helping the common profit: & though I am cleare in mine owne conscience, & haue himselfe & the Angels to witnesse with me, that since I tooke vpon me the office of a teacher in the Church, I haue tended to none other purpose

but that I might profit the Church in maintaining the pure doctrine of godlines: yet I thinke there is no man, that hath bin snatched at, bitten, & torne in sunder with moe slaũders than I. VVhen my epistle was now in printing, I was certainly enformed that at Augsburgh where the assẽbly of the states of the Empire was holden, there was a rumor spread abroad of my revoltinge to the Papacy, and the same was more greedely receiued in the courtes of Princes than was meete. This forsooth is their thankefulnes who are not ignorant of many trialls had of my stedfastnes, which trialls as they shake of so fowle a sclaunder, so they should with all indifferẽt & gẽtle iudges haue defended me from it. But the Deuill with his whole route is deceiued if in oppressing me with filthy lies, he thinke that by his vniust dealinge I shalbe either the more discouraged or made the lesse diligent: because I trust that the Lord of his vnmeasurable goodnes will graunt me that I may with euen sufferance continue in the course of his holy calling. VVhereof I giue to the godly readers a new proofe in this settinge foorth of this booke. Now in this trauaill this was my purpose so to prepare and furnish them that be studious of holy Diuinity to the reding of the word of God, that they may both haue an easie entry into it, and go forward in it without stumblinge; for I thinke that I haue in all pointes so knit vp together the summe of religion, and disposed the same in such order, that whosoeuer shall well haue it in minde, it shal not be hard for him to determine both what he ought chiefly to seeke in the Scripture, and to what marke to apply whatsoeuer is contained in it. Therefore, this as it were a way being once made plaine, if I shall hereafter set forth any expositions of Scripture, because I shall not neede to enter into long disputations of articles of doctrine, & to wander out into common places: I will alway knit them vp shortly. By this meane the godly reader shalbe eased of great paine and tediousnesse, so that he come furnished aforehande with the knowledge of this present worke as with a necessary instrument. But because the entent of this purpose, doth clearely as in mirrors appeare in so many commentaries of mine, I had rather to declare in deede what it is, than to set it out in wordes. Farewell frendly Reader, and if thou receiue any frute of my labors, helpe me with thy prayers to God our Father.

VVHAT CHAPTERS ARE CONtained in the bookes of this Institution.

In the first booke which entreateth of the knowledge of God the Creator: Are contained xviij. Chapters.

1 THat the knowe-ledge of God, & of our selues, are thinges conioyned: & how they be lincked the one with the other.

2 What it is to knowe God, & to what ende tendeth the knowledge of him.

3 That the knowledge of God is naturally planted in the mindes of men.

4 That the same knowledge is either choked or corrupted, partely by ignorance, & partly by malice.

5 That the knoweledge of God doth shiningely appeare in the making of the world, and in the continuall gouernment thereof.

6 That to attaine to God the creator, it is needefull to haue the Scripture to be our guide and maistresse.

7 By what testimonie the Scripture ought to be stablished, that is, by the witnesse of the holy Ghost, that the authority thereof may remaine certain: And that it is a wicked inuention to say that the credit thereof doth hange vppon the iudgement of the Church.

8 That so faras mans reason may beare, there are sufficient proues to stablish the credit of the Scripture.

9 That those fantasticall menne, which forsakinge Scripture, resorte vnto reuelation, do ouerthrowe all the principles of godlinesse.

10 That the Scripture, to correct all superstition, doth in comparison set ỹ true God against all the Gods of the Gentils, reckeninge him for none of them.

11 That it is vnlawful to attribute vnto God a visible forme, and that generally, they forsake God, so many as do erect to themselues any images.

12 That God is seuerally discerned from idols, that he may be only & wholly worshipped.

13 That there is taught in ỹ Scriptures one essence of God from the very creation, which essence containeth in it three persons.

14 That the Scripture euen in the creatiō of the world & of al things, doth by certaine markes put difference betwene the true God, and fained Gods.

15 What a one man was created: wherein there is entreated of the powers of the soule, & of the image of God, of free will, and of the first integritie of nature.

16 That God by his power doth nouriſh and maintaine the worlde, which himselfe hath created, & by his prouidence doth gouerne al the

partes thereof.
17 Whereto and to what end this doctrine is to be applied, that we may be certaine of the profit thereof.
18 That God doth so vse the seruice of wicked men, and so boweth their mindes to put his iudgement in execution, that yet still himselfe remaineth pure from all spot.

In the second Booke which entreateth of the knowledge of God the Redemer in Christ, vvhich knovvledge vvas first opened to the fathers in the time of the lavve, and then to vs in the Gospell: Are conteined xvij. Chapters.

1 THat by Adamas sin and falling away, mankind became accursed, and did degenerate from his first estate: wherin is entreated of Originall sinne.
2 That man is nowe spoiled of the freedome of will, and made subiect to miserable bondage.
3 That out of the corrupt nature of mā procedeth nothing but damnable.
4 How God worketh in the hartes of men.
5 A confutation of the obiectiōs that are wont to be brought for the defence of free will.
6 That man being lost, must seke for redemption in Christ.
7 That the lawe was geuen, not to holde still the people in it, but to nourishe the hope of saluation in Christ vntill his comming.
8 An expositiō of the Moral law.
9 That Christ although he was knowē to the Iewes vnder the law, yet was he deliuered onely by the Gospell.
10 Of the likenesse of the olde and newe Testament.
11 Of the difference of the one Testament from the other.
12 That it behoued, that Christ to performe the office of the Mediator, should be made man.
13 That Christ tooke vpon him the true substāce of ỹ flesh of man.
14 Howe the natures of the Mediator do make one person.
15 That we may knowe to what ende Christ was sent of his father, & what he brought vs: three things are principally to be considered in him, his Propheticall office, his kingdome, & his Priesthode.
16 Howe Christ hath fulfilled the office of Redemer, to purchase saluation for vs, wherein is entreated of his Death and Resurrection, and his Ascending into heauen.
17 That it is truely and properly sayd, ỹ Christ hath deserued Gods fauour and saluation for vs.

In the third Boke which entreateth of the maner howe to receiue the grace of Christ, and vvhat fruites come thereof to vs, and vvhat effectes followe of it: Are conteined xxv. Chapters.

1 THat those things which are spoken of Christ do profit vs, by secret working of the holy Ghost.

2 Of faith, wherin both is the definition of it, & the properties that it hath are declared.
3 That we are regenerate by faith, wherein is entreated of Repentance.
4 That all that the Sophisters babble in their Schooles of penance, is farre from the purenes of the Gospell: where is entreated of confession and Satisfaction.
5 Of the supplyings which they adde to satisfactions, as Pardons and Purgatory.
6 Of the life of a Christian man. And first by what arguments the scripture exhorteth vs thereunto.
7 The summe of a Christian life: where is entreated of the forsaking of our selues.
8 Of the bearing of the Crosse, which is a parte of the forsaking of our selues.
9 Of the meditation of the life to come.
10 Howe we ought to vse this present life, and the helpes therof.
11 Of the Iustification of faith, & first of the definitiō of the name and of the thing.
12 That to the ende we may be fully persuaded of the free Iustification, we must lifte vp our mindes to the iudgement seate of God.
13 That there are two things to be marked in free Iustification.
14 What is the beginning of Iustification, and the continuall proceding thereof.
15 That those things that are cōmonly boasted cōcerning the merites of workes, do ouerthrowe as well the praise of God in geuing of righteousnesse, as also the assurednesse of saluation.
16 A cōfutation of the slaunders whereby the Papistes go about to bring this doctrine in hatred.
17 The agreemēt of the promises of the Lawe and the Gospell.
18 That of the reward, the righteousnesse of workes is ill gathered.
19 Of Christian liberty.
20 Of Prayer which is the chiefe exercise of faith, and whereby we daily receiue the benefites of God.
21 Of the eternall electiō, whereby God hath predestinate some to saluation, some other to destruction.
22 A cōfimation of this doctrine by the testimonies of Scripture.
23 A confutation of the slaunders, wherewith this doctrine hath alway bene vniustly charged.
24 That Election is stablished by the calling of God: & that the reprobate do bring vpō thēselues the iust destruction, to which they are appointed.
25 Of the last Resurrection.

In the fourth Booke which entreateth of the outward meanes or helpes vvhereby God calleth vs into the fellovvship of Christ, and holdeth vs in it: Are contained xx. Chapters.

1 OF the true Church with which we ought to keepe vnitie, bicause it is the mother of all the godly.

The Table

2 A cõpariſon of ỹ falſe Church with the true Church.

3 Of the teachers and miniſters of the Church, & of their Election and office.

4 Of the ſtate of ỹ olde Church, and of the maner of gouerning that was in vſe before the Papacy.

5 That the old forme of gouernment is vtterly ouerthowen by the tyranny of the Papacy.

6 Of the Supremacy of the See of Rome.

7 Of the beginning & encreaſing of ỹ Papacy of Rome, vntill it aduãced it ſelfe to this height, wherby both ỹ libertie of the Church hath bene oppreſſed, and all the right gouernment thereof ouerthrowen.

8 Of the power of the Church as touching the articles of faith: and with howe vnbrideled licentiouſneſſe it hath in the Papacy bene wreſted to corrupt all pureneſſe of doctrine.

9 Of Councells and of their authoritie.

10 Of the power in making of lawes wherein the Pope and his haue vſed a moſt cruell tyranny & butchery vpon ſoules.

11 Of the iuriſdiction of the Church, and the abuſe thereof, ſuch as is ſene in the Papacie.

12 Of ỹ diſcipline of ỹ Church, whereof the chiefe vſe is in the cenſures and excommunication.

13 Of vowes, by raſhe promiſing whereof eche man hath miſerably entangled himſelfe.

15 Of Baptiſme.

16 That the Baptiſme of Infants doth very well agree with the inſtitution of Chriſt, & the nature of the ſigne.

17 Of the holy Supper of Chriſt: and what it auaileth vs.

18 Of the Popiſhe Maſſe, by which ſacrilege ỹ ſupper of Chriſt hath not onely bene prophaned, but alſo brought to nought.

19 Of the fiue falſely named Sacramentes: where is declared, that the other fiue which haue bene hitherto commonly taken for Sacramentes, are not Sacramentes: and then is ſhewed what maner of things they be.

20 Of Ciuile gouernemene.

THE FIRST BOOKE OF THE INSTITVTION OF CHRISTIAN RELIGION, WHICH intreateth of the knowledge of God the Creator.

The first Chapter.

That the knowledge of God, and of our selues are things conioyned: and how they be linked the one with the other.

THE whole summe in a maner of all our wisdom, which onely ought to be accompted true and perfect wisdome, consisteth in two parts, that is to say, the knowledge of God, & of our selues. But wheras these two knowledges be with many bonds linked togither: yet whether goeth before or engendreth the other, it is hard to discerne. For first no man can looke vpō him selfe, but he must needes by and by turne all his senses to the beholding of God, in whom he liueth & is moued: because it is playne that those giftes wherwith we be indued are not of our selues, yea euen that that we haue being is nothing els but an essence in the one God. Finally, by these good thinges that are as by dropmeale powred into vs from heauen, we are led as it were by certaine streames to the spring head. And so by our owne needinesse, better appeareth that infinite plentie of good thinges that abideth in God. Specially that miserable ruine, whereinto the fall of the firste man hath throwen vs, compelleth vs to lift vp our eyes, not onely beyng foodeles and hungry, to craue from thence that which we lacke, but also being awakened with feare, to learne humilitie. For as there is found in man a certaine world of all miseries, & since we haue bene spoyled of the diuine apparell, our shamefull nakednesse discloseth an infinite heape of filthy disgracements: it must needes be that euery man be pricked with knowledge in conscience of his own vnhappinesse to make him come at least vnto some knowledge of God. So by the vnderstanding of our owne ignorance, vanitie, beggery weakenes, peruersnes, and corruption, we learne to reknowledge that no where else but in the Lord abideth the true light of wisdom, sound vertue, perfecte aboundance of all good thinges, and puritie of righteousnes. And so by our owne euils we are stirred to cōsider the good things of God: and we cannot earnestly aſpire towarde him, vntill we beginne to miſlike our ſelues. For of men what one is there, that would not willingly reſt in him ſelfe? who doth not reſt, ſo longe as he knoweth not him ſelfe, that is to ſ ſo long as he is contented with his owne gifts, and ignorāt or vnmin full of his owne miſery? Therfore euery man is by the knowledge him ſelfe, not onely pricked forward to ſeeke God, but alſo led a were by the hand to finde him.

2 Agayne it is certaine, that man neuer commeth vnto the tr knowledge of himſelfe, vnles he haue firſt beholden the face of Go and from beholding therof do deſcend to looke into himſelfe. F (ſuch is the pride that is naturally planted in vs) we alway thinke o ſelues righteous, innocent, wiſe and holy, vntill that with manif proues we be cōuinced of our vnrighteouſnes, filthines, ſolly and v cleannes. But we are not conuinced therof, if we looke vpon our ſelu onely, & not vpon God alſo, who is the only rule wherby this iudg ment ought to be tryed. For becauſe we are naturally inclined to h pocriſie, therfore a certaine vayne reſemblance of righteouſnes do aboundantly content vs in ſtead of righteouſnes in deede. And becau there appeareth nothing among vs, nor about vs, that is not defil with much filthines, therfore that which is ſomewhat leſſe filthy ple ſeth vs as though it were moſt pure, ſo long as we holde our ſelu within the boundes of mans vnclennes. Like as the eye that is vſed t ſee nothing but black, thinketh that to be pure white, which yet is b darkiſh white, or browne. Yea, we may yet more playnely diſcerne b our bodily ſenſe how much we are blinded in conſidering the powe of the ſoule. For if at midday we either looke down vpon the groun or behold thoſe thinges that rounde about lye open before our eye then we thinke our ſelues to haue a very aſſured and percing force o ſight: but when we looke vp to the ſunne, & behold it with fixed eye then that ſame ſharpneſſe that was of great force vpon the ground, with ſo great brightnes byandby daſeled and confounded, that we ar compelled to confeſſe that the ſame ſharp ſight which we had in con ſidering earthly things, when it commeth to the ſunne is but mee dulneſſe. Euen ſo commeth it to paſſe in weying our ſpirituall goo things. For while we looke no further then the earth, ſo longe beyn weil contented with our own righteouſnes, wiſdom and ſtrength, w do ſweetely flatter our ſelues, and thinke vs in maner halfe gods. B if we once beginne to rayſe vp our thought vnto God & to wey wh a one he is, and howe exact is the perfection of his righteouſnes, wiſe dom and power, after the rule wherof we ought to be framed: the that which before dyd pleaſe vs in our ſelues with falſe pretence o

righteousnes, shall become lothsom to vs as greatest wickednesse: the that which did marueilously deceiue vs vnder colour of wisdom, shall stinke before vs as extreme folly: then that which did beare the face of strength, shal be proued to be most miserable weaknes. So slenderly doth that which in vs seemeth euen moste perfect, answere in proportion to the purenes of God.

13 Hereof proceedeth that trembling & amasednes, wherewith the scripture in many places reciteth that the holy men were striken and astonished so oft as they perceyued the presence of God. For when we see that they which in his absence did stād assured & vnmoued, so sone as he discloseth his glory, begin so to quake and are so dismayd, that they fall downe, yea are swalowed vp & in maner as destroyed with feare of death: it is to be gathered therby that man is neuer sufficiently touched and inwardly moued with knowledge of his owne basenes, vntill he haue compared himselfe to the maiestie of God. But of such dismaying we haue often examples both in the Iudges & in the Prophets: so that this was a common saying among the people of God: We shall dye becausе the Lord hath appeared vnto vs. And therfore the history of Iob, to throw men downe with knowledge of their owne folly, weaknes, & vnclennes, bringeth alway his principall proofe from describing Gods wisdom, strength and clennes. And that not without cause. For we see how Abraham, the nerer that he came to behold the glory of God, the better acknowledged himselfe to be earth and dust. We see how Elias could not abide to tary his comming to him with vncouered face: so terrible is the beholding of him. And what maie man do that is but corruption & a worme, when euē the Cherubins for very feare muste hide their faces? Euen this is it that the Prophet Esay speaketh of: The sunne shall blushe, & the moone shall be ashamed, when the Lord of hostes shall raigne, that is to say, when he displayeth his brightnes, and bringeth it nearer to sight, then in comparison thereof the brighteste thing of all shall be darkened. But howsoeuer the knowledge of God and of our selues, are with mutuall knotte linked together, yet the order of right teaching requireth that first we intreate of the knowledge of God, and after come downe to speake of the knowledge of our selues.

Iud. 13. 22. Esa. 6. 5 Eze. 2. 1 Gen. 18 17. 1. King 19. 13. Esa 14. 23. Esa. 2. 10 and 19.

The second Chapter.

VVhat it is to knovve God, and to vvhat ende tendeth the knowledge of him.

I Meane by the knowledge of God, not only that knowledge, wherby we conceiue that there is some God, but also that, wherby we learne so much as behoueth vs to know of him, & as is profitable for his glorie, finally so much as is expedient. For, to speake p perly, we can not say that God is knowen where there is no religi nor godlinesse. But heere I do not yet touch that speciall kinde knowledge whereby those men that are in themselues reprobate a accursed do conceiue God the redeemer in Christ the mediator: b

I speake onely of that first and simple maner of knowledge, wherv
the very order of nature would haue led vs, if Adam had continued state of innocécie. For although no man, sith mankinde is in this ruin can perceiue God to be eyther a father, or author of saluation, or any wise fauourable, vnles Christ come as a meane to pacifie him t warde vs: yet it is one thing to feele that God our maker doth by h power sustaine vs, by his prouidence gouerne vs, by his goodnes no rish vs, & endue vs with all kinds of blessings: & an other thing to em brace the grace of reconciliatiõ offered vs in Christ. Wheras therfo the Lord first simply appeareth as well by the making of the world, by the generall doctrine of the scripture, to be the Creator, & then the face of Christ to be the redeemer: hervpõ arise two sorts of kno wing him, of which the former is now to be intreated of, & then th other shall orderly follow in the place fit for it. For although our min can not conceiue the knowledge of God, but that it must giue to hi some kind of worship, yet shall it not be sufficient simply to know th it is he only that ought to be honored & worshipped of all men, vnle we be also perswaded that he is the foũtaine of all good things, to th end that we should seeke for no thing elsewhere but in him. I mean hereby, not only for that as he hath once created this world, so by h infinite power he susteineth it, by his wisdom he gouerneth it, by hi goodnes he preserueth it, & specially mankind he ruleth by his righ teousnes & iudgement, suffreth by his mercy, & sauegardeth by his de fence: but also because there can no where be found any one drop t ther of wisdom, or of light, or of righteousnes, or of power, or of vp rightnes, or of sincere truth, which floweth not frõ him or whereof h is not the cause: to this end verely, that we should learne to looke for craue all these things at his hand, & with thanksgeuing accompt the receiued of him. For this feeling of the powers of God is to vs a me scholemaster of godlines, out of which springeth religion: Godlines call a reuerence of God ioined with loue of him which is procured b knowledge of his benefits. For men will neuer with willing obedienc submit thẽ selues to God, vntill they perceiue that they owe all thing to him, that they are nourished by his fatherly care, that he is to the the author of all good things, so that nothing is to be sought elswh than in him. Yea they will neuer yeld thẽselues truely & with all the heart wholely to him, vnles they assuredly beleue that in him is perfect felicitie repoſed for them.

2 Therfore they do but trifle with vaine ſpeculations, which in entreating of this queſtion, do make it their purpoſe to diſcuſſe, what thing God is, where it rather behoueth vs to know what maner one he is, and what agreeth with his nature. For to what end ſerueth it to confeſſe as Epicure doth, that ther is a God which doth only delight him ſelfe with idlenes, hauing no care of the worlde? Finally, what profiteth it to knowe ſuch a God with whom we may haue nothing to do? But rather the knowledge of him ought to ſerue to this ende, firſt to frame vs to feare & reuerence: then that by it guiding and teaching vs, we may learne to craue all good things at his hand, & to accompt them receiued of him. For how can any thought of God enter into thy mind, but that thou muſt therwithall byandby thinke, that forasmuch as thou art his creature, therfore thou art of right ſubiect and bound to his authoritie, that thou oweſt him thy life, that whatſoeuer thou enterpriſeſt, whatſoeuer thou doeſt, ought to be directed to him? If this be true, then truely it foloweth that thy life is peruerſely corrupted if it be not framed to obeying of him, forasmuch as his will ought to be our law to liue by. Agayn, thou canſt not cleerely ſee him, but that thou muſt needes know that he is the fountain and originall of all good things, wherevpon ſhould grow both a deſire to cleaue vnto him, and an aſſured truſt in him, if mans owne corruptnes did not drawe his minde from the right ſearching of him. For firſt of all, the godly minde doth not as by a dreame imagine to her ſelfe any God at aduenture, but ſtedfaſtly beholdeth the onely one and true God: and doth not falſely forge of him whatſoeuer her ſelfe liketh, but is content to beleeue him to be ſuch a one as he diſcloſeth himſelfe, and doth alway with greate diligence beware that with preſumptuous raſhneſſe ſhe paſſe not beyond his wil, and ſo wander out of the way. And when ſhe ſo knoweth him, becauſe ſhe vnderſtandeth that he gouerneth all thinges, ſhe aſſuredly truſteth that he is her ſafekeeper and defender, and therefore wholely committeth her ſelfe to his fayth? Becauſe ſhe vnderſtandeth that he is the author of all good things, therefore if any thing trouble her, or if ſhee want any thing, byandby ſhe flyeth to him for ſuccour, looking for helpe at his hand. Becauſe ſhee is perſwaded that he is good and merciſull, therefore with aſſured confidence ſhee reſteth on him, and doubteth not in all her euills to finde readie remedy in his merciſull kindneſſe. Beceauſe ſhee knoweth him to be her Lord and father, therefore ſhee determineth that he is worthy that ſhee ſhould in all thinges haue regard to his authoritie, reuerence his maiestie, procure the aduauncem

3 Truely, they that iudge rightly, will alway hold this for certain that there is grauen in the mindes of men a certaine feeling of th Godhead, which neuer can be blotted out. Yea that this perſwaſio that there is a God, is euen from their generation naturally planted them, and deepely rooted within their bones, the very obſtinacie o withall, doth lie piningly in their harts, yet the same feeling of God, which they woulde most of all desire to haue vtterly destroyed, liueth still, and sometime doth vtter it selfe: whereby we gather that it is no such doctrine as is first to be learned in schooles, but such a one wherof euery man is a teacher to himselfe euen from his mothers womb, & such a one as nature suffreth none to forget, although many bend all their endeuoure to shake it out of their minde. Now, if all men be borne & do liue to this end, to know God, & the knowledge of God is but fickle and lightly vanisheth away, vnlesse it proceede thus farre: it is euident, that they all swarue out of kinde from the lawe of theyr creation, that doe not direct to this marke all the whole thoughts & doings of their life. Of which the Philosophers themselues were not ignorant. For Plato ment nothing else, when he oftentimes taught, that the soueraign good of the soule is the likenesse of God, when the soule hauing throughly cõceiued the knowledge of him is wholely transformed into him. Therefore very aptly doth Grillus reason in Plutarche, where he affirmeth, that men, if religion be once taken frõ their life, are not only nothing better than brute beasts, but also many waies much more miserable, for that being subiect to so many sorts of euils they continually draw forth a troublesome vnquiet life: and that therfore the worshipping of God is the only thing that maketh them better than brute beastes, by which alone they aspire to immortality.

The iij. Chapter.

That the knowledge of God is naturally planted in the mindes of men.

WE hold it out of controuersie, that there is in the mind of man, euen by naturall instinction, a certaine feeling of the Godhead. For to the ende that no man should flee to the pretence of ignorãce, God himselfe hath planted in all men a certaine vnderstanding of his diuine maiestie: the remembrance whereof, with powring in now and then as it were new droppes, he continually reneweth: that when all, not one excepted, do know that there is a God, and that he is their maker, they may all be condemned by their owne testimonie, for that they haue not both worshipped him, and dedicate their life to his will. But truely if the not knowing of God be any where to be found, it is likely that there can no where else be any example of it more thã among the grossest sorts of peoples and furtheste from ciuill order of humanirie. But (as the heathen man sayeth) there is no nation so barbarous, no kinde of people so sauage, in whom resteth not this persuasion that there is a God. And euen they that in other parts of their life seeme very litle to differ may be, to hide them selues from the presence of the Lord: but whether they will or no, they are still holden fast tyed. For howsoeuer sometime it seemeth to vanish away for a moment, yet it oft returneth againe, and with new assault doth runne vpon them: so that the rest which they haue, if they haue any at all, from torment of conscience, much like to the sleepe of drunkards or frantike men, which euen while they sleepe do not quietly rest, because they are at euery momēt vexed with horrible and dreadfull dreames. Therefore the very vngodly themselues serue for an example to proue that there alway lyeth in all mens mindes some knowledge of God.

That the same knowledge is eyther choked, or corrupted, partly by ignorance, and partly by malice.

BVt as experience teacheth that God hath sowen the seede of religion in all men, so scarcely may be founde the hundreth mā, that hauing it conceyued in his heart doth cherish it, but no mā in whom it ripeneth, so far is it of that any frute appeareth in due time. Therefore whether it be that some become vaine in theyr owne superstitions, or that some do of set purpose maliciously reuolt from God, yet all doe runne out of kind from the true knowledge of him. So commeth it to passe that there remaineth no true godlinesse in the worlde. But whereas I sayd that some by error fall into superstition, I meane not thereby as though their simplicity might excuse them from blame, because the blindnesse that they haue, is commonly alway mingled both with proud vanity, & with stubbornesse. Vanity and the same ioyned with pride appeareth in this, that they miserable men both in the seeking of God do not climbe aboue thēselues as they ought to haue done, but measure him according to the proportion of their owne fleshly dulnesse, and also neglecting the sound manner of searching for him, do curiously fly to vayne speculations. And so they conceiue him not such a one as he offreth himselfe, but do imagine him such a one as of their owne rashe presumption they haue forged him. Which gulfe being once opened, what way soeuer they stirre their feete, they must needes alway run hedlong into destruction. For whatsoeuer afterward they goe about toward the worshipping or seruice of God, they can not accompt it done to him, because they worship not him, but rather the deuise of their own heart, & their owne dreame in steade of him. This peruersnes doth Paule expressely touche, where he sayth, that they were made fooles when they coueted to be wise. He had before sayd, that they were Rom. 1. 21.

made vaine in their imaginations : but leaſt any man ſhould ther excuſe them from blame, he addeth further, that they are wort blinded becauſe not contented with ſobrietie, but preſumptuouſly king vpon themſelues more than they ought, they wilfully b darkneſſe vpon them, yea with vaine & froward pride do make the ſelues fooles. Wherupō followeth, that their fooliſhnes is not exc ble, wherof the cauſe is not only vaine curioſity, but alſo a gredine knowe more than is meete for them, ioyned with a falſe confidence

Euen as we ſee t many after that they haue bin hardened with boldeneſſe and ſtome of ſinning, do furiouſly put from them all the remembranc God which yet is by very feeling of nature inwardly miniſtred their mindes. Nowe Dauid, to make their madnes the more dete ble, bringeth them in as though they preciſely denied, that th is any God: although they take not from him his being, but beca in taking from him his iudgement and prouidence, they ſhut h vp idle in heauen. For whereas nothing les agreeth with the nature God, than to throw away the gouernement of the world, and lea it to fortune, to winke at the ſinnes of men, ſo as they may liue in centious outrage vnpuniſhed: whoſoeuer he be that quenching t feare of the heauenly iudgement, doth careleſly folow his owne affe tions, he denieth that there is a God. And this is the iuſt vengeance God, to draw a fatnes ouer their hartes, ſo that the wicked when th haue once cloſed their eyes, euen in ſeeing may not ſee. And Dau

Tim. 1 13. as God (as Paule witneſſeth) cannot denie himſelfe, becauſe he co tinually abideth like himſelfe: ſo is it truely ſayd, that theſe men faining God to be a dead and vaine image doe denie God. Moreouer it is to be noted that although they wraſtle againſt their own natura feeling, and do deſire not onely to ſhake out God from thence, bu alſo to deſtroy him in heauen: yet their dull hardnes can neuer ſo far preuaile, but that God ſometime draweth them backe to his iudge ment ſeat. But foraſmuch as they are not withholden with any fea

om running violently against God: therefore it is certaine that there signeth in them a brutish forgetfulnes of God, so long as that blind ang of rage doth so forciblie carie them.

3 So is that vaine defense ouerthrowne, which manie are wont pretende for excuse of their superstition. For they thinke, that any euotion to religion suffiseth, whatsoeuer it be, though it be neuer so uch contrarie to order and truth. But they consider not, that true eligion ought to be framed according to the will of God, as by a per-tuall rule: and that God himselfe abideth alway like himselfe, and is o imagined Ghost or fantasie, that maie be diuersly fashioned after eery mannes liking. And truely we may plainly see with how lying eceites superstition mocketh God, while she goeth about to do him leasure. For catching holde of those thinges in a manner only, which God hath testified that he careth not for, she eyther contemptuously seth, or openly refuseth those things that he appoynteth and sayeth to be pleasant vnto him. Therfore whosoeuer do set vp new inuented formes of worshipping God, they worship & honor their own doting deuises: because they durst not so trifle with God, vnles they had first fayned a God agreeing with the follies of the trifeling toyes. Wherefore the Apostle pronounceth, that that vnstayed and wandering opinion of the maiestie of God, is a very not knowing of God. When (sayeth he) ye knewe not God, ye serued them that in nature were no Ga.4.8. gods. And in an other place he sayeth that the Ephesians were without a God at such time as they strayed from the right knowledge of the Ep.2.12 one God. And at least in this case, it differeth not much, whether thou beleue one God or many, because in both cases thou departest from & forsakest the true God: whom whē thou hast once forsaken, there is nothing left with thee but a detestable Idol. It foloweth therfore, that we must determine with Lactantius, that there is no lawfully allowable religion, but that which is ioyned with truth.

4 There is also a second fault, that they neyther haue at any time any consideration of God, but against their wills, nor do approche toward him, till for all their holding backe they be forcibly drawen to him: and euen then also they haue not a willing feare that proceedeth from reuerence of Gods maiestie, but onely a seruile and constrayned feare, which the iudgement of God wringeth out of them: which iudgement because they can not escape, therfore they dread it, but yet so as therwithall they abhorre it. And so that saying of Statius, that feare first made gods in the world, may be fitly spoken of vngodlinesse, and of this kinde of vngodlines onely. They that haue a minde abhorring from the iustice of God, do hartily wish to haue his throne of

The fifth Chapter.

That the knowledge of God doth ſhiningly appeare in the making of the world and in the continuall gouernement thereof.

MOreouer becauſe the furtheſt ende of bleſſed life ſtandeth in the knowledge of God: that the way to felicitie ſhould be ſtopped to none, therfore God hath not only planted in the minds of men that ſeede of religion which we haue ſpoken of, but alſo hath ſo diſcloſed himſelfe in the whole workemanſhip of the world, and daily ſo manifeſtly preſenteth himſelfe, that men can not open their eyes but they muſt needs behold him. His ſubſtāce in deede is incomprehenſible, ſo that his diuine maieſtie farre ſurmoūteth all mens ſenſes: but he hath in all his works grauen certaine marks of his glorie, and thoſe ſo plaine and notably diſcernable, that the excuſe of ignorance is taken away from mē, be they neuer ſo groſſe and dull witted. Therefore the Prophet rightfully crieth out, that he is clothed with light as with a garment: as if he ſhould haue ſayd, that then he firſt began to come forth to be ſeene in viſible apparel, ſince the time that he firſt diſplaied his enſignes in the creatiō of the world, by which euen now what way ſoeuer we turne our eies, he appeareth glorious vnto vs. In the ſame place alſo the ſame Prophet aptly compareth the heauens as they be diſplaied abrod, to his royall pauillion: he ſayth that he hath framed his parlours in the waters, that ỹ cloudes are his chariots, that he rideth vpon the wings of the windes, that the winds and lightnings are his ſwift meſſengers. And becauſe the glory of his power and wiſdom doth more fully ſhine aboue, therefore commonly the heauen is called his pallace. And firſt of all, what way ſoeuer thou turne thy eyes, there is no peece of the world be it neuer ſo ſmall, wherein are not ſeene at leaſt ſome ſparkles of his glory to ſhine. But as for this moſt large and beutifull frame, thou canſt not with one viewe peruſe the wide compaſſe of it, but that thou muſt needs be on euery ſide ouerwhelmed with the infinite force of the brightnes thereof. Wherefore the author of the Epiſtle to the Hebrues doth very well call the ages of the worlde the ſpectacle of inuiſible thinges, for that the ſo orderly framing of the worlde ſerueth vs for a mirror wherein we may behold God which otherwiſe is inuiſible.

ſelfe miracles enowe to occupie our mindes, if we will be content to marke them. And for this reaſon Paul, after that he had ſayd that the very blind men may find out God by groping for him, byandby ſayth further, that he is not to be ſought farre of, becauſe all men do feele vndoutedly within themſelues the heauenly grace wherewith they be quickned. But if we neede to go no further than our ſelues, to finde and take hold of God: what pardon ſhall his ſlouthfulnes deſerue that will not vouchſafe to deſcend into himſelfe to finde God? And the ſame is the reaſon why Dauid, when he had ſhortly ſpoken in the aduancement of the wonderfull name & honor of God that do euery where glorioufly ſhine, byandby crieth out: What is man that thou art mindfull of him? Againe, out of the mouth of infantes and ſucking babes thou haſt ſtabliſhed ſtrength. For ſo he pronounceth that not only in the whole kinde of man is a mirror of the workes of God, but alſo that the very infantes, while they yet hang on their mothers breſtes, haue tongues eloquent enough to preache his glory, ſo that there nedeth no other orators. And therefore he douteth not to ſet their mouthes in the vauwarde, as being ſtrongly armed to ſubdue their madneſſe that would according to their deuiliſh pride couet to extinguiſh the name of God. And hervpon riſeth that which Paul allegeth out of Aratus, that we are the offspring of God: becauſe he garniſhing vs with ſuch excellencie, hath teſtified that he is our father. Like as eue by cõmon reaſon, & as it were by information of experience, the prophane Poets called him the father of men. And truly no mã will aſſentingly and willingly yeelde him ſelfe to ſerue God, but he that hauing taſted his fatherly loue, is mutually allured to loue and worſhip him.

4 And here is diſcloſed the foule vnthankfulneſſe of men, which while they haue within them ſelues a workehouſe glorioufly furniſhed with innumerable workes of God, and alſo a ſhop ſtuffed with ineſtimable plentie of riches, and whẽ they ought to burſt forth into prayſing of him, are contrariwiſe puffed vp and doe ſwell with ſo much the greater pride. They feele how diuerſly in maruelous wiſe God worketh in them: they are taught by experience it ſelfe, how great variety of gifts they poſſeſſe by his liberalitie: whether they will or no, they are enforced to knowe that theſe are the tokens of his godhead: and yet they ſuppreſſe it cloſe within them. Truely they nede not to goe out of them ſelues, ſo that they would not in preſumptuouſly taking vpon them ſelues that which is giuen from heauen, bury within the ground that which brightly giueth light to their minds to ſee God. But euen at this day the earth beareth many mõſterous ſpirites, which ſticke not to abuſe the whole ſeede of Godhead that is ſowen in mãs nature, and to emploie it to oppreſſe the name of God. How deteſtable, I pray you, is this madnes, that man finding God a hundred times in his body and his ſoule, ſhould by the very ſame pretence of excellence deny that there is a God? They will not ſay, that they are by chaunce made different from brute beaſt. But they pretend a cloke of nature, whom they accompt the māker of all things, and ſo do conuey God away. They ſee that exquiſite workmāſhip in all their members, from their mouth and their eyes euen to the nailes of their toaes, and yet here alſo they put nature in place of God. But ſpecially the ſo ſwift motions, the ſo excellent powers, the ſo rare gifts of the ſoule, do repreſent a diuine nature that doth not eaſily ſuffer it ſelfe to be hid: vnleſſe the Epicureans like the Giauntes Cyclopes would bearing them ſelues bold vpon this hie degree outrageouſly make warre againſt God. Do the whole treaſures of the heauenly wiſdom ſo meete together, to rule a worme of fiue feete long: and ſhall the whole vniuerſalitie of the world be without this prerogatiue? Firſt to agree that there is a certaine inſtrumental thing that aunſwereth to all the parts of man, doth ſo ſerue nothing at all to obſcure the honour of God, that it rather doth more glorioufly ſet it out. Let Epicure aunſwere me, what meeting of vndiuiſible bodies, boiling [illegible] meat and drinke in man, doth diſpoſe part into excrements and part into blood, and bringeth to paſſe that there is in all the members of man ſuch an endeuoring to do their office, euen as if ſo many ſeuerall ſoules did by common aduiſe rule one bodie.

5 But I haue not nowe to do with that ſtie of ſwine. I rather ſpeake vnto them, that being geuen to ſuttelties would by croked conueyance wryth that cold ſaying of Ariſtotle, both to deſtroy the immortalitie of the ſoule, and alſo to take from God his right. For becauſe there are inſtrumentall powers of the ſoule, by pretence thereof they bind the ſoule to the body, that it can not continue without the body: & with prayſes of nature they do as much as in them is, ſuppreſſe the name of God. But the powers of the ſoule are farre from being enclоſed in thoſe exerciſes that ſerue the body. For what pertaineth it to the body, for a man to meaſure the ſkie, to gather the number of the ſtarres, to learne the greatneſſe of one, to know what ſpace they be diſtant one from an other, with what ſwiftneſſe or ſlowneſſe they go their courſes, how many degrees they decline this way or that way? I graunt in deed that there is ſome vſe of Aſtrologie: but my meaning is onely to ſhew that in this ſo depe ſearching out of heauenly things it is not an inſtrumental meaſuring, but that the ſoule hath her office by it ſelf ſeuerall frō the body. I haue ſhewed one example, by which it ſhalbe eaſie for the readers to gather the reſt. Truely the manifold nimbleneſſe of the ſoule, by which it ſurueieth both heauen & earth, ioyneth things paſt with things to come, kepeth in memorie things heard long before, and expreſſeth ech thing to it ſelf by imagination, alſo the ingeniouſnes by which it inuēteth things incredible, & which is the mother of ſo many maruelous arts, are ſure tokens of diuine nature in man. Beſide that, euen in ſleeping it doth not onely roll and turne it ſelfe, but alſo conceiueth many thinges profitable, reaſoneth of many thinges, and alſo prophecieth of thinges to come. What ſhal we in this caſe ſay, but that the ſignes of immortalitie that are emprinted in man, can not be blotted out? Now what reaſon may beare that man ſhalbe of diuine nature, and not acknowledge his Creator: Shall we forſoth by iudgement that is put into vs diſcerne betweene right and wrong, and ſhall there be no iudge in heauen? Shall we euen in our ſleepe haue abiding with vs ſome remnant of vnderſtanding, & ſhall no God be waking in gouerning the world? Shall we be ſo compted the inuenters of ſo many artes and profitable things, that God ſhalbe defrauded of his praiſe, whereas yet experience ſufficiently teacheth, that from an other and not from our ſelues, all that we haue, is in diuerſe wiſe diſtributed amōg vs? As for that, which ſome do babble of the ſecret inſpiration that geueth liuelines to the world, it is not only weake, but alſo vngodly. They like well that famous ſaying of Vergile:

Firſt heauen and earth, and flowing fields of ſeas,
The ſhining globe of Moone, and Titans ſtars, Aen. 6.
Spirite feedes within, and throughout all the lims,
Infuſed minde the whole huge maſſe doth moue,
And with the large bigge bodie mixe it ſelfe.
Thence come the kindes of men and eke of beaſts,
And liues of flying foules, and monſters ſtrange,
That water beares within the marble Sea.
A firye liuelineſſe and heauenlie race there is Within thoſe ſedes. &c.

Forſoth, that the world which was created for a ſpectacle of the glorie of God, ſhould be the creator of it ſelfe. So in an other place the ſame author folowing the common opinion of the Greeks and Latins, ſayeth:

Some ſay that bees haue parte of minde diuine, Geo. 4.
And heauenly draughts. For eke they ſay that God
Gothe through the coaſts of land, and creeks of ſea,
And through depe skie. And hence the flocks and herdes:
And men, and all the kindes of ſauage beaſts,

Ech at their birth receiue their ſuttle liues.
And therto are they rendered all at laſt,
And all reſolued are retournd againe.
Ne place there is for death: but liuely they,
Flie into nomber of the ſtarres abouc,
And take theyr place within the lofty skie.

Loe, what that hungry ſpeculatiõ of the vniuerſall minde that geueth ſoule and liuelineſſe to the world, auaileth to engender & nourish Godlines in the harts of men. Which doth alſo better appeare by the blaſphemous ſayings of the filthy dogge Lucretius, which are deriued from the ſame principle. Euen this is it, to make a ſhadowiſh God, to driue farre away the true God whom we ought to feare & worſhip. I graũt in deede that this may be godlily ſayd, ſo that it proceede from a godly minde, that Nature is God: but becauſe it is a hard & an vnproper maner of ſpech, foraſmuch as Nature is rather an order preſcribed by God: therefore in things of ſo great weight and to which is due a ſingular religiouſneſſe, it is hurtfull to wrap vp God confuſedly with the inferior courſe of his works. Let vs therefore remember ſo oft as any man conſidereth his owne nature, that there is one God which ſo gouerneth all natures, that his will is to haue vs to looke vnto him, our faith to be directed to him, and him to be worſhipped and called vppon of vs: becauſe there is nothing more againſt conueniẽce of reaſon than for vs to enioy thoſe excellẽt gifts that ſauour of diuine nature in vs, and to deſpiſe the author that freely doth geue them vnto vs: Now as concerning his power, with how notable examples doth it forceable draw vs to conſider it vnleſſe perhapps we may be ignorant, of how great a ſtrength it is with his only word to vphold this infinite maſſe of heauen and earth, with his only beck, ſometime to ſhake the heauen with noiſe of thunders, to burne vp ech thing with lightnings, to ſet the aire on fier with lightning flames, ſometime to trouble it with diuers ſorts of tempeſts, and byandby the ſame God whẽ he liſt in one moment to make faire wether: to hold in the Sea as if it hanged in the aire, which with his heighth ſeemeth to threaten continuall deſtruction to the earth, ſometime in horrible wiſe to raiſe it vp with outragious violence of winds, and ſometime to appeaſe the waues & make it calme again. For proſe hereof do ſerue all the praiſes of God gathered of the teſtimonies of nature, ſpecially in the booke of Iob & in Eſay, which now of purpoſe I ouerpaſſe, becauſe they ſhall els where haue an other place fitter for them, where I ſhall entreat of the creation of the world according to the Scriptures. Only my meaning was now to touch, that both ſtrangers & they of the houſehold of God haue this way of seeking God common to them both, that is, to follow these first draughts which both aboue and beneth do as in a shadow set forth a liuely image of him. And now the same power leadeth vs to consider his eternitie. For it must needs be that he from whom all things haue their beginning, is of eternall continuance, and hath his beginning, of himselfe. But now if any man enquire the cause whereby he both was once lead to create all these things, & is now moued to preserue them: we shall finde that his only goodnes was it that caused him. Yea and although this only be the cause, yet ought the same aboundantly to suffice to allure vs to the loue of him, forasmuch as there is no creature (as the Prophet sayth) vpon which his mercy is not poured out. Psa. 145. 9.

6 Also in the second sort of his works, I meane those that come to passe beside the ordinary course of nature, there doth appeare no lesse euident proofe of his powers. For in gouerning the fellowship of men he so ordereth his prouidence, that wheras he is by innumerable means good and bountifull to all men, yet by manifest and daily tokens he declareth his fauorable kindnesse to the Godly, and his seuerity to the wicked and euell doers. For not doutfull are the punishments that he layeth vpon haynous offences: like as he doth openly shew himselfe a defendor and reuenger of innocencie, while he prospereth the life of good men with his blessing, helpeth their necessity, asswageth and comforteth their sorowes, relieueth their calamities, and by all meanes prouideth for their safety. Neither ought it any thing to deface the perpetuall rule of his iustice, that he oftentimes permitteth wicked men and euell doers for a time to reioice vnpunished: and on the other side suffereth good and innocent to be tossed with many aduersities, yea and to be oppressed with the malice and vniust dealing of the vngodly. But rather a much cõtrary consideratiõ ought to enter into our mindes: that when by manifest shew of his wrath be punisheth one sinne, we should therefore thinke that he hateth all sinnes: and when he suffereth many sinnes to passe vnpunished, we should thereupon thinke that there shalbe an other iudgement to which they are differred to be then punished. Likewise howe great matter doth it minister vs to consider his mercy, while he oftentimes cesseth not to shew his vnweried bountifulnesse vpon miserable sinners in calling them home to him with more than fatherly tendernesse, vntill he haue subdued their frowardnesse with doing them good?

7 To this end, where the Prophet particularly rehearseth, how God in cases past hope, doeth sodenly and wonderfully and beside all Psa. 107 hope, succour men that are in miserie and in a maner lost, whether grace, or aduaunceth the baſeſt of the raſcall people, or throwe downe the noble Peeres from the hie degree of dignitie: by ſuch amples ſhewed foorth he gathereth that thoſe thinges which are ged chaunces happening by fortune, are ſo many teſtimonies of heauently prouidēce, and ſpecially of his fatherly kindeneſſe, and therby is geuen matter of reioycing to the Godly, and the wicked reprobate haue their mouthes ſtopped. But becauſe the greater with the finger. And here againe is to be noted, that we are called to the knowledge of God, not such as contented with vaine speculatiõ, doth but flie about in the braine, but such as shalbe sound and frutefull, if it be rightly conceiued and take roote in our harts. For the Lord is declared by his powers, the force whereof becausse we feele within vs, and doe enioy the benefits of them, it must nedes be that we be inwardly moued much more liuely with such a knowledge, than if we shoulde imagine God to be such one, of whom we should haue no feeling. Wherby we vnderstand that this is the rightest way and fittest order to seek God, not to attempt to enter depely with presumptuous curiositie throughly to discusse his substance, which is rather to be reuerently worshipped then scrupulously serched: but rather to behold him in his workes, by which he maketh himselfe nere and familiar, and doth in a maner communicate himselfe vnto vs. And this the Apostle meant, when he sayd, that God is not to be sought a farre of, forasmuch as he with his most present power dwelleth within euery one of vs. Wherfore Dauid, hauing before confessed his vnspeakeable greatnesse, when he descendeth to the particular rehersall of his workes, protesteth that the same will shew forth it selfe. Therefore we also ought to geue our selues vnto such a searching out of God, as may so hold our wit suspended with admiration, that it may therewithall throughly moue vs with effectuall feeling. And, as Augustine teacheth in an other place, becausse we are not able to cõceiue him, it behoueth vs as it were fainting vnder the burden of his greatnesse, to looke vnto his workes, that we may be refreshed with his goodnes.

Act. 17. 27.
In Psal. 144.

9 Then such a knowledge ought not only to stirre vs vp to the worshipping of God, but also to awake vs, and raise vs to hope of the life to come. For when we consider that such examples as God sheweth both of his mercifulnesse, and of his seueritie, are but begun and not halfe full: without dout we must thinke, that herein he doth but make a shew aforehand of those things, whereof the open disclosing and full deliuerance is differred vnto an other life. On the other side, when we see that the godly are by the vngodly greued with afflictions, troubled with iniuries, oppressed with sclaunders, and vexed with despitefull dealings and reproches: contrarywise that wicked doers do florish, prosper, and obteine quiet with honor, yea and that vnpunished: we must byandby gather that there shalbe an other life, wherin is layd vp in store both due reuenge for wickednesse, and reward for rightuousnesse. Moreouer when we note that the faithfull are often chastised with the roddes of the Lord, we may most certainly determine that much lesse the vngodly shal escape his scourges.

For very well is that spoken of Augustin. If euery sinne should now De ciui. dei cap. 8. be punished with open peine, it would be thought that nothing were reserued to the last iudgement. Again, if God should now openly punish no sinne, it would be beleued, that there were no prouidence of God. Therfore we must confesse, that in euery particular woorke of God, but principally in the vniuersall generalitie of them, the power of God are sette forth as it were in painted tables, by which all mankinde is prouoked and allured to the knowledge of him, and from knowledge to full and perfect felicitie. But where as these his power do in his workes most brightly appeare, yet what they principally tende vnto, of what valoure they be, and to what end we ought to weie them: this we then only attaine to vnderstand when we descend into our selues, and do consider by what meanes God doth shew forth in vs his life, wisdom, and power, and doth vse toward vs his righte-ousnesse, goodnesse, and mercyfull kindnesse. For though Dauid iustly Psa. 92. 7. complaineth, that the vnbeleuing do dote in folly, because they wey not the deepe counsailes of God in his gouernance of mankinde: yet that is also most true, which he sait in an other place, that the won-derfull wisdom of God in that behalfe excedeth the heares of our Psa. 40. 13. heade. But because this poinct shall hereafter in place conuenient be more largely entreated, therfore I do at this time passe it ouer.

10 But with howe great brightnes soeuer God doth in the mirrour of his works shewe by representation both himselfe and his immor-tall kingdome: yet such is our grosse blockishnesse, that we stand dull amased at so plaine testimonies, so that they passe away from vs without profit. For, as touching the frame and most beautifull placing of the world, howe many a one is there of vs, that when he either lif-teth vp his eyes to heauen, or casteth them about on the diuers countries of the earth doth direct his minde to remembrāce of the creator, and doth not rather rest in beholding the workes without hauing regard of the workman. But as touching those things that daily happe beside the order of natural course, how many a one is there that do not more thinke that men are rather whirled about and rowlled by blind vnaduisednesse of fortune, than gouerned by prouidēce of God.
But if at any time we be by the guiding & directiō of these things driuen to the consideration of God (as all men must needes be) yet soone as we haue without aduisement conceiued a feeling of some Godhead, we byandby slide away to the dotages or erroneous inuentions of our flesh, and with our vanity we corrupt the pure verity of God. So heerein in deede we differ one from an other, that euery man priuately by himselfe procureth to himselfe some peculiar error
by

but in this point we all are moſt like together, that we all, not one excepted, doe depart from the one true God to monſtruous trifles. To which diſeaſe not onely common and groſſe wits are ſubiect: but alſo the moſt excellent and thoſe that otherwiſe are endued with ſingular ſharpnes of vnderſtanding, are entangled with it. How largely hath the whole ſect of Philoſophers bewraied their owne dullnes and beaſtly ignorance in this behalfe? For, to paſſe ouer all the reſt, which are much more vnreaſonably fooliſh, Plato himſelfe the moſt religious & moſt ſober of all the reſt, vainly erreth in his round globe. Now what might not chance to the other, when the cheefe of them, whoſe parte was to geue light to the reſt, do themſelues ſo erre and ſtumble? Likewiſe where Gods gouernance of mens matters doth ſo plainly proue his prouidence, that it can not be denied, yet this doth no more preuail with men, than if they beleued that all things are toſſed vp and down with the raſh will of Fortune: ſo great is our inclination to vanity and error. I ſpeake now altogether of the moſt excellent, and not of the common ſort, whoſe madnes hath infinitely wandered in prophaning the truth of God.

11 Heereof proceedeth that vnmeaſurable ſink of errors, wherewith the whole world hath bin filled and ouerflowne. For ech mannes wit is to himſelfe as a maze, ſo that it is no maruell that euery ſeuerall nation was diuerſly drawen into ſeuerall deuiſes, and not that only, but alſo that ech ſeuerall man had his ſeuerall gods by himſelfe. For ſince that raſh preſumption and wantonnes was ioined to ignorance & darkeneſſe, there hath bin ſcarcely at any time any one man found, that did not forge to himſelfe an idole or fanſie in ſteede of God. Truely euen as out of a wide and large ſpring do iſſue waters, ſo the infinite number of Gods hath flowed out of the wit of man, while euery man ouer licenciouſly ſtraying, erroneouſly deuiſeth this or that concerning God himſelfe. And yet I nede not here to make a regiſter of the ſuperſtitions, wherewith the world hath bin entangled: becauſe both in ſo doing I ſhould neuer haue end, and alſo though I ſpeake not one word of them, yet by ſo many corruptions it ſufficiently appeareth how horrible is the blindnes of mans minde. I paſſe ouer the rude & vnlearned people. But amõg the Philoſophers, which enterpriſed with reaſon & learning to pearce into heauẽ, how ſhamefull is the diſagreement? With the higher wytte that any of thẽ was endued, and filled with arte and ſcience, with ſo much the more glorious coloures he ſeemed to paint out his opinion. All which notwithſtanding, if one do narowly looke vpon, he ſhall finde them to be but vaniſhing falſe colours. The Stoickes ſeemed in their owne con-

ceite to speake very wisely, that out of all the partes of nature may be gathered diuers names of God, and yet that God being but one is not thereby torne in sunder. As though we were not already more than enough enclined to vanity, vnlesse a manifold plenty of gods set before vs should further and more violently draw vs into errour. Also the Ægyptians misticall science of diuinity sheweth, that they all diligently endeuored to this end, not to seeme to erre without a reason. And it is possible, that at the first sight some thing seeming probable, might deceiue the simple and ignorant: but no mortall man euer inuented any thing, wherby religiō hath not bin fowlly corrupted. And this so confuse diuersity emboldned the Epicures & other grosse despisers of godlinesse, by little and little to cast of all feeling of God. For when they saw the wisest of all to striue in contrary opiniōs, they sticked not out of their disagreements, & out of the fooliſh or apparantly erroneous doctrine of ech of them, to gather, that men do in vaine & fondly procure torments to themselues while they serche for God, which is none at all. And this they thought that they might freely do without punishment, becausse it was better breefely to deny vtterly, that there is any God, than to fayne vncertaine Gods, and so to raise vp contentions that neuer should haue ende. And to much fondly do they reason, or rather cast a mist, to hide their vngodlinesse by ignorance of men, whereby it is no reason that any thing should be taken away from God. But forasmuch as all do confesse, that there is nothing, about which both the learned and vnlearned do so much disagree, thereupon is gathered that the wittes of men are more than dull and blinde in heauēly misteries, that do so erre in seeking out of God. Some other do praise that answere of Symonides, which being demaunded of king Hieron what God was, desired to haue a dayes respite graunted him to study vpō it. And when the next day following, the king demaunded the same question, he required two daies respite, and so oftentimes doubling the number of dayes at length he answered: How much the more I consider it, so much the harder the matter seemeth vnto me. But graunting that he did wisely to suspend his sentence of so darke a matter, yet hereby appeareth, that if men be only taught by nature, they can know nothing certainly, soundly, & plainly concerning God, but only are tyed to confused principles to worship an vnknowen God.

12 Now we must also hold, that all they that corrupt the pure religiō (as all they must needes do that are giuē to their owne opinion) do depart frō the one God. They will boast that their meaning is otherwise: but what they meane, or what they persuade thēselues maketh not much to the matter, ſith the holy Ghoſt pronoũceth, that all they are Apoſtates, that according to the darknes of their own minde do thruſt deuils in the place of God. For this reaſon, Paule pronounceth that the Epheſians were without a God, till they hadde learned by the Goſpel, what it was to worſhip the true God. And we muſt not thinke this to be ſpoken of one nation only, for as much as he generally affirmeth in an other place, that all menne were become vaine in their imaginations, ſins that in the creation of the world, the Maieſtie of the Creator was diſcloſed vnto them. And therfore the ſcripture, to make place for the true and one only God, condemneth of falſehod and lying, whatſoeuer godhead in old time was celebrate among the Gentiles, and leaueth no God at all, but in the moũte Sion, wher flouriſhed the peculiar knowledge of God. Truely among the Gentiles the Samaritans in Chriſtes time ſeemed to approche nigheſt to true godlineſſe: and yet we heare it ſpoken by Chriſtes owne mouth, that they knew not what they worſhipped. Whervpon foloweth, that they were deceiued with vaine error. Finally although they were not all infected with groſſe faultes, or fell into open idolatries, yet was there no true and approued religion that was grounded only vpon common reaſon. For all be it, that there were a few that were not ſo madde as the common people were, yet this doctrine of Paule remaineth certainly true, that the princes of this world conceiue not the wiſdom of God. Now if the moſt excellent haue wandred in darkneſſe, what is to be ſaid of the very dregges? Wherefore it is no meruayle, if the holy Ghoſt do refuſe as baſtard worſhippings all formes of worſhipping deuiſed by the will of men. Bycauſe in heauenly miſteries opinion cõceiued by witt of men, although it do not alway brede a heape of errours, yet is alway the mother of errour. And though there come no worſe of it, yet is this no ſmall fault, at aduenture to worſhip an vnknowen God: of which fault all they by Chriſtes own mouth are pronoũced gilty, that are not taught by the law what God they ought to worſhip. And truly the beſt lawmakers that euer were, proceded no further, than to ſaie that religion was grounded vpon common conſent. Yea and in Xenophon Socrates praiſed the anſwere of Apollo, wherin he willed that euery man ſhould worſhip gods after the maner of the countrey, and the cuſtome of his owne citie. But how came mortall men by this power, of their owne authoritie to determine that which farre ſurmounteth the world? or who can ſo reſte in the decrees of the elders, or common ordinaunces of peoples, as to receaue without douting a God deliuered by mannes deuiſe? Euery man rather will ſtand to his owne iudgement, than yeld him ſelfe to the will of an other. Sith therfore it is to weake and feble a bonde of godlineſſe, in worſhipping of God to folow either a cuſtom of a citie, or the conſent of antiquitie, it remaineth that God him ſelfe muſt teſtifie of him ſelfe from heauen.

13 In vaine therfore ſo many lampes lightned do ſhine in the edifice of the world, to ſhew forth the glory of the creator, which do ſo euery way diſplay their beames vpon vs, that yet of them ſelues they can not bring vs into the right way. In deede they raiſe vp certaine ſparkles, but ſuch as be choked vp before that they can ſprede abrode any full brightneſſe. Therfore the Apoſtle in the ſame place where he calleth the ages of the world images of thinges inuiſible, ſaith further, that by faith is perceyued, that they were framed by the word of God: meaning therby that the inuiſible godhead is in deede repreſented by ſuch ſhewes, but that we haue no eyes to ſe the ſame throughly, vnles they be enlightned by the reuelation of God through faith. And Paule, where he teacheth that by the creation of the world was diſcloſed that which was to be knowne concerning God, doth not meane ſuch a diſcloſing as may be comprehended by the wit of men: but rather ſheweth, that the ſame procedeth no further but to make them vnexcuſable. The ſame Paule alſo, although in one place he ſaith, that God is not to be ſought afarre of, as one that dwelleth within vs: yet in an other place teacheth to what end that nereneſſe auayleth. In the ages paſt (ſaith he) God ſuffred the nations to walke in their owne waies: yet he left not him ſelfe without teſtimonie, doing good from heauen, geuing ſhowres and fruitfull ſeaſons, fillyng the hartes of men with foode & gladneſſe. Howſoeuer therfore the Lord be not without teſtimonie, while with his greate and manyfold bountyfulneſſe he ſweetly allureth men to the knowledge of him: yet for all that, they ceſſe not to folow their owne waies, that is to ſay, their damnable errors.

Act. 13. and 16.

14 But although we want natural power, wherby we can not climbe vp vnto the pure and cleare knowledge of God, yet bycauſe the fault of our dulneſſe is in our ſelues, therfore all colour of excuſe is cutte away from vs. For we can not ſo pretende ignorance, but that euen our conſcience doth ſtill condemne vs of ſlouthfulneſſe and vnthankefulneſſe. It is a defenſe forſooth right worthy to be receiued, if man will allege that he wanted eares to heare the truth, for the publiſhing wherof the very dombe creatures haue lowde voices: if man ſhall ſay that he can not ſee thoſe thinges with his eyes, which the creatures without eyes do ſhew him: if man ſhall lay for his excuſe the febleneſſe of his wit, where all creatures without reaſon do inſtruct him:

Wher-

Wherefore ſith all things do ſhew vs the right way, we are worthily put from all excuſe of our wandering and ſtraying out of the way. But how ſoeuer it is to be imputed to the fault of men, that they do byandby corrupt the ſeede of the knowledge of God, ſowen in their mindes by maruelous workmanſhip of nature, ſo that it groweth not to good & cleane fruite: yet it is moſt true, that we are not ſufficiently inſtructed by that bare and ſimple teſtimony, that the creatures do honorably declare of Gods glory. For ſo ſoone as we haue taken by the beholding of the world a ſmale taſt of the Godhead, we leauing the true God do in ſteade of him raiſe vp dreames and fanſies of our own brayne, and do conuey hither and thither from the true fountaine the praiſe of righteouſnes, wiſdom, goodneſſe and power. Moreouer we do ſo either obſcure, or by ill eſteeming them, depraue his daily doings, that we take away both from them their glory, and from the author his due praiſe.

The vj. Chapter.

That, to attaine to God the Creator, it is nedefull to haue the Scripture to be our guide and maiſtreſſe.

THerefore although that ſame brightneſſe, which both in heauen and earth ſhineth in the eyes of all men, doth ſufficiently take away all defence from the wickedneſſe of men, euen ſo as God, to wrap all mankind in one giltines, doth ſhew his diuine maieſtie to all without exception as it were portrayed out in his creatures: yet is it neceſſary that we haue alſo an other & a better helpe that may rightly direct vs to the very creator of the world. Therfore not in vaine he hath added the light of his word, that therby he mought be knowen to ſaluacion. And this prerogatiue he hath vouchſaued to giue to vs, whom it pleaſed him more nerely and more familiarly to draw together to himſelfe. For becauſe he ſaw the mindes of all men to be caried about with wandering and vnſtedfaſt motion, after he had choſen the Iewes to his peculiar flocke, he compaſſed them in as it were with barres, that they ſhould not wander out in vanity as other did. And not without cauſe he holdeth vs with the ſame meane in the true knowledge of himſelfe. For otherwiſe euen they ſhould quickly ſwarue away that ſeeme to ſtand ſtedfaſt in compariſon of other. For as old men, or poore blind, or they whoſe eyes are dimme ſighted, if you lay a fayre booke before them, though they perceiue that there is ſomwhat wrytten therin, yet can they not read two words together: but being holpē with ſpectacles ſet betwene thē & it, they begin to read diſtinctly: ſo the Scripture gathering vp together in our minds the knowledge of God, which otherwise is but co fused, doth remoue the mist, and plainly shew vs the true God. Th therfore is a singular gift, that to the instructiō of his church god vse not only dumme teachers, but also openeth his own holy mouth: no only publisheth that there is some God to be worshipped, but al therwithall pronounceth that he himselfe is the same God whom w ought to worship: and doth not only teache the elect to looke upo God, but also presenteth himselfe vnto them to be looked vpon. Th order hath he kept frō the beginning toward his church, beside the common instructions to giue them also his word. Which is the righ ter & certainer marke to know him by. And it is not to be douted, tha Adam, Noe, Abraham and the rest of the fathers by this helpe attai ned to that familiar knowledge, which made them as it were seuerall different from the vnbeleuers. I speake not yet of the proper doctrin of faith, wherewith they were enlightened into the hope of eterna life. For, that they might passe from death to life, it was nedefull fo them to know God not onely to be the creator, but also the redeme as doutlesse they obteined both by the word. For that kinde of knowledge wherby was giuen to vnderstand who is the God by whom th world was made and is gouerned, in order came before the other: and then was that other inward knowledge adioyned, which onely quick-neth dead soules, whereby God is knowen not only to be the make of the world and the only author & iudge of all things that are done, but also to be the redemer in the person of that mediator. But becaus

I am not yet come to the fall of the world and corruption of nature,
I will omit also to entreate of the remedy thereof. Therefore let th readers remember that I do not yet speake of the couenaunt whereb God hath adopted to himselfe the children of Abrahā, & of that special parte of doctrine whereby the faithfull haue alway bin peculiarl seuered from the prophane natiōs: becaus that doctrine was founde vpon Christ: but I speake how we ought to learne by the Scripture, that God which is the creator of the world, is by certaine markes seuerally discerned from the counterfait multitude of false Gods. And then the order it selfe shall conueniently bring vs to the redemer. But although we shall alleage many testimonies out of the newe Testament, & some also out of the law & the Prophets, wherein is expresse mencion made of Christ: yet they shall all tend to this end, to proue that in the scripture is disclosed vnto vs God the creator of the world, & in the Scripture is set foorth what we ought to think of him, to the end that we should not seke about the bush for an vncertain godhead.

2 But whether God were knowen to the fathers by oracles & visions,

ons,or whether by the mean & miniſtration of mẽ he informed them of that which they ſhould from hand to hand deliuer to their poſterity:yet it is vndoutedly true that in their harts was engrauen a ſtedfaſt certainty of doctrine,ſo as they might be perſwaded & vnderſtãd,that it which they had learned came frõ God. For God alwayes made vndouted aſſurance for credit of his word, which farre exceeded all vncertaine opinion. At length that by cõtinuall proceeding of doctrine, the trueth ſuruiuing in all ages might ſtill remaine in the worlde, the ſame oracles which he had left with the fathers, his pleaſure was to haue as it were enrolled in publike tables. For this entent was the law publiſhed, whereunto after were added the Prophets for expoſitors. For though there were diuerſe vſes of the law, as herafter ſhall better appeare in place conuenient : and ſpecially the principall purpoſe of Moiſes and all the Prophets was to teach the manner of recõciliation betwene God and men, for which cauſe alſo Paule calleth Chriſt the Ro.10.4 end of the law:yet, as I ſay once againe, beſide the proper doctrine of faith and repentance which ſheweth forth Chriſt the mediatour,the Scripture doth by certaine marks and tokens paint out the onely and true God, in that that he hath created and doth gouerne the world, to the end he ſhould be ſeuerally knowen and not reckned in the falſe nomber of fained Gods. Therefore although it behoueth man earneſtly to bend his eyes to conſider the works of God,foraſmuch as he is ſet as it were in this gorgeous ſtage to be a beholder of them : yet principally ought he to bend his eares to the word, that he may better profit thereby. And therefore it is no maruell that they which are borne in darkneſſe do more &more waxe hard in their amaſed dulnes, becauſe very fewe of thẽ do giue themſelues pliable to learne of the word of God, whereby to kepe them within their boundes, but they rather reioiſe in their own vanity. Thus thẽ ought we to hold,that to the end true religion may ſhine amõg vs,we muſt take our beginning at the heauenly doctrine. And that no man can haue any taſt be it neuer ſo little of true and ſound doctrine, vnleſſe he haue bin ſcholer to the Scripture. And from henſe groweth the originall of true vnderſtanding,that we reuerently embrace whatſoeuer it pleaſeth God therin to teſtifie of himſelfe. For not only the perfect & in all pointes abſolute faith,but alſo all right knowledge of God ſpringeth from obedience. And truely in this behalfe God of his ſingular prouidẽce hath prouided for men in and for all ages.

3 For if we conſider how ſlippery an inclinatiõ mans minde hath to ſlide into forgetfulnes of God, how great a redines to fall in to all kinde of errors,how great a luſt to forge oftentimes new & coũterfait religions, we may therby perceiue how neceſſarie it was to haue the heauenly doctrine ſo put in writing, that it ſhould not either perish by forgetfulnes, or grow vaine by errour, or be corrupted by boldnes of men. Sith therefore it is manifeſt that God hath alway vſed the helpe of his word, toward all thoſe whom it pleaſed him at any time frutefully to inſtruct, becauſe he forſaw that his image emprinted in the moſt beautiful forme of the world was not ſufficiētly effectuall: Therefore it behoueth vs to trauaile this ſtraight way, if we earneſtly couet to attaine to the true beholding of God. We muſt, I ſay, come to his word, wherin God is well and liuely ſet out by his workes, when his workes be weyed not after the peruerſneſſe of our owne iudgement but according to the rule of the eternall trueth. If we ſwarue from that word, as I ſaied euen now, although we runne neuer ſo faſt, yet we ſhall neuer attain to the marke, becauſe the courſe of our running is out of the way. For thus we muſt thinke, that the brightneſſe of the 1.Tim.6 16. face of God, which the Apoſtle calleth ſuch as cannot be atteined vnto, is vnto vs like a maze, out of which we cannot vnwrap our ſelues vnleſſe we be by the line of the word guided into it: ſo that it is much better for vs to halt in this way, than to runne neuer ſo faſt in an other. And therfore Dauid often times when he teacheth that ſuperſticions are to be taken away out of the world, that pure religion may Pſa.9.& 96. 97. 99. &c. floriſh, bringeth in God reigning: meaning by this word reigning not the power that he hath, but the doctrine wherby he chalengeth to himſelfe a lawfull gouernemēt: becauſe errors can neuer be rooted out of the hartes of men, till the true knowledge of God be planted.

4 Therfore the ſame Prophete, after that he hath recited that the Pſa.19. 21. heauens declare the glory of God, that the firmamēt ſheweth forth the workes of his handes, that the orderly ſucceeding courſe of daies and nightes preacheth his maieſtie, then deſcendeth to make mention of his word. The law of the Lord (ſaieth he) is vndefiled, conuerting ſoules: the witneſſe of the Lord is faithfull, geuing wiſdom to litle ones: the righteouſneſſes of the Lord are vpright, making harts cheerefull: the commandement of the Lord is bright geuing light to the eyes. For although he comprehendeth alſo the other vſes of the law, yet in generalitie he meaneth, that foraſmuch as God doth in vain call vnto him all nations by the beholding of the heauen and earth, therfore this is the peculiar ſchoole of the children of God. The ſame meaning hath the xxix. Pſalme, where the Prophet hauing preached of the terrible voice of God, which in thunder, windes, ſhowres, whirlewindes and ſtormes, ſhaketh the earth, maketh the mountaines to tremble, and breaketh the cedre trees: in the ende at laſt he goeth further and saith, that his praises are song in the sanctuarie, because the vnbeleuers are deafe and heare not all the voices of God that resounde in the aire. And in like manner in an other Psalme, after that he had described the terrible waues of the Sea, he thus concludeth: thy testimonies are verified, the beauty of thy temple is holynesse for euer. And out of this meaning also proceded that which Christ said to the woman of Samaria, that her nation and the rest did honor that which they knew not, and that onely the Iewes did worship the true God. For wheras the wit of man by reason of the febleneſſe therof can by no meane attain vnto God, but being holpen and lifted vp by his holy word, it folowed of neceſſitie, that all men, excepte the Iewes, did wander in vanite and errour, becauſe they ſought God without his word.

Psa. 93. 5.

Iohn 4. 22.

The vij. Chapter.

By vvhat teſtimonie the Scripture ought to be eſtabliſhed, that is by the vvitneſſe of the holy Ghoſt, that the authoritie therof may remaine certain. And that it is a vvicked inuention to ſay that the credit therof doeth hang vpon the iudgement of the Church.

BVT before I go any further, it is nedefull to ſay ſomwhat of the authoritie of the Scripture, not only to prepare mens mindes to reuerence it, but alſo to take away all dout therof. Now, when it is a matter confeſſed that it is the word of God that is there ſette forth, there is no man of ſo deſperate boldneſſe, vnleſſe he be voide of all common ſenſe and naturall wit of man, that dare derogate the credit of him that ſpeaketh it. But becauſe there are not daily oracles geuen from heauen, and the only Scriptures remaine wherin it hath pleaſed the Lord to preſerue his truth to perpetual memorie, the ſame Scripture by none other meanes is of full credit among the faithfull, but in that they do beleue that it is as verely come from heauen as if they heard the liuely voice of God to ſpeake therin. This matter in deede is right worthy both to be largly entreated of and diligently weyed. But the readers ſhall pardon me if herein I rather regarde what the proportion of the worke which I haue begon may beare, than what the largeneſſe of the matter requireth. There is growen vp among the moſt part of men a moſt hurtfull error, that the Scripture hath only ſo much authority as by common conſent of the Church is geuen vnto it: as if the eternall and inuiolable trueth of God did reſt vpon the pleaſure of men. For ſo, to the great ſcorne of the holy Goſt, they aſke of vs who can aſſure vs that theſe Scriptures came from God: or who can aſſertaine vs that they haue continued vnto our age safe and vncorrupted: who can perswade vs, tha this one booke ought to be reuerently receiued, and that other to b striken out of the number of Scripture, vnles the church did appoi a certaine rule of all these things? It hangeth therfore (say they) vpo the determination of the church, both what reuerence is due to th Scripture, & what bookes are to be reckened in the canon therof. S these robbers of Gods honor, while they seeke vnder colour of th church to bring in an vnbrideled tyranny, care nothing with what ab surdities they snare both themselues and other, so that they may en force this one thing to be beleued among the simple, that the churc can do all thinges. But if it be so: what shall become of the poo consciences that seeke stedfast assurance of eternall life, if all the pro misses that remaine thereof stand and be staied onely vpon the iudge ment of men? When they receiue such answere, shall they cease t wauer and tremble? Again to what scornes of the vngodly is our fait made subiect? into how great suspicion with all men is it brought, this be beleued that it hath but as it were a borowed credit by the fa uour of men.

2 But such bablers are well confuted euen with one word of th Eph. 2. 20. Apostle. He testifieth that the church is builded vpon the foundatio of the Prophets and Apostles. If the doctrine of the Prophets, and A postles be the foundacion of the Church: then must it needes be, tha the same doctrine stode in stedfast certaintie, before that the Churc began to be. Nether can they well cauil, that although the Churc take her first beginning therof, yet it remaineth doutfull what is to b sayed the writinges of the Prophetes and Apostles, vnlesse the iudge ment of the Church did declare it. For if the Christian Church we at the beginning builded vpon the writinges of the Prophetes an preaching of the Apostles: whereseoeuer that doctrine shalbe foūd, th allowed credite therof was surely before the Church, without whic the Church it selfe had neuer bin. Therfore it is a vaine forged deuis that the Church hath power to iudge the Scripture, so as the certain tie of the Scripture should be thought to hang vpon the will of th Church. Wherfore when the Church doth receiue the Scripture an sealeth it with her consenting testimonie, she doth not of a thin doutfull, and that otherwise should be in controuersie, make it auten tike and of credit: but because she acknowledgeth it to be the truet of her God, according to her dutie of godlinesse without delay sh doth honor it. Wheras they demaūd, how shall we be perswaded tha it came from God, vnlesse we resort to the decree of the Church? Thi is all one as if a man should aske, how shall we learne to know ligh

from darkneſſe, white from blacke, or ſwete from ſower. For the Scripture ſheweth in it ſelfe no leſſe apparaunt ſenſe of her trueth, than white and blacke things do of theyr colour, or ſwete & ſower things of their taſt.

3 I know that they commonly alleage the ſaying of Auguſtine, where he ſayth that he would not beleue the Goſpell, ſaue that the authority of the church moued him therto. But how vntruely & cauillouſly it is alleged for ſuch a meaning, by the whole tenor of his wryting it is eaſy to perceiue, He had to do with the Manichees, which required to be beleued without gainesaying, when they vaunted that they had the truth on their ſide, but proued it not. And to make their Manicheus to be beleued, they pretēded the Goſpel. Now Auguſtine asketh thē what they would do, if they did light vpō a man that would not beleue the Goſpell it ſelfe, with what maner of perſwaſion they would draw him to their opinio. Afterward he ſayeth. I my ſelf would not beleue the Goſpell. &c. ſaue that the authority of the church moued me therto. Meaning that he himſelfe, when he was a ſtraunger frō the faith, could not otherwiſe be brought to embrace the Goſpel for the aſſured trueth of God, but by this that he was ouercom with the authority of the church. And what maruell is it, if a man not yet knowing Chriſt, haue regarde to men? Auguſtine therfore doth not there teach that the faith of the godly is grounded vpō the authority of the church, nor meaneth that the certainty of the goſpel doth hang therupō: but ſimply & only, that there ſhould be no aſſurednes of the Goſpell to the infidels, whereby they might be won to Chriſt vnleſſe the cōſent of the church did driue them vnto it. And the ſame meaning a little before he doth plainly cōfirme in this ſaying. Whē I ſhall praiſe that which I beleue, & ſcorne that which thou beleueſt, what thinkeſt thou mete for vs to iudge or do? but that we forſake ſuch men as firſt call vs to come & know certaine truethes and after commaunde vs to beleue things vncertaine: and that we follow them that require vs firſt to beleue that which we are not yet able to ſee, that being made ſtrōg by beleuing we may attaine to vnderſtād the thing that we beleue: not men now, but God himſelfe inwardly ſtrengthning and giuing light to our minde. Theſe are thē very words of Auguſtine: wherby euery mā may eaſely gather, that the holy man had not this meaning, to hang the credite that we haue to the Scriptures vpon the will and awardement of the church, but onely to ſhew this, (which we our ſelues alſo do confeſſe to be true) that they which are not yet lightned with the ſpirite of God, are brought by the reuerēce of the church vnto a willingneſſe to be taught, ſo as they can finde in their hartes to learne the faith of Christ by the Gospell: and that thus by this meane the authority of the church is an introduction, whereby we are prepared beleue the Gospell. For, as we see, his minde is that the assurance the godly be stayed vpon a far other foundation. Otherwise I do deny but that he often presseth the Manichees with the consent the whole church, when he seketh to proue the same Scripture wh they refused. And from hence it came, that he so reproched Faust for that he did not yeld himselfe to the trueth of the Gospel so gro ded, so stablished, so gloriously renomed, & from the very time of Apostles by certaine successions perpetually commended. But he uer trauaileth to this end, to teach that the authority which we knowledge to be in the Scripture, hangeth vpon the determinati or decree of men. But only this, which made much for him in the m ter yhe disputed of, he bringeth forth the vniuersall iudgement of church, wherin he had the auaũtage of his aduersaries. If any desi fuller profe her of, let him reade his booke cõcerning the profit of leuing. Where he shall finde that there is no other redinesse of bel commended vnto vs by him, but that which only giueth vs an ent and is vnto vs a conuenient beginning to enquire, as he termeth it yet not that we ought to rest vpon bare opinion, but to leane to certaine and sound trueth.

Contra Faustũ lib. 32.

Aug. de vtilitate cred.

4 We ought to holde, as I before sayd, that the credit of this ctrine, is not established in vs, vntil such time as we be vndoutedly swaded that God is the author thereof. Therfore the principall pr of the Scripture is commonly taken of the person of God the spea of it. The Prophetes and Apostles bost not of their owne sharpe or any such things as procure credit to men that speake: neither st they vpon proues by reason, but they bring foorth the holy name God, therby to cõpell the whole world to obedience. Now we h to see how not only by probable opinion, but by apparant trueth euidẽt, that in this behalfe the name of God is not without cause deceitfully pretended. If then we will prouide well for conscien that they be not cõtinually caried about with vnstedfast douting, may wauer, nor stay at euery smale stop, this maner of persuasion be fetched deper then from either the reasons, iudgements or the iectures of men, euen from the secrete testimony of the holy Gh True in deede it is, that if we listed to worke by way of argumen many thinges might be alleged that may easily proue, if there be God in heauen, that the law, the prophecies and the Gospell c from him. Yea although men learned and of depe iudgement w stand vp to the contrary, and would employ & shew foorth the w

force of their wits in this disputation: yet if they be not so hardened as to become desperatly shameless, they would be compelled to cõfesse, that there are seene in the Scripture manifest tokens that it is God that speaketh therin: whereby it may appeare that the doctrine therof is frõ heauẽ. And shortly herafter we shal see, that all the books of the holy Scripture do far excel all other writings what soeuer they be. Yea if we bring thither pure eyes & vncorrupted senses, we shall foorthwith finde there the maiestie of God, which shall subdue all hardnesse of gainesaying and enforce vs to obey him. But yet they do disorderly, that by disputation trauel to establish the perfect credit of the Scripture. And truely although I am not furnished with great dexterity, nor eloquence: yet if I were to cõtend with the most suttle despisers of God, that haue a desire to shew themselues witty and pleasãt in febling the authority of Scripture, I trust it should not be hard for me to put to silẽce their bablings. And if it were profitable to spẽd labour in confuting their cauillations, I would with no great businesse shake in sunder the bragges that they mutter in corners. But though a man do deliuer the sound word of God from the reproches of men, yet that sufficeth not foorthwith to fasten in their harts that assurednesse that godlines requireth. Prophane men becausse they thinke religion standeth only in opiniõ, to the end they would beleue nothing fondly or lightly, do couet and require to haue it proued to them by reason, that Moises & the Prophetes spake from God. But I answere that the testimony of the holy Ghost is better than all reason. For as only God is a conuenient witnesse of himselfe in his owne worde, so shall the same word neuer finde credit in the hartes of men, vntill it be sealed vp with the inward witnes of ỹ holy Ghost. It behoueth therefore of necessity that the same holy Ghost which spak by the mouth of the Prophetes, do enter into our hartes to perswade vs that they faythfully vttered that which was by God commaunded them. And this order is very aptly set foorth by Esay in these wordes. My spirite which is in thee and the words that I haue put in thy mouth & in the mouth of thy sede shall not faile for euer. It greueth some good men, that they haue not ready at hand some cleare profe to allege, when the wicked do without punishmẽt murmure against the word of God: as though the holy Ghost were not for this cause called both a seale and a pledge, becausse vntill he do lighten mens mindes they do alway wauer among many doutings. Esay 51. 16.

5 Let this therfore stand for a certainly perswaded truth, that they whom the holy Gost hath inwardly taught, do wholely rest vppon the Scripture, and that the same Scripture is to be credited for it selfe

ſake, and ought not to be made ſubiect to demonſtration & reaſo but yet that the certainety which it getteth among vs, it atteineth the witneſſe of the holy Ghoſt. For though by the only maieſty o ſelfe it procureth reuerẽce to be giuen to it: yet then only it throu ly perceth our affections, when it is ſealed in our hartes by the h Ghoſt. So being lightened by his vertue, we do then beleue, no our owne iudgement, or other mens, that the Scripture is from G but aboue all mans iudgement we hold it moſt certainly determi euen as if we beheld the maieſty of God himſelfe there preſent, t
by the miniſtery of men it came to vs frõ the very mouth of God.
ſeeke not for argumentes & likelihodes to reſt our iudgement vp but as to a thing without all compaſſe of cõſideration, we ſubmit iudgement & wit vnto it. And that not in ſuch ſorte as ſome are w ſometime haſtily to take holde of a thing vnknowen, which after ing throughly perceiued diſpleaſeth them: but becauſe we are in conſciences well aſſured that we hold an inuincible trueth. Nei in ſuch ſorte, as ſilly men are wont to yeld their minde in thraldo ſuperſtitions: but becauſe we vndoutedly perceiue therin the ſtre & breathing of the diuine maieſtie, wherewith we are drawen & red to obey, both wittingly and willingly, and yet more liuely Eſa. 43. 10. effectually than mans will or witte can attaine. And therfore for g cauſe doth God cry out by Eſay, that the Prophetes with the w people do beare him witneſſe, becauſe being taught by prophe they did vndoutedly beleue without guile or vncertainty that himſelfe had ſpoken. Such therfore is our perſwaſion, as requiret reaſons: ſuch is our knowledge, as hath a right good reaſon to m taine it, euẽ ſuch a one, wherein the minde more aſſuredly & ſted ly reſteth thã vpõ any reaſons: ſuch is our feeling, as can not proc but by reuelation from heauen. I ſpeake now of none other thing that which euery one of the faithfull doth by experiẽce finde in ſelfe, ſauing that my words do much want of a full declaration o leaue here many things vnſpokẽ, becauſe there wil be elſwhere a a conuenient place to entreate of this matter. Only now let vs k that only that is the true faith which the ſpirite of God doth ſea our harts. Yea with this only reaſon will the ſober reader and w Eſa. 54. 13. to learne, be contented. Eſay promiſeth, that al the children of th nued church ſhalbe the ſcholers of God. A ſingular priuilege t doth God vouchſaue to graunt to his elect onely, whom he ſeu from all the reſt of mankinde. For what is the beginning of true ctrine, but a ready cherefulneſſe to here the voice of God? But requireth to be heard by the mouth of Moiſes, as it is wrytten: ſa in thy harte, who ſhall aſcend into heauen, or who ſhall deſcend into the depe? the word is euen in thine owne mouth. If it be the pleaſure of God that this treaſure of vnderſtanding be layd vp in ſtore for his children, it is no maruell nor vnlikely, that in the common multitude of men is ſeene ſuch ignorance and dulneſſe. The common multitude I call euen the moſt excellent of thē, vntil ſuch time as they be graffed into the body of the church. Moreouer Eſay giuing warning that the Prophets doctrine ſhould ſeeme incredible not only to ſtrangers but alſo to the Iewes that would be accompted of the houſehold of God addeth this reaſon: becauſe the arme of God ſhal not be reueled to all men. So oft therfore as the ſmallneſſe of number of the beleuers doth trouble vs, on the other ſide let vs call to minde, that none can comprehende the miſteries of God but they to whom it is giuen.

The viij. Chapter.

That ſo farre as mans reaſon may beare, there are ſufficient proues to ſtablish the credit of Scripture.

VNleſſe we haue this aſſurance, which is both more excellent & of more force than any iudgement of man, in vaine ſhall the authority of Scripture eyther be ſtrengthened with argumentes, or ſtabliſhed with conſent of the church, or confirmed with any other meanes of defence. For vnleſſe this fundation be layd, it ſtill remayneth hanging in doute. As on the other ſide when exempting it from the common ſtate of thinges, we haue embraced it deuoutly and according to the worthineſſe of it: then theſe things become very fit helpes, which before were but of ſmall force to graffe and faſten the aſſurance thereof in our mindes. For it is maruelous, how great eſtabliſhement groweth hereof, when with earneſt ſtudy we conſider howe orderly and well framed a diſpoſition of the diuine wiſdom appeareth therein, how heauenly a doctrine in euery place of it, and nothing ſauoring of earthlyneſſe, how beautifull an agreement of all the partes among themſelues, and ſuch other thinges as auaile to procure a maieſty to wrytings. But more perfectly are our hartes confirmed when we conſider, howe we are euen violently caried to an admiration of it rather with dignity of matter, than with grace of words. For this alſo was not done without the ſingular prouidēce of God, that the hye miſteries of the heauēly kingdom ſhould for the moſt part be vttered vnder a contemptible baſenes of wordes, leaſt if it had bin beautified with more glorious ſpeache the wicked ſhould cauill that the onely force of eloquence doth raigne therein. But when that rough and in a maner rude ſimplicity doth raiſe vp a greater reuerence of it selfe than any Rhetoricians eloquence, w may we iudge, but that there is a more mighty strēgth of truth in holy Scripture, than that it nedeth any art of wordes? Not with cause therefore the Apostle maketh his argument, to proue that douting, when not vpholden by foraine aides it selfe alone suffi to susteine it selfe. But how this power is properly alone belonging the Scripture, hereby appeareth, that of all the wrytinges of men, they neuer so cunningly garnished, no one is so farre able to pe our affections. Read Demosthenes or Cicero, read Plato, Aristotle, any other of all that sorte: I graunt they shall maruelously allure, place to the prophane wryters: & by such examples it pleased the ly Ghost to shew that he wanted not eloquence, though in the re such like, who haue a swete and pleasant flowing speech, or Amos, for the holy Scripture, although froward men labour to bite at m thinges, yet is it full of such sentences as could not be conceiue found among them, but he hath farre excelled all mans capacity, in ſuch ſorte that thoſe are to be thought, to haue no iudgement of taſt to whom their doctrine is vnſauorie.

3 Other men haue largely entreated of this argument, wherfore at this time it ſuffiſeth to touch but a fewe thinges, that chiefly make for the principall ſumme of the whole matter. Beſide theſe points that I haue already touched, the very antiquity of the Scripture is of great weight. For how ſoeuer the Greke wryters tell many fables of the Ægyptian diuinity: yet there remaineth no monument of any religion, but that is farre inferiour to the age of Moſes. And Moſes deuiſeth not a new God, but ſetteth foorth the ſame thing which the Iſraelites had receiued in long proceſſe of time, conueied to them by their fathers as it were from hand to hand concerning the euerlaſting God. For what doth he elſe but labour to call them backe to the couenaunt made with Abraham. If he had brought a thing neuer hearde of before, he had had no entrie to begin. But it muſt needs be that the deliueraunce from bondage, wherein they were deteyned, was a thing well and commonly knowen among them, ſo that the hearing of the mention thereof did foorthwith raiſe vp all their mindes. It is alſo likely that they were informed of the number of the CCCC. yeares. Now it is to be conſidered, if Moſes which himſelfe by ſo long diſtance of time was before all other wryters, do from a beginning ſo long before himſelfe fetch the originall deliuerance of his doctrine: how much the holy Scripture then is beyonde all other wrytinges in antiquity.

4 Vnleſſe perhappe ſome liſte to beleue the Ægyptians, that ſtretch their auncienty to ſixe thouſand yeares before the creation of the world. But ſith their vaine babbling hath bin alway ſcorned euen of all the prophane wryters themſelues, there is no cauſe why I ſhould ſpend labour in confuting of it. But Ioſephus againſt Appion, alleageth teſtimonies worthy to be remembred out of auncient wryters, whereby may be gathered, that by conſent of all nations the doctrine that is in the lawe hath bin famous euen from the firſt ages, although it were neither redde nor truely knowen. Now, that neither there ſhould remaine to the malicious any cauſe of ſuſpicion, nor to the wicked any occaſion to cauill, God hath for both theſe daungers prouided good remedies. When Moiſes rehearſeth what Iacob almoſt three hundred yeares before had by heauenly inſpiration pronounced vpon his owne poſterity, how doth he ſet foorth his owne tribe? yea in the perſon of Leui he ſpotteth it with eternall infamie. that Moſes in open aſſembly publiſhed all theſe thinges, what pla was there to fayne before thoſe witneſſes that had themſelues ſeen the thinges done? It is likely forſooth that he would come among them, & rebuking the people of infidelity, ſtubbornes, vnthankfulne & other ſinnes, would haue boſted that his doctrine was eſtabliſhe in their own ſight with ſuch miracles, which in deede they neuer ſaw.

6 For this is alſo worthy to be noted, ſo ofte as he telleth of any miracles, he therwithall odiouſly ioyneth ſuch thinges as might ſtirre the whole people to crie out againſt him, if there had bin neuer ſo litle occaſion. Wherby appeareth, that they were by no other meane brought to agree vnto him, but becauſe they were euer more than ſufficiently conuinced by their owne experience. But becauſe the matter was plainlier knowen, than that the prophane coulde deny that miracles were done by Moſes: the father of lyeng hath miniſtred them an other cauillation, ſaying that they were done by Magicall artes and ſorcerie. Exod. 7. 11. But what likely prooſe haue they to accuſe him for a ſorcerer, which ſo farre abhorred from ſuch ſuperſtition, that he commaundeth to ſtone him to death, that doth but aſke counſell of ſorcerers and ſoothſaiers? Truely no ſuch deceiuer vſeth his iugglinge caſtes, but that he ſtudieth to amaſe the mindes of the people to get himſelfe a fame. Leu. 20 Exo. 16. But what doth Moſes? by this that he crieth out, that himſelfe and his brother Aaron are nothing, but doth onely execute thoſe thinges that God hath appointed, he doth ſufficiently wipe away all blottes of thinking euil of him. Now if the thinges themſelues be conſidered, what enchantement coulde bring to paſſe that Manna dayly raining from heauen, ſhould ſuffiſe to feede the people? and if any man keept in ſtore more than his iuſte meaſure, by the very rotting therof he ſhould be taught, that God did puniſh his want of beleefe? Beſide that, with many great proues God ſuffred his ſeruaunt ſo to be tried, that now the wicked can nothing preuayle with prating againſt him. For how oft did ſometime the people prowdely and impudently make inſurrections, ſometime diuers of them conſpiryng among them ſelues wente about to ouerthrow the holy ſeruaunt of God: how could he haue begyled their furour with illuſions? And the end that folowed plainly ſheweth, that by this meane his doctrine was ſtabliſhed to continue to the ende of all ages.

7 Moreouer where he aſſigneth the chiefe gouernement to the tribe of Iuda in the perſone of the Patriarch Iacob, who can denie that this was done by ſpirite of prophecie, ſpecially if we wey in conſideratiõ the thing it ſelfe, how in commyng to paſſe it proued true? Imagine Moſes to haue bin the firſt author of this prophecie: yet from the time that he did firſt put it in writing, there paſſed fower hundred yeares wherein there was no mencion of the ſceptre in the tribe of Iuda. Gen. 49 After Saule was conſecrate king, it ſeemed that the kingdom ſhould reſt in the tribe of Beniamin. When Dauid was annointed by Samuel, what reaſon appeared there why the courſe of inheritaunce 1 Sam. 11. 15.

And when there were in the ſame houſe ſeuen brethren, who would haue ſaid that that honour ſhould light vpon the yongeſt? By what meane came he to hope to be a king? who can ſay that this annoinment was gouerned by any art, trauaile or policie of man, and not rather that it was a fulfilling of the heauenly prophecie? Likewiſe thoſe thinges that Moſes afore ſpeaketh, albeit darkely, concerning the Gentiles to be adopted into the conuenaunt of God, ſeing they came to paſſe almoſt two thouſand yeres after, do they not make it plain that he ſpake by the inſpiration of God? I ouerſkip his other tellinges aforehand of thinges, which do ſo euidently ſauoure of the reuelation of God, that all men that haue their ſounde wit may plainly perceiue that it is God that ſpeaketh. To be ſhorte, that ſame one ſong of his, is a clere looking glaſſe, wherin God euidently appeareth.

Deuter. 32.

8 But in the other prophetes the ſame is yet alſo much more plainely ſeene. I will chooſe out only a few examples, becauſe to gather them all together were to greate a laboure. When in the time of Eſaie the kingdom of Iuda was in peace, yea when they thought that the Chaldees were to them ſome ſtay and defence, then did Eſaie prophecie of the deſtruction of the citie and exile of the people. But admitte that, yet this was no token plaine enough of the inſtinct of God, to tell long before of ſuch thinges as at that time ſeemed falſe, and afterward proued true: yet thoſe prophecies that he vttereth concerning their delyueraunce, whenſe ſhall we ſay that they proceded but from God? He nameth Cyrus by whom the Chaldees ſhould be ſubdued, and the people reſtored to libertie. There paſſed more than a hundred yeares from the time that Eſaie ſo prophecied before that Cyrus was borne: for Cyrus was borne in the hundreth yeare or thereaboutes after the death of Eſaie. No man could then geſſe that there ſhould be any ſuch Cyrus, that ſhould haue warre with the Babylonias, that ſhould bring ſubiect ſo mightie a monarchie vnder his dominiō, and make an ende of the exile of the people of Iſraell. Doth not this bare tellyng without any garniſhment of wordes euidently ſhew, that the thinges that Eſaie ſpeaketh, are the vndoubted oracles of God, and not the coniectures of men? Again, when Ieremie a little before that the people was caried awaie, did determine the ende of the captiuitie within threſcore and tenne yeares, and promiſed returne and libertie, muſt it not needes be that his tongue was gouerned by the ſpirite of God? What ſhameleſneſſe ſhall it be to denie, that the credit of the prophetes was ſtabliſhed by ſuch proues, & that the ſame thing was fulfilled in dede, which they them ſelues do reporte to make their ſayinges to be beleued? Beholde, the former thinges are come to paſſe, and new thinges do I declare: before they come forth, I tell you of them. I leaue to ſpeake how Hieremie and Ezechiell beyng ſo farre aſonder, yet prophecying both at one time, they ſo agreed in all their ſayinges as if either one of them had endited the wordes for the other to write. What did Daniel? Doth he not write continuing propheſies of thinges to come for the ſpace of ſixe hundred yeares after, in ſuch ſorte as if he had compiled an hiſtorie of thinges already done and commonly knowen? Theſe thinges if godly men haue well conſidered, they ſhall be ſufficiently well furniſhed, to appeaſe the barkinges of the wicked. For the plaine proofe hereof is to cleare to be ſubiect to any cauillations at all.

9 I know what ſome learned men do prate in corners, to ſhew the quickneſſe of their witte in aſſaltyng the truth of God. For they demande, who hath aſſured vs that theſe thinges which are red vnder title of their names, were euer written by Moſes and the prophetes. Yea, they are ſo hardy to moue this queſtiō, whether euer there were any ſuch Moſes or no. But if a manne ſhould call in doubt whether euer there were any Plato, or Ariſtotle, or Cicero, who would not ſay, that ſuch madneſſe were worthy to be corrected with ſtrokes and ſtrypes? The law of Moſes hath bin meruayouſly preſerued rather by heauenly prouidence then by diligence of men. And though by the negligence of the Prieſtes it laie buried a littell while: yet ſins the time that the godly king Ioſias found it, it hath ſtill by continuall ſucceſſion from age to age bin vſed in the handes of men. Neyther did Ioſias bring it forth as an vnknowen or new thing, but ſuch a thing as had bin euer commonly publiſhed, and wherof the remembraunce was at that time famous. The originall booke it ſelfe was appointed to be ſacredly kept in the temple, and a copie written out thereof, to remaine with the keepers of the kinges Recordes. Only this had happened, that the Prieſtes had ceaſſed to publiſh the law according to the old accuſtomed maner, and the people them ſelues had neglected their wounted reading of it. Yea there in maner paſſed no age wherin the eſtabliſhment therof was not confirmed and renued? They that had Dauid in their handes, knew they not of Moſes? But to ſpeake of them all at ones, it is moſt certaine that their writings came to poſteritie none otherwiſe but from hand to hand (as I may terme it) by continuall orderly courſe of yeres deliuered from their fathers, which had partly heard them ſpeake, & partly while the remembraunce was freſh of it, did lerne of them which herd them that they had ſo ſpoken.

10 As for that which they obiect out of the hiſtorie of the Ma-

retourne from exile, were ſwarued from the naturall vſe of their mother tongue, appeareth by the Prophetes, that liued in that age, which is therefore worthy to be noted, becauſe by this compariſon the antiquitie of the law and the prophetes is the more plainely perceyued. And by whom hath God preſerued for vs the doctrine of ſaluation conteyned in the law and the prophetes, to the end that Chriſt might in his appointed time be openly ſhewed? euen by the moſt cruelly bente enemies of Chriſt, the Iewes, whom Sainct Auguſtine doeth therefore woorthyly call the keepers of the Librarie of Chriſtian Church, becauſe they haue miniſtred vnto vs that thing, to reade wherof, themſelues haue no vſe.

11 Now if we come to the new Teſtament, with how ſounde pillers is the trueth thereof vpholden? The three Euangeliſtes write the hiſtorie in baſe and ſimple ſpeach. Manie prowde menne do loeth that ſimplicitie, becauſe they take no heede to the chiefe pointes of doctrine therin, whereby it were eaſie to gather, that they entreate of heauenly miſteries aboue mannes capacitie. Surely who ſo euer haue but one droppe of honeſt ſhame will be aſhamed if they reade the firſt chapter of Luke. Now, the ſermons of Chriſt, the ſumme wherof is ſhortly compriſed by theſe three Euangeliſtes, do eaſely deliuer their writinges from all contempte. But Ihon thundering from on hie, thoſe whom he cõpelleth not to obedience of faith, he throweth downe their ſtubbourneſſe more mightily than any thũderbolt. Now let come forth all theſe ſharpnoſed faultfinders, that haue a great pleaſure to ſhake the reuerence of ſcripture out of their owne and other mens heartes, let them reade Iohns Goſpell: Will they or no, they ſhall there finde a thouſande ſentences that may at leaſt awaken their ſluggiſheneſſe, yea that may printe a horrible brande in their conſciences to reſtraine their lawghyng. The ſame is to bee thought of Peter and Paul, in whoſe writings although the more part be blinde, yet the very heauenly maieſtie in them holdeth all men bounde, and as it were faſt tied vnto it. But this one thing doth ſufficiently aduance their doctrine aboue the world, that Mathew being before all geuen to the gaine of his money boorde, Peter & Iohn brought vp in their fiſher boates, all groſſe vnlearned men, had learned nothing in mens ſchoole that they might deliuer to other. Paule, not onely from a profeſſed, but alſo from a cruell and blouddy ennemy conuerted to a new man, with ſodaine and vnhoped chaunge doeh ſhew, that being compelled by heauenly authoritie he now maintaineth that doctrine, which before he had ſought againſt. Now let theſe dogges denie, that the holy Ghoſt came downe vpon the Apoſtles, or let them diſcredite the hiſtorie: yet ſtill the trueth it ſelfe openly crieth out, that they were taught by the holy Ghoſt, which beyng before time deſpiſed men among the raſkall people, ſodeinly began ſo glorioufely to entreate of heauenly miſteries.

12 There be yet alſo furthermore many very good reaſons, why the conſente of the Church ſhould not be eſteemed without weight. For it is to be accompted no ſmalle matter, that ſins the Scripture was firſt publiſhed, the willes of ſo many ages haue conſtantly agreed to obey it. And that how ſoeuer Sathan with all the worlde hath trauayled by maruaylous meanes, either to oppreſſe it, or ouerthrow it, or vtterly to blotte and deface it out of mennes remembraunce, yet euer ſtill like a palme tree, it hath riſen vp aboue, and remained inuincible. For there hath not lightly bin in old time any ſophiſter or Rhetorician that had any more excellēt wit than other, but he hath bent his force againſt this Scripture: yet they all haue nothing preuayled. The whole power of the earth hath armed it ſelfe to deſtroy it, and yet all their enterpriſes are vaniſhed away, as in ſmoke. How coulde it haue reſiſted being ſo mightyly on eche ſide aſſailed, if it hadde had none other defence but mannes? Yea rather it is hereby proued, that it came from God himſelfe, that all the trauailes of men ſtriuing againſt it, yet it hath of her owne power ſtill riſen vp. Beſide that, not one citie alone, nor one onely nation hath agreed to receiue and embrace it: but ſo farre as the worlde extendeth in length and breadth the Scripture hath atteined her credite, by one holy conſpiracie of diuers nations, which otherwiſe were in nothing agreable one with other. And foraſmuch as ſuch agreement of mindes ſo diuers and diſagreyng in maner in all thinges elles, ought much to moue vs, becauſe it appeareth, that the ſame is brought about none other way but by working of the heauenly maieſtie: no ſmall eſtimatiō groweth vnto it, when we beholde their godlineſſe, that do ſo agree, I meane not of them all, but only of thoſe, with whom as with lightes it pleaſed God to haue his Church to ſhine.

13 Now with what aſſuredneſſe of minde ought we to ſubmit vs to that doctrine which we ſee ſtabliſhed and witneſſed with the bloude of ſo many holy menne? They when they had but ones receiued it, ſticked not boldely without feare, yea and with great cherefulneſſe to die for it: how ſhould it then come to paſſe, that we, hauing conueyed to vs with ſuch an aſſured pledge, ſhould not with certain and vnmouable perſuaſion take holde of it? It is therfore no ſmall confirmation of the Scripture, that it hath bin ſealed with the bloud of ſo many witneſſes, ſpecially when we conſider that they ſuffred death

beare witnesse of their faith: and not of a frentike distemperaunce of braine, as sometime the erroneous spirites are wont to do, but with a firme and constant and yet sobre zeale of God. There be other reasons and those not fewe nor weake, whereby the Scripture hath her dignitie and maiestie not onely ascertained vnto godly hartes, but also honourably defended against the subtilties of cauillers, yet be they such as be not of them selues sufficiently auaylable to bring stedfast credite vnto it, vntill the heauenly father disclosing therin his maiestie, doth bring the reuerence therof out of all controuersie. Wherfore then onely the scripture shall suffise to that knowledge of God that bringeth saluation, when the certaintie therof shall be grounded vpon the inwarde persuasion of the holy Ghost. So those testimonies of men that serue to confirme it shall not be vaine, if as seconde helpes of our weakenesse they follow that chiefe & hyest testimony. But they do fondly that will haue it perswaded by proofe to the vnfaithfull, that the scripture is the woorde of God, which can not be knowen but by faith. For good reason therfore doth Augustine geue warning, that godlinesse and peace of minde ought to go before, to make a man vnderstand somewhat of so greate matters. Devtilitate credendi.

The ix. Chapter.

That those fanaticall men, vvhich forsaking Scripture, resort vnto reuelation, do ouerthrovv all the principles of godlinesse.

NOw they that forsaking the Scripture do imagine I wote not what waie to attaine vnto God, are to be thought not so much to be holden with errour, as to be caried with rage. For there haue arisen of late certaine giddy brained men, which most presumptuously pretending a schoole of the spirite, both them selues do forsake all reading, & allso do scorne their simplicitie which still follow the dead & slaying letter, as they call it. But I would faine know of these men, what spirite that is, by whose inspiration they are caried vp so hie, that they dare despise the doctrine of the Scripture as childish and base. For if they aunswere that it is the spirite of Christ, then such careleshesse is woorthy to be laughed at. For I thinke they will graunte, that the Apostles of Christ and other faithfull in the primitiue Church were lightned with none other spirite. But none of them did learne of that spirite to despise the word of God: but rather euery one was moued more to reuerēce it, as their writings do most plainely witnesse. And surely so was it foretold by the mouth of Esaie. For where he saith, My spirite that is vpon thee, and my wordes which I haue put in thy mouth, shall not departe out of thy Esa. 59. 21.

mouth, nor out of the mouth of thy seede for euer: he doth not bind the old people to the outwarde doctrine as though they were set to learne to spelle, but rather he teacheth, that this shall be the true and perfect felicitie of the new church vnder the reigne of Christ, that they shall no lesse be ledde by the voice of God, thā by the spirite of God. Wherby we gather, that these lewde menne with wicked sacrilege do seuer asunder those thinges that the Prophet hath ioyned with an inuiolable knotte. Moreouer, Paule beyng rauished vp into the third heauen, yet ceassed not to go forward in the doctrine of the law and

2. Tim. 3. 16. that it is profitable to teach, to admonish and to reproue, that the seruauntes of God may be made perfect. How diuelish a madnesse is it to faine, that the vse of Scripture is but transitorie, and lasteth but for a while, which in deede guideth the children of God euen to the last ende? Againe, I would haue them aunswere me this: whether they haue tasted of an other spirite than that, which the Lord promised to his disciples. Although they be vexed with extreme madnesse, yet I thinke they are not caried with such giddinesse, that they dare so boast. But what maner of spirite did he speake of in his promise? euen
Ioh. 16. 13. that spirite which should not speake of it selfe, but should minister and inspire into their mindes those thinges which he the Lord himself had taught by his worde. It is not therfore the office of the spirite which is promised vs, to faine new and vnhearde of reuelations, or to coine a new kinde of doctrine, whereby we should be led from the receiued doctrine of the Gospell, but to seale in our mindes the self same doctrine that is commended vnto vs by the Gospell.

2 Whereby we plainly vnderstand, that we ought right studiously to apply the reding and hearing of the Scripture, if we list to take any

As also Peter praiseth their diligence that are hedefull to the doctrine of the Prophetes, which yet might seme to haue geuen place after the rising of the light of the Gospell. On the other side if any spirite leauing the wisdom of the word of God doth thrust vnto vs an other doctrine, that the same spirite ought rightefully to be suspected of vanitie and lying. For what, when Sathan transformeth himselfe into an aungell of light, what credite shal the holy Ghost haue amōg vs, if it be not seuerally knowen by some assured marke? And truely it hath bin plainely pointed out vnto vs by the worde of the Lord, but that these miserable men willingly couete to erre to their owne destruction, while they seeke ſpirite rather from them ſelues than from him. But (ſay they) it is diſhonorable, that the ſpirite of God, whom all thinges ought to obey, ſhould be ſubiect to the Scripture. As if this were a diſhonour to the holy Ghoſt to be euery where egall and like to it ſelfe, to agree with it ſelfe in all thinges, and no where to varie. In deede if it were to be tried by the rule either of men, or of angels, or any others rule whatſoeuer, then it might well be thought, that it were brought into obedience, or if ye liſt ſo to terme it, into bondage. But when it is compared with it ſelfe, when it is conſidered in it ſelfe, who can therfore ſay, that there is any wrong done vnto it? But thus it is brought to triall. I graunt, but ſuch a triall wherewith it was his owne pleaſure to haue his maieſtie eſtabliſhed. It ought to content vs ſo ſoone as he entreth into vs. But leſt vnder his name the ſpirite of Sathan ſhould creepe in, he wil haue vs to know him by that image of him ſelfe, which he hath printed in the Scriptures. He is the authour of the Scriptures: he can not be diuers and vnlike him ſelfe. Therefore it muſt needes be, that he continually remaine ſuch as he hath ſhewed him ſelfe therin. This is no diſhonor vnto him, vnleſſe perhappe we count it honorable to ſwarue and go out of kinde from himſelfe.

3 Wheras they cauill that we reſt vpō the letter that ſleieth, herein they ſuffer puniſhement for deſpiſing of the Scripture. For it is plaine enough that Paule there contendeth againſt the falſe Apoſtles, which commending the law without Chriſt did call away the people from the benefite of the new Teſtament, wherin the Lord doth couenant that he will graue his law within the bowels of the faithfull, and write it in their hartes. The letter therfore is dead, and the law of the Lord killeth the readers of it, when it is ſeuered from the grace of Chriſt, and not touching the heart, only ſoundeth in the eares. But if it be effectually printed in our hartes by the holy Ghoſt, if it preſent Chriſt vnto vs: then is it the worde of life, conuerting ſoules, geuing wiſdom to little ones. &c. Alſo in the ſame place the Apoſtle calleth his preaching the miniſterie of the holy Ghoſt: meaning that the holy Ghoſt doth ſo ſticke faſt in his truth which he hath expreſſed in the Scriptures, that then only he putteth forth and diſplaieth his force, when the Scripture hath her due reuerence and dignitie. And it diſagreeth not herewith which I before ſaid, that the worde it ſelfe is not much aſſured vnto vs, vnleſſe it be cō firmed by ỹ vitneſſe of the holy Ghoſt. For with a certaine mutuall knot the Lord hath coupled together the aſſuraunce of his worde and of his ſpirite, ſo that perfect reuerence to the word doth then ſettle in our mindes whē the holy Ghoſt ſhineth vpon vs to make vs therin beholde the face of God: and on the other

The x. Chapter.

That the Scripture, to correct all ſuperſticion, doth in compariſon ſet the true God againſt all the gods of the Gentiles, reckening him for none of them.

BVt becauſe we haue ſhewed, that the knowledge of God wh in the frame of the world and all the creatures is ſomew plainely ſet forth, is yet more familiarly and plainely decl in the worde: now is it good to conſider, whether the L ſhew himſelfe ſuch in the Scripture as it pleaſed him firſt to be re ſented in his workes. But I ſhall at this time be contented onely point vnto it, wherby the godly mindes being admoniſhed may k what is chiefely to be ſearched in the Scriptures concerning God be directed to one certaine marke in their ſeking. I do not yet to the peculiar conuenaũte, wherby God ſeuered the ſtocke of Abra from other nations. For euen then he appeared the redemer in re uing to his children by free adopcion thoſe that before were ennemies. But we are yet about that knowledge that reſteth in the creatiō of the worlde and aſcendeth not to Chriſt the mediatour. And although byandby it ſhalbe good to allege certaine places out of the new Teſtament, foraſmuch as euen out of it both the power of God the Creator and his prouidence in preſeruing of the firſt nature is approued, yet I warne the readers before, what is now my purpoſe to do, to the ende that they paſſe not the appointed boundes. So for this preſent, let it ſuffice vs to learne, how God the maker of heauen and earth doth gouerne the worlde by him created. Euery where is renomed both his fatherly bountie and enclined will to do good, and there are alſo exemples rehearſed of his ſeueritie, which ſhew him to be a righteous puniſher of wicked doinges, ſpecially where his ſufferaunce nothing preuaileth with the obſtinate.

2 In certaine places are ſet forth more plaine deſcriptions wherin his naturall face is as in an image repreſented to be ſeen. For in the place wher Moſes deſcribeth it, it ſemeth that his meaning was ſhortly to comprehende all that was lawfull for men to vnderſtand of God. The Lord (ſayeth he) the Lord, a mercyfull God, and gracious, paciente and of much mercy, and true, which keepeſt mercy, vnto thouſandes which takeſt away iniquitie and wicked doinges, before whom the innocente ſhall not be innocent, which rendreſt the wickedneſſe of the fathers to the children and childrens children. Where let vs marke, that his eternitie & being of himſelfe is expreſſed in the twiſe repeting of that honorable name: and that then his vertues are rehearſed, in which is deſcribed vnto vs, not what he is in reſpect to himſelfe, but what a one he is towarde vs: that this knowledge of him may rather ſtand in a liuely feling, than in an empty and ſupernaturall ſpeculation. And here we do heare recited thoſe vertues of his which we noted to ſhine in the heauen and earth, that is to ſay, clemencie, bountie, mercie, iuſtice, iudgement and trueth. For might and power are conteined vnder this name Elohim God. With the ſame names of addition do the Prophetes ſet him forth when they meane fully to paint out his holy name. But, becauſe I would not heape vp to many examples together, at this preſent let one Pſalme ſuffice vs, wherin the ſumme of all his vertues is ſo exactly reckened vp, that nothing can ſeeme to be omitted. And yet is nothing there reharſed, but that which we may beholde in his creatures. So plainely do we perceiue God by informacion of experiēce, to be ſuch as he declareth himſelfe in his worde. In Ieremie where he pronounceth, what a one he would haue vs know him to be, he ſetteth forth a deſcription not altogether

so full, but yet comming all to one effect. He that gloryeth, saieth he, let him glory in this that he knoweth me to be the Lord that do mercie, iustice, and iudgement on the earth. Surely these three thinges are very necessary for vs to know: mercy, in which alone consisteth all our saluacion: Iudgement, which is dayly executed vpon euill doers, and more greuous is prepared for them to eternall destruction: Iustice wherby the faithful are preserued and most tenderly cherished. Which thinges when thou hast conceiued, the prophecy saith thou hast sufficiently enough wherof thou maiest glory in God. And yet here are not omitted either his trueth or his power, or his holinesse or goodnesse. For how should the knowledge stand sure which is here required of his iustice, mercy and iudgement, vnlesse it did rest vpon his vnmouable trueth? And how should we beleue that he doeth gouerne the earth with iustice & iudgement, but vnderstãding his power? And whence cõmeth his mercy but of his goodnesse? If then all his waies be mercy, iudgement and iustice, in them must holinesse also nedes be seen. And to none other end is directed that knowledge of God that is set forth vnto vs in the Scriptures, thã is that knowledge also which appeareth emprinted in his creatures, that is to say: it first moueth vs to the feare of God, and then to put confidence in him, to the ende we may learne first to honor him with perfect innocency of life and vnfained obedience, and then to hang altogether vpon his goodnesse.

3 But here I meane to gather a summe of generall doctrine. And first let the readers note, that the Scripture to the ende to direct vs to the true God, doth expresly exclude and cast away all the gods of the Gentiles, because commonly in a manner in all ages religiõ hath been corrupted. True it is in deede that the name of one God was euerywhere knowen and renomed. For euen they that worshipped a great nomber of gods, so oft as they did speake according to the proper sense of nature, they simply vsed the singular name of God as if there were contented with one God alone. And this was wisely marked by Iustine the Martyr, which for this purpose made a booke of the Monarchie of God, where by many testimonies he sheweth that this, that there is but one God, was engrauen in the hartes of all mẽ. The same thing also doth Tertulliane proue by the common phrase of speach. But forasmuch as all without exception are by their owne vanitie either drawen or fallen to false forged deuises, and so their senses are become vaine, therefore all that euer they naturally vnderstode of the being but one God, availed no further but to make them inexcusable. For euen the wisest of them do plainely shew the wandering error of their minde, when they wish some god to assist them, and so in their prayers do call vpon vncertaine gods. Moreouer in this that they imagined God to haue many natures although they thought somewhat lesse absurdely than the rude people did of Iupiter, Mercury, Venus, Minerua and other: yet were they not free from the deceites of Satan, and as we haue already sayed els where, whatsoeuer wayes of escape the Philosophers haue suttelly inuented, they cannot purge themselues of rebellion but that they all haue corrupted the trueth of God. For this reson, Habacuc after he had condemned all idoles bid- Hab.2.

deth to seke God in his owne temple, that the faithfull should not admit him to be any other than such as he had disclosed him selfe by his worde.

The xj. Chapter.

That it is vnlawfull to attribute vnto God a visible forme, and that generally they forsake God, so many as do erect to them selues any images.

BVt as the Scripture prouiding for the rude and grosse wit of mā vseth to speake after the common maner: so when it meaneth to make seuerally knowen the true God from the false gods, it chiefly compareth him with idoles: not that it doth allow these inuentions that are more suttelly and finely taught by the Philosophers, but the plainlier to disclose the folishnesse of the world, yea rather their madnesse in seking God so long as they cleaue euery one to their owne imaginations. Therfore that exclusiue definition which we commonly heare, bringeth to nought all that maner of Godhead that men frame to themselues by their owne opinion, because God himselfe is the onely conueniente witnesse of himselfe. In the meane time, sith this brutish grossenesse hath possessed the whole world, to couet visible shapes of God, and so to forge themselues Gods of timber, stone, golde, siluer, & other dead and corruptible matter, we ought to holde this principle, that with wicked falshod the glorie of God is corrupted so oft as any shape is fained to represent him. Therefore God in the law, after he had once chalenged the glory of his deitie to himselfe alone, meaning to teache vs what manner of worshipping him he aloweth or refuseth, addeth immediatly: Thou shalt make thee Exo.20.

our libertie, that we attempt not to represent him with any visible image. And there he shortly reckneth vp all the formes wherwith of long time before, superstició had begon to turne his trueth into lying. For we know that the Persians worshipped the sonne, yea and so many starres as the folish natiōs saw in the skie, so many goddes they fained them. And scarce was there any liuing creature which was not amõ the Egiptians a figure of God. But the Grecians were thought to b wiser than the rest, because they worshipped God in the shape of manne. But God compareth not images one with an other, as thoug one were more and an other lesse mete to be vsed, but without any e ception he reiecteth all images, pictures and other signes, wherby th superstitious thought to haue God nere vnto them.

Deu. 4. 10. 12. 15.

2 This is easy to be gathered by the reasons which he ioyne to the prohibition. First with Moses. Remember that the Lord ha spoken to thee in the vale of Horeb. Thou heardest a voice, but tha sawest no body. Therefore take hede to thy selfe, least paraduentu thou be deceiued and make to thy selfe any likenesse. &c. We see ho openly God setteth his voice against all counterfaite shapes, that w may know that they forsake God whosoeuer do couet to haue vi ble formes of him. Of the Prophetes onely Esay shalbe enoug which speaketh oft and much hereof, to teache that the maiestie God is defiled with vncomely and foolish conterfaiting, whē he ben without body is likened to bodily matter: being inuisible, to a visib image: being a spirite, to a thing without life: being incomprehe sible, to a small lompe of timber, stone or golde. soneth Paule: For asmuch as we are the generacion of God, we ough not to thinke that the godhead is like vnto golde, or siluer or ston grauen by art and the inuention of man. Wherby it certainely ap peareth, whatsoeuer images are erected or pictures painted to expre the shape of God, they simply displease him as certaine dishonors o his maiestie. And what maruel is it if the holy Ghost do thonder o these oracles from heauen, sith he compelleth the very wretched an blinde idolaters themselues to confesse this in earth? It is knowe how Seneca complained as it is to reade in Augustine. They dedica (saith he) the holy immortall and inuiolable Gods in most vile an base stuffe, and put vpon them the shapes of men & beastes, and som of them with kinde of man and woman mingled together, and wi sondry shapen bodies, and such they call Gods which if they shou receiue breth and mete them would be reckened monsters. Wherb againe plainly appeareth, that it is a fonde cauillacion wherewith th defenders of images seke to escape, which say that the Iewes were for bidden images, because they were inclinable to superstitiõ. As thoug that thing perteined to one nation onely which God bringeth for of his eternall being and the continuall order of nature. And Pau spake not to the Iewes but to the Athenienses when he confute their error in conterfaiting a shape of God.

3 God in dede, I graunt, ſometime in certaine ſignes hath geuen a preſence of his godhead, ſo as he was ſayed to be beholden face to face, but al theſe ſignes that euer he ſhewed did aptly ſerue for meanes to teache, and withall did plainly admoniſh men of an incomprehenſible eſſence. For the cloude and ſmoke and flame, although they were tokens of the heauenly glory, yet did they as it were bridle and reſtraine the mindes of men that they ſhould not attempt to paſſe any further. Wherfore not Moſes himſelfe, to whom God diſcloſed himſelfe moſt familiarly in compariſon of other, obteined by prayer to ſee that face, but receyued this anſwere that man is not able to ſuſteine ſo great brightneſſe. The holy Ghoſt appeared vnder the likeneſſe of a doue, but ſith he immediatly vaniſhed away, who doeth not ſee that by that token of ſo ſhort a continuance of a moment the faithfull are put in minde that they ought to beleue him to be an inuiſible ſpirite, that holding them contented with his vertue and grace, they ſhould make him no outward ſhape. This, that God appeared ſometimes in forme of a mā, was a foreſhewing of the reueling that was to be made of him in Chriſt. And therefore it was not lawfull for the Iewes to abuſe this pretenſe to erect to themſelues a repreſentaciō of the godhead in the ſhape of man. Alſo the mercy ſeate wherin God ſhewed forth the preſence of his power in the time of the law, was ſo made as it might teach that the beſt beholding of the godhead is this, when mens mindes are caried beyond them ſelues with adminiſtration of it. For the Cherubins with their winges ſtretched abrode did couer it, the veile did hide it, and the place it ſelfe being ſet faire inwarde did of it ſelfe ſufficiētly kepe it ſecrete. Therfore it is very plaine that they be very mad that go about to defende the images of God & of Saintes with the example of theſe Cherubins. For, I pray you, what meant theſe litle images, but to ſhew that images are not mete to repreſent the miſteries of God? foraſmuch as they were made for this purpoſe, that hiding the mercy ſeate with their winges they ſhould not onely kepe backe the eyes of man, but alſo all his ſenſes from the beholding of God, and ſo to correct his raſh hardineſſe. For this purpoſe maketh it that the Prophetes deſcribed the Seraphins ſhewed thē in viſiō, with their face vncouered: wherby they ſignifie, that ſo great is the brightneſſe of the glory of God that the Angels themſelues are kept from direct beholding it, and the ſmall ſparkes therof that ſhine in the Angels are withdrawen from our eyes. Although yet ſo many as rightly iudge, do acknowledge that the Cherubins of whom we now ſpeake, perteined only to the old maner of introduction as it were of children vſed in the law. So to draw them now for an example to our age, is an absurditie. For that childish age, as I may so terme it, is passed, t the which such rudimentes were appointed. And it is much shame that the painime writers are better expounders of the law of G than the Papistes are. Iuuenale reprocheth the Iewes as it were scorne that they honor the white cloudes & the deitie of the heaue I graunt he speaketh peruersly and wickedly: & yet he speaketh mo truely in saying that they haue among them no image of God, th the Papistes do which prate that they had a visible image of Go And wheras that people with a certaine hote hastinesse, brake o oftētimes to seke them idols, euen as waters out of a great fresh spri boile out with violent force: hereby rather let vs learne how grea the inclination of our nature to idolatry, least throwing vpon t Iewes the blame of that fault which is common to all, we slepe deadly slepe vnder vaine alluremētes to sinne.

4 To the same purpose serueth this saying. The idols of the Ge tiles are golde and siluer, euen the workes of mens handes. Becau Ps. 115. b. & 13. 5. 15. the Prophete doth gather of the stuffe it selfe, that they are no go that haue a golden or siluer image: and he taketh it for cōfessed tru that it is a folish fained inuencion whatsoeuer we cōceiue of our ow sense concerning God. He nameth rather gold and siluer than clay stone, that the beautie or the price should not serue to bring a reu rence to idols. But he cōcludeth generally that nothing is lesse allo able, than gods to be made of dead stuffe. And in the meane while standeth as much vpon this point, that men are caried away with mad a rashnesse, which themselues bearing about with them but borrowed breath, ready to vanish away at euery moment, yet da geue the honor of God to idols. Man must nedes confesse that hi selfe is but a creature of a daies continuance, and yet he will hau pece of metall to be compted God to which himselfe gaue the b ginning to be a God. For whense came the beginning of idols b from the will of men? Very iustly doeth the heathen Poet geue the this taunt:

Horat. serm. 1. sat. 8.

I was sometime a fig tree log, a blocke that serud for nought:
The workeman doubted what of me were fittest to be wrought:
A fourme to sit vpon, or els a Priap God to be.
At length he thought the better was a God to make of me.

Forsooth an earthly silly man that breatheth out his owne life maner euery moment, by his workemanship shall conuey the name honor of God to a dead stocke. But forasmuch as Epicure in scoffing ly iesting hath cared for no religion, let vs leaue the tauntes of him such as he is, and let the rebuking of the Prophete pricke vs or rath thrust vs through where he sayeth, that they are to much beastly witted that with one selfe peece of wood do make a fier & warme themselues, do heate the ouen to bake bread, do rost or seeth flesh, and do make thē a God before which they fall down humbly to pray. Therfore in an other place he doth not onely accuse them by the law, but also doth reproch them that they haue not learned of the fundations of the earth: for that there is nothing lesse conuenient than to bring God to the measure of fiue foote which is aboue all measure and incōprehensible. And yet this same monstruous thing which manifestly repugneth against the order of nature, custome sheweth to be natural to men. We must moreouer holde in minde, that superstitions are in Scripture commonly rebuked in this phrase of speech, that they are the workes of mens hand which want the authority of God: that this may be certaine, that all these manners of worshipping that men do deuise of themselues are detestable. The Prophet in the Psalme doth amplifie the madnesse of them that therefore are endued with vnderstanding, that they should know that all thinegs are moued with the only power of God, and yet they pray for helpe to thinges dead and senseleese. But becausse the corruption of nature carieth as well all nations, as eche man priuately to so great madnesse, at last the holy Ghost thundreth with terrible curse against them saying: let thē that make them become like to them and so many as trust in them. And it is to be noted that a similitude is no lesse forbidden than a grauen image, whereby the fond suttelty of the Greekes is confuted. For they thinke they are well discharged if they graue not a God, while in painting they do more licentiously outrage than any other nations. But the Lord forbiddeth an image not only to be made by the grauer but also to be counterfaited by any other workeman, becausse such counterfaiting is euill and to the dishonor of his maiesty.

5 I know that it is a saying more than common among the people, that images are lay mens bookes. Gregory so sayd, but the spirite of God pronounceth farre otherwise, in whose schoole if Gregory had bin taught, he would neuer so haue spoken. For whereas Hieremy plainly sayeth that the stocke is a doctrine of vanity: and whereas Habacuc teacheth that the molten image is a teacher of lyes: surely hereof is a generall doctrine to be gathered, that it is vaine and lying whatsoeuer men learne by images concerning God. If any man take exception, and say that the Prophetes reproue them only which abused images to wicked superstition: I graunt that to be true. But I adde further that which is easie for all men to see, that they condemne that thing wholely which the Papistes take for an assured principle, that images are in ſtede of bookes. For they do in compariſon ſet image against God as thinges directly contrary & ſuch as neuer can agree together. This compariſon I ſay is made in thoſe places which I have alleged. Sith there is but one true God whom the Iewes did worſhip, it is amiſſe & falſely don to forge viſible ſhapes to repreſent God and men are miſerably deceiued, that thereby ſeeke for knowledge of God. Finally if it were not true that it is a deceitfull & corrupt knowledge of God that is learned by images, the Prophetes would not ſo generally condemne it. At leaſt thus much I winne of them when we ſhew that it is vanity & lying that men do attempt to repreſent God with images, we do nothing but rehearſe word for word that which the Prophetes haue taught.

6 Let be red what Lactantius and Euſebius haue wrytten of this matter which ſticke not to take it for certaine that they were all mortall of whom images are to be ſeene. Likewiſe Auguſtine: which without douting pronounceth that it is vnlawfull not onely to worſhip images, but alſo to ſette vppe images to God. And yet ſayeth he none other thing but the ſame which many yeares before was decreed by the Elibertine councell whereof this is the xxxvi. Chapter. It is ordained that no pictures be had in the church, that the thing which is honored and worſhipped be not painted on the wales. But moſt notable is that which in an other place Auguſtine allegeth out of Varro, and confirmeth it with his owne aſſent, that they which firſt brought in the images of Gods, both tooke away the feare of God, and brought in errour. If Varro alone ſhould ſay this, paraduenture it ſhould be but of ſmale authority. Yet ought it of right to make vs aſhamed that a heathen man groping in darkeneſſe came to this light, to ſee that bodily images are therefore vnmete for the maieſty of God, becauſe they diminiſh the feare of God and encreaſe errour in men. The proofe it ſelfe witneſſeth that this was no leſſe truly than wiſely ſpoken. But Auguſtine hauing borrowed it of Varro, bringeth it foorth as of his own minde. And firſt he admoniſheth, that the firſt errours wherwith men were entangled cõcerning God, beganne not of images, but as with newe matter added encreaſed by them. Secondly he expoundeth that the feare of God is therfore miniſhed or rather taken away therby, becauſe his maieſty may eaſely in the fooliſhneſſe and in the fond and abſurde forging of images grow to contẽpt. Which ſecond thing I would to God we did not by proufe find to be ſo true. Whoſoeuer therfore wil couet to be rightly taught, let him elſewhere learne than of images, what is mete to be knowen concerning God.

7 Wherefore

7 Wherfore if the Papiſtes haue any ſhame, let them no more vſe this ſhift to ſay that images are lay mens bookes, which by many teſtimonies of Scripture are ſo openly confuted. And although I graũt thẽ ſo much, yet ſhould they not much get therby for defenſe of their idols. What monſters they thruſt in, in the place of God, is well knowen. The pictures and images that they dedicate to Saincte, what are they but examples of extreme riot and vnclenneſſe, whereunto if any would faſhiõ himſelfe, he were worthy to be beatẽ with ſtaues? Surely the brothelhouſes, can ſhew harlots more chaſtly and ſoberly attyred, thã their temples ſhew images of theſe whom they would haue called virgins. Euen as vncomly array giue they to the martirs. Let them therfore faſhiõ their idols at leaſt to ſome honeſt ſhew of ſhamefaſtnes, that they may ſomwhat more colourably lye in ſaying, that they are the books of ſome holineſſe. But if it were ſo, yet then would we anſwere, that this is not the right way to teach the faithfull people in holy places, whom God would haue there inſtructed with farre other doctrine than with theſe trifles. God commaunded in the churches a common doctrine to be ſet forth to all men in preaching of his word and in his holy miſteries: whereunto they ſhew them ſelues to haue a minde not very hedefull, that caſt their eyes about to behold images. But whom do the Papiſtes call lay and vnlearned men whoſe vnskilfulneſſe may beare to be taught only by images? forſooth euen thoſe whom the Lord knowledgeth for his diſciples, to whom he voucheſaueth to reuele the heauẽly wiſdom, whom he willeth to be inſtructed with the holſome miſteries of his kingdom. I graũt in dede as the matter ſtandeth that there are at this day many which cannot be without ſuch boks. But whenſe I pray you groweth that dulneſſe but that they are defrauded of that doctrine which only was mete to inſtruct them with? For it is for no other cauſe that they which had the cure of churches gaue ouer their office of teaching to idols, but becauſe thẽſelues were dumme. Paul teſtifieth that Chriſt is in the true preaching of the Goſpell, painted out and in a maner crucified before our eyes. Gal. 3.1. To what purpoſe then were it to haue commonly ſet vp in churches ſo many croſſes of wood, ſtone, ſiluer & gold, if this were wel & faithfully beatẽ into the peoples heads, that Chriſt died to beare our curſe vpon the croſſe, to cleanſe our ſinnes with the Sacrifice of his body, and to waſh them away with his bloud, and finally to reconcile vs to God the father? Of which one thing they might learne more than of a thouſand croſſes of wood or ſtone. For parhaps the couetous do ſet their mindes & eyes faſter vpon the golden and ſiluer croſſes than vpon any wordes of God.

8 As concerning the beginning of idols, that is by common co

And truly I gra that this euil custome was very auncient, & I deny not that it was th fierbrād wherwith the rage of men being kindled to idolatry did mo and more burne therein. Yet do I not graunt that this was the first o riginal of this mischiefe. For it appereth by Moises that images we vsed before that this curiosity in dedicating the images of dead me wherof the prophane wryters make often mention, were come in v
Gen. 31. 19. When he telleth that Rachell had stolē her fathers idols, he speake it as of a common fault. Whereby we may gather that the wit of m is, as I may so call it, a continuall worship of idols. After the gener floud, there was as it were a new regeneration of the world, and y there passed not many yeares but that men according to their ow lust fained them Gods. And it is likely that the holy Patriarch yet l uing, his childrens children were giuen to idolatry, so that to his bi ter griefe he saw the earth defiled with idols, whose corruptions th
Ios. 24. 2. Lord had but late purged with so horrible iudgement. For Thare an Nachor euē before the birth of Abraham were worshippers of fal Gods, as Iosue testifieth. Seeing the generation of Sem so soone swa ued, what shall we iudge of the posterity of Cham, who were alread cursed in their father? The minde of men, as it is full of pride and ra boldnesse, presumeth to imagine God according to her owne conce and as it is possessed with dullnesse, yea ouerwhelmed with grosse gnoraunce, so it cōceiueth vanity and a fond fantasie in stede of Go And to these euils is added a new mischiefe, that man attempteth t expresse in workemanshippe such a God as he inwardly conceiueth Thus the minde begetteth the idole, and the hand bringeth it forth The example of the Israelites proueth that this was the beginnin of idolatry, that men do not beleue that God is among them, vnles he shew himselfe carnally present. We know not (sayd they) what i become of this Moses: make vs Gods that may go before vs. The Ex. 31. 1. knew that there was a God whose power they had had experience o in so many miracles: but they did not beleue that he was nie vnto th vnlesse they did see with their eyes a corporall representation of hi face, to be a witnesse vnto them of the God that gouerned thē. Their minde was therefore to know by the image going before them, tha God was the guide of their iourney. This thing daily experience tea cheth, that the flesh is alway vnquiet till it hath gotten some coun terfaite deuise like it selfe, wherein it may vainly delite as in an image of God. In a manner in all ages since the creation of the world, men to obey this blinde desire haue erected signes wherein they imagined God to be present before theyr carnall eyes.

9 After such inuention forged, byandby followeth worshipping. For whē men thought that they beheld God in images, they did also worship him in them. At length being both with mindes and eyes altogether fastened theron, they beganne to waxe more and more brutish, and to wonder at them and haue them in admiration, as if there were some nature of godhead in them. So appeareth that men brake not out into the worshipping of images, till they were perswaded in some grosse opinion: not to thinke the images to be Gods, but to imagine that there did a certaine force of Godheade abide in them. Therfore whether thou represent to thy selfe either God or a creature in the image, when thou fallest downe to worship, thou art already bewitched with some superstition. For this reason the Lord hath forbidden not onely images to be erected that are made to expresse a likenesse of him, but also any titles or stones to be dedicated, that should stand to be worshipped. And for the same reason also in the cōmaundement of the law, this other point is added concerning worshipping. For so soone as they haue forged a visible forme for God, they also tye the power of God vnto it, So beastly foolish are men, that there they fasten God where they counterfaite him, and therfore must they needes worship it. Neither is there any difference whether they simply worship the idole, or God in the idole. This is alway idolatry when honoures due to God are giuen to an idole, vnder what colour soeuer it be. And becausе God will not be worshipped superstitiously, therefore whatsoeuer is giuen to idols is taken from him. Lette them take heede hereunto that seeke for pretenses to defende the abhominable idolatry, wherewith, these many ages past, true religion hath bin drowned and ouerthrowen. But (say they) the images are not taken for Gods. Neither were the Iewes themselues so vnaduised to forgette that it was God by whose hande they hadde bin brought out of Ægypt before they made the calfe. Yea when Aaron sayd, that those were the Gods by whom they were deliuered out of the land of Ægypt, they boldly assented, shewing a plaine tokē of their meaning, that they would still kepe that God that was their deliuerer, so that they might se him go before them in the calfe. Neither is it to be beleued that the hearthē were so grosse as to beleue, that God was no other thing but stocks and stones. For they changed their images at their pleasure, but still they kept the same Gods in their minde: & there were many images of one God, and yet they did not according to the multitude of images faine them many God. Beſide that the did daily cõſecrat new images, yet did they not thinke that they mad in pſal. 113. new Gods. Lette the excuſes be read which Auguſtine ſayeth we pretended by the Idolaters of his age. When they were rebuked, th common ſorte aunſwered, that they did not worſhippe that viſibl thing, but the deity that did in it inuiſibly dwell. And they that we of ſomwhat better religiõ, as he calleth it, did ſay that they did neith worſhippe the image nor the ſpirite in it, but by the corporall ima they did behold the ſigne of that thing which they ought to worſhi How then? All idolaters, whether they were of the Iewes, or of th gentiles, were none otherwiſe minded than as I haue ſayd: being n contẽted with a ſpirituall vnderſtanding of God, they thought by th images he ſhould be more ſure & nerer imprinted in thẽ. After on that ſuch diſordered counterfaiting of God well liked them, they n uer ended, till daily more and more deluded with new deceites th imagined that God did ſhew foorth his power in images. And neue theleſſe, both the Iewes were perſwaded that vnder ſuch imag they did worſhippe the one true Lord of heauen and earth: and lik wiſe the gentiles, their falſe Gods, whom yet they fayned to dwell heauen.

10 Whoſoeuer deny that it hath thus bin done in time paſt, y within our owne remembraunce, they impudently lye. For, why f they down before them? And when they pray, why turne they towa in pſal. 113. them as to the eares of God? For it is true that Auguſtine ſayeth, th noman prayeth or worſhippeth when he ſo beholdeth an image b he is ſo affected in minde that he thinketh himſelfe to be heard of i or that it wil do for him what he deſireth. Why is there ſuch differe betwene the images of one God, that paſſing by one image with li reuerence or none done to it they honor an other ſolemnly? Why t they wery themſelues with vowed pilgremages to viſite thoſe imag whereof they haue like at home? Why do they at this day in defen of them as it were for their religion and countrey, fight to ſlaught & deſtructiõ, in ſuch ſorte as they would better ſuffer to haue the o only God than their idols to be taken from them? And yet I do n recken vp the groſſe errours of the cõmon people, which are almo infinite, & do in maner poſſeſſe the hartes of all men. I do only ſhe what themſelues do confeſſe when they meane moſt of all to excu themſelues of idolatry. We do not call them (ſay they) our Gods. N more did the Iewes nor the Gentiles call them theirs in time paſt yet the Prophetes ech where ceſſe not to caſt in their teeth their fo nication with ſtockes and ſtones, for doing no more but ſuch thin as are daily done by them that would be compted Christiãs, that is to say, that they carnally worshipped God in stocks and stones.

11 Although I am not ignoraunt, nor thinke good to passe it ouer as if I knewe it not, how they seeke to escape with a more suttle distinction, wherof I shall againe make mention more at large heraster. For they pretend that the worship which they giue to images is Idolodulia which is seruice of images, and not Idololatria which is worship of images. For so they tearme it when they teach that they may lawfully without any wrong done to God giue vnto images and pictures that worshippe which they call Doulia or seruice. And so they thinke themselues without blame if they be but the seruaunts & not also the worshippers of idols: as though it were not a litle lighter matter to worship than to serue. And yet while they seeke a hole to hide them in the Greeke word, they childishly disagree with themselues, For seeing Latreuein in greeke signifieth nothing but to worship, their saying commeth but to this effect, as if they would say that they worship in dede their images, but without any worshipping. And ther is no cause why they should say that I seeke to catch them in words: but they themselues while they seke to cast a mist before the eyes of the simple, do bewray their owne ignoraũce. And yet though they be neuer so eloquent, they shall not atteine by their eloquence to proue vnto vs that one selfe same thing is two sundry things. Let them (say I) shew me a differẽce in ỹ thing it selfe wherby they may be thought to differ from the old idolaters. For as an adulterer or a murderer cannot escape giltinesse of his fault, by giuing his sinne a newe deuised name: so it is a very absurdity to thinke that these men be quit by new deuise of a name, if in the matter it selfe they nothing differ frõ those idolaters whom they themselues are compelled to cõdemne. But so far are they frõ prouing that their case differeth frõ the case of those idolaters, that rather the fountaine of all this whole mischiefe is an vnorderly counterfaiting, wherin they haue striued with them while both with their owne wit they deuise, & with their owne handes they frame them signifying formes to expresse them a fashion of God.

12 And yet am I not so superstitious that I thinke no images may be suffred at all. But forasmuch as caruing and painting are the giftes of God, I require that they both be purely and lawfully vsed. Least these things which God hath giuẽ vs for his glory & for our own benefit, be not only defiled by disordered abuse, but also turned to our own destructiõ. We thinke it vnlawful to haue God fashioned out in visible forme, because himself hath forbiddẽ it, & because it cãnot be done without some defacemẽt of his glory. And least they thinke that it is onely we that are in this opinion, they that haue bin traueled in their workes shall finde that all sound wryters did alway reproue the same thing. If thē it be not lawfull to make any bodily image of God much lesse shall it be lawfull to worship it for God, or God in it. It remayneth therefore lawfull that onely those thinges be painted and grauen whereof our eyes are capable: but that the maiesty of God which is farre aboue the sense of our eyes, be not abused with vncomly deuised shapes. Of this sorte are partely histories and things done, partely images and fashions of bodies, without expressing of any thinges done by them. The first of these haue some vse in teaching or admonishing a man: but what profit the second can bring saue only delectatiō, I see not. And yet it is euident, that euen such were almost all the images that heretofore haue stand vp in churches. Whereby we may iudge that they were there set vp not by discrete iudgement or choise, but by foolish and vnaduised desire. I speake not how much amisse & vncomely they were for the most parte fashioned, nor how licentiously Painters and Caruers haue in this point shewed their wantonnesse, which thing I haue already touched. Onely I speake to this end, that though there were no fault in them, yet do they nothing auaile to teach.

13 But leauing also that difference, let vs by the way consider whether it be expedient in Christian temples to haue any images at all that do expresse either things done or the bodyes of men. First if the authority of the auncient church do any thing moue vs, let vs remember that for about v.C. yeares together, while religion yet better flourished, and sincere doctrine was in force, the Christian churches were vniuersally without images. So they were thē first brought in for the garnishment of churches, when the sincerity of ministration was now a little altered. I will not now dispute what reason they had with them that were the first authors therof. But if a mā compare age with age he shall see that they were much swarued from that vprightnesse of them that were without images. What? do we thinke that those holy fathers would haue suffered the church to be so long without a thing which they iudged profitable & good for them? But rather because cause they saw either little or no profit in it, & much daunger to lurk vnderneth it, they did rather of purpose and aduisedly reiect it, than by ignoraunce or negligence omitte it. Which thing Augustine doth also in expresse words testifie. When they be set in such places (saith he) honorably on hye, to be seene of them that pray & do Sacrifice although they want both sense and life, yet with the very likenesse that they haue of liuely members and senses, they so moue the wea-

mindes, that they seeme to liue & breath. &c. And in an other place. For that shape of members doth worke and in manner enforce thus much, that the minde liuing within a body doth thinke that body to haue sense, which he seeth like vnto his owne. And a little after, Images do more auaile to bow downe an vnhappy soule, by this that they haue mouth, eyes, eares, and feete, than to amend it by this that they neither speake nor see nor heare nor go. This truely seemeth to be the cause why Iohn willed vs to beware not onely of worshipping of images, but also of images themselues. And we haue found it to much in experience, that through the horrible madnesse which hath heretofore possessed the world, to the destruction in manner of all godlinesse, so soone as images be set vp in churches, there is as it were a signe set vp of idolatry, because the folly of men cannot refrayne it selfe, but it must foorthwith runne on to superstitious worshippinges. But if there were not so much daunger hanging thereby: yet when I consider for what vse temples are ordayned, me thinkes it is very ill beseeming the holinesse thereof to receiue any other images than these liuely and naturall images, which the Lord by his word hath consecrate, I meane Baptisme and the Lordes supper, and other ceremonies wherewith our eyes ought both more earnestly to be occupied and more liuely to be moued, than that they should nede any other images framed by the witte of men. Loe this is the incomparable commodity of images, which can by no value be recompensed, if we beleue the Papistes. in psal. 113. 1. Ioh. 5 21.

14 I thinke I had spokē enough of this thing already, but that the Nicene Synode doth as it were lay hand on me to enforce me to speake more. I meane not that most famous Synode which Constantine the Great assembled, but that which was holden eight hundred yeares ago, by the commaundement and authority of Irene the Empresse. For that Synod decreed, that images should not only be had in churches, but also worshipped. For whatsoeuer I should say, the authority of the Synode would make a great preiudice on the other side. Although to say truth, that doth not so much moue me, as make it appeare to the readers howe farre their rage extended, that were more desirous of images than became Christians. But first lette vs dispatche this. They that at this day maintaine the vse of images, allege the decree of that Nicene Synode for their defense. But there is extāt a booke of confutation bearing the name of Charles the Great, which by the phrase we may gather to haue bin wrytten at the same time. Therein are recited the sentences of the Bishoppes that were present at that councell, and the argumentes wherewith they contended.

Iohn the Legate of the east partes sayed : God created manne after his owne image : and thereupon gathered that we ought to haue mages. The same man thought that images were commended vnto vs in this sentence:shew me thy face becauſe it is beautifull. An other to proue that images ought to be sette vppon altares, cited this testimony : no man lighteth a candell and putteth it vnder a buſhel. An other, to shew that the beholding of them is profitable for vs brought foorth a verse out of the Psalme : the light of thy countenaunce is sealed vpon vs. An other tooke this similitude : As the Patriarches vsed the Sacrifices of the Gentiles, so muſt Christian men haue the images of Saintes in steade of the images of the Gentiles. To the same purpose haue they wrythed this saying: Lord, I haue loued the beauty of thy houſe. But specially witty is the exposition of this place, As we haue heard so haue we seen, that God is not known by onely hearing of his word, but also by looking vppon images. Like is the sharpe deuise of Bishoppe Theodore. Maruelous (sayeth he) is God in his Saintes. And in an other place : In the Saintes that are in the earth : therefore this ought to be referred to images. Finally so filthy are their vnsauory follies that it greueth me to rehearse them.

15 When they talke of the worshipping: then are brought foorth the worshipping of Pharao, and of the rod of Ioseph, & of the pillar that Iacob set vp. Albeit in this last example, they do not only deprave the meaning of the Scripture, but also bring in that which is nowhere to be read. Then these places seeme to them maruelous strong and meete proues. Worship his footestole. Againe worship on his holy hill. Againe all the richemen of the people shall worship thy countenaunce. If a man would in scorne putte the personage of a riding foole vppon the patrones of Images, could he gather together greater and grosser follies? But to putte all out of doute, Theodosius Bishoppe of Mira, doth so earnestly confirme by the dreame of his Archedeacō, that images ought to be worshipped, as if he had an oracle from heauen to shewe for it. Now lette the fauourers of images go and presse vs with the decree of that Synode. As though those reuerend fathers do not altogether discredit themselues, either so childishly handeling, or so vngodly and fowly tearing the Scriptures.

16 Now come I to those monstrous impieties, which it is marueile that euer they durst vomit, and twise maruellous that they were not cried out agaynst with hie detestation of all men. And it is good that this outragiously wicked madneſſe be bewrayed, that at least false colour of antiquity may be taken away, which the Papistes pretend for the worshipping of images. Theodosius the Bishop of Amorum pronounceth curse against all them that will not haue images worshipped. An other imputeth all the calamities of Grecia and the east part to this, that images were not worshipped. What punishment then were the Prophetes, the Apostles and the Martirs worthy to suffer in whose time there were no images? They adde further. If the Emperoures image be met with perfume and censing: much more is this honor due to the images of Saintes. Constantius Bishop of Constance in Ciprus, professeth that he reuerently embraceth images, and affirmeth that he will giue to them the same honorable maner of worshippe that is due to the Trinity that giueth life. And whosoeuer refuseth so to do, he curseth him and sendeth him away with the Manichees and Marcionites. And, that ye should not thinke that this was the priuate sentence of one man, they did all assent vnto it. Yea Iohn the Legate of the east partes being further caried with heate, sayed it were better to bring all brothelhouses into the city than to deny the worshipping of images. At length by consent of them all it was decreed, that worse than all Heretickes are the Samaritans, and worse thā the Samaritans are the enemies of images. And because the play should not be without his solemne farewell, this clause was added, let thē be glad & reioyse that hauing the image of Christ do offer Sacrifice vnto it. Where is now the distinction of Latria and Dulia, wherewith they are wont to seeke to blinde the eyes both of God & men? For the councell without any exception doth giue euen as much vnto images as vnto the liuing God himselfe.

The xij. Chapter.

That God is seuerally discerned from idols, that he may be only and vvholely vvorshipped.

WE sayed in the beginning that the knowledge of God standeth not in bare specularion, but draweth with it the worshipping of him, and by the way we touched howe he is rightly worshipped, which point shalbe in other places more largely to be sette foorth. Now I do but shortly repeate, that so oft as the Scripture affirmeth that there is but one God, it striueth not for the bare name of God, but withall commaundeth this, that whatsoeuer belongeth to the Godhead be not giuen to any other. Whereby also appeareth what pure religion doth differ from superstition. Eusebeia, in Greeke signifieth as much as true worship, because alway euen the blinde themselues groping in darke-

2. de natu. deorum.

neſſe haue found that this rule ought to be holden, that God be not vnorderly worſhipped. The name of religion although Cicero truly and well deriueth from relegere, to recorde, or gather vp together: yet is the reaſon that he aſſigneth enforced and farre fette, that godly worſhippers did often recorde and diligently wey what was the true: I rather thinke that that name is ſette as a contrary to wandring liberty, becauſe the greater parte of the world vnaduiſedly taketh holde of that which they firſt mete withall, and flieth about hither and thither: but true godlineſſe, to the end it may ſtand in ſtedfaſt ſtay, Religit, that is to ſay doth gather vp it ſelf together within her bonds. Like as I thinke ſuperſticion to haue her name hereof, that not being contented with the maner and order preſcribed, ſhe heapeth vp together a ſuperfluous nomber of vaine thinges. But to leaue the worde: it hath alway bin agreed by conſent of all ages, that religion is wrapped in falſe errours corrupted and peruerted. Whereupon we gather that it is a very fond colour which the ſuperſtitious do pretend, when in vndiſcrete zeale we giue our ſelues leaue to do all thinges. And though this confeſſion ſound in the mouthes of all men: yet here their ſhamefull ignoraunce bewrayeth it ſelfe, that neither they cleaue vnto the one God, nor haue any regarde of order in the worſhipping of him, as we haue already ſhewed. But God, to claime his owne right vnto himſelfe, crieth out that he is ielous, and that he will be a ſtrict reuenger if he be mingled with any fayned God. And then he ſetteth forth the lawful maner of worſhipping, to hold mākinde in obedience. He conteineth both theſe pointes in his law, when firſt he binds the faithfull vnto himſelfe that he only may be their lawmaker: then he preſcribeth a rule whereby to be worſhipped after his owne minde. Of the law, becauſe the vſes and endes thereof are many, I will entreate in place fitte for it. Now I only touch this point, that the ſame by mē are brideled that they run not out of the way to wrong worſhippinges. Now as I firſt ſayd, we muſt hold in minde, that if all that euer properly belongeth to godhead do not reſt in God alone, he is ſpoyled of his honor, and his worſhippe broken. And there muſt we ſomewhat hedefully marke with what ſuttelties ſuperſtitiō deceiueth. For it doth not ſo reuolte vnto ſtraunge gods that it ſeemeth to forſake the hieſt God, or to bring him downe into the number of other gods: but while ſhe graūteth vnto him the hieſt place, ſhe ſetteth him about him a number of leſſer gods, among whom ſhe diuideth offices? And ſo (albeit clokedly and craftily) the glory of the godhead is cut in partes, that it remaineth not whole with him. So in the firſt time, as well they of the Iewes as of the Gentiles did ſet beneth father & iudge of gods a great rout of gods which ſhould euery one according to his degree in cõmon haue with ỹ hieſt God the gouernment of the heauen and earth. So the Saintes that in a few ages paſt departed this life, are aduaunced to the fellowſhip of God, to be worſhipped, called vpon, & honored in ſteade of him. And yet with ſuch abhomination we thinke that the maieſty of God is not ſo much as diuided, when in deede it is a great parte ſuppreſſed and extinguiſhed, ſauing that we retaine ſtill a poore opinion of his ſupreme power: & in the meane time deceiued with entangled ſutteltíes we are ſunderly caried to diuers gods.

2 For this purpoſe alſo was inuented the diſtinction of Latria and Dulia, as they terme them, that is worſhippe and ſeruice, whereby they might freely ſeeme to giue away the honors of God to angels and dead men. For it is euident, that the worſhippe which the Papiſtes giue vnto ſaintes differeth nothing in deede from the worſhippe of God. For all alike without diuerſity they worſhip both God and them: ſauing that when they be charged with it, they winde away with this exception, that they kepe ſtill for God the honor that is due vnto him inuiolate, becauſe they leaue vnto him the worſhippe that they call Latria. But ſith the queſtion ſtandeth vpon the matter, and not the word, who would permitte them ſo careleſſely to mocke in a matter of all matters moſt weighty? But to lette that alſo paſſe, yet winne they nothing by this diſtinction, but to proue, that they giue worſhippe to one God and ſeruice to an other. For Latria in greeke ſignifieth as much as in Latin Cultus, and in Engliſh worſhippe. Dulia, properly ſignifieth ſeruice. And yet ſometime in ſcripture this difference is confounded together without diuerſity. But graunt it be a perpetuall difference, then muſt we ſearch what both the words may meane. Dulia is ſeruice, Latria is worſhippe. Now no man douteth that to ſerue, is more then to worſhip. For many times a man could hardly beare to ſerue him whom he would not ſticke to worſhippe. So is it an vnegall dealing to giue to the ſaintes that which is the greater, and to leaue to God that which is the leſſer. But many of the auncient authors haue vſed this diſtinction. What maketh that matter, if all men do perceiue it to be not onely vnfit, but all together very fond?

3 Now leauing nice ſutteltíes, let vs wey the matter it ſelfe. When Paule putteth the Galathians in remembrance what they were before that they were lightened in the knowledge of God, he ſaieth that they gaue Duliam ſeruice to thoſe that of nature were no gods. Although he name not Latriam or worſhip, is therfore their ſuperſtitiõ Gal. 4.8

excusable? He doth neuertheleſſe condemne their peruerſe ſuperſti-tion, which he termeth by the name of Dulia ſeruice, than if he ha-

We read in deede often, that men haue bin honored: but that was ciuile honor, as I may ſo call it. But religiō hath an other rule, whichad not ſo ſclenderly profited in godlineſſe, but that he had learneto giue the ſoueraigne worſhip to God alone. Therefore when he fe-downe before Peter, he did it not of this meaning to worſhip him the ſteede of God. And yet did Peter earneſtly forbid him to do th-which he did. And why ſo? but becauſe men do neuer ſo narowput difference betwene ỹ worſhip of God & of his creatures: but th-without diuerſity they giue away that vnto the creature, which belo-geth vnto God. Wherefore if we haue one God, we muſt rememry when he preacheth of the repairing of the Church, in plaine woexpreſſeth: That there ſhall not only be one God, but alſo that theſhalbe one name of that God, to the end that he haue nothing common with Idols. What maner of worſhip God requireth, we ſhſee in an other place when it falleth in order. For it pleaſed him in h-law to preſcribe vnto men what is lawfull and right, and ſo to bin-them to a certaine rule, that euery man ſhould not geue himſelfe lea-to deuiſe what forme of worſhippe he liſt. But becauſe it is not expdient to loade the readers with heaping many matters together, I w-not touche that point yet. Onely lette it ſuffiſe for this time to ke-in minde, that euery carying away of the duetyfull behauio-of Godlineſſe to any other than to God alone, is not without robery of God. And firſt ſuperſtition deuiſed to giue diuine hono-presumed to prophane all that euer was holy. And although this principle remained among them, to honour the soueraigne deity, yet grewe it in vse indifferently to offer sacrifices to spirites, lesser gods, or deade men of honor. So slippery is the way to slide into this fault, to make common to a number that which God seuerely challengeth to himselfe alone.

The xiij. Chapter.

That there is taught in the Scriptures one essence of God from the very creation, vvhich essence containeth in it three persons.

THat which is taught in the Scriptures concerning the incomprehensible and spirituall essence of God, ought to suffise not onely to ouerthrow the fooliſh errours of the common people, but also to confute the fine sutteltes of prophane philosophie. One of the old wryters seemed to haue sayd very well, That God is all that we do see, and all that we do not see. But by this meane he hath imagined the godheade to be powred into all the partes of the world. Although God, to the intent to kepe men in sober minde, speaketh but sparely of his owne essence, yet by those two names of addition that I haue rehearsed, he doth both take away all grosse imaginations, and also represse the presumptuous boldnesse of mans minde. For surely his immeasurable greatnesse ought to make vs afraide, that we attempt not to measure him with our sense: and his spirituall nature forbiddeth vs to imagine any thing earthly or fleshly of him. For the same cause he often assigneth his dwelling place to be in heauen. For though, as he is incomprehensible, he tilleth the earth also: yet becauſe he seeth our mindes by reason of their dullnesse to lye still in the earth, for good cause he lifteth vs vp aboue the world, to shake of our slouth and sluggishnesse. And here falleth to ground the errour of the Manichees, which in appointing two originall beginninges haue made the diuell in a manner egall with God. Surely this was as much as to breake the vnity of God and restraine his vnmeasurableneſſe. For where they haue presumed to abuse certaine testimonies: that sheweth a fowle ignoraunce, as their errour it selfe sheweth a detestable madnesse. And the Anthropomorphites are also easily confuted which haue imagined God to consist of a body, becauſe oftentimes the Scripture ascribeth vnto him a mouth, eares, eyes, handes, and feete. For what man yea though he be slenderly witted dooth not vnderstand that God doth so with vs speake as it were childishly, as nurses do with their babes? Therefore such maners of speeche do not so plainly expresse what God is, as they do apply the vnderstanding of him to our slender capacit

Which to do, it behoued of necessity that he descended a great w beneath his owne height.

2 But he also setteth out himselfe by an other special marke, whe by he may be more nerely knowē. For he so declareth himselfe to but one, that he yet giueth himselfe distinctly to be considered three persons: which except we learne, a bare & empty name of G without any true God flieth in our braine. And that no man shou thinke that he is a threfold God, or that the one essence of God is uided in three persons, we must here seeke a short and easie definit to deliuer vs from all errour. But because many do make much a about this word Person, as a thing inuented by man: how iustly th do so, it is best first to see. The Apostles naming the sonne, the engr Heb 1.3 ued forme of the Hypostasis of his father, he vndoutedly meanet that the Father hath some being, wherin he differeth from the son For to take it for Essence (as some expositours haue done, as if Ch like a peece of waxe printed with a seale did represent the substan of the Father) were not onely hard but also an absurdity. For sith Essence of God is single or one and vndiuisible, he that in himse contayneth it all and not by pecemeale, or by deriuation, but in wh perfection, should very vnproperly yea fondly be called the engra forme of him. But because the father although he be in his ow property distinct, hath expressed himselfe wholely in his sonne, i for good cause sayd, that he hath giuen his Hypostasis, to be seen him. Wherwith aptly agreeth that which byandby followeth, that is the brightnesse of his glory. Surely by the Apostles wordes we ther, that there is a certaine proper Hypostasis in the father, that neth in the sonne: whereby also againe is easely perceiued the Hyp stasis of the sonne that distinguisheth him from the Father. Like or is in the holy ghost. For we shall byandby proue him to be God, yet he must nedes be other than the father. Yet this distinctiō is no the essence, which it is vnlawfull to make manifold. Therefore if Apostles testimony be credited, it followeth that there be in G three Hypostases. This terme seeing the Latines haue expressed w the name of Persō, it were to much pride & waywardnesse to bra about so cleare a matter. But if we list word for word to translate, may call it Subsistence. Many in the same sense haue called it subsi
And the name of Person hath not bin in vse among the Latines o ly: but also the Grecians, perhaps to declare a consent, haue tau that there are three Prosopa, that is to say Persons in God. But th whether they be Grekes or Latins that differ one from an other in worde, do very well agree in the ſumme of the matter.

3 Now howſoeuer the heretikes barke at the name of perſone, or ſome ouermuch preciſe men do carpe that they like not the worde fained by deuiſe of men: ſith they can not get of vs to ſay, that there be three, wherof euery one is wholly God, nor yet that there be many goddes: what vnreaſonableneſſe is this, to miſſlike wordes, which expreſſe none other thing but that which is teſtified and approued by the Scriptures? It were better (ſay they) to reſtraine not only our meaninges but alſo our wordes within the boundes of Scripture, than to deuiſe ſtraunge names that may be the beginninges of diſagrement and brawling: ſo do we tier our ſelues with ſtrife about wordes: ſo the truth is loſt in contending: ſo charitie is broken by odiouſly brawling together. If they call that a ſtraunge worde, which can not be ſhewed in Scripture, as it is written in nombre of ſillables: then they binde vs to a hard law, wherby is condemned all expoſition that is not pieced together, with bare laying together of textes of Scripture. But if they meane that to be ſtraunge, which beyng curiouſly deuiſed, is ſuperſtitiouſly defended, which maketh more for contention than edification, which is either vnaptly, or to no profite vſed, which withdraweth from the ſimplicitie of the word of God, then with all my hart I embrace their ſobre minde. For I iudge that we ought with no leſſe deuout reuerence to talke of God than to thinke of him, for as much as what ſoeuer we do of our ſelues thinke of him, is fooliſh, and what ſoeuer we ſpeake is vnſauory. But there is a certaine meaſure to be kept. We ought to learne out of the Scriptures a rule both to thinke and ſpeake, wherby to examine all the thoughtes of our minde & wordes of our mouth. But what withſtandeth vs, but that ſuch as in Scripture are to our capacitie doutfull and entangled, we may in plainer wordes expreſſe them, being yet ſuch wordes as do reuerently and faithfully ſerue the truth of the Scripture, and be vſed ſparely, modeſtly, and not without occaſion. Of which ſort there are examples enow. And where as it ſhal by proofe appere that the Church of great neceſſitie was enforced to vſe the names of Trinitie, and Perſones, if any ſhall then finde fault with the newneſſe of woordes, ſhall he not be iuſtly thought to be grecued at the light of the truth, as he that blameth only this that the truth is made ſo plaine and cleare to diſcerne?

4 Such newneſſe of wordes, if it be ſo to be called, commeth then chiefly in vſe, when the truth is to be defended againſt wranglers that do mocke it out with cauillations. Which thing we haue at this day to much in experience, who haue great buſineſſe in vanquiſſhing the enemies of true and ſounde doctrine. With ſuch folding and crooked

winding these slippery snakes do slide away, vnlesse they be strong griped and holden hard when they be taken. So the old fathers be troubled with contending against false doctrines, were compelled shew their meaninges in exquisite plainnesse, least they should lea any crooked byways to the wicked, to whom the doutefull constru tions of wordes were hidingholes of errours. Arrius confessed Chri to be God, and the sonne of God, because he coulde not againsay th euident wordes of God, and as if he had bin so sufficiently discharge did faine a certaine consent with the rest. But in the meane while h ceassed not to scatter abroade that Christ was create, and had a begi ning as other creatures. But to the ende they might draw forth h winding sutteltie out of his denne, the auncient fathers went furthe pronouncing Christ to be the eternall sonne of the father and co substanciall with the father. Hereat wickednesse began to boile, whe the Arrians began to hate and detest the name Omoousion, consubsta ciall. But if in the beginning they had sincerely and with plaine mea ning confessed Christ to be God, they would not now haue denie him to be consubstantial with the father. Who dare now blame the good men as brawlers and contentious, bycause for one litle word sake, they were so whote in disputatiō, and troubled the quiete of th Church? But that little worde shewed the differēce betwene the tr beleuing Christians, and the Arrians that were robbers of God. Afte ward rose vp Sabellius which accompted in a maner for nothing t names of the Father, the Sonne, and the Holy ghost, saying in disp tation that they were not made to shew any maner of distinction, b onely were seuerall additions of God, of which sorte there are man If he came to disputatiō, he confessed, that he beleued the father God the sonne God, the Holy ghost God. But afterward he would rede slippe away with saying that he hadde in no otherwise spoken than if he had named God, a strong God, iust God, and wise God: and so h song another song, that the Father is the Sonne, and the Holy ghost the father, without any order, without any distinctiō. The good do tours which then had care of godlinesse, to subdew his wickednes cried out on the other side that there ought to be acknowleged in o God three propreties. And to the end to sense themselues against th crooked writhē suttleties with plaine and simple truth, they affirme that there did truely subsist in one God, or (which came all to one e fect) that there did subsist in the vnitie of God a Trinitie of persons

5 If then the names haue not bin without cause intēted, we ough to take hede, that in reiecting thē we be not iustly blamed of prou presumptuousnesse. I would to God they were buried in dede, so th this faith were agreed of all men, that the Father and the Sonne, and the Holy ghoſt be one God: and yet that the Father is not the Sonne, nor the Holy ghoſt the Sonne, but diſtinct by certaine propretie. Yet am I not ſo preciſe, that I can finde in my harte to ſtriue for bare wordes. For I note, that the olde fathers, which otherwiſe ſpeake very religiouſely of ſuch matters, did not euery where agree one with an other, nor euery one with himſelfe. For what formes of ſpeech vſed by the councels doth Hilarie excuſe? To how greate libertie doth Auguſtine ſometime breake forth? How vnlike are the Grekes to the Latins? But of this variance one example ſhall ſuffiſe for this time. Whē the Latins mēt to expreſſe the worde Omoouſion, they called it Conſubſtanciall, declaring the ſubſtance of the Father and the Sonne to be one, ſo vſing the word ſubſtance for eſſence. Whervpō Hierome to Damaſus ſaith, it is ſacrilege to ſay, that there are three ſubſtances in God: and yet aboue a hundred times you ſhall finde in Hilarie, that there are three ſubſtances in God. In the worde Hypoſtaſis, how is Hierome accombred? For he ſuſpecteth that there lurketh poiſon in naming three Hypoſtaſes in God. And if a man do vſe this word in a godly ſenſe, yet he plainly ſaith that is an impropre ſpeech, if he ſpake vntainedly, and did not rather wittingly and willingly ſeeke to charge the biſhoppes of the Eaſtlandes, whom he ſought to charge with an vniuſt ſclaunder. Sure this one thing he ſpeaketh not very truely, that in all prophane ſchooles, ouſia, eſſence is nothing els but hypoſtaſis, which is proued falſe by the common and accuſtomed vſe. Auguſtine is more modeſt and gentill, which although he ſay, that the worde hypoſtaſis in that ſenſe is ſtrange to latine eares, yet ſo farre is it of that he taketh from the Grekes their vſuall maner of ſpeaking, that he alſo gently beareth with the Latins that had followed the Greke phraſe. And that which Socrates writeth in the ſixte booke of the Tripartite hiſtorie, tendeth to this end, as though he ment that he hadde by vnſkilful men bin wrongfully applied vnto this matter. Yea and the ſame Hilarie himſelfe layeth it for a great fault to the heretikes charge, that by their waywardneſſe he is compelled, to put thoſe thinges in perill of the ſpeech of men, which ought to haue bin kept in the religiouſneſſe of mindes, plainly confeſſing that this is to do thinges vnlaufull, to ſpeake that ought not to be ſpoken, to attempt thinges not licenced. A little after, he excuſeth himſelfe with many wordes, for that he was ſo bolde to vtter new names For after he had vſed the naturall names Father, Sonne, and Holy ghoſt, he addeth that what ſoeuer is ſought further, is beyond the compaſſe of ſpeach, beyond the reach of ſenſe, and beyonde the capacitie of vnderſtanding. And in an other muttereth that he was create, and had a beginning. He ſaith Chri one with the Father, but ſecretely he whiſpereth in the eares of diſciples, that he was made one as the other faithfull be, although you in one word both ſay, what the Scripture ſpeaketh, and ſtop th vaine babbling. Now if any be holden with ſo curious ſuperſtitio that they can not abide theſe names: yet is there no man, though ly quarell about wordes, do keepe within them a ſecrete poiſon:

that it is better willingly to prouoke them, than for their pleaſure ſpeake darkly.

6 But leauing diſputation of wordes I will now begin to ſpeake the matter it ſelfe. I call therfore a Perſone, a ſubſiſtence in the eſſen of God, which hauing relatiō to the other is diſtinguiſhed from the

with vncómunicable propretie. By the name of Subsistéce we meane an other thing than the essence. For if the worde had simply bin God, and in the meane time had nothing seuerally propre to it selfe, Iohn hadde said amisse, that is was with God. Where he forthwith addeth, that God himselfe was the same worde, he calleth vs backe againe to ỹ one single essence. But becausе it coulde not be with God, but that it must rest in the father: hereof ariseth that subsistéce, which though it be ioyned to the essence with an vnseparable knot, yet hath it a speciall marke, wherby it doth differ from it. So of the three subsistéces, I say that eche hauing relation to other is in propretie distinguished. Relation is here expressely mencioned. For when there is simple and indefinite mencion made of God, this name belongeth no lesse to the Sonne and the Holy ghost, than to the Father. But when the Father, is compared with the Sonne, the seueral propretie of either doth discerne him from the other. Thirdely, what soeuer is propre vnto euery of them is vncómunicable. For that which is geuen to the Father for a marke of difference, can not agree with, nor be geuen to the Sonne. And I mislike not the definition of Tertullian, so that it be rightly taken, That there is in God a certaine dispolition or distribution, which yet chaungeth nothing of the vnitie of the essence. Iohn. 1. 1. Lib. cõtra Praxeam.

7. But before that I go any further, it is good that I proue the Godhead of the Sonne and of the Holy ghost. Then after we shal see, how they differ one from an other. Surely whẽ the Worde of God is spoken of in the Scripture: it were a very greate absurditie to imagine it only a fading and vanishing voice, which sente into the ayre, cometh out of God himselfe, of which sort were the oracles geuen to the fathers, and all the prophecies: when rather the worde is mente to be the perpetuall wisdom abiding with the Father, from whens all the oracles and prophecies proceded. For as Peter testifieth, no lesse didde the olde prophetes speake with the spirite of Christ, than did the Apostles and all they that after them did distribute the heauenly doctrine. But becausе Christ was not yet openly shewed, we must vnderstand that the Worde was before all worldes begotten of the Father. And if the Spirite was of the Worde, whose instrumentes were the prophetes, we do vndoutedly gather that he was true god. And this doth Moses teach plainly enough in the creation of the worlde, when he setteth the worde as the meane. For why doth he expressely tell, that God in creating of all his workes said. Be this done: or that done: but that the vnserchable glory of god may shiningly appere in his images? The suttlenosed & babbling men do easily mocke out this, with saying that the name Worde, is there taken for his bidding or commaunde- 1. Pet. 1. 11.

Heb.1. 2. mente. But better expositors are the Apostles, which teach that the worldes were made by the same, and that he susteineth them all with his mighty Worde. For here we see that the Worde is taken for the bidding or commaundement of the Sonne, which is himselfe the eternall and essentiall Worde to the Father. And to the wise and sobre it is not darke that Salomō saith, where he bringeth in Wisdom begotten of God before all worldes, and bearing rule in the creation of thinges and in all the workes of God. For to say that it was a certaine commaundement of God, seruing but for a time, were very foolish and vaine: where as in deede it was Goddes pleasure at that time to shew forth his stedfast and eternall purpose, yea and some thing more secrete. To which entente also maketh that saying of Christ: My Father and I do worke euen to this daie. For in saying, That from the beginning of the worlde he was continually working with his Father, he doth more openly declare that which Moses hadde more shortely touched. We gather then that the meaning of Goddes speaking was this, that the Worde hadde his office in the doing of thinges, and so they both had a common woorking togither. But more plainly of all doth Iohn speake, whē he sheweth that the same Worde which from the beginning was God with God, was together with God the Father the cause of all thinges. For he both geueth to the Worde a perfect and abiding essence, and also assigneth vnto it some thing peculiar to it selfe, and plainly sheweth how God in speaking was the creator of the worlde. Therefore as all reuelacions proceding from God do well beare the name of the worde of God, so ought we yet to set in the hyest place that substanciall Worde, the wellspring of all Oracles, which being subiect to no alteracion, abideth alwaies one and the selfe same with God, and is God himselfe.

8 Here many dogges do barke against vs, which when they dare not openly take from him his Godhead, do secretly steale from him his Eternitie. For they say, that the Worde then began first to be when God in the creation of the world opened his holy mouth. But verie vndiscretly do they to imagine a certaine innouacion of the substaunce of God. For as those names of God that haue relacion to his outward worke, began to be geuen vnto him after the being of his worke, as for example, this that he is called the creator of heauen and earth: so doth Godlinesse know or admitt no name that should signifie any new thing in himselfe to haue chaunced vnto God. For if any should come to him from els where than in himselfe, then the saying of Iames should faile, that euery good geuing and euery perfect gift is from aboue, and commeth downe from the Father of

lightes, with whom is no variableneſſe neither ſhadowing by turning. Therfore nothing is leſſe to be ſuffred, than to faine a beginning of that Worde, which both alway was God, and afterwarde was creator of the worlde. But full ſuttelly forſooth they reaſon, that Moſes in ſaying that God then firſt ſpake, doth ſecretly ſhew that there was no Worde in him before. Which is a moſt tryfling argument. For it followeth not, becauſe a thing at ſome one certaine time beginneth to be ſhewed openly, that therefore it had neuer any beyng before. But I cõclude farre otherwiſe and ſay: ſeyng that in the ſame momente that God ſaied, let light be made, the power of the worde appeared and ſhewed it ſelfe: the ſame Worde was long before. but if a man aſke how long before, he ſhall finde no beginning. For he appointed no certaine ſpace of time when him ſelfe ſaied: Father glorifie me with the glory which I had with thee before the worlde was. And this thing Iohn alſo left not vntouched, becauſe he firſt ſheweth that in the beginning the worde was with God, before that he commeth to the creation of the worlde. We ſay therfore againe, that the Worde which was conceiued of God before any beginning of time, was continually remaining with him. Wherby both his eternitie, true eſſence, and Godhead is proued.

9 Although I do not yet touch the perſon of the Mediator, but do deferre it to that place where we ſhall ſpecially entreate of the Redempcion: yet becauſe it ought to be certainly holden without controuerſie among all men, that Chriſt is the ſame Worde clad with fleſh, in this place will be very fitte to recite all thoſe teſtimonies that proue Chriſt to be God. Whē it is ſayed in the xlv. Pſalme, thy throne O God is for euer and euer: the Iewes do cauill and ſay, that the name Elohim is alſo applied to the Angels and ſoueraigne powers. But in all the Scripture there is not a like place, that raiſeth an eternall throne to any creature. For he is here not ſimply called God, but alſo the eternall Lord. Againe, this title is giuen to none but with an addicion, as it is ſaied: that Moſes ſhalbe for a God to Pharao. Some rede it in the Genitiue caſe which is very fooliſh. I graunt in deede that oftentimes a thing is called Diuine or of God, that is notable by any ſingular excellence: but here by the tenour of the texte it appeareth, that ſuch a meaning were harde and forced, and will not agree. But if their ſtubborneſſe will not ſo yelde: In Eſaie is very plainly brought in for all one both Chriſt and God, and he that is adorned with the ſoueraigne power, which is properly belonging to God alone. This (ſaieth he) is the name wherby they ſhall call him, the ſtrong God, the Father of the world to come, &c. Here the Iewes fered to him and take from God his due honour. But the Angell

fusing to eate bread, commandeth Sacrifice to be offered to Iehouah. And then he proueth that himselfe in deede was the same Iehouah, and therefore Manoah and his wife by this token did gather, that they had seen not an only Angel but God. And thence came it that he sayed: we shall die because we haue seen God. And when his wife aunswereth, if Iehouah would haue slayen vs, he would not haue receaued Sacrifice at our handes: in this she doth confesse that he was God which before was called the Angell. Beside this, the aunswere of the Angell himselfe taketh away all doubt of it, saying: why doest thou aske me of my name, which is maruellous? So much the more detestable was the wickednesse of Seruetto, when he affirmed that God neuer appeared to Abraham and the other fathers, but that an Angell was worshipped in place of him. But truely and wisely haue the true teaching doctors of the Church expounded, that the same principall Angell was the worde of God, which then as aforehande began to execute the office of Mediatour. For though he was not yet clothed with flesh, yet he came downe as a meane betwene God and men, to come more familiarly to the faithfull. Therefore his nie communicating himselfe made him to be called an Angell: yet still in the meane time he reteined that which was his own, to be the God of vnspeakable glory. The same thing meaneth Oseas, which after he had recited the wrastling of Iacob with the Angell, sayeth: Iehouah the God of hostes, Iehouah, worthy of memory is his name. Here againe Seruetto carpeth, that God did beare the person of an Angell. As though the Prophete did not cõfirme that which Moses had saied: why doest thou aske me of my name? And the confession of the holy Patriarche doeth sufficiently declare that he was not a created Angell, but one in whom the full godhead was residente, when he said: I haue seen God face to face. And for this cause Paule sayeth, that Christ was guide of the people in the wilderneſſe. For though the time was not yet come of his abacemente: yet that eternall worde shewed a figure of that office to which he was appointed. Now if the seconde Chapter of Zacharie be weyed without contencion, the Angell that sente an other Angell was byandby pronounced to be the God of hostes, & to him is soueraigne power ascribed. I omitte innumerable testimonies on the which our Faith safely resteth, although they do not much moue the Iewes. For when it is saied in Esaie. Beholde this is our God, this is Iehouah, we shall waite vpon him, and he shall saue vs, they that haue eyes may see, that herein is meant God which ryseth vp for the saluation of his people. And these vehement demonstracions twise repeted suffer it to be drawen no otherwhere but to 11 As for the newe Testament, it swarmeth with innumerable stimonies, therfore we must trauaile rather shortly to choose out few than largely to heape vp all. For though the Apostles speake of since he was now become the Mediatour in flesh: yet all that I bring forth shall aptly serue to proue his godhead. First this is wor to be singularly marked, that those thinges which were before spo touching the eternall God, the Apostles do shew that they are ei already performed, or hereafter to be performed in Christ. God? Why ſhould Paule feare to ſet Chriſt in the iudgement throne of God, hauing before with ſo open proclamaciō declared his Godhead, where he ſaied that he was God bleſſed to the ende of worldes? And to make appeare, how well he agreeth in this pointe with himſelfe, in an other place he writeth that Chriſt is God openly ſhewed in the fleſh. If he be God to be prayſed to the ende of worldes, then he is the ſame he to whom in an other place he affirmeth all glorie and honour to be due. And thus he hideth not, but plainely crieth out, that he would haue counted it no robbery if he had ſhewed himſelfe egall with God, but that he willingly abaced himſelfe. And that the wicked ſhould not carpe that he is ſome made God, Iohn goeth further and ſaith. He is the true God and the eternall life. Although it ought aboundantly to ſatisfie vs, that he is called God, ſpecially of that witneſſe which expreſly affirmeth vnto vs that there are no moe goddes but one. That ſame witneſſe is Paule, which ſaieth thus: How many ſoeuer be called goddes either in heauen or in earth, to vs there is but one God from whom are all thinges. When we heare of the ſame mouth, that God was openly ſhewed in the fleſh, that God with his owne bloud purchaſed the Church to himſelfe: why ſhould we imagine a ſeconde God which he himſelfe acknowledgeth not? And it is no doute that all the godly were of the ſame meaning. Likewiſe Thomas in proteſting him to be his Lorde and his God, doth profeſſe that he is that onely one God whom he had alway worſhipped.

12 Now if we eſteeme his Godhead by the workes that in the Scripture are aſcribed vnto him, it ſhall thereby more euidentlie appeare. For when he ſaied that from the beginning he was thetherto working with his father: the Iewes which were moſt dull in vnderſtanding of all his other ſayinges, yet then perceiued that he toke vpon him the power of God. And therefore, as Iohn telleth, they ſought the more to kill him, becauſe he didde not onely breake the Sabbat, but alſo did call God his father, making himſelfe egall with God. How dull ſhall we be thē, if we do not perceiue that his godhead is herein plainly affirmed? And truely to order the worlde with prouidence and power, and to gouerne all thinges with the authoritie of his owne might, which the Apoſtle aſcribeth vnto him, belongeth to none but onely to the creator. And he not onely enterparteneth the gouernement of the worlde with his Father, but alſo all other offices which can not be made cōmon to God with his creatures. The Lord crieth out by the Prophet: I am he, I am he, that doe away thine offences for mine owne ſake. According to the meaning of this ſen-

for this matter, when we so often mete with this sentence? He that beleueth in me hath euerlasting life. Moreouer the inuocation which hangeth vpon Faith belongeth also to him, which yet is proper to the maiestie of God if he haue any thing at all proper to himselfe. For one Prophete sayeth: whosoeuer calleth vpon the name of Iehoua shalbe saued: and an other sayeth: a most stronge toure is the name of Iehouah: to it the righteous shall flee and he shalbe saued, but the name of Christ is called vpon for saluacion: it followeth therfore that he is Iehouah. As for inuocacion, we haue an example of it in Stephen, when he sayeth, Lord Iesu receiue my spirite. Againe in the whole Church, as Ananias testifieth in the same booke. Lord (sayeth he) thou knowest how great euills this man hath done to thy Saintes that call vpon thy name. And that it may be more plainly vnderstanded that the whole fulnesse of the Godhead doth corporally dwell in Christ, the Apostle doth confesse that he brought no other doctrine among the Corinthians but the knowledge of him, and that he preached no other thing but that knowledge. What, I pray you, and how great a thing is this, that the name of the Sonne onely is preached vnto vs whom he willeth to glory in the knowledge of himselfe alone? Who dare say that he is but a creature, of whom the onely knowledge is our whole glorie? Beside that, the salutacions set before the Epistles of Paule, wish the same benefites from the Sonne which they do from the Father, wherby we are taught not onely that those thinges which the Father geueth vs do come vnto vs by his intercession, but also by communitie of power, he is the author of them. Which knowledge by practise is without doute more certaine and perfect than any idle speculacion. For there the godly mynde doth beholde God most present, and in maner handle him, where it feeleth it selfe to be quickened, lightened, saued, iustified and sanctified.

Very plaine is the testimonie of Moses in the history of the creacion, that the spirite of God was vpon the depthes, or vpon the vnfashioned heape: because he sheweth that not onely the beautie of the worlde that is now to be seen is preserued by the power of the Spirite, but ere this beautie was added, the Spirite was then busied in preseruing that confused lumpe of thinges. And that saying of Esaie cannot be cauilled against. And now Iehouah and his Spirite hath sent me. For he communicateth with the Holy ghost his chiefe power in sending of Prophetes. Whereby appeareth the diuine maiestie of the Holy ghost.

And the Apoſtle himſelfe calleth vs ſometime the temple of God, ſometime the temple of the Holy ghoſt. both in one meaning. And Peter reprehending Ananias for that he had lied to the Holy ghoſt, ſaid that he lied not vnto men but vnto God. And where Eſay bringeth in the Lord of hoſtes ſpeaking, Paule teacheth that it is the Holy ghoſt that ſpeaketh. Yea where commonly the Prophetes ſay, that the wordes which they vtter are the wordes of the Lord of hoſtes, Chriſt and the Apoſtles do referre them to the Holy ghoſt. Wherby it followeth that he is the true Iehouah that is the chiefe author of prophecies. Againe where God complaineth that he was prouoked to wrath by the ſtubborneſſe of his people, in ſteade of that Eſay ſaith that his holy Spirite was greeued. Laſte of all, if blaſphemie againſt the Holy ghoſt be not forgeuen in this worlde nor in the worlde to come, whereas he may obteine pardon that hath blaſphemed againſt the Sonne: his diuine maieſtie is here plainly proued, the offenſe or diminiſhment wherof is an vnpardonable crime. I do wittingly and of purpoſe omitte many teſtimonies that the auncient writers haue vſed. They haue thought it a maruellous mete place to alleage out of Dauid: with the worde of the Lord the heauens were ſtabliſhed, and all the power of them with the ſpirite of his mouth, to proue that the worlde was no leſſe the worke of the Holy ghoſt than of the Sonne. But foraſmuch as it is commonly vſed in the Pſalmes to repete one thinge twiſe: and in Eſay the ſpirite of his mouth is as much to ſay as his worde, that reaſon is very weake. Therefore I thought good to touche a fewe ſuche thinges as godly mindes might ſoundly reſt vpon.

But of all the teſtimonies lette this one ſuffice vs for this preſent. Paule ſo knitteth theſe thre together, God, Faith, and Baptiſme, that he reaſoneth from the one to the other in this maner. Becauſe there is but one Faith, he thereby ſheweth that there is but one God. And becauſe there is but one God, he therby proueth that there is but one Faith. Therefore if we be entred into the Faith and religion of one God by Baptiſme: we muſt nedes thinke him the true God in whoſe name we are baptiſed. And it is not to be douted, but that in this ſolemne proteſtacion, Chriſt meant to teſtifie that the perfect light of Faith was already deliuered, when he ſaied: Baptiſe

Ep. 4. 5.

For it is as much in effect as to be baptiſed in the name of one God, which with perfect brightneſſe hath appeared in the ther, the Sonne and the Holy ghoſt. Wherby is euident that in eſſence of God abide three Perſons in which the one God is know And ſurely, foraſmuch as our Faith ought not to looke hether & ther, nor diuerſly to wāder about, but to haue regard to the one G to be applied to him, & to ſticke faſt in him: it is hereby eaſily prou that if there be diuerſe kindes of faith, there muſt alſo be many go Now wheras baptiſme is a Sacrament of faith: it proueth vnt the vnitie of God, becauſe it is but one. And hereof alſo follow that it is not lawfull to be baptiſed but into one God, bycauſe we brace the Faith of him, into whoſe name we are baptiſed. What me Chriſt then, when he commaunded to be baptiſed, in the name of Father, the Sonne, and the Holy ghoſt, but that we ought with Faith to beleue in the Father, Sonne, and the Holy ghoſt? There ſithe this remaineth certain, that there is but one God, and not ma we determine that the Worde and the Spirite are nothing els but very ſelfe eſſence of God. And very fooliſhly did the Arrians pr which confeſſing the godhead of the Sonne did take from him ſubſtance of God. And ſuch a like rage vexed the Macedoniās, wh would haue to be vnderſtāded by the Spirite, only the giftes of gr that are poured forth into men. For as wiſdom, vnderſtanding, dence, fortitude, feare of God do procede from him: ſo he one the ſpirite of wiſdom, prudence, fortitude, and godlineſſe. Yet is he diuided according to the diſtribution of his graces: but how ſoe they be diuerſely dealt abroade, yet he remaineth one and the ſa as the Apoſtle ſaith.

1. Cor. 12. 11.

17 Againe, there is ſhewed in the Scriptures a certaine diſtinct of the Father, from the Worde, and of the Worde from the Spir In diſcuſſing whereof, howe greate religiouſneſſe and ſobrietie ought to vſe, the greatneſſe of the miſterie it ſelfe doth admo vs. And I very well like that saying of Gregorie Nazianzene: I not thinke vpon the one, but by and by I am compaſſed about w the brightneſſe of the three: And I can not ſeuerally diſcerne three, but I am ſodeinly dryuen backe to one. Wherfore lette it come in our mindes ones to imagine ſuch a Trinitie of Perſons as m hold our thought withdrawen into ſeueralties, and doth not forth with bringe vs againe to that vnitie. The names of Father, Son and Holy ghoſt, do proue a true diſtinction, that no man ſho thinke them to be beare names of addition, wherby God accord to his workes is diuerſly entitled: but yet it is a diſtinction, not a diuiſion. The places that we haue already cited, do ſhew that the ſonne hath a property diſtinct from the Father, becauſe the Word had not bin with God, if he had not bin an other thing than the Father: neither had he had his glory with the Father, but being diſtinct from him. Likewiſe he doth diſtinguiſh himſelfe from the Father, when he ſayth, that there is an other which beareth him witneſſe. And for this purpoſe maketh that which in an other place is ſayd, that the Father created all thinges by the Word, which he could not, but being after a certaine maner diſtinct from him. Moreouer the Father came not downe into the earth, but he that came out from the Father. The Father died not nor roaſe againe, but he that was ſent by him. Neither yet did this diſtinction beginne at the taking of fleſh: but it is manifeſt that he was alſo before, the onely begotten in the boſome of the Father. For who can abide to ſay, that then the Sonne entred into the boſome of the Father, when he deſcended from heauen to take manhode vpon him? He was therefore before in the boſome of the Father, and enioyed his glory with the Father. As for the diſtinction of the Holy ghoſt from the Father, Chriſt ſpeaketh of it when he ſayth, that it proceedeth from the Father. And how oft doth he ſhew it to be an other beſide himſelfe? as when he promiſeth that he will ſend an other confortour, and often in other places.

Iohn. 5. 3. & 8. 16.

Iohn. 1. 18.

Ioh. 14. 6. 15. 26

Ioh. 14. 16.

18 But to borow ſimilitudes from matters of men, to expreſſe the force of this diſtinction, I know not whether it be expedient. In dede the olde fathers are wont ſo to do ſomtime: but withall they do confeſſe, that whatſoeuer they bring foorth for like, doth much differ. For which cauſe I am much afraid to be any way bold, leaſt if I bring foorth any thing vnfittely, it ſhould giue occaſion either to the malicious to cauill, or to the vnskilfull to be deceiued. Yet ſuch diſtinction as we haue marked to be ſette out in Scriptures, it is not good to haue left vnſpoken. And that is this, that to the Father is giuen the beginning of working, the fountayne and ſpring of all thinges: to the Sonne wiſdom, counſell, & the very diſpoſitiõ in the doing of things: to the holy Holy ghoſt is aſſigned power and effectuall working. And although eternity belong vnto the Father, and eternity to the Sonne and to the Holy ghoſt alſo, for as much as God could neuer haue bin without his wiſdom & power, and in eternity is not to be ſought, which was firſt or laſt: yet this obſeruation of order is not vayne or ſuperfluous, wherein the Father is reckened firſt, and then of him the Sonne, & after of them both the Holy ghoſt. For euery mans minde of it ſelfe enclineth to this, firſt to conſider God, then the wiſdom rising out of him, and last of all the power wherwith he putteth the decrees of his purpose in execution. In what sorte the Sonne is sayd to be of the Father onely, and the Holy ghost both of the Father and the Sonne, is shewed in many places, but nowhere more plainly than in the viii. chapter to the Romanes, where the same Spirite is without difference sometime called the Spirite of Christ, & sometime of him that raised vp Christ from the dead: and that not without cause. For Peter doth also testifie that it was the Spirite of Christ wherewith the Prophetes did prophecy, where as the Scripture so often teacheth that it was the Spirite of God the Father.

19 Now this distinctiō doth so not stand against the single vnity of God, that thereby we may proue that the Sonne is one God with the father, because he hath one Spirit with him, & that the Holy Spirit is not a thing diuers from the Father and the Sonne. For in ech Hypostasis is vnderstanded the whole substance, with this that euery one hath his own proprety. The Father is whole in the Sonne, & the Sonne is whole in the Father, as himselfe affirmeth. I am in the Father & the Father is in me. And the Ecclesiasticall wryters do not graunt the one to be seuered frō the other by any differēce of essence. By these names that betoken distinction (sayth Augustine) that is ment wherby they haue relation one to an other, & not the very substance wherby they are all one. By which meaning are the sayinges of the old wryters to be made agree, which otherwise would seeme not a little to disagree. For sometime they say that the Father is the beginning of the Sonne, & somtime that the Sonne hath both godhead & essence of himselfe, and is all one beginning with the Father. The cause of this diuersity Augustine doth in an other place wel & plainly declare, whē he saith Christ hauing respect to himselfe, is called God, & to his Father is called the Sonne. And againe, the Father as to himselfe is called God, and to his Sonne is called the Father, where hauing respect to the Sonne he is called the Father, he is not the Sonne: & where as to the Father he is called the Sonne, he is not the Father: & where he is called as to himselfe the Father, and as to himselfe the Sonne: it is all one God. Therefore when we simply speake of the Sonne: without hauing respect to the Father, we do well & proprely say, that he is of himselfe, & therfore we call him but one beginning: but when we make mention of the relation betwene him and his Father, then we rightly make the Father the beginning of the Sonne. All the whole fifth booke of Augustine concerning the Trinity doth nothing but set foorth this matter. And much safer it is to rest in that relation that he speaketh of, than in to suttelly pearsing vnto the hie mistery to wander abroad by many vayne ſpeculations.

20 Let them therefore that are pleaſed with ſoberneſſe, and contented with meaſure of Faith, ſhortly learne ſo much as is profitable to be knowen: that is, when we profeſſe that we beleue in one God, vnder the name of God, we vnderſtand the one onely & ſingle eſſence in which we comprehend three Perſons or Hypoſtaſes. And therfore ſo oft as we do indefinitely ſpeake of the name of God, we meane no leſſe the Sonne and the Holy ghoſt than the Father. But when the Sonne is ioyned to the Father, then commeth in a relation, and ſo we make diſtinctiō betwene the Perſons. And becauſe the propreties in the Perſons bring an order with them, ſo as the beginning and originall is in the Father: ſo oft as mention is made of the Father and the Sonne, or the Holy ghoſt together, the name of God is peculiarly giuen to the Father. By this meane is retayned the vnity of ỹ eſſence, and regarde is hadde to the order, which yet doth miniſh nothing of the godhead of the Sonne and of the Holy ghoſt. And whereas we haue already ſeene that the Apoſtles do affirme, that the Sonne of God is he, whom Moſes and the Prophetes do teſtifie to be Iehouah the Lord, we muſt of neceſſity alway come to the vnity of the eſſence. Wherefore it is a deteſtable ſacrilege for vs to call the Sonne a ſeuerall God from the Father, becauſe the ſimple name of God, doth admitte no relation, and God in reſpect of himſelfe can not be ſayd to be this or that, Now, that the name of Iehouah the Lord indefinitely taken is applied to Chriſt, appeareth by the wordes of Paule, where he ſayeth: Therefore I haue thryſe prayed the Lord, becauſe that after he hadde receiued the aunſwere of Chriſt, My grace is ſufficient for the: he ſayeth byandby, that the power of Chriſt may dwell in me. It is certayne that the name Lord is there ſette for Iehouah, and therefore to reſtrayne it to the perſon of the Mediatour were very fond and childiſh, for ſo much as it is an abſolute ſentēce that compareth not the Father with the Sonne. And we know that after the accuſtomed maner of the Greekes, the Apoſtles do commonly ſette the word Kyrios, Lord, in ſteede of Iehouah. And, not to fetch an example farre of, Paule didde in no other ſenſe pray to the Lord, than in the ſame ſenſe that Peter citeth the place of Ioell: whoſoeuer calleth vppon the name of the Lord ſhall be ſaued. But where this name is peculiarly giuen to the Sonne, we ſhall ſee that there is an other reaſon therof, whē we come to a place fitte for it. Now it is enough to haue in minde, when Paule had abſolutely prayed to God, he byandby bringeth in the name of Chriſt. Euen ſo is the whole God called by Chriſt himſelfe the Spirite.

1. Cor. 12. 9.

Act. 2. 16. Ioel. 2. 28.

For there is no cauſe againſt it, but that the whole eſſence of God may be ſpirituall, wherin the Father, the Sonne & the Holy ghoſt be comprehended. Which is very playne by the Scripture. For euen as there we heare God to be made a Spirite : ſo we do heare the Holy ghoſt, for ſo much it is an Hypoſtaſis of the whole eſſence, to be called both God, and proceeding from God.

21 But for as much as Sathan, to the end to roote out our Faith hath alway moued great contentions, partly concerning the diuine eſſence of the Sonne, and of the holy Ghoſt, and partly concerning theyr diſtinction of Perſones. And as in a maner in all ages he hath ſtirred vp wicked ſpirites to trouble the true teachers in this behalfe: ſo at this day he trauaileth out of the old embres to kindle a new fire: therefore here it is good to anſwere the peruerſe fooliſh errours of ſome. Hitherto it hath bin our purpoſe, to leade as it were by the hand thoſe that are willing to learne, and not to ſtriue hand to hand with the obſtinate and contentious. But now the trueth which we haue already peaſeably ſhewed, muſt be reskued from the cauillations of the wicked. All be it my chiefe trauaile ſhall yet be applied to this end, that they which giue gentill and open eares to the word of God may haue whereupon ſtedfaſtly to reſt their foote. In this point, if any where at all in the ſecrete myſteries of Scripture, we ought to diſpute ſoberly, and with great moderation, and to take great hede that neither our thought nor our tongue proceede any further than the boundes of Gods word do extende. For how may the minde of man by his capacity define the immeaſurable eſſence of God, which neuer yet could certainly determine how great is ŷ body of the Sunne which yet he daily ſeeth with his eyes? yea how may ſhe by her owne guiding attaine to diſcuſſe the ſubſtaunce of God, that can not reache to know her owne ſubſtaunce? Wherefore let vs willingly giue ouer vnto God the knowledge of himſelfe. For he only, as Hilarie ſayeth, is a conuenient witneſſe to himſelfe, which is not knowē but by himſelfe. We ſhall giue it ouer vnto him, if we ſhall both conceiue him to be ſuch as he hath opened himſelfe vnto vs, and ſhall not elſe where ſearch to know of him, than by his owne word. There are to this end wrytten fiue homelies of Chryſoſtome againſt the Anomei. Yet the boldneſſe of Sophiſters could not be reſtrayned by them from babling vnbridledly. For they haue behaued themſelues in this behalfe no whit more modeſtly than they are wonted in all other. By the vnhappie ſucceſſe of which vndiſcretion, we ought to be warned to take care that we bend our ſelues to trauale in this queſtion rather with tractable willingneſſe to learne, than with ſharpneſſe of witte, and neuer uer haue in our minde either to ſearch for God any where elſe than in his holy Worde, or to thinke any thing of him, but hauing his Worde going before to guide vs, or to ſpeake any thinge but that which is taken out of the ſame Word: The diſtinction that is in the one Godheade of the Father, the Sonne, and the holy Ghoſt, as it is very hard to know, ſo doth it bring more buſineſſe and comberance to ſome wittes than is expedient. Lette them remember that the mindes of men do enter into a maſe when they follow their owne curioſity, and ſo lette them ſuffer themſelues to be ruled with the heauenly oracles, how ſoeuer they can not attaine the height of the myſtery.

22 To make a regiſter of the errours, wherewith the pureneſſe of Faith in this point of doctrine hath in times paſt bin aſſailed, were to long and full of vnprofitable tediouſneſſe: and the moſt parte of heretickes haue ſo attempted to ouerwhelme the glory of God with groſſe doting errours, that they haue thought it enough for them to ſhake and trouble the vnskilfull. And from a few men haue ſprong vp many ſectes, whereof ſome do teare in ſunder the eſſence of God, ſome do confound the diſtinction that is betwene the Perſons. But if we hold faſt that which is already ſufficiētly ſhewed by the Scripture, that the eſſence of the one God which belongeth to the Father, the Sonne, and the Holy ghoſt, is ſingle and vndiuided. Againe, that the Father by a certaine proprety differeth from the Sonne, & the Sonne from the Holy ghoſt: we ſhal ſtop vp the gate not only againſt Arrius and Sabellius, but alſo the other old authors of errours. But becauſe in our time there be riſen vp certaine phrenetike men, as Seruetto & other like, which haue encombred all things with new deceites: It is good in few wordes to diſcuſſe their falſehoodes. The name of the Trinity was ſo hateful, yea ſo deteſtable to Seruetto, that he ſayd, that all the Trinitaries, as he called them, were vtterly godleſſe. I omit the fooliſh words that he had deuiſed to raile withall. But of his opinions this was the ſumme. That God is made Tripartite, when it is ſayd, that there abide three Perſons in his eſſence, and that this Trinity is but a thing imagined, becauſe it diſagreeth with the vnity of God. In the meane time the Perſons he would haue to be certaine outward conceptions of Forme, which are not truely ſubſiſting in the eſſence of God, but do repreſent God vnto vs in this or that faſhion. And at the beginning that there was in God nothing diſtinct becauſe ones the Word and the Spirite were all one: but ſins that Chriſt aroſe God out of God; the holy Ghoſt ſprong alſo an other God out of him. And though ſomtime he colour his follies with allegories, as whē he sayth, that the eternall Word of God was the Spirite of Christ with God,& the bright shining of his forme. Againe, that the Holy ghost was the shadow of the godhead, yet afterward he bringeth the godhead of them both to nothing, affirming that after the rate of distribution there is both in the Sonne and in the Holy Spirite a parte of God,euē as the same Spirite in vs. and also in wood and stones is substantially a portion of God. What he babbleth of the Person of the Mediatour, we shall herafter see in place conuenient. But this monstrous forged deuise, that a Person is nothing else but a visible forme of the glory of God,needeth no long confutation. For where as Iohn pronoūceth, that the Word was God before the world was yet created, he maketh it much differing from a conception of forme. But if there also, yea and from fartheſt Eternity of time, that Word which was God was with the Father,&had his owne proper glory with the Father,he could not be an outward or figuratiue shining: but it necessarily followeth that he was an Hypostasis that did inwardly abide in God. And although there be no mention made of the Spirite, but in the Historie of the creation of the world:yet he is not there brought in as a shadow, but an essentiall power of God, when Moses sheweth that the very vnfashioned lumpe was susteined in him. Therefore it then appeared, that the eternall Spirite was alwayes in God, when he preserued and susteined the confused matter of heauen and earth,vntill beauty and order were added vnto it.Surely he could not yet be an image or representation of God as Seruetto dreameth. But in other pointes he is compelled more openly to disclose his wickednesse, in saying that God by his eternall purpose appointing to himselfe a visible Sonne, did by this meane shew himselfe visible. For if that be true there is no other godhead left vnto Christ, but so far as he is by the eternall decree of God ordeined his Sonne.Moreouer he so transformeth those imagined shapes that he sticketh not to faine new accidents in God. But this of all other is most abhominable,that he confusely mingleth as well the Sonne of God,as the Holy ghost, with all creatures.For he plainely affirmeth, that there be partes and partitions in the Essence of God,of which euery portiō is God. And namely he sayth, that the Spirites of the faithfull are coeternall and consubstantiall with God: albeit in an other place he assigneth the substantiall Deity,not onely to the soule of man, but also to other creatures.

23 Out of this sinke came foorth an other like monster. For certaine lewd mē meaning to escape the hatred & shame of the wickednesse of Seruetto,haue in deede confessed, that there are there Persons,

sons, but adding a manner how: that the Father which truely and properly is the one onely God, in forming the Sonne & the Holy ghost, hath powred his godhead into them. Yea they forbeare not this horrible maner of speech, that the Father is by this marke distinguished from the Sonne and the Holy ghost, that he is the only essentiatour or maker of the essence. First they pretende this colour, that Christ is echewhere called the Sonne of God: whereof they gather, that there is none other properly God but the Father. But they marke not, that though the name of God be also common to the Sonne, yet by reason of preeminence it is sometime giuen to the Father onely, because he is the fountaine and originall of the Deity, and that for this purpose, to make the single vnity of the essence to be therby noted. They take exception and say: If he be truely the Sonne of God, it is inconuenient to haue him reckened the Sonne of a Person. I answere that both are true: that is, that he is the Sonne of God, because he is the Word begotten of the Father before all worldes (for we come not yet to speake of the Person of the Mediatour) and yet for explications sake we ought to haue regard of the Person, that the name of God simply be not taken, but for the Father onely. For if we meane none to be God but the Father, we plainely throw downe the Sonne from the degree of God. Therefore so oft as mention is made of the godhead, we must not admit a comparison betwene the Sonne and the Father, as though the name of God did belong onely to the Father. For truely the God that appeared to Esay was the true and onely God, and yet Iohn affirmeth that the same was Christ. And he that by the mouth of Esay testified, that he should be a stumbling stone to the Iewes, was the onely God: and yet Paule pronounceth that the same was Christ. He that crieth out by Esay, I liue, and to me all knees shall bowe, is the onely God: and yet Paul expoundeth that the same was Christ. For this purpose serue the testimonies that the Apostle reciteth: Thou O God hast layd the foundations of heauen & earth. Againe, let all the angels of God worship him, which thinges belong to none, but to the onely God. And yet he sayth, that they are the propre titles of Christ. And this cauillation is nothing worth, that that is giuen to Christ, which is proper to God because Christ is the shining brightnesse of his glory. For because in eche of these places is sette the name of Iehouah, it followeth, that it is so sayd in respect that he is God of himselfe. For if he be Iehouah, it can not be denied that he is the same God that in an other place crieth out by Esay: I, I am, and beside me there is no God. It is good also to consider that saying of Hieremy: The gods that

24 It is easie by many places to proue that it is false which they hold, that so oft as there is in Scripture mention made absolutely of God, none is ment thereby but the Father. And in those places that they themselues do allege, they fowly bewray their owne want of cō-sideration, becaus there is also sette the name of the Sonne. Where-by appeareth, that the name of God is there relatiuely takē, and ther-fore restrained to the Person of the Father. And their obiectiō where they say, If the Father were not only the true God, he should himself be his owne Father, is answered with one word. It is not inconuenient for degree and orders sake, that he be peculiarly called God which hath not onely of himselfe begotten his wisdom, but also is the God of the Mediatour, as in place fitte for it, I will more largely declare. For sith Christ was openly shewed in the flesh, he is called the Sonne of God, not onely in respect that he was the eternall Word before all worldes begotten of the Father: but also becaus he tooke vppon him the Person and office of the Mediatour to ioyne vs vnto God. And becaus they do so boldly exclude the Sonne from the honor of God, I would fayne know whether the Sonne when he pronoun-ceth, that none is good but God, do take goodnesse from himselfe? Mat.19. 17. I do not speake of his humaine nature, least perhappes they should take exception, and say, that whatsoeuer goodnesse was in it, it came of free gift. I aske whether the eternall Word of God be good or no? If they say nay, then we hold their vngodlinesse sufficiently cō-uinced: in saying yea, they confound themselues. But where as at the first sight, Christ seemeth to put from himselfe the name of Good, that doth the more confirme our meaning. For sith it is the singular title of God alone, forasmuch as he was after the common maner saluted by the name of Good, in refusing false honor, he did admo-nish them, that the goodnesse wherein he excelled, was the good-nesse that God hath. I aske also, where Paule affirmeth that onely Tim.11. God is immortall, wise, and true, whether by these wordes Christ 17. be brought into the number of men mortall, fooliſh, and false? Shall not he then be immortall, that from the beginning was life to giue immortality to angels? Shall not he be wise that is the eternall wise-dom of God? Shall not the trueth it selfe be true? I aske furthermore, Phil.2. whether they thinke that Christ ought to be worshipped or no? For 10. he claimeth this vnto himselfe, to haue all knees bowe before him: it followeth that he is the God which did in the law forbid any other to be worshipped but himselfe. If they will haue that meant of the followe that God didde not inwardly thus speake to himselfe, but directed his speeche to other foreyne worke menne. Finally one place shall easily aunswere two of theyr obiections. For where as Christ himselfe pronounceth that God is a Spirite, this were not conuenient to be restrayned to the Father onely, as if the Worde himselfe were not of Spirituall nature. If then the name of Spirite doth as well agree with the Sonne as with the Father, I gather that the Sonne is also comprehended vnder the indefinyte name of God. But he addeth byandby after that, none are allowed for good worshippers of the Father, but they that worshippe him in Spirite and trueth, whereupon followeth an other thinge, because Christ doth vnder a heade execute the office of a teacher, he doth giue the name of God to the Father, not to the entent to destroye his owne godheade, but by degrees to lift vs vppe vnto it. Iohn.4. 24.

25 But in this they are deceiued, that they dreame of certayne vndiuided singular thinges whereof ech haue a parte of the essence. But by the Scriptures we teach, that there is but one essentially God, and therefore that the essence as well of the Sonne as of the Holy ghost is vnbegotten. But for so much as the Father is in order first, and hath of himselfe begotten his wisdom, therefore rightfully as is aboue sayd, he is counted the originall and fountayne of all the godhead. So God indefinitely spoken, is vnbegotten, and the Father also in respect of Person is vnbegotten. And foolishly they thinke that they gather, that by our meaning is made a quaternity, because falsely and cauillously they ascribe vnto vs a deuise of their owne brayne, as though we did fayne that by deriuation there come three Persons out of one essence: whereas it is euident by our wrytinges that we do not draw the Persons out of the essence, but although they be abiding in the essence we make a distinctiō betwene them. If the Persons were seuered from the essence, then paraduenture theyr reason were like to be true. But by that meane it should be a Trinity of goddes and not of Persons, which one God conteyneth in him. So is their fonde question aunswered, whether the essence do mete to make vp the Trinity as though we did imagine that there descende three gods out of it. And this exception groweth of like foolishnesse where they say, that then the Trinity should be without God. For though it mete not to make vppe the distinction as a parte or a member, yet neither are the Persons without it nor out of it. Because the Father if he were not God could not be the Father, and the Sonne is none otherwise the Sonne but because he is God. We say therefore, that the godhead is absolutely of it selfe. Whereby we graunt tha the Sonne in so much as he is God, is of himselfe without respecte his Person, but in somuch as he is the Sonne, we say that he is of t Father. So his essence is without beginning, but the beginning of h Person is God himselfe. And the true teaching wryters that in o time haue spoken of the Trinity, haue onely applied this name the Persons, for somuch as it were not onley an absurde errour b also a grosse vngodlinesse to comprehend the essence in the distr ction. For they that will haue these three to mete, the essence, t Sonne and the Holy ghost, it is playne that they do destroy the sence of the Sonne and the Holy ghost, for else the partes ioyned gether would fall in sunder, which is a fault in euery distinction. nally if the Father and the Sonne were Synonimes or seuerall nam signifying one thing, so the Father should be the Godmaker a nothing should remayne in the Sonne but a shadowe, and the Tr nity should be nothing else, but the ioyning of one God with creatures.

26 Whereas they obiect, that if Christ be properly God, he not rightfully called the Sonne, to that we haue already answer that because in such places there is a comparison made of the Person to the other, the name of God is not there indefinitely tak but restrayned to the Father onely, in so much as he is the beg ning of the Godheade, not in making of essence as the madde m do fondly imagine, but in respect of order. In this meaning is co strued that saying of Christ to the Father: this is the eternall life, t men beleue in thee ỹ one true God, & Iesus Christ whom thou h sent. For speaking in the Person of the Mediatour, he keepeth degree that is meane betwene God and men: and yet is not his m sty thereby diminished. For though he abaced himselfe, yet he not with the Father his glory that was hidden before the world. the Apostle in the second Chapter to the Hebrues, though he co fesseth that Christ for a shorte time was abaced beneth the An yet he sticketh not to affirme withall, that he is the same eternal G that founded the earth. We must therefore hold, that so oft as Ch in the Person of the Mediatour speaketh to the Father, vnder name of God is comprehended the godhead which is his also. So he sayed to the Apostles: it is profitable that I go vp to the Fath because the Father is greater. He giueth not vnto himselfe onely second degree of godhead to be as touching his eternall essence feriour to the Father, but because hauing obtayned the heauely g ry, he gathereth together the faithfull to the partaking of it. He teth his Father in the hier degree, insomuch as the glorious perfection of brightnesse that appeareth in heauen, differeth frō that measure of glory that was seene in him being clothed with flesh. After like maner in an other place, Paul sayth: that Christ shall yeld vp the kingdom to God and his Father, that God may be all in all. There is nothing more absurd than to take away eternall continuance from the godhead of Christ. If he shall neuer ceasse to be the Sonne of God, but shall alway remayne the same that he was from the beginning, it followeth that vnder the name of the Father is comprehēded the one essence that is common to them both. And surely therefore did Christ descende vnto vs, that lifting vs vppe vnto his Father, he might also lift vs vp vnto himselfe, inasmuch as he is all one with his Father. It is therefore neither lawfull nor right so exclusiuely to restraine the name of God to the Father, as to take it from the Sonne. For, Iohn doth for this cause affirme that he is true God, that no man should thinke that he resteth in a second degree of godhead beneth his Father. And I maruell what these framers of new Gods do meane, that while they confesse Christ to be true God, yet they forth with exclude him from the godhead of his Father. As though there could any be a true God but he that is the one God, or as though the godhead powred from one to an other, be not a certaine new forged imagination.

1.Cor. 15.24.

27 Whereas they heape vp many places out of Ireneus, where he affirmeth that the Father of Christ is the onely and eternall God of Israel: that is either done of a shamefull ignoraunce, or of an extreme wickednesse. For they ought to haue considered, that then the holy man hadde to do in disputation with those frentike men that denyed that the Father of Christ was the same God that in old time spake by Moses and the Prophetes, but that he was I wote not what imagined thing brought out of the corruption of the world. Therefore he altogether trauaileth in this point, to make it playne that there is no other God preached of in the Scripture but the Father of Christ, and that it is amisse to deuise any other, and therefore it is no maruell if he so oft conclude that there was no other God of Israel, but he that was spoken of by Christ and the Apostles. And in like manner now, whereas we are to stand against an other sorte of errour, we may truely say that the God which in old time appeared to the Fathers, was none other but Christ. But if any manne obiect that it was the Father, our aunswere is in redinesse, that when we striue to defende the Godhead of the Sonne, we exclude not the Father. If the readers take heede to this purpose of Ire-neus,all that contention ſhall ceaſſe. And alſo by the ſixt Chapter the third booke,this whole ſtrife is ended,where the good man ſta deth all vpon this point, to proue that he which is in Scripture ab lutely and indefinitely called God: is verely the one onely God, a that Chriſt is abſolutely called God. Let vs remember that this w the principall point whereupon ſtode all his diſputation, as by t whole proceſſe thereof doth appeare:and ſpecially the 46. Chapter the ſecond booke, that he is not called the Father by darke ſimilit

Cap.16. And a little after he affirmeth, that the Sonne is the maker of he eiuſd.li. uen and earth, which gaue the law by the hande of Moſes and peared to the Fathers. Now if any man do prate that with Iren onely the Father is the God of Iſrael, I will turne againe vppon h that which the ſame wryter playnely teacheth, that Chriſt is all and the ſame:as alſo he applieth vnto him the Prophecie of Haba ſelfe therefore with the Father is the God of the liuing. And in twelfe Chapter of the ſame booke he expoundeth that Abraham leued God,becauſe Chriſt is the maker of heauen and earth and onely God.

28 And with no more trueth do they bring in Tertulliane theyr defender. For though he be rough ſometime and crabbe his manner of ſpeech, yet doth he plainely teach the ſumme of doctrine that we defende. That is to ſay, where as he is the God, yet by diſpoſition and order he is his Worde: that ther but one God in vnity of ſubſtance, and yet that the ſame vnity miſtery of orderly diſtribution is diſpoſed into Trinity, that th are three, not in ſtate, but in degree, not in ſubſtance, but forme: not in power, but in order. He ſayeth that he defend the Sonne to be a ſeconde next to the Father, but he meaneth to be none other than the Father, but by way of diſtinction. ſome places he ſayeth that the Sonne is viſible. But when he reaſoned on both partes he defineth that he is inuiſible in ſo muc he is the Worde. Finally where he affirmeth that the Father is de mined in his owne perſon,he proueth himſelfe farre from that er which we confute. And though he doth acknowledge none other God but the Father, yet in the next peece of his wryting expounding himselfe, he sayth, that he speaketh not exclusiuely in respect of the Sonne, becausse he denieth that ỹ Sonne is any other God beside the Father, and that therefore their sole gouernement is not broken by distinction of Person. And by the perpetuall course of his purpose it is easie to gather the meaning of his words. For he disputeth against Praxeas, that though God be distinguished into three persons, yet are there not made many gods nor the vnity torne in sunder. And becausse by the imagination of Praxeas Christ could not be God, but he must also be the Father, therefore he somuch laboureth about the distinction. Wheras he calleth ỹ Word & the Spirite a portiõ of the whole although it be a hard kinde of speech, yet is it excusable, becausse it is not referred to the substaunce, but only sheweth the disposition & order that belongeth only to the Persons, as Tertulliane himselfe witnesseth. And herof hangeth that. How many Persons thinkest thou there are, O most frowarde Praxeas, but euen so many as there be names? And so a little after that, they may beleue the Father and the Sonne ech in their names and persons. Hereby I thinke may be sufficiently cõfuted their impudency that seeke to begyle the simple with colour of Tertullians authority.

29 And surely whosoeuer shall diligẽtly compare together ỹ wrytinges of the old authors, shall finde no other thing in Ireneus, than that which hath bin taught by other that came after. Iustine is one of the auncienteſt, and he in all things doth agree with vs. Yet lette them obiect that he as the rest do, calleth the Father of Christ the only God. The same thing doth Hilary teach, yea and speaketh more hardly, that the eternity is in the Father. But doth he that to take away the essence of God from the Sonne? And yet is he altogether in defense of the same Faith that we followe. Yet are they not ashamed to picke out certaine mangled sentences whereby they would perswade that Hilary is a Patrone of their errour. Wher they bring in Ignatius: if they will haue that to be of any authority, let them proue that the Apostles made a law for lent & such like corruptions of religion. Nothing is more vnsauery than those fonde trifles that are published vnder the name of Ignatius. Wherfore their impudence is so much lesse tolerable that disguise themselues with such visers to deceiue. Moreouer the consent of the auncient Fathers is plainely perceiued by this, that at the councell of Nice, Arrius neuer durst allege for himselfe the authority of any one allowed writer. And none of the Greks or Latins doth excuse himselfe and say, that he dissenteth from them that were before. It needeth not to be ſpoken how Auguſtine, wh theſe loſells do moſt hate, hath diligently ſearched the wrytinge them all, and how reuerently he did embrace them. Truely eue matters of leaſt weight he vſeth to ſhew what compelleth him to ſent from them. And in this matter, if he haue read any thing do full or darke in other, he hydeth it not. But the doctrine that thes ſtriue againſt, he taketh it as confeſſed, that from the fartheſt time antiquity it hath bin without cõtrouerſie receiued. And by one w it appeareth that he was not ignorant what other had taught bef him, where he ſayeth that in the Father is vnity, in the firſt book Chriſtian doctrine, will they ſay that he then forgate himſelfe? Bu an other place he purgeth himſelfe from ſuch reproch, where he leth the Father the beginning of the whole godhead, becauſe he i none: conſidering in dede wiſely that the name of God is ſpecially ſcribed to the Father, becauſe if the beginning ſhould not be recke at him, the ſingle vnity of God can not be conceiued. By this I t the godly reader will perceiue that all the cauillations are confu wherwith Satan hath hitherto attẽpted to peruert or darken the p trueth of doctrine. Finally I truſt that the whole ſumme of doctrin this point is fully declared, if the readers will temper them of curi ty, and not more gredely than mete is ſeke for comberſome & ent gled diſputations. For I take not in hand to pleaſe them, that do de in an vntemperate deſire of ſpeculation. Truely I haue omitted thing of ſuttle purpoſe that I thought to make againſt me. But wh

I ſtudy to edifie the church, I thought it beſt, to leaue many thing vntouched which both ſmally profited, and would greue the read with ſuperfluous tediouſneſſe. For to what purpoſe were it to diſpu whether the father do alway beget? Foraſmuch as it is folly to ſa a continuall act of begetting, ſith it is euident that from eternity th haue bin three Perſons in God.

The xiiij. Chapter.

That the Scripture euen in the creation of the vvorld and of all things: doth by certayne markes put difference betvvene the true God, and fayned Gods.

Eſa. 40. 21.

ALthough Eſay doth worthily reproche the worſhippers falſe Goddes with ſlouthfullneſſe, for that they haue learned by the very foundations of the earth, and rou compaſſe of the heauens, which is the true God:
ſuch is the dullneſſe and groſſeneſſe of our witte, that leaſt faythfull ſhoulde fall away to the inuentions of the Gentiles, it neceſſ

neceſſary to haue God more expreſly painted out vnto them. For whereas the ſaying that God is the minde of the worlde, which is compted the moſt tolerable deſcription that is founde among the Philoſophers, is but vaine, it behoueth vs more familiarly to know him, leaſt we alway wauer in doutefulneſſe. Therfore it was his pleaſure to haue an hiſtory of the creacion remaining, wherupon the Faith of the Church might reſte, and ſeke for no other God but him, whom Moſes hath declared to be the maker and bilder of the world. There is firſt ſet forth the time, that by continuall proceding of yeres the faithfull might come to the firſt original of mankinde, and of all thinges. Which knowledge is very neceſſary, not onely to confute thoſe monſtruous fables that ſometime were ſpred in Egypte & other partes of the worlde, but alſo, that the beginning of the worlde ones being knowen, the eternitie of God may more clerely ſhine forth and rauiſh vs in admiracio of it. Neither ought we to be any thing moued with that vngodly mocke, that it is maruell why it came no ſoner in the minde of God to make the heaué and the earth, & why he ſitting idle did ſuffer ſo immeaſurable a ſpace to paſſe away, ſith he mought haue made it many thouſande ages before: wheras the whole continuaunce of the worlde that now draweth to an end, is not yet come to ſixe thouſande yeres. For why God ſo long differred it, is nether lawful nor expedient for vs to enquire. Becauſe if mans minde will trauaile to atteine thereunto, it ſhall faile a hundred times by the way, neither were it profitable for vs to know that thing which God himſelfe to proue the modeſtie of our Faith, hath of purpoſe willed to be hidden. And well did that godly olde man ſpeake, which when a wanton fellow did in ſcorne demaunde of him, what God had done before the creatio of the world, anſwered that he builded hel for curious fooles. Let this graue & ſeuere warning repreſſe the wantonneſſe that tickleth many yea and driueth them to euill and hurtefull ſpeculatios. Finally let vs remember that the ſame inuiſible God whoes wiſdom power and iuſtice is incomprehenſible, doth ſet before vs the hiſtorie of Moſes as a loking glaſſe, wherin his liuely imagine appeareth. For as the eyes that either are growen dimme with age, or dulled with any diſeaſe, do not diſcerne any thing plainly vnleſſe they be holpen with ſpectacles: ſo, ſuch is our weakeneſſe, that vnleſſe the Scripture direct vs in ſeking of God, we do forthwith runne out into vanitie. And they that follow their owne wantonneſſe, becauſe they be now warned in vaine, ſhall all to late fele with horrible deſtruction, how much it had bin better for them reuerētly to receiue the ſecrete counſels of God, than to vomite out blaſphemies, to obſcure the heauen with all. And rightly doth Auguſtine complaine that wrong is done to God whe further cauſe of thinges is ſought for, than his onely will. The ſa man in an other place doth wiſely warne vs, that it is no leſſe euell moue queſtion of immeaſurable ſpaces of times than of places. F how brode ſoeuer the circuit of the heauen is, yet is there ſome me ſure of it. Now if one ſhould quarel with God for that the emptine wherin nothing is conteined, is a hundred times more, ſhall not the godly abhore ſuch wãtonneſſe? Into like madneſſe runne they th buſie them ſelues about Gods ſitting ſtill, becauſe at their appointm he made not the worlde innumerable ages ſoner. To ſatisfie the owne gredineſſe of minde, they couet to paſſe without the compa of the worlde, as though in ſo large a circuite of heauen & earth, th coulde not finde thinges enough that with their ineſtimable brigh neſſe may ouerwhelme all our ſenſes: as though in ſix thouſand yer God hath not ſhewed examples in continuall conſideracion, whe our mindes may be exerciſed. Let vs therfore willingly abide enc ſed within thoſe boundes wherwith it pleaſed God to enuiron vs, a as it were to penne vp our mindes that they ſhould not ſtray abro with liberty of wandring.

2 For like reaſon is it that Moſes declareth, that the worke of G was not ended in a moment but in ſix dayes. For by this circumſtan we are withdrawen from forged inuẽcions to the one onely God th diuided his worke into ſix dayes, that it ſhould not greue vs to be o cupied all the time of our life in conſidering of it. For though o eyes, what way ſoeuer we turne them, are compelled to looke vp the workes of God, yet ſee we how fickle our hede is, and if any go ly thoughtes do touch vs, how ſone they paſſe away. Here agai mãs reaſon murmureth as though ſuch procedinges were diſagre from the power of God, vntill ſuch time as being made ſubiect to t obedience of Faith, ſhe learne to kepe that reſte wherunto the h lowing of the ſeuen day calleth vs. But in the very order of thinges diligently to be conſidered the Fatherly loue of God towarde ma kinde, in this: that he did not create Adam vntill he had ſtored t world with all plenty of good thinges. For if he had placed him in t earth while it was yet barren and emptie, if he had geuen him life b fore that there was any light, he ſhoulde haue ſemed not ſo well prouide for his commoditie. But now where he firſt diſpoſed the m tions of the Sunne and the Planets for the vſe of man, and furniſh the earth, the waters and the aire with liuing creatures, and brou forth aboundance of fruites to ſuffice for foode, taking vpon him t care of a diligent & prouident houſeholder, he ſhewed his maruello bountie towarde vs. If a man do more hedefully weye with himselfe those thinges that I do but shortly touch, it shall appeare that Moses was the sure witnesse & publisher of the one God the creator. I omitt here that which I haue already declared, that he speaketh not there onely of the bare essence of God, but also setteth forth vnto vs his eternall Wisdom and Spirite, to the ende we should not dreame that God is any other, than such as he will be knowen by the image that he hath there expressed.

3 But before that I begin to speake more at large of the nature of man, I must say somewhat of Angels. Because though Moses applying himselfe to the rudenesse of the common people reciteth in his history of the creacio no other workes of God but such as are seen with our eyes, yet wheras afterwarde he bringeth in Angels for ministers of God, we may easily gather that he was the creator of them in whoes seruice they employ their trauaile and offices. Though therefore Moses speakeing after the capacity of the people doth not at the very beginning rehearse the Angels among the creatures of God: yet that is no cause to the contrary, but that we may plainly and expresly speake those thinges of them, which in other places the Scripture comonly teacheth. Because if we desire to know God by his workes, so noble and excellente an example is not to be omitted. Beside that this pointe of doctrine is very necessary for the confuting of many errors. The excellence of the nature of Angels hath so daselled the mindes of many, that they thought the Angels had wrong offred them, if they should be made subiect to the authoritie of one God, & brought as it were in obedience. And herevpon were they fained to be Gods. There rose vp also one Manicheus with his secte, which made themselues two originall beginninges of thinges, God, and the Deuell, and to God he assigned the beginning of good thinges, and of thinges of euill nature he determined the Deuill to be the author. If our mindes should be entangled with this error, God should not kepe whole his glory in the creacion of the world. For where as nothing is more proper to God than eternitie and a being of himselfe as I may so terme it, they which geue that vnto the Deuill, do they not in a maner geue him the title of Godhead? Now where is the almightinesse of God become, if such authoritie be graunted to the deuill, that he may put in execucion what he will though God say nay and withstande it? As for the onely fundation that the Manichees haue, that it is vnlawfull to ascribe vnto God that is good, the creation of any thing that is euil: that nothing hurteth the true Faith, which admitteth not that there is any thing naturally euill in the whole vniuersalitie of the worlde, becauſe neither the frowardneſſe and malice both of man and the d uell, nor the ſinnes that procede therof, are of nature, but of the co ruption of nature. Neither was there any thing from the beginnin wherin God hath not ſhewed an example both of his wiſdom a iuſtice. Therfore to aunſwere theſe peruerſe deuiſes: it behoueth to liſt vp our mindes hier than our eyes can atteine to ſee. For whi cauſe it is likely, that where in the Nicene crede God is called t creator of all thinges, thinges inuiſible are expreſſed. Yet will we b careſull to kepe the meaſure that the rule of godlineſſe appointe leaſt the readers with ſearching to vnderſtande further than is exp dient, ſhould wander abroade, being ledde awaie from the ſimplici of Faith. And ſurely for as much as the Holy ghoſt teacheth vs alwa for our profite, and ſuch thinges as are ſmally auaylable to edifie, h doth either leaue wholly vnſpoken, or but lightly, and as it were ouer runningly touch them: it ſhall be alſo our duetie to be content not know thoſe thinges that do not profite vs.

4 That the Angels, for as much as they are the miniſters of G ordeined to execute his commaundementes, are alſo his creatures, ought to be certainly out of all queſtion. To moue doute of the ti and order that they were created in, ſhoulde it not rather be a bu waywardneſſe than diligence? Moſes declareth that the earth w Gen.1.2 made, and the heauens were made, with all their armies, to what pu poſe thā is it, curiouſly to ſearch, what day the other more ſecrete a mies of heauen beſide the ſtarres and planettes firſt began to be? B becauſe I will not be long: let vs, as in the whole doctrine of religio ſo here alſo remembre that we ought to kepe one rule of modeſtie ſobrietie, that of obſcure thinges we neither ſpeake, nor thinke, n yet deſire to know any other thinges than that hath bin taught vs
the worde of God: and an other point, that in reading of Scriptu we continually reſt vpon the ſearching and ſtudying of ſuch thinges pertaine to edification, and not geue our ſelues to curioſitie or ſtudy thinges vnprofitable. And becauſe it was Gods pleaſure to inſtruct not in triflyng queſtions, but in ſounde godlineſſe, feare of his nam true confidence, and duties of holineſſe: let vs reſt vpon ſuch kno ledge. Wherfore, if we will be rightly wiſe, we muſt leaue thoſe va ties that ydle men haue taught without warrāt of the worde of Go concerning the nature, degrees, and multitude of Angels. I know th ſuch matters as this, are by many more gredily taken holde of, and more pleaſant vnto them thā ſuch thinges as lie in dayly vſe. But i greue vs not to be the ſcholers of Chriſt, let it not greue vs to follo that order of learning that he hath appointed. So ſhall it ſo come

passe, that being contented with his scholing, we shall not onely forbeare but also abhorre superfluous speculations, from which he calleth vs away. No man can deny, that the same Denyse, what soeuer man he was, hath disputed many thinges both subtilly and wittyly in his Hierarchie of heauen: but if a man examine it more neerely, he shal finde that for the most parte it is but mere babbling. But the dutifull purpose of a diuine is, not to delite eares with prating, but to stablish consciences with teaching thinges true, certaine, and profitable. If one should reade that booke, he would thinke that the man were slipped downe from heauen, and did tell of thinges not that he had learned by heresay, but that he had seen with his eies. But Paule which 1. Cor. 12. 2. was rauished aboue the thirde heauen, hath vttered no such thing, but also protesteth, that it is not lawful for man to speake the secretes that he had seen. Therfore bidding farewell to that triflyng wisdom, let vs consider by the simple doctrine of the Scripture, what the Lord would haue vs know concerning his Angels.

5 It is cõmonly read in the Scripture, that the Angels are heauenly Spirites, whose ministration & seruice God vseth for putting in execution of those thinges that he hath decreed. For which reason that name is geuen them, because God vseth them as messangers, to shewe him selfe vnto men. And vpõ like reason are deriued the other names that they are called by. They are named armies, because they do like a garde enuirõ their prince, and do adorne and set forth the honourable shew of his maiestie, and like souldiours they are alway attending vpon the ensigne of their capitaine, and are euer so prepared and in readynesse to do his commaundementes, that so sone as he doth but becken to them, they prepare thẽ selues to worke, or rather be at their worke alredy. Such an image of the throne of God to set out his roialtie, the other prophetes do describe, but principally Daniel where he Dan. 7. 10. saith, that when God sate him down in his throne of iudgement, there stode by a thousande thousande, and ten thousande companies of ten thousandes of Angels. And because God doth by them maruailously shew forth and declare the might and strength of his hand, therfore they are named strengths, bicause he exerciseth & vseth his authorite in the worlde by them, therfore they are sometime called Principalities, sometime powers, sometime Dominions. Finally because in them Coloss. 1. 16. Ephe. 1. 21. as it were sitteth the glory of God, for this cause also they are called Thrones: though of this last name I will not certainly say, because an other exposition doth either as well or better agree with it. But (speaking nothing of that name) the Holy ghost often vseth those other former names to auaunce the dignitie of the ministerie of Angels. For it were not reason that those instrumentes should be let passe with honor, by whom God doth specially shew the presence of his maie

7 But whether to euery of the faithfull be a ſeuerall Angell aſſigned for their defence, I dare not certainely affirme. Surely when Daniell bringeth in the Angel of the Perſians, and the Angel of the Grecians, he ſheweth that he mente, that there are to kingdomes and prouinces certaine Angels appointed as gouernours. And when Chriſt ſaith that the Angels of children do alway beholde the face of the Father, he ſeemeth to meane, that there are certaine Angels to whom the preſeruation of them is geuen in charge. But I can not tell whether we ought thereby to gather, that euery one hath his Angell ſet ouer him. But this is to beholden for certaintie, that not one Angell only hath care of euery one of vs, but that they all by one conſent do watche for our ſafetie. For it is ſpoken of all the Angels togither, that they more reioyce of one ſinner cõuerted to repẽtance, than of nyntie and nine iuſt that haue ſtande ſtill in their righteouſneſſe. And it is ſaid of mo Angels than one, that they conueyed the ſoule of Lazarus into the boſome of Abrahã. And not without cauſe did Elizeus ſhewe to his ſeruant ſo many fiery chariots that were peculiarly appointed for him. But one place there is that ſeemeth more plaine than the reſt to proue this point. For whẽ Peter being brought out of priſon knocked at the doores of the houſe, where the brethren were aſſembled, when they coulde not imagine that it was he, they ſaid it was his Angel. It ſhould ſeeme that this came in their minde by the commõ opinion, that to euery of the faithfull are aſſigned their Angels for gouernours. Albeit yet here it may be anſwered that it may wel be, notwithſtanding any thing that there appeareth, that we may thinke it was any one Angell, to whom God had geuen charge of Peter for that time, and yet not to be his cõtinuall keeper: as the common people do imagine that there are appointed to euery one two Angels, as it were diuers ghoſtes, a good Angell and a badde. But it is not worth trauaile, curiouſly to ſearch for that which doth not much importe vs to know. For if this do not content a man, that all degrees of the armie of heauen do watch for his ſafetie, I do not ſee what he can be the better, if he vnderſtand that there is one Angell peculiarly appointed to kepe him. And they which reſtraine vnto one Angell the care that God hath to euery one of vs, do great wrõg to them ſelues, and to all the membres of the Church: as if that power to ſuccour vs had bin vainely promiſed vs, wherwith being enuironed and defended, we ſhould fight the more boldly. by Angels is meant nothing els, but either the motiōs that God this error crie out ſo many teſtimonies of Scripture, that it is me that ſo groſſe ignorance could be ſuffred in that people. For to say, that the law was geuen by the hande of Angels, and Christ saith, that the elect after the resurrection shall be like vnto Angels: that the day of iudgement is not knowen to the very Angels: that he shall thē come with his holy Angels: how soeuer they be writhed, yet must they so be vnderstanded. Likewise when Paule chargeth Timothe before Christ and his chosen Angels, to keepe his commaundementes, he meaneth not qualities or inspirations without substance but very spirites. And otherwise it standeth not togither that is written in the Epistle to the Hebrues, that Christ is become more excellent than Angels, that the world is not made subiect to them: that Christ toke vpon him not their nature, but the nature of man. If we meane not the blessed spirites, to whom may these comparisons agree? And the author of that Epistle expoundeth him selfe where he placeth in the kingdome of heauen the soules of the faithfull and the holy Angels together. Also the same that we haue already alleged, that the Angels of children do alway behold the face of God, that they do reioyce at our safetie, that they maruell at the manifolde grace of God in the Church, that they are subiect to Christ, the hedde. To the same purpose serueth this, that they so oft appered to the holy Fathers in the forme of mē, that they talked with them, that they were lodged with them. And Christ him selfe for the principall preminence that he hath in the person of the Mediator is called an Angel. This I thought good to touch by the way, to furnish the simple with defence against those foolish and reasonlesse opinions, that many ages ago raised by Sathan do now and then spring vp againe.

53. of a nature that hath ſubſtance. For where as Stephen and Pa

Gal. 3. 19. Mat. 22. 30. and 24. 37. 31. and 25. Luc. 9. 26. 1. Tim. 5 21. Heb. 1. 4. & 2. 16. Heb. 12. 22. Mal. 3. 1.

10 Nowe it resteth, that we seeke to mete with that superstition which is commonly wont to crepe in, where it is said: that Angels are the ministers and deliuerers of all good thinges vnto vs. For byandby mans reason falleth to this point, to thinke that therfore all honour ought to be geuen them. So cometh it to passe that those thinges which belong only to God and Christ, are conueied away to Angels. By this meane we see that in certaine ages paste, the glory of Christ hath bin many waies obscured, whē Angels without warrant of Gods worde were loden with immeasurable titles of honor. And of all the vices that we speake against, there is almost none more auncient than this. For it appereth, that Paule himselfe had much to do with some which so auaunced Angels, that they in maner would haue brought Christ vnder subiection. And therfore he doth so carefully presse this point in his Epistle to the Colossians, that Christ is not only to be preferred before all Angels, but that he is also the author of all the good thinges that they haue: to the ende we should not forsake him and turne vnto them, which can not sufficiently helpe them selues but are faine to draw out of the same fountaine that we do. Surely so asmuch as there shineth in them a certaine brightnesse of the maiestie of God, there is nothing whervnto we are more easily enclined, than with a certaine admiration to fall downe in worshipping of them, and to geue vnto them all thinges that are due only to God. Which thing Iohn in the Reuelation confesseth to haue chaunced to himselfe, but he addeth withall, that he receiued this aunswere. See thou do it not. For I am thy fellow seruant, Worship God.

11 But this daunger we shall well beware of, if we do consider why God vseth rather by them than by himselfe without their seruice to declare his power, to prouide for the safetie of the faithfull, and to communicate the giftes of his liberalitie amõg them. Surely he doth not this of necessitie, as though he coulde not be without them: for so often as pleaseth him, he letteth them alone, & bringeth his worke to passe with an onely becke: so farre is it of, that they be any aide to him, to ease him of the hardnesse therof. This therfore maketh for the comforte of our weakenesse, so that we want nothing that may auaile our mindes, either in raising them vp in good hope, or confirming them in assurance. This one thing ought to be enough and enough againe vnto vs, that the Lord affirmeth that he is our protectour. But while we our selues besieged with so many daungers, so many hurtefull things, so many kindes of enemies: it may be (such is our weakenesse & frailtie) that we be sometime filled with trembling feare, or fall for despaire, vnlesse the Lord after the proporcion of our capacitie do make vs to conceiue his presence. By this meane he not only promiseth that he will haue care of vs, but also that he hath an innumerable garde whom he hath giuen in charge to trauaile for our safetie, and that so long as we be compassed with the garrison & supporte of them, what soeuer daunger betideth, we be without all reach of hurte. I grant we do amisse that after this simple promise of the protection of God alone, we stil looke about from whẽce other helpe may come vnto vs. But for as much as it pleaseth the Lord of his infinite clemencie and gentilnesse to helpe this our fault, there is no reason why we should neglect his so great benefite. An example therof we haue in the seruant of Elizeus, which when he saw the hill besieged with the armie of the Syrians, and that there was no way open to escape, was stricken downe with feare, as if his maister and he were then vtterly destroyed.

2. Kings 6. 17. Then Elizeus praied God to open his seruantes eies, and byandby he sawe the hill furnished with horses and fiery chariots, that is with a multitude of Angels to kepe him and the prophet safe. Encourage with this vision he gathered vp his harte againe, and was able with a dredeleſſe minde to looke down vpō his enemies, with ſight of whom he was before in a maner driuen out of his witte.

12 Wherfore whatſoeuer is ſaid of the miniſterie of Angels, let vs applie it to this ende, that ouercomming all diſtruſt, our hope may be the more ſtrongely ſtabliſhed in God. For theſe ſuccours are herfore prouided vs of God, that we ſhould not be made afrayde with multitude of enemies, as though they coulde preuaile againſt his helpe, but ſhould flie vnto that ſaying of Elizeus, that there be mo on our ſide than be againſt vs. How much then is it againſt order of reaſon, that we ſhoulde be led away from God by Angels which are ordeined for this purpoſe, to teſtifie that his helpe is more preſent among vs? But they do leade vs away in dede, if they do not ſtreight leade vs as it were by the hande to him, that we may haue eye vnto, call vpon, & publiſh him for our onely helper: if we conſider not them to be as his handes that moue themſelues to no worke but by his direction: if they do not holde vs faſt in the one Mediatour Chriſt, ſo that we may hang wholly of him, leane all vpon him, be caried to him, and reſte in him. For that which is deſcribed in the viſion of Iacob ought to ſticke and be faſtened in our mindes, how Angels deſcende down to the earth vnto men, and from men do go vp to heauen by a ladder, whervpon ſtādeth the Lord of hoſtes. Wherby is meant, that by the only interceſſion of Chriſt it cometh to paſſe, that the miniſteries of the Angels do come vnto vs, as he him ſelfe affirmeth, ſaying: Hereafter ye ſhall ſee the heauens open and the Angelles deſcending to the Sonne of man Ioh. 1.li. Therfore the ſeruant of Abraham being cōmitted to the cuſtody of the Angell, doth not therfore call vpon the Angell to helpe him, but holpen with that commendation, he praieth to the Lord, and beſeecheth him to ſhew his mercy to Abraham. For as God doth not therfore make them miniſters of his power and goodneſſe, to the intēt to parte his glory with them: ſo doth he not therfore promiſe vs his helpe in their miniſtration, that we ſhoulde diuide our confidence betwene him and them. Let vs therfore forſake that Platonicall philoſophie, to ſeeke the way to God by Angels, and to honour them for this purpoſe that they may make God more gentill vnto vs: which ſuperſtitious and curious men haue from the beginning gone about, and to this day do continue to bring into our religion.

Platoin epynonide & Crahlo.

13 As for ſuch thinges as the Scripture teacheth concerning deuilles, they tend in a maner all to this ende, that we may be carefull to beware aforehande of their awaites and preparations, and furniſh our ſelues with ſuch weapons as are ſtronge and ſure enough to driue away euen the ſtrongeſt enemies. For where as Sathan is called the God and prince of the worlde, where as he is named the ſtrong armed man, the Spirite that hath power of the ayre, and a roaring lyon, theſe deſcriptions ſerue to no other purpoſe: but to make vs more ware and watcheful, and readier to entre in battaile with him. Which is alſo ſometime ſet out in expreſſe wordes. For Peter after he had ſaid, that the diuell goeth about like a roaring lyon, ſeking whom he may deuoure, byandby addeth this exhortation, that we ſtrongly reſiſte him by Faith. And Paule after he had geuen warning that we wraſtle not with fleſh and bloud, but with the princes of the ayre, powers of darkeneſſe, and ſpirituall wickedneſſes, byandby biddeth vs put on ſuch armour as may ſerue for ſo great & daungerous a battaile. Wherfore lette vs alſo applie all to this ende, that being warned how there doth continually approche vpon vs an enemie, yea an ennemy that is in courage moſt hardy, in ſtrength moſt mighty, in policies moſt ſuttle, in diligence and celeritie vnweriable, with all ſorte of engins plentcouſly furniſhed, in ſkill of warre moſt ready, we ſuffer not our ſelues by ſlouth and cowardiſe to be ſurpriſed, but on the other ſide with bolde and hardy mindes ſet our foote to reſiſt him: (becauſe this warre is onely ended by Death) encourage our ſelues to continue. But ſpecially knowing our owne weakneſſe and vnſufficiencie, let vs call vpon the helpe of God and enterpriſe nothing but vpon truſt of him, for as much as it is in him onely to geue vs policie, ſtrength, courage and armour.

14 And that we ſhould be the more ſtirred vp and enforced ſo to do, the Scripture warneth vs, that there are not one or two or a few enemies, but great armies that make warre with vs. For it is ſaid, that Mary Magdalene was deliuered from ſeuen deuils, wherwith ſhe was poſſeſſed. And Chriſt ſaith, that it is the ordinary cuſtome, that if an vncleane deuill be ones caſt out, a man make the place open againe, he bringeth ſeuen ſpirites worſe than him ſelfe, and returneth into his poſſeſſion, finding it empty. Yea it is ſaid that a whole legion beſieged one man. Hereby therefore we are taught, that we muſt fight with an infinite multitude of enemies, leaſt deſpiſing the feweneſſe of them we ſhould be more ſlacke to enter in battaile, or thinking that we had ſome reſpite in the meane time graũted, we ſhould geue our ſelues to idelneſſe. Where as many times Sathan or the diuell is named in the ſingular numbre, thereby is meant that power of wickedneſſe which ſtandeth againſt the kingdome of Iuſtice. For as the Church and the fellowſhip of ſaintes haue Chriſt to their head, ſo the faction of the wicked is painted out vnto vs with their prince, that hath the chief authoritie among them. After which maner this is ſpoken. Go ye curſed into eternall fire that is prepared for the deuill and his angels. Mat.25. 41.

15 Here alſo this ought to ſtirre vs vp to a perpetuall warre with the deuill, for that he is euery where called the enemy of God and of vs. For if we haue regarde of Goddes glory, as it is mete we ſhould, then ought we with all our force to bende our ſelues againſt him, that goeth about to extinguiſh it. If we be affectioned to maintaine the kingdome of Chriſt as we ought, then muſt we nedes haue an vnappeaſable warre with him that conſpireth the ruine therof. Againe, if any care of our owne ſafetie do touch vs, then ought we to haue neither peace nor truce with him that continually lieth in waite for the deſtruction of it. Such a one is he deſcribed in the 3. chap. of Geneſis where he leadeth man away from the obedience that he did owe to God, that he both robbeth God of his due honor, and throweth mā him ſelfe headlong into deſtruction. Such a one alſo is he ſet forth in the Euangeliſtes, where he is called an enemy, and is ſaid to ſcatter tares, to corrupt the ſede of eternall life. In a ſumme, that which Chriſt teſtifieth of him, that from the beginning he was a murtherer, and a lier, we finde by experience in all his doinges. For he aſſaileth the trueth of God with lies, obſcureth the light with darkeneſſe, entangleth the mindes of men with errors, raiſeth vp hatredes, kindleth contentions and ſtrifes, doth all thinges to this ende to ouerthrow the kingdome of God, and drowne men with himſelfe in eternall deſtruction. Wherby appereth, that he is of nature froward, ſpitefull and malicious. For nedes muſt there be great frowardneſſe in that witte, that is made to aſſaile the glory of God and ſaluation of men. And that doth Iohn ſpeake of in his epiſtle, when he writeth, that he ſinneth from the beginning. For he meaneth that he is the author, captaine and principall workeman of all malice and wickedneſſe. Mat.13. 28. Iohn 8. 44.

16 But foraſmuch as the deuill was created by God, let vs remembre that this malice which we aſſigne in his nature, is not by creation but by deprauatiō. For what ſo euer damnable thing he hath, he hath gotten to himſelfe by his owne reuolting and fall. Which the Scripture therefore geueth vs warning of, leaſt thinking that he came out ſuch a one from God, we ſhould aſcribe that to God himſelfe which is fartheſt frō him: For this reaſon doth Chriſt ſay that Sathā ſpeaketh of his owne when he ſpeaketh lies, and addeth a cauſe why, for that he ſtode not ſtill in the trueth. Now when he ſaith that he ſtode not ſtill in the trueth, he ſheweth that ones he had bin in the trueth. And when he maketh him the Father of lying, he taketh this from him, that he can not lay that fault to God wherof he himſelfe is cauſe to Iohn 8. 44.

himselfe. Although these thinges be but shortly and not very plain spoken, yet this is enough for this purpose to deliuer the maiestie God from all sclaunder. And what maketh it matter to vs, to kn more or to any other purpose concerning deuils? Many perhaps grudge, that the Scripture doth not orderly and distinctly in many p ces set forth that fall and the cause, manner, time, and fashion there But because these thinges do nothing perteine to vs, it was better not to be suppressed wholly, yet to be but lightly touched, and t partly, because it was not beseming for the Holy ghost to fede cur sitie with vaine histories without any frute: and we se that it was t Lordes purpose to put nothing in his holy oracles but that which shoulde learne to edification. Therfore, lest we our selues should t long vpon thinges superfluous, let vs be content shortly to know th much cõcerning the nature of deuils, that at the first creatiõ they we the Angels of God: but by swaruing out of kinde they both destro themselues and are become instrumentes of destructiõ to other. Th 2. Pet. 2 4. much, because it was profitable to be knowen, is plainly taught in H Iud. 1. 6. ter and Iude. God spared not (say they) his Angels which had sinn and not kept their beginning, but had forsaken their dwelling pla 1. Tim. 5 20. And Paule naming the elect Angels doth without dout secretly implication set the reprobate Angels in comparison against them.

17 As for the discorde and strife that we say is betwene God Satan, we must so take it that still we holde this for certaine, that Iob 1. 6 and 2. 1. can do nothing but by the will and sufferaunce of God. For we rea in the historie of Iob, that he presented himselfe before God to ceiue his commaundemẽtes, and durst not go forwarde to do any e 1. Kings 22. 20. terprise till he had obtained licence. So when Achab was to be dec ued, he toke vpon him that he woulde be the Spirite of lying in 1. Sa. 16 14. and 18. 10. mouth of all the Prophetes, and so being sente of God he perform it. For this reason is he called the euill Spirite of the Lord that tor Psa. 34. ted Saul, because by him as with a scourge the sinnes of the wick king were punished. And in an other place it is written, that the pla were laied vpon the Egyptians by the euil angels. According to th 2. The. 2 9. particular examples Paule doeth generally testifie, that the blinding the wicked is the worke of God, wheras before he had called it working of Satan It is euident therfore that Satan is vnder the po of God, and so gouerned by his authoritie that he is compelled to him seruice. Now whẽ we say that Satã resisteth God, that the wor of Satan disagree with the workes of God, we do therwithall affir that this disagrement and strife hangeth vpon the sufferaunce of G I speake not now of his will, nor of his endeuour, but of the ef onely. For sith the deuill is wicked of nature, he is not enclined to obey the will of God, but is wholly carryed to stubbornnesse and rebellion. This therfore he hath of himselfe and of his owne wickednesse, that of desire and purpose he withstandeth God. And by this wickednes he is stirred vp to the enterprising of those things that he knoweth to be most against God. But because God holdeth him fast tied and restrained with the bridle of his power, he executeth onely those thinges that are graunted him from God. And so doth he obey his creator whether he will or no, because he is constrained to applie his seruice whether soeuer God compelleth him.

18 Now because God boweth the vncleane Spirites hether and thether as pleaseth him, he so tempereth this gouernement, that they exercise the faithfull with battail, they set vpon them out of ambushes, they assaile them with inuasions, they presse them with fighting, and oftētimes werry them, trouble them, make them afraied, & sometime wounde them, but neuer ouercome nor oppresse them. But the wicked they subdue and drawe awaye, they reigne vpon their soules and bodies, and abuse them as bondslaues to all mischeuous doinges. As for the faithfull, because they are vnquieted of such enemies, therfore they heare these exhortations. Do not geue place to the deuill. Ephe. 4. 27. The deuill your enemie goeth about as a roring lion seking whom he may deuoure, whom resist ye being strong in faith and such like. 1. Pet. 5. 8. Paule confesseth that he himselfe was not free from this kinde of strife whē he saieth, that for a remedy to tame pride, the Angel of Satan was geuen to him, by whom he might be humbled. 2. Cor 12. 7. This exercise therfore is common to all the children of God. But because that same promise of the breaking of Satans head perteineth generally to Christ and to all his members, therfore I say that the faithfull can neuer be ouercome nor oppressed by him. Gen. 3. 15. They are many times striken down, but they are neuer so astonnied withall but that they recouer themselues. They fall downe many times with violence of strokes, but they are after raised vp againe: they are woūded but not deadly. Finally they so labor in all the course of their life that in the ende they obteine the victorie: but I speake not this of euery doing of theirs. For we knowe that by the iuste vēgeaunce of God Dauid was for a time geuen ouer to Satan, by his motion to number the people: and not without cause Paule saith there is hope of pardon lest if any haue bin entangled with the snares of the deuill. 2. Sam. 24. 1. Rom. 16 20. Therefore in an other place the same Paule saieth, that the promise aboue alleged is begonne in this life, wherin we must wrastle, and is performed after our wrastling ended: when he saieth the God of peace shall shortly beate downe Satan vneternall iudgement, that fier is prepared for them, that they are now already tormented and vexed by the glory of Christ: if there were no deuils at all? But because this matter needeth no disputation among them that beleue the word of the Lord, and little good is done with testimonies of Scripture among those vayne studentes of speculation, whom nothing pleaseth but that which is new: I suppose I haue performed that which I purposed, that is that the godly mindes should be furnished against such fond errours, wherewith vnquiet mē do trouble both themselues and other that be more simple. But it was good to touch this, least any entangled with that errour, while they thinke they haue none to stand against them, should waxe more slow and vnprouided to resist.

20 In the meane time lette it not be weryſome vnto vs, in this so beautifull a stage to take a godly delight of the manifest and ordinary workes of God. For, as I haue elsewhere already sayd, though this be not the chiefe, yet is it in order the first doctrine of Faith, to remember that what way soeuer we turne our eyes, all that we see are the workes of God, and with godly consideration to wey for what end God did make them. Therefore that we may conceiue by Faith so much as behoueth vs to know of God, it is good first of all to learne the history of the creation of the world, how it is shortly rehearsed by Moses, and afterward more largely sette out by holy men, specially by Basile and Ambrose. Out of it we shall learne that God by the power of his word and Spirite created heauen and earth of let it ſuffice to haue ones agayne touched theſe few thinges by way. For it is better, as I haue already warned the readers, to fet fuller vnderſtanding of this matter out of Moſes and other, that h faithfully and diligently conueyed the hiſtory of the world by wri to perpetuall memory.

21 It is to no purpoſe, to make much a do in diſputing, to w end this conſideration of the workes of God ought to tende, o what marke it ought to be applied: foraſmuch as in other places ready a great parte of this queſtion is declared, and ſo much as longeth to our preſent purpoſe may in few wordes be ended. Tr
if we were minded to ſet out as it is worthy, how ineſtimable wiſd power, iuſtice and goodneſſe of God appeareth in the framing of world, no eloquence, no garniſhmēt of ſpeech, could ſuffice the la neſſe of ſo great a matter. And no dout it is Gods pleaſure tha ſhould be continually occupied in ſo holy a meditatiō, that while behold in his creatures as in looking glaſſes the infinite richeſſ his wiſdom, iuſtice bountie and power, we ſhould not runne ouer as it were with a flying eye, or with a vayne wandring looke as I ſo call it, but that we ſhould with conſideration reſt long vpon th caſt them vp and downe earneſtly and faithfully in our mindes, oft repeate them with remembrance. But becauſe we are now bu in that kinde that pertayneth to order of teaching, it is mete tha omit thoſe thinges that require long declamations. Therefore, to ſtrort, let the readers know, that then they haue conceiued by Faith, what this meaneth, that God is the creator of heauen & earth, if they firſt follow this vniuerſall rule, that they paſſe not ouer with not conſidering or forgetfulneſſe of thoſe vertues, that God preſenteth to be ſeene in his creatures, then, that they ſo learne to apply themſelues that they may therwith be throughly moued in their hartes. The firſt of thoſe we do when we conſider how excellent a workmans worke it was, to place and aptly ſet in ſo well diſpoſed order the multitude of the ſtarres that is in heauen, that nothing can be deuiſed more beautifull to behold: to ſette and faſten ſome of them in their ſtandings ſo that they can not moue, and to otherſome to graunt a free courſe, but ſo that in mouing they wander not beyond their appointed ſpace, ſo to temper the motion of them all that it may diuide in meaſure the dayes and nightes, monethes, yeares and ſeaſons of the yeare, and to bring this inequality of dayes which we dayly ſee to ſuch a tempered order that it hath no confuſion. Likewiſe, when we marke his power in ſuſteyning ſo great a body, in gouerning the ſo ſwift whirling about of the engine of heauen, and ſuch like. For theſe few examples do ſufficiently declare what it is to record the power of God in the creation of the world. For elſe if I ſhould trauaile as I ſayed to expreſſe it all in wordes, I ſhould neuer make an end, foraſmuch as there are ſo many miracles of the power of God, ſo many tokens of his goodneſſe, ſo many examples of his wiſdom, as there be formes of thinges in the world, yea as there be things either great or ſmale.

22 Now remaineth the other part which commeth nerer to Faith, that while we conſider that God hath ordayned all thinges for our garde and ſafety, and therewithall do fele his power and grace in our ſelues, and in ſo great good things that he hath beſtowed vpon vs: we may thereby ſtirre vp our ſelues to the truſt, inuocation, prayſe and loue of him. Now as I haue before ſayd, God himſelfe hath ſhewed in the very order of creation, that for mans ſake he created all thinges. For it is not without cauſe that he diuided the making of the world into ſix dayes, whereas it had bin as eaſie for him in one moment to haue in all pointes accompliſhed his whole worke, as it was by ſuch proceeding from peece to peece to come to the end of it. But then it pleaſed him to ſhew his prouidēce & fatherly carefulneſſe toward vs, that before he made man he prepared all that he foreſaw ſhould be profitable for him, and fitte for his preſeruatiō. How great vnthankefulneſſe now ſhould it be to dout whether this good Father do care for vs, whom we ſee to haue bin carefull for vs ere that we were born? How wicked were it to tremble for diſtruſt leaſt his goodneſſe would at any time leaue vs deſtitute in neceſſity, which we ſee was diſpl

The xv. Chapter.

VVhat a one man vvas created: vvherein there is entreated of the powvers of the ſoule, of the image of God, of free vvill & of the firſt integrity of nature.

NOw muſt we ſpeake of the creation of man, not onely cauſe he is among all the workes of God the moſt noble
moſt excellent example of his iuſtice, wiſdom and goo but alſo becauſe as we haue ſayd in the beginning, we not plainly and perfectly know God, vnleſſe we haue withal a m knowledge of our ſelues. Although ỹ ſame knowledge be of two the one to know what we were created at the firſt beginning, t ther to know what our eſtate began to be after the fall of Adam it were but to ſmall profit for vs to know our creation, vnleſſe we alſo in this lamentable fall know what is the corruption and d mity of our nature:) yet at this time we will be content with de ption of our nature when it was pure. And before we deſcend to miſerable eſtate whereunto man is now in thraldome, it is goo learne what a one he was created at the beginning. For we muſt hede that in preciſely declaring onely the naturall euils of man, ſeme not to impute thẽ to the author of nature. For vngodlines keth her ſelfe to haue ſufficient defenſe in this colour, if it may b her ſelfe that whatſoeuer fault ſhe hath, the ſame did after a cer

manner proceede from God, and ſticketh not if ſhe be accuſed, to quarell with God, and to lay the fault vpon him whereof ſhe is worthely accuſed. And they that would ſeeme to ſpeake ſomwhat more reuerétly of the maieſty of God, yet do willingly ſeeke to excuſe their owne wickedneſſe, by nature, not conſidering that therin though not openly they blame God alſo, to whoſe reproch it ſhould fall if it were proued that there is any fault in nature. Sith then we ſee that our fleſh gaspeth for all the wayes to eſcape, wherby ſhe thinketh the blame of her owne euils may any way be put of from her, we muſt diligently trauaill to mete with this miſchiefe. Therefore we muſt ſo handle the calamity of mankinde that we cut of all excuſe, and deliuer the iuſtice of God from all accuſation. Afterward in place conuenient we ſhall ſee how far men be now from that pureneſſe that was giuẽ to Adam. And firſt we muſt remember, that in this that man was taken out of earth and clay, a bridle was put vpon his pride, for there is no greater abſurdity, than for them to glory in their excellency that do not onely dwell in a cotage of clay, but alſo are themſelues in parte but earth and aſhes. But foraſmuch as God did not onely vouchſaue to giue life vnto an earthen veſſell, but alſo it was his pleaſure that it ſhould be the dwelling houſe of an immortall Spirite, Adam might iuſtly glory in ſo great liberality of his maker.

2 Now it is not to be douted that man conſiſteth of ſoule and body, and by the name of ſoule I meane an immortall eſſence, and yet created, which is the nobler parte of him. Sometime it is called the Spirite. Albeit when theſe two names Soule and Spirite are ioyned together, they differ one from the other in ſignificatiõ, yet when Spirite is ſette by it ſelfe it meaneth as much as Soule. As, when Salomon ſpeaking of death, ſayth that then the Spirite returneth to him that gaue it. And Chriſt commending his Spirite to his Father, and Stephen his Spirite to Chriſt do both meane none other thing but that when the Soule is deliuered from the priſon of the fleſh, God is the perpetuall keper of it. As for them that imagine that the Soule is therfore called a Spirite becauſe it is a breath or a power by God inſpired or poured into bodies which y hath no eſſence: both ỹ thing of ſelfe & all the Scripture ſheweth th. hey do to much groſly erre. True it is that while men are faſtened to the earth more than they ought to be, they waxe dull, yea becauſe they are eſtranged from the Father of lightes they are blinded with darkeneſſe, ſo that they do not thinke vpon this, that they ſhall remaine aliue after death. And yet is not that light ſo quenched in darkeneſſe, but that they be touched with ſome feling of immortality. Surely the conſcience which diſcer-

ning betwene good and euill answereth the iudgement of God, it vndouted signe of an immortall Spirite. For how could a motiō w out essence attaine to come to the iudgement seate of God, & thr it selfe into feare by finding her owne giltinesse? For the body is moued with feare of a Spirituall peine, but that falleth onely vpp the soule. Wherby it followeth that the soule hath an essence. Mor uer the very knowledge of God doth proue that the soules which scende vp aboue the world are immortall: for a vanishing liueli were not able to attayne to the fountayne of life. Finally forasmuch so many excellent gifts wherewith mans minde is endued, do cry that there is some diuine thing engrauen it, there are euen so ma testimonies of an immortall essence. For that sense which is in br beastes, goeth not out of the body, or at least extendeth no furth than to things presently set before it. But the nimblenesse of the mi of man which veweth the heauen and earth and secretes of nature comprehending all ages in vnderstanding and memory, digesteth uery thing in order and gathereth thinges to come by thinges p doth plainly shew that there lyeth hidden in man a certaine thing uerall from the body. We conceiue by vnderstanding the inuisi God and Angells, which the body can not do. We know thinges t be right, iust, & honest, which are hidden frō the bodily senses. Th fore it must needes be that the Spirite is the seate of this vnderst ding. Yea and our sleepe it selfe, which astonieth a man and seem to take life away from him, is a plaine witnesse of immortality, for much as it doth not only minister vnto vs, thoughtes of those thing that neuer were done, but also foreknowinges of thinges for time come. I touch these things shortly which euen prophane wryters excellently sette out with more gorgeous garnishment of wordes with the godly readers a simple putting in minde of them shall be ficient. Now if the soule were not a certaine thing by it selfe seue from the body, the Scripture would not teach that we dwell in hou of clay, that by death we remoue out of the Tabernacle of the fl that we do put of that which is corruptible, that finally at the last we may receiue reward euery man as he hath behaued himselfe in body. For these places and other that we do ech where cōmonly lig vpon, do not only manifestly distinguish the soule from the body, also in giuing to the soule the name of man do shew that it is the p cipall parte. Now whereas Paule doth exhort the faithfull to cle

haue ſpoken fondly if there were no ſoules about whom he might execute that office. Neither would that conueniently ſtand together which he ſayth of the eternal ſaluation of ſoules, and where he biddeth to clenſe our ſoules, and where he ſayth that euil deſires do fight againſt the ſoule, and where the author of the Epiſtle to the Hebrues ſayeth, that the Paſtors do watch that they may yeld accompt for our ſoules, vnleſſe it were true that ſoules had a proper eſſence. To the ſame purpoſe ſerueth it that Paul calleth God for witneſſe to his own ſoule, becauſe it could not be called in iudgement before God vnleſſe it were ſubiect to puniſhment. And this is alſo more plainely expreſſed in the wordes of Chriſt, when he biddeth vs to feare him which after that he hath killed the body, can throw the ſoule into hell fier. Now where the author of the Epiſtle to the Hebrues doth diſtinguiſh the Fathers of our fleſh frō God, which is the only Father of Spirits, he would not otherwiſe more plainely affirme the eſſence of ſoulles. Moreouer, if the ſoules remayned not aliue being deliuered from the priſōs of their bodies, Chriſt ſhould very fondly haue brought in the ſoule of Lazarus ioying in the boſome of Abraham, and agayne the ſoule of the richman ſubiect to horrible tormentes. The ſame thing doth Paul confirme when he teacheth that we wander abroade from God, ſo long as we dwell in the fleſh, and that we enioy his preſence being out of the fleſh. But, becauſe I will not be long in a matter that is not obſcure, I will adde only this out of Luke, that it is reckened amōg the errours of the Sadduces that they did not beleue that there were any Spirites and Angels.

3 Alſo a ſtrong proufe hereof may be gathered of this where it is ſayd, that man is create like to the image of God. For although the glory of God do appeare in the outwarde ſhape of man, yet is it no dout that the propre ſeate of the image of God is in the ſoule. I do not deny that as concerning our outward ſhape, in aſmuch as the ſame doth diſtinguiſh and ſeuere vs from brute beaſtes, we do alſo therein more nerely approch to God than they: neither will I much ſtād againſt thē which thinke that this is to be accōpted of the image of God, that where al other liuing creatures do grouellingwiſe behold the ground, to man is giuen an vpright face, and he is commaunded to looke vppon the heauen, and to aduaunce his countenance towarde the ſtarres: ſo that this remayne certaine, that ỹ image of God which is ſeene appeareth in theſe outward ſignes, is ſpirituall. For Oſiander (whom his writings declare to haue bin in fickle imaginations fondly witty) referring the image of God without difference as well to the body as to the ſoule, mingleth heauen & earth together. For he ſayth, that the Father, the Sonne, and the Holy goſt did ſettle their im man, becauſe though Adam hadde ſtand without falling, yet Chriſt haue become man. And ſo by their opinion the body th appoynted for Chriſt, was but an example or figure of that ſhape which then was formed. But where ſhall he finde that C the image of the Spirite? I graunt in deede that in the Perſon Mediatour ſhineth the glory of the whole Godheade. But ho the eternall worde be called the image of the Spirite whom he before in order? Finally it ouerthroweth the diſtinction betwe Sonne and the Holy ghoſt, if he do here call him his image. M uer I would fayne learne of him how Chriſt doth reſemble th ghoſt in the fleſh that he tooke vppon him, and by what marke features he doth expreſſe the likeneſſe of him. And where as th Gene. 1 ing: Let vs make man after our image, doth alſo belong to the P

16. of the Sonne, it followeth, that he muſt be the image of him which is againſt all reaſon. Beſide that, if Oſianders inuention b leued, man was faſhioned onely after the figure and paterne of in that he was man, and ſo that forme out of which Adam was was Chriſt, in that that he was to be clothed with fleſh, where Scripture in a farre other meaning teacheth, that he was create image of God. But their ſuttle inuention is more colourable whi thus expound it, that Adam was create in the image of God, be he was faſhioned like vnto Chriſt, which is the onely image of
But that expoſition alſo is not ſound. Alſo ſome interpreters m great diſputation about Image and Likeneſſe, while they ſeeke ference betwene thoſe two wordes, where is no difference at all ing that this word Likeneſſe is added to expound the other. Fir know that among the Hebrues ſuch repetitions are common, w in they expreſſe one thing twiſe: and in the thing it ſelfe there dout, but that man is therefore called the image of God, becauſe like to God. Wherby appeareth that they are to be laughed at, w do ſo ſuttelly argue about the wordes, whether they appoint Ze that is to ſay, Image in the ſubſtaunce of the ſoule, or Demuth, t to ſay, Likeneſſe in the qualities, or what other thing ſoeuer it be they teach. For where as God determined to create man after his image, this being ſomewhat darkely ſpoken he doth as by way of plicatiõ repete it in this ſaying, After his likeneſſe, as if he would ſayd, that he would make man, in whom he would repreſent him as in an image, becauſe of the markes of likeneſſe grauen in him.
therfore Moſes a little after reciting the ſame thing, doth repeate Image of God twiſe, leauing out the name of Likeneſſe. And trifling obiection that Oſeander maketh, that not a parte of man, or the ſoule only with the giftes therof, is called the Image of God, but the whole Adam which had his name giuen him of the earth, from whence he was taken. Trifling, I ſay, will all readers that haue theyr ſound wit iudge this obiection. For where whole man is called mortall, yet is not ỹ ſoule therby made ſubiect to mortality. Againe where he is called a liuing creature endued with reaſõ, it is not therby meant that the body hath reaſon and vnderſtanding. Although therfore the ſoule is not the whole man, yet is it not inconuenient, that man in reſpect of the ſoule be called the image of God, albeit I hold ſtill that principle which I haue before ſtabliſhed, that the Image of God extendeth to the whole excellẽce, wherby the nature of man hath preeminence among all kindes of liuing creatures. Therefore in that word is noted the integrity that man had when he was endued with right vnderſtanding, when he had his affection framed according to reaſon, and all his ſenſes gouerned in right order, and when in excellent gifts he did truely reſemble the excellence of his Creator. And though the principall ſeate of the image of God were in the minde & hart, or in the ſoule and the powers therof, yet was there no parte of man, not ſo much as the body, wherin did not ſome ſparkes thereof appeare. Certaine it is, that alſo in all the partes of the world, there do ſhine ſome reſemblances of the glory of God: wherby we may gather that where it is ſayd, that his Image is in man, there is in ſo ſaying a certain ſecret compariſon, that auaunceth man aboue all other creatures, & doth as it were ſeuere him from the commõ ſorte. Neither is it to be denied, Mat. 22 that the Angels were create after the likeneſſe of God, ſith (as Chriſt 30. himſelfe teſtifieth) our chiefe perfection ſhall be to become like vnto thẽ. But not without cauſe doth Moſes by that peculiar title ſet forth the grace of God toward vs, ſpecially where he compareth only viſible creatures with man.

4 But yet it ſeemeth that there is not giuen a full definition of the Image of God, vnleſſe it plainlier appeare in what qualities mã excelleth: & wherby he ought to be compted a glaſſe, reſembling the glory of God. But that can be by no other thing better knowen, than by the repayring of mans corrupted nature. Firſt it is doutleſſe, that when Adam fell from his eſtate, he was by that departure eſtrãged from God. Wherefore although we graunt that the Image of God was not altogether defaced and blotted out in him, yet was it ſo corrupted, that all that remayneth, is but vggly deformity. Therefore the beginning of recouery of ſafety for vs, is in that reſtoring which we obtayne by Chriſt, who is alſo for the ſame cauſe called the ſeconde Adam, be-

1.Cor. 15.45. cause he restored vs vnto true and perfect integrity. For altho where Paule doth in comparison sette the quickening Spirite Christ giueth to the faythfull, against the liuing soule wherein A was created, he setteth foorth the more aboundant measure of g in the regeneration: yet doth he not take away this other princ point, that this is the end of our regeneration, that Christ should Col.3. 10. Eph.4. 24. fashion vs to the image of God. Therefore in an other place he te cheth, that the newe man is renued according to the image of that created him. Wherewith agreeth this saying: put on the new which is create according to God. Now it is to be seene what P doth principally comprehend vnder this renuing. First he speaketh knowledge and after of pure righteousnesse and holynesse. Whe by we gather that the image of God was first of all to be seene in light of the minde, in the vprightnesse of hart, and soundnesse of the partes. For although I graunt that this is a figuratiue phrase speech to set the parte for the whole: yet can not this principle be uerthrowen, that that thing which is the chiefe in the renuing of image of God, was also the principall in the creation of him. And 2.Cor.3 18. the same purpose maketh it that in an other place he teacheth, we beholding the glory of God with open face, are transformed the same image. Now do we se how Christ is the most perfect ima of God, according to the which we being fashioned are so restor that in true godlinesse, righteousnesse, pureneſse and vnderstandi we beare the image of God. Which principle being established, anders imagination of the shape of our body doth easily vanish a of it selfe. Where as the man alone is in Paule called the Image 1.Cor. 11.7. glory of God, and the woman is excluded from that degree of hon it appeareth by the rest of the text, that the same is to be applied o to ciuile order of policy. But that vnder the name of image, whe we speake, is comprehended all that belongeth to the spirituall eternall life, I thinke it be already sufficiently proued. And the sa Ioh.1.4 thing doth Iohn cõfirme in other wordes: saying that the light wh was frõ the beginning in the eternal word of God was ỹ light of For where his purpose was to praise ỹ singular grace of God, whe by man excelleth all other liuing creatures to seuere him frõ the co mon sorte, because he hath attayned no commõ life, but ioyned w the light of vnderstanding, he therewithall sheweth how he was m after the image of God. Therefore sith the image of God is the corrupted excellence of the nature of man, which shined in Ad before his fall, and afterwarde was so corrupted and almost deface that nothing remayneth sins that ruine, but disordered, mangled, a

filthily spotted: yet the same doth in some parte appeare in the elect, insomuch as they are regenerate, and shall obtayne her full brightnes in heauen. But that we may know on what partes it consisteth, it shall be good to entreate of the powers of the soule. For that speculatiue deuise of Augustine is not sounde, where he sayeth that the soule is a glasse of the Trinity, because that there are in it vnderstanding, will, & memory. Neither is their opinion to be approued, which sette the Image of God in the power of dominion giuen vnto him, as if he resembled God onely in this marke, that he is appointed lorde and possessor of all thinges, where as in deede the Image of God is properly to be sought within him, and not without him, and is an inward good gift of the soule.

Lib. de tri. 10. De ciui. dei. 11.

5 But before I go any further, it is needefull that I meete with the doting errour of the Manichees, which Seruetto hath attempted to bring in agayne in this age. Where it is sayd, that God breathed the breath of life into the face of man, they thought that the soule didde conuey into man the substance of God, as if some portion of the immeasurable God were come into man. But it is easie euen shortely to shew how many grosse and foule absurdities this deuilish errour draweth with it. For if the soule be by deriuation parte of the essence of God, it shall follow that ỹ nature of God is subiect, not only to chaũge and passions, but also to ignorance, euill lustes, weakenesse, and all kindes of vices. Nothing is more inconstant than man, because contrary motions do tosse and diuersely draw his soule, oftentimes he is blinde by ignorance, oft he yeldeth as vanquished euen to smale tentations, and we know that the soule it selfe is the sinke and receiuer of all filthinesse, al which things we must ascribe to the nature of God, if we graunt that the soule is of the essence of God, or a secrete inflowing of Godheade. Who would not abhorre this monstrous deuise? Truely in deede doth Paule allege out of Aratus, that we are the offspring of God, but in quality and not in substance, inasmuch as he hath garnished vs with godly giftes. But in the meane time to teare asunder the essence of the Creator, as to say, that euery mã doth possesse a part of it, is to much madnes. Therfore we must certainly hold, that the soules, although the image of God be grauen in them, were no lesse created than the angels were. And creation is not a pouring out of one substance into an other, but a beginning of essence made of nothing. And although the spirite of man came from God, and in departing out of the flesh returneth to God, yet is not forthwith to be sayd, that it was taken out of his substance. And in this poynt also Osiander, while he glorieth in his illusions, hath entangled made of like forme to God, not by inflowing of his substance, b grace and power of his Spirite. For he sayeth, that in beholdin glory of Christ we are transformed into the same Image, as b one substance with God.

should want the principall vse of his vnderstanding, if he should

And ſo the more that euery man ſtudieth to approch vnto God, the more he therby proueth himſelfe to be endued with reaſō. As for thē that would haue diuers ſoules in man, that is, a feling ſoul, & a reaſonable ſoule, although they ſeeme to ſay ſomwhat by reaſon proueable, yet becauſe there is no ſtedfaſt certainety in their reaſons, we muſt reiect thē, vnleſſe we liſted to accombre our ſelues in thinges trifling & vnprofitable. A great diſagrement ſay they, there is betwen the inſtrumental motions and the parte of the ſoule endued with reaſon. As though reaſon it ſelfe did not alſo diſſent from it ſelfe, & ſome deuiſes of it do ſtriue with other ſome, as they were armies of enemies. But foraſmuch as that troubleſomneſſe proceedeth of the corruption of nature, it were amiſſe to gather therby, that there are two ſoules, becauſe the powers of the ſoule do not agree together, in ſuch well framed order as they ought. But as for more ſuttle diſputation of the Powers themſelues, I leaue that to the Philoſophers. A ſimple definition ſhall ſuffiſe vs for edification of godlineſſe. I graunt that the things that they teach are true, and not only pleaſaunt but alſo profitable to be knowen, & well gathered of them, and I forbid not ſuch as are deſirous to learne to ſtudy them. Firſt therefore I admitte that there are fiue Senſes, which Plato better liked to call Inſtrumentes, whereby all obiectes, are powred into Common ſenſe, as into a place of receite: then followeth Phantaſie, which iudgeth thoſe thinges one from other that Common ſenſe hath conceiued, next is Reaſon, to which belongeth the vniuerſall iudgement of thinges: laſt, is the Vnderſtanding minde, which with earneſtly bent and quiete vewing beholdeth all thoſe thinges, that Reaſon is wont to diſcourſe vpon, and conſider. And to the Vnderſtanding minde, Reaſon, and Phanſie, which are the three powers of the ſoule, that reſt in knowledge, there do anſwere three other that do reſt in Appetite, that is to ſay, Will, the partes whereof are to couete thoſe thinges that the Vnderſtanding minde and Reaſon do lay before it: the Power of Anger, which catcheth thoſe thinges that Reaſon and Phanſie do minier vnto it. The power of Deſiring, which taketh holde of thoſe thinges that Phantaſie & Senſe, preſenteth it. Although theſe things be true, or at leaſt likely to be true, yet becauſe I feare that they ſhall more entangle vs with obſcureneſſe than further vs, I thinke it beſt to ouerpaſſe them. If any man liſt otherwiſe to diuide the powers of the ſoule, and to call the one the power of Appetite, which although it be without reaſon it ſelfe, yet doth obey reaſon, if it be by other meane directed, and to call the other the power of vnderſtanding,

7 But we are constrayned somwhat to swarue from this man teaching, because the Philosophers which knew not the corru
of mans nature, which came for punishment of his fall, do wrong confound the two very diuerse states of man. Lette vs therefore thinke of it, that there are in the soule of man two partes, which serue at this time for our present purpose, that is to say, Vnderstā

this ſorte vnder Vnderſtanding we comprehende Senſe, which other do ſo diſtinguiſh, that they ſay Senſe is enclined to pleaſure, for which Vnderſtanding followeth that which is good: and that ſo it commeth to paſſe, that the Appetite of ſenſe is Concupiſcence and Luſt, the affection of vnderſtanding is Will. Againe in ſteede of the name of Appetite, which they better like, I ſet the name of Wil, which is more commonly vſed.

8 God therefore hath furniſhed the ſoule of man with an vnderſtanding minde, wherby he might diſcerne good from euill, and right from wrong, and hauing the light of reaſon going before him, might ſee what is to be followed or forſaken. For which cauſe the Philoſophers haue called this directing parte the Guider. To this he hath adioyned Will, to which belongeth choiſe. With theſe noble giſtes the firſt ſtate of man excelled, ſo that he not onely had enough of reaſon, vnderſtanding, wiſdom, and iudgement, for the gouernement of this earthly life, but alſo to clime vp euen to God and to eternall felicity. Thē to haue Choiſe added vnto it, which migh direct the appetites, and order all the inſtrumental motions, & that ſo the Wil might be altogether agreeable to the gouernement of reaſon. In this Integrity, man had freewill, whereby if he would he might haue attained eternall life. For here it is out of place to moue queſtiō of the ſecrete predeſtinatiō of God: becauſe we are not now about to diſcuſſe what might haue chaunced or not, but what at that time was the nature of man. Adam therefore might haue ſtand if he would, becauſe he fell not but by his owne will. But becauſe his will was pliable to either ſide, and there was not giuen him conſtancy to continue, therfore he ſo eaſely fell. Yet his Choiſe of good & euil was free. And not ẏ only, but alſo in his vnderſtanding minde, and in his will was moſt great vprightneſſe, and all his inſtrumentall partes orderly framed to obediēce, vntill by deſtroying himſelfe he corrupted the good things that were in him. From henſe commeth it that all the Philoſophers were ſo blinded, for that in a ruyne they ſought for an vpright building, and for ſtrong ioyntes in an vnioynted ouerthrowe. This principle they helde, that man could not be a liuing creature, endued with reaſon, vnleſſe there were in him a free choiſe of good and euil: and they conſidered, that otherwiſe all the difference ſhould be taken away betwene vertues and vices, vnleſſe man did order his owne life by his owne aduiſe. Thus farre hadde they ſayd well if there hadde bin no chaunge in man, which chaunge becauſe they knewe not of, it is no meruaile though they confounde heauen and earth together. But as for them which profeſſing themſelues to be the diſciples of Chriſt, do yet ſeeke for free will in man, that hath bin loſt and drowned in ſpirituall deſtruction, they in goinge meane betwene the Philoſophers opinions and heuenly doctrine are playnely deceyued, ſo that they touch neither heauen nor earth. But of theſe thinges we ſhall better ſpeake in place fitte for them: now onely this we haue to haue in minde, that man at his firſt creation was farre other than his poſterity euer ſins, which taking their beginning from him being corrupted, hath from him receiued an infection deriued to them as it were by inheritaunce. For then all the partes of his ſoule were framed in right order, then ſtoode ſafe the ſoundneſſe of his vnderſtanding minde, and his will free to chooſe the good. If any do obiect that ſtoode but in ſlippery ſtate, becauſe his power was but weake, I anſwere that that ſtate was yet ſuch as ſufficed to take from him all excuſe, neither was it reaſonable to reſtraine God to this point, to make man ſuch a one as either could not or would not ſinne at all, I graunt ſuch a nature hadde bin better, but therefore preciſely to quarel with God, as though it hadde bin his duety to haue giuen that vnto man is to much vniuſtice, foraſmuch as it was in his owne choiſe to giue howe much pleaſed him. But why he did not vphold him with the ſtrength of ſtedfaſt continuance, that reſteth hidden in his owne ſecrete councell: it is our parte onely to be ſo farre wiſe as with ſobrietie we may. Man receaued in deede to be able if he would, but he had not to will ẏ he might be able. For of this will ſhould haue followed ſtedfaſt cõtinuance. Yet is he not excuſeable, which receiued ſo much that of his owne will he hath wrought his owne deſtruction. And there was no neceſſity to compell God to giue him any other than meane will and a frayle will, that of mans fall he might gather matter for his owne glory.

The xvj. Chapter.

That God by his powver doth nourish and maintaine the vvorld, vvhich himſelfe hath created, and by his prouidence doth gouerne all the partes thereof.

BVt it were very fonde and bare to make God a creator for a moment, which doth nothing ſins he hath once made an end of his worke. And in this point principally ought we to differ frõ the prophane men, that the preſence of the power of God may ſhine vnto vs no leſſe in the continuall ſtate of the world, than in the firſt beginning of it. For though the mindes of the very wicked in onely beholding of the heauen and earth are compelled to riſe vnto the creator, yet hath fayth a certayne peculiar maner by it ſelfe

whereby it geueth to God the whole praiſe of creation. And therfore ſerueth that ſaying of the Apoſtle, which we before alleged, that we do not vnderſtand but by faith, that the world was made by the word of God. For vnleſſe we paſſe forward euen vnto his prouidence, we do not yet rightly conceiue what this meaneth that God is the creator, how ſoeuer we do ſeeme to comprehende it in minde, and confeſſe it with tongue. When the ſenſe of the fleſh hath ones ſet before it the power of God in the very creation, it reſteth there, and when it procedeth furtheſt of all, it doth nothing but wey and conſider the wiſdom, power, and goodneſſe of the workemā in making ſuch a piece of worke (which thinges do of them ſelues offer and thruſt them ſelues in ſight of men whether they will or no) and a certaine generall doing in preſeruing and gouerning the ſame, vpon which dependeth the power of mouing. Finally it thinketh that the liuely force at the beginning put into all thinges by God, doth ſuffiſe to ſuſteine them. But faith ought to perce deper, that is to ſay, whom it hath learned to be the creator of all thinges, byandby to gather that the ſame is the perpetuall gouernor and preſeruer of them: and that, not by ſtirring with an vniuerſall motion as well the whole frame of the worlde, as all the partes therof, but by ſuſteyning, cheriſhing and caring for, with ſingular prouidence euery one of thoſe thinges that he hath created euē to the leaſt ſparow. So Dauid after he had firſt ſaid that the world was created by God, byandby deſcendeth to the continuall courſe of his prouidence. By the worde of the Lord (ſaith he) the heauens were ſtabliſhed, and all the power therof by the ſpirite of his mouth. By and by he addeth, The Lord looked downe vpon the ſonnes of men, and ſo the reſt that he ſaith further to the ſame effect. Pſa. 33. 6. For although they do not all reaſon ſo orderly, yet becauſe it were not likely to be beleued that God had care of mens matters, vnleſſe he were the maker of the worlde, nor any man doeth earneſtly beleue that God made the worlde, vndeſſe he be perſwaded that God hath alſo care of his workes: therfore not without cauſe Dauid doth by good order conueye vs from the one to the other. Generally in dede both the Philoſophers do teach, and mens mindes do conceiue that all partes of the worlde are quickened with the ſecrete inſpiratiō of God. But yet they atteine not ſo farre as Dauid both himſelfe procedeth and carrieth all the godly with him, ſaying: all thinges wayte vpon thee, that thou mayeſt geue them foode in due ſeaſon. Thou geueſt it to them and they gather it. Thou openeſt thy hand and they are filled with good thinges. But if thou hide thy face they are troubled. If thou take away their breath, they die and returne to their duſt. Againe if thou ſende Pſa. 104 27.

forth thy Spirite, they are created and thou reneweſt the face of our being and are moued, and do liue in God, yet are they farre that earneſt feling of grace, which he commendeth vnto vs: bec they taſte not of Gods ſpeciall care whereby alone his fatherly is knowen.

2 That this difference may the better appeare, it is to be know that the Prouidence of God, ſuch as it is taught in the Scripture, compariſon ſet as contrary to fortune and chaunces that happen aduenture. Now foraſmuch as it hath bin commonly beleued ages, and the ſame opinion is at this day alſo in a manner in all that all thinges happen by fortune, it is certaine, that that which to haue bin beleued concerning Prouidence, is by that wrong opin not onely darkened but alſo in manner buried. If a man light am the heares of his hed are numbred, will ſeke for a cauſe further of wil firmely beleue that all chaũces are gouerned by the ſecrete co of God. And as cõcerning thinges without life, this is to be thou that although euery one of them haue his owne propertie natur put into it, yet do they not put forth their power but only ſo farre they be directed by the preſent hande of God. They are therfore thing els but inſtrumentes, whereby God continually poureth i much effect as pleaſeth him, and at his will boweth and turneth th to this or that doing. Of no creature is the power more maruell or more glorious than of the ſunne. For beſide that it geueth ligh

But the Lord becauſe he would claime the whole glory of all theſes thinges to himſelfe, made the light firſt to be, and the earth to be furniſhed with all kindes of herbes and fruites before that he created the ſunne. A godly man therefore will not make the ſunne to be either a principall or a neceſſary cauſe of thoſe thinges which were before the creation of the ſunne, but onely an inſtrument which God vſeth becauſe it ſo pleaſeth him, wheras he might leaue it and do all thinges as eaſily by himſelfe. Then whē we reade that the ſunne ſtode ſtill two daies in one degree at the praier of Ioſua, & that the ſhadow therof went backe ten degrees for Ezechias his ſake, by thoſe few miracles God hath declared that the ſunne doth not daily ſo riſe and go down by blinde inſtinct of nature, but that he to renew the remembraunce of his fatherly fauour towarde vs, doth gouerne the courſe therof. Nothing is more naturall than ſpring tide to come immediatly after winter, ſommer after ſpring, & harueſt in courſe after ſommer. But in this orderly courſe is plainly ſeen ſo great and ſo vnegall diuerſitie, that it may eaſily appere that euery yere, moneth and day, is gouerned by a new and ſpeciall Prouidence of God.

Ioſ.10. 13. 2.Kings 20.11.

3 And truely God doth claime and will haue vs geue vnto him an almightineſſe, not ſuch as the Sophiſters do imagine, vaine, idle, and as it were ſleping, but waking, effectuall, working and buſied in continuall doing. Nor ſuch a one as is only a generall beginning of a confuſed motion, as if he woulde commaunde a riuer to flow by his appointed chanels, but ſuch a one as is bent and redy at all his particular mouinges. For he is therfore called almightie, not becauſe he can do and yet ſitteth ſtill and doth nothing, or by generall inſtinct only continueth the order of nature that he hath before appointed: but becauſe he gouerning both heauen and earth, by his Prouidence ſo ordreth all thinges that nothing chaunceth but by his aduiſed purpoſe. For wheras it is ſaied in the Pſalme that he doth whatſoeuer he will, therin is meant his certaine and determined wil. For it were very fonde to expounde the Prophets words after the Philoſophers manner, that God is the firſt Agent or doer, becauſe he is the beginning and cauſe of all mouing: wheras the faithfull ought rather in aduerſitie to eaſe themſelues with this comfort, that they ſuffer nothing but by the ordinaunce and commaundement of God, becauſe they are vnder his hand. If then the gouernemēt of God do ſo extende to all his workes, it is a very childiſh cauillatiō to encloſe it within the influence of nature. And yet they do no more defraude God of his glory than themſelues of a moſt profitable doctrine, whoſoeuer do reſtraine the Prouidence of God within ſo narrow boundes, as if he ſuffred all thinges their felicitie or miserie doth hang on the decrees and foreshewing of the starres, and not on the will of God, so commeth it to pa that their feare is withdrawen away from that onely one, whom th ought to haue regarded, vnto the starres and comets. Whoso therfo will beware of this vnfaithfulnesse, let him kepe alwayes in remem braunce that there is not in the creatures a wandring power, worki or motion, but that they are gouerned by the secrete counsell of G so that nothing can chaunce but that which is decreed by him bo witting and willing it so to be.

4 Firſt therfore let the readers learne, that Prouidence is called that, not wherwith God idlely beholdeth from heauen what is done in the worlde, but wherwith as guiding the ſterne he ſitteth and ordreth all thinges that come to paſſe. So doth it no leſſe belong to his handes than to his eyes. For When Abraham ſaied vnto his ſonne. God ſhall prouide, he meant not onely that God did forknow the ſucceſſe then to come, but that he did caſt the care of a thing to him vnknowen vpon the will of God, which is wont to bring thinges doutefull and confuſed to a certaine end. Wherby foloweth that Prouidence conſiſteth in doing: for to much fondely do many trifle in talking of bare forknowledge. Their error is not altogither ſo groſſe which geue vnto God a gouernement but diſordered, and without aduiſed choiſe, (as I haue before ſaid,) that is to ſay ſuch as whirleth and driueth about with a generall motiō the frame of the world with all the partes therof, but doth not peculiarly direct the doing of euery creature. Yet is this error not tolerable. For as they teach, it may be (notwithſtanding this Prouidence which they call vniuerſall) that all creatures may be moued by chaunce, or man may turne himſelfe hether or thether by free choiſe of his will. And ſo do they parte the gouernement betwene God and man, that God by his power inſpireth into mā a motion wherby he may worke according to the nature planted in him, and man ordereth his owne doinges by his owne voluntarie aduiſe: Briefely they meane that the worlde, mens matters, and men themſelues are gouerned by the power, but not by the appointement of God. I ſpeake not of the Epicureans (which peſtilēce the worlde hath alway bin filled with) which dreame of an idle and ſlouthfull God: and other as mad as they, which in olde time imagined that God did ſo rule aboue the middle region of the ayre, that he left thinges beneth to Fortune: for againſt ſo euidēt madneſſe the dumme creatures themſelues do ſufficiently crie out. For now my purpoſe is to confute that opinion that is in a manner commonly beleued, which giuing to God a certaine blinde, and I wote not what vncertaine motion, taketh from him the principall thing, that is by his incomprehenſible wiſdom to direct and diſpoſe all thinges to their ende: and ſo in name onely and not in deede it maketh God a ruler of the worlde, becauſe it taketh from him the gouernement of it. For what (I beſech you) is it els to gouerne, but ſo to be ouer them that are vnder thee, that thou mayeſt rule thē by appointed order? Yet do I not altogether reiect that which is ſpoken of the vniuerſall Prouidence: ſo that they will againe graunt me this, that the world is ruled by God, not onely becauſe he maintei-neth the order of nature which himſelfe hath ſet, but alſo becauſe he hath a peculiar care of euery one of his workes. Trew it is that all sortes of thinges are moued by a secret instinct of nature, as if they did obey the eternall commaundement of God, and that that which God hath ones determined doth of it selfe procede forwarde. And hereunto may that be applied which Christ saieth, that he and his father were euen from the beginning alway working. And that which Act. 17. 28. Paule teacheth that in him we liue, are moued and haue our beyng, and that which the author of the Epistle to the Hebrues, meaning to Heb. 1. 3 proue the Godhead of Christ saieth, that by his mightie cõmaundement all thinges are susteyned. But they do wrong which by this colour do hide and darken the special Prouidence, which is cõfirmed by so certaine and plaine testimonies of Scripture, that it is maruell that any man coulde doute of it. And surely they themselues that draw the same veile which I speake of to hide it, are compelled by way of correction to adde, that many thinges are done by the peculiar care of God, but then they do wrongfully restraine the same onely to peculiar doinges. Wherfore we must proue that God doth so geue heed to the gouernement of the successes of all thinges, and that they also do so procede from his determined counsell that nothing happeneth by chaunce.

5 If we graunt that the beginning of motion belongeth to God, but that all thinges are either of themselues or by chaũce caried whether the inclination of nature driueth them, the mutuall succeeding turnes of daies and nightes, of winter and sommer, shalbe the work of God, insomuch as he appointing to euery one their duties hath set them a certaine law, that is if they shoulde alway kepe one measure in egall proportion, as well the dayes that come after the nightes, the monethes after monethes, and yeres after yeres. But when sometime immoderate heates with drinesse do burne vp all the graine, sometime vnseasonable raines do marre the corne, whẽ sodeine harme cõmeth by haile and tempestes: that shall not be the worke of God, vnles parhap it be because the cloudes or faire whether or coulde or heate haue their beginning of the meting of the planetes or other naturall causes. But by this meane is there no roume left, neither for the fatherly fauour nor for the iudgementes of God. If they say that God is beneficiall enough to mankinde because he poureth into the heauen and earth an ordinarie power, wherby they do finde him nourishment, that is to vaine & prophane an inuention, as though the frutefulnes of one yeare were not the singular blessing of God, and dearth and famine were not his curse and vengeaunce? But because it were to long to gather together all the reasons that serue for this purpose, let the authoritie of God himselfe suffice vs. In the law and in the Prophetes he doth oftentimes pronounce, that so ofte as he watereth the earth with deaw and raine, he declareth his fauor, and that when by his cõmaundement the heauen is hardened like yron, when corne is consumed with blasting and other harmes, when the fieldes are striken with haile & tempestes, it is a token of his certaine & speciall vengeaunce. If we graunt these thinges, then is it assured that there falleth not a drop of raine but by the certaine commaundement of God. Dauid prayseth the general Prouidence of God, that he geueth meate to the rauens birdes that call vpon him: but when God himselfe threatneth famine to lyuing creatures, doth he not sufficiently declare that he fedeth all liuing thinges sometime with scarce & sometime with more plentifull portion as he thinketh good? It is a childish thing as I said before, to restraine this to particular doinges, wheras Christ speaketh without exception, that not a sparrow of neuer so small a price doth fall to the grounde without the will of his father. Surely if the flying of birdes be ruled by the purpose of God, then must we nedes confesse with ỹ Prophet, that he so dwelleth on hie, that yet he humbleth himselfe to loke vpon all thinges that chaunce in heauen and earth. Pf. 146. 9. Mat. 10. 29. Psa. 12. 5.

6 But because we know that the worlde was made principally for mankindes sake, we must therfore cõsider this ende in the gouernance of man. The prophet Hieremie crieth out. I know, Lorde, that the way of man is not his owne, neither belongeth it to man to direct his owne steppes. And Salomon saieth, the steppes of man are ruled by the Lord, and how shall a man dispose his owne way? Now let them say that man is moued by God according to the inclination of his owne nature, but that man himselfe doth turne that mouing whether it pleaseth him. But if that were truely said, then shoulde man haue the free choise of his owne wayes. Paraduenture they will deny that, because he can do nothing without the power of God. But seing it is certaine that the Prophet and Salomon do geue vnto God, not onely power but also choise and appointment, they can not so escape away. But Salomon in an other place doth finely rebuke this rashenesse of men, that appoint vnto themselues an other ende without respect of God, as though they were not led by his hande. The preparations (saith he) of the harte are in man, but the aunswere of the tongue is of the Lord. It is a fonde madnesse that men will take vpon them to do thinges without God, which can not so much as speake but what he will. And the Scripture to expresse more plainely that nothing at all is done in the worlde but by his appointment, sheweth that those thinges whiche seme moste happening by chaunce are Hier. 10 23. But the Lord saith farre otherwise, which confesseth that hath deliuered him into the hand of the slaier. Likewise who doth leaue the happening of lottes to the blindnesse of fortune? But the Lord suffereth it not which claimeth the iudgement of them to himselfe: for he saieth that it cōmeth not to passe by a mans owne power that stones are cast into the lap and drawen out againe, but that

Pro. 16. 33. which onely might de saied to come of chaunce he testifieth to come from him selfe. For the same purpose maketh that saying of Salomon The poore man and the vsurer mete together, God lighteneth both their eyes. For although poore men & riche be mingled together the worlde, while euery one hath his state assigned him from God admonisheth that God which geueth light to all men is not blinde so he exhorteth the poore to pacience, because whosoeuer are contented with their owne state, they seke to shake of the burden God hath laied vpon them. So an other Prophet rebuketh the vngodly men, which ascribe to the diligēce of men or to Fortune, that some lie in miserie and some arise vp to honor. To come to preferment neither from the east nor from the west nor from the south, for

Psa. 75. 7. is the iudge, he maketh low and he maketh hie. Because God can put of the office of a iudge, therupon the Prophet proueth that by secret purpose some are in honor, & other some remaine in cōtempt.

7 And also I say that the very particular successes are generall

But they that thinke that God gouerneth not the worlde, say that this chaunced beside commō vse. But therby I do gather neuer any winde doth rise or encrese but by the special commandment of God. For otherwise it shoulde not be true, that he maketh

Psa. 104 4. the windes his messangers, and fiery flame his ministers, that he keth the cloudes his chariots and rideth vpō the winges of the wind vnlesse he did by his will driue aboute the cloudes and windes, shew in them the singular presence of his power. So in an other

Psa. 107 25. we are taught that so ofte the sea swelleth with blast of windes, violences do testifie a singular presence of God. He commaūdeth raiseth vp the stormy windes and it lifteth vp the waues therof, and he turneth the storme to calme, so that the waues therof are still in an other place he saieth, that he scourged the people with burning windes. So wheras the power of engendring is naturally geuen to yet God willeth it to be imputed to his speciall grace, that he leaueth some in barrennesse, and vouchsaueth to graunt issue to other some, the frute of the wombe is his gift. Therfore said Iacob to his wife, am I as God that I can geue thee children? But to make an ende: there is nothing more ordinary in nature than that we be fed with bread. But the Holy ghost pronounceth that not onely the growing of the fruites of the earth is the speciall gift of God, but also that men liue not by onely bread, because it is not the very full feding that nourisheth, but the secret blessing of God: as on the other side he threteneth that he wil breake the stay of bread. Neither coulde we earnestly pray for our dayly bread, vnlesse God did geue vs foode with his fatherly hande. Therfore the Prophet, to perswade the faithfull, that God in feding them doth fulfil the office of a good father of housholde, doth put them in mind that he geueth meate to all flesh. Finally when we haue on the one side: The eyes of the Lord are vpon the righteous, and his eares bent to their prayers: on the other side: The eye of the Lord is vpon the vngodly to destroy the memory of them out of the earth: let vs know that all creatures both aboue and beneth are ready to obedience that he may apply them to what vse soeuer he will, wherupon is gathered that not onely his generall prouidence remaineth in his creatures to continue the order of nature, but also by his maruellous counsell is applied to a certaine and proper ende.

8 They which would bring this doctrine in hatred do cauill that this is the learning that the Stoikes teach of fatum or Destenie, which also was ones laied for reproch to Augustine. As for vs, although we be loth to striue about wordes, yet we allow not this word fatum, both because it is one of those whoes prophane noueltie S. Paul teacheth vs to flie, and because some men go about with the odiousnesse therof to bring Gods truth in hatred. As for the very opinion of the Stoikes, it is wrongfully laid to our charge. For we do not, as the Stoikes do, imagine a necessitie by a certaine perpetuall knot and entangled order of causes which is conteined in nature: but we make God the iudge and gouernour of all thinges, which according to his wisdom hath euen from furthest ende of eternitie decreed what he woulde do, and now by his power putteth in execution that which he hath decreed. Wherupon we affirme that not only the heauen and earth and other creatures without life, but also the purposes and willes of men are so gouerned by his Prouidēce, that they be directly caried to the ende that it appointeth. What then? will one say, doth nothing happen by fortune or by chaunce? I aunswere that Basilius magnus hath truely said that fortune and chaunce are heathen mens wordes, with the signification wherof the mindes of the godly ought not to be cupied. For if euery good successe be the blessing of God, and e calamitie and aduersitie be his curse, now is there in mens matte place left for fortune or chaunce. We ought also to be moued this saying of Augustine. In his boks against the Academikes he Retr. li 1. cap. 1. It doth displease me that I haue so oft named fortune, albeit my ning was not to haue any goddesse meant therby, but only a cha ble happening in outward thinges ether good or euil. Of which Fortune are deriued those wordes which no religion forbiddeth vse, forte, forsan, forsitan, fortasse, fortuito, that is parhap, para ture, by fortune and by chaunce, which yet must all be applied Prouidence of God. And that did I not leaue vnspoken when I for parchaunce euē the same that is commonly called Fortune i ruled by secret order. And wee call chaunce in thinges nothing e that wherof the reason and cause is vnknowen. I said this in dede it repenteth me that I did there so name Fortune. Forasmuch a that men haue a very euill custome, that where they ought to say it pleased God, they say, thus it pleased fortune. Finally he doth c monly in his bookes teach, that the world should be vnorderly led about if any thing were lefte vnto Fortune. And although other place he determineth that all things are done partly by the will of man, and partly by the Prouidence of God, yet doth he a after sufficiently shew that men are subiect vnto and ruled by Pr dence, taking this for a principle, that nothing is more against co nience of reason, than to say that any thing chaunceth but by the dinance of God, for els it shoulde happen without cause or orde which reason he also excludeth that happening that hangeth vpō will of men: and byandby after he plainlier saieth that we ought Quæst. lib. 83. De Tri. lib. 3. cap. 4. to seke a cause of the will of God. And so ofte as he maketh men of sufferaunce, how that is to be vnderstanded shall very well app by one place where he proueth that the will of God is the soue and first cause of all thinges, because nothing happeneth but by commaundement or sufferaunce. Surely he faineth not God still idle in a watch tour, when it is his pleasure to suffer any th wheras he vseth an actuall will (as I may so call it) which othe coulde not be called a cause.

9 But forasmuch as the dullnesse of our vnderstanding can no a great way atteine to the height of Gods prouidēce, we must vse stinctiō to helpe to lift it vp. I say therfore, how soeuer all things ordeined by the purpose and certaine disposition of God, yet t they are chaunsable, not that we thinke that fortune ruleth the w and men, and vnaduisedly tosseth all thinges vp and downe (for such beastlynesse ought to be farre from a Christian harte) but because the order, meane, ende and necessitie of those thinges that happen, doth for the most parte lie secrete in the purpose of God, and is not comprehended with opinion of man, therfore those thinges are as it were chaũsable, which yet it is certaine to come to passe by the will of God. For they seme no otherwise, whether we consider them in their owne nature, or whether we esteeme them according to our knowledge and judgement. As for an example, let vs put the case, that a marchaunt being entred into a wood in cõpanie of true men, doth vnwisely stray away from his felowes, and in his wandring chaunceth vpon a denne of robbers, lighteth among theues and is killed, his death was not only foreseen with goddes eye, but also determined by his decree. For it is not saied that he did foresee how farre ech mans life should extende, but that he hath sette and appointed markes which can not be passed. And yet so farre as the capacitie of our minde conceiueth, all thinges herein seme happening by chaunce. What shall a Christian here thinke? euen this, whatsoeuer happened in such a death, he will thinke it in nature chauncing by fortune as it is in dede, but yet he wil not doubt that the prouidence of God did gouerne to direct fortune to her ende. In like manner are the happeninges of thinges to come. For as all thinges that be to come are vncertaine vnto vs, so we hang them in suspense, as if they might fall on either parte, yet this remaineth settled in our hartes, that nothing shal happẽ but that which God hath already foreseen. In this meaning is the name of chaunce oft repeted in Ecclesiastes, because at the first sight mẽ do not atteine to see the first cause which is farre hidden from them. And yet that which is declared in the Scriptures concerning the secret prouidence of God, was neuer so blotted out of the hartes of men, but that euen in the darkenesse there alway shined some sparkes therof. So the soothsayers of the Philistiãs, although they wauer in doutfulnesse, yet they ascribe aduersitie partly to God partly to fortune. If (say they) the arke go that way, we shall know that it is God that hath striken vs: but if it go the other way, then a chaũce hath light vpon vs. In dede they did foolishly, when their conning of soothsaying deceiued them, to flee to fortune, but in the meane while we se them constrained, so that they dare not thinke that the euil happe which chaũced vnto them did come of fortune. But how God with the bridle of his prouidence turneth all successes whether pleaseth him, may appeare by one notable example. Beholde euen at one moment of time, when Dauid was founde dut & nere taken in the desert of Mahon, euen then the Philistines inuaded the lande, and Saul was compelled to depart. If God meaning to p uide for the safetie of his seruaunt did cast this let in Saules way, s ly although the Philistines going to armes were sodein and beside those things that seme to vs to happen by chaunce, faith wil ackn ledge to haue bin a secret mouing of God. I graunt there doth no waie appeare the like reason, but vndoutedly we ought to beleue whatsoeuer changes of thinges are seen in the worlde, they com the secret sturring of the hand of God. But that which God purpo is so of necessitie to come to passe, that yet it is not of necessitie cisely nor by the nature of it selfe. As therof is a familiar exam in the bones of Christ. Forasmuch as he had put on a bodie like ours, no wise man will deny that his bones were naturally able t broken, yet was it impossible that they should be broken: wherby see againe that not without cause were in scholes inuented the di ctions of necessitie in respect, and necessitie absolute, of conseq and consequence, where as God had subiect to brickleneſse the bo of his sonne, which he had exempted from being able to be brok and so brought to necessitie by reason of his owne purpose, that thing coulde not be, which naturally might haue bin.

The xvij. Chapter.

VVherto and to vvhat ende this doctrine is to be applied, that vve may be certaine of the profite therof.

NOw forasmuch as mẽs wits are bent to vaine curious sut ties, it is scarcely possible but that they shall encombre t selues with entangled doubtes, whosoeuer do not know true and right vse of this Doctrine. Therfore it shall be pedient here to touch shortly to what ende the Scripture teache that all thinges are ordred by God. And first of all is to be noted, t the Prouidence of God ought to be considered as well for the t to come as for the time past: secondarily that the same is in such so the gouernour of all thinges, that sometime it woorketh by mean sometime without meanes, and sometime against all meanes. Las all, that it tendeth to this ende, that God may shew that he hath c of all mankinde, but specially that he doth watche in ruling of Church, which he vouchesaueth more nerely to looke vnto. And is also to be added, that although either the fatherly fauour & boun fulneſse of God, or oftẽtimes the seueritie of his iudgemẽt do brig
ly appere in the whole course of his Prouidence: yet sometime causes of those thinges that happen are secrete, so that this thou crep

crepeth into our mindes, that mens matters are turned and whirled about with the blinde sway of fortune, or so that the flesh stirreth vs to murmure, as if God did to make him selfe pastime tosse men like tennise balles. True it is that if we were with quiet and still mindes ready to learne, the very successe it selfe woulde at length plainely shew, that God hath an assured good reason of his purpose, either to traine them that be his to pacience, or to correct their euill affections and tame their wantonnesse, or to bring them downe to the renouncing of them selues, or to awake their drowsinesse: on the other side to ouerthrow the prowde, to disappoint the suttletie of the wicked, to confounde their deuises. But howsoeuer the causes be secrete and vnknowen to vs: we must assuredly holde that they are laid vp in hidden store with him, and therefore we ought to crie out with Dauid, God, Psa. 40. thou hast made thy wonderfull workes so many, that none can count in order to thee thy thoughts towarde vs. I woulde declare and speake of them, but they are more than I am able to expresse. For although alwaies in our miseries we ought to thinke vpō our sinnes, that ẏ very punishement may moue vs to repentance, yet do we see how Christ geueth more power to the secret purpose of his father, than to punish euery one according to his deseruing. For of him that was borne Iohn. 9. blinde he saith: neither hath this man sinned nor his parentes, but that the glorie of God may be shewed in him. For here naturall sense murmureth when calamitie commeth euen before birth, as if God did vnmercifully so to punish the sely innocente, that had not deserued it. But Christ doth testifie that in this looking glasse the glory of his father doth shine to our sight, if we haue cleere eyes to beholde it. But we must kepe modestie, that we draw not God to yelde cause of his doinges, but let vs so reuerence his secret iudgementes, that his will be vnto vs, a most iuste cause of all thinges. When thicke cloudes do couer the heauen, and a violent tempest ariseth, then bycause both a heauysome mistynesse is cast before our eyes, & the thunder troubleth our eares, and all our senses are amased with terrour, we thinke that all thinges are confoūded and tombled together: and yet all the while there remaineth in the heauen the same quieteneſſe and calmeneſſe, that was before. So must we thinke that while the troublesome state of thinges in the worlde taketh from vs abilitie to iudge, God by the pure light of his righteousnesse and wisdom, doth in well framed order gouerne and dispose euen those very troublesome motions themselues to a right ende. And surely very monstrous is the rage of many in this behalfe, which dare more boldly call the workes of God to accompt and examine his secret meaninges, and to geue vnaduised sentence of thinges vnknowen, than they will do of the deedes of mortall men. For what is more vnorderly than to vse such modestie towarde our egals, that we had rather suspende our iudgement than to incurre the blame of rashenesse, and on the other side proudely to triumph vpon the darke iudgementes of God, which it became vs to regarde with reuerence.

2 Therfore no man shall well and profitably wey the Prouidence of God but he that considering that he hath to do with his creator and the maker of the world, doth with such humility as he ought submit himselfe to feare and reuerence. Hereby it cometh to passe, that so many dogs at this day do with venimed bitinges, or at least barking assaile this doctrine, because they will haue no more to be lawfull for God, than their owne reason informeth them. And also they raile at vs with all the spitefulnesse that they are able, for that not contented with the cõmaundementes of the law, wherin the will of God is comprehended, we do further say, that the worlde is ruled by his secret counsels. As though the thing that we teach were an inuention of our owne brayne, and as though it were not true that the holy Ghost doth euery where expressely say the same, and repeteth it with innumerable formes of speech. But because some shame restraineth them, that they dare not vomite out their blaspemies against the heauen: they faine that they contende with vs, to the ende they may the more freely play the madmen. But if they do not graunt that what soeuer happeneth in the worlde, is gouerned by the incomprehensible purpose of God, let them aunswere to what ende the Scripture saith, that his iudgementes are a depe bottomlesse deapth. For where as Moses crieth out that the will of God is not to be sought afarre of in the cloudes, or in the deapthes, because it is familiarly set forth in the law: it foloweth, that his other hidden will is compared to a bottomlesse deapth. Of the which Paule also saith: O deapth of the richesse and of the wisdom and of the knowledge of God: how vnsearchable are his iudgementes, and his waies past finding out? for who hath knowen the minde of the Lord, or who hath bin his counsellour? And it is in deede true, that in the Gospell and in the law are conteined misteries which are farre aboue the capacitie of our sense: but forasmuch as God for the comprehẽding of these misteries which he hath vouchesaued to open by his woorde, doth lighten the mindes of them that be his, with the Spirite of Vnderstanding: nowe is therin no bottomlesse deapth, but a way wherin we must safe walke, and a candell to guide our feete, and the light of life, and the schoole of certaine and plainly discernable trueth. But his meruailous order of gouerning the worlde is worthily

Psa. 36. 7.

Rom. 11 33.

called

called a bottomlesse deapth: because while it is hidden from vs, we ought reuerently to worshippe it. Right well hath Moses expressed them both in fewe woordes. The secret thinges (saieth he) belong to the Lorde our God: but the thinges reueled belong to vs and to our children for euer. We see how he biddeth vs not onely to studie in meditation of the law, but also reuerently to looke vp vnto the secret Prouidence of God. Deu. 29 29.

And in the booke of Iob is rehersed one title of this deapth, that it humbleth our mindes. For after that the author of that booke in surueying vp and downe the frame of the worlde, had honourably entreated of the woorkes of God, at length he addeth: Lo, these be part of his waies, but howe littel a portion heare we of him? Iob 26. 14.

According to which reason in an other place he maketh difference betwene the wisedom that remaineth with God, and the measure of wisdom that he hath appointed for men. For after he hath preached of the secretes of nature, he saieth that wisdom is knowen to God onely, and is hidden from the eyes of all liuyng creatures. Iob 28. 12. But byandby after he saieth further, that it is published to the ende it should be serched out, because it is said vnto mā, beholde the feare of God is wisdom. For this purpose maketh the saying of Augustine: Bycause we know not all thinges which God doth concerning vs in most good order, that therfore in only good will we do according to the law, because his Prouidence is an vnchaungeable law. Therefore sith God doth claime vnto him selfe the power to rule the world, which is to vs vnknowen, let this be to vs a law of sobrenesse and modestie, quietly to obey his souereigne authoritie, that his will may be to vs the only rule of iustice, and the most iust cause of all thinges. I meane not that absolute will, of which the Sophisters do babble, separating by wicked and prophane disagrement his iustice from his power, but I meane that Prouidence, which is the gouernesse of all thinges, from which procedeth nothing but right: although the causes therof be hidden from vs. Lib. 83. quæst. cap. 23.

3 Whosoeuer shalbe framed to this modestie, they neither for the time paste will murmure against God for their aduersities, nor lay vpon him the blame of wicked doinges, as Agamemnon in Homer did, saying, I am not the cause, but Iupiter and Destenie: nor yet againe as caried awaie with Destenies, they will by desperation throw them selues into destruction, as that yong man in Plautus which said: Vnstable is the chaunce of thinges: the Destenies driue men at their pleasure, I will get me to some rocke there to make an ende of my goodes and life together. Neither yet (as an other did) they will pretende the name of God to couer their owne mischeuous doinges: for so saith Lyconides in an other comedie: God was the mouer. I beleue it was the will of the gods: for if it had not bin their will, I know it shoulde not so come to passe. But rather they will search and learne out of the Scripture what pleaseth God, that by the guiding of the Holy ghost they may trauaile to atteine therunto. And also being ready to folowe God, whether soeuer he calleth, they shewe in dede that nothing is more profitable then the knowledge of his doctrine. Very foolishly do prophane men turmoile with their fondnesses, so that they in maner confound heauen & earth together as the saying is: If God haue marked the point of our death, we can not escape it: then it is labour vainely lost in taking hede to our selues. Therefore where as one man dareth not venture to go the way that he heareth to be daungerous, least he be murthered of theues: an other sendeth for Phisitians, and werieth himselfe with medicines to succour his life: an other forbeareth grosse meates for feare of appeiring his feble health: an other dreadeth to dwell in a ruinous house: Finally where as men deuise all waies & endeuour with all diligence of minde whereby they may atteine that which they desire: either all these remedies are vaine, which are sought, as to reforme the will of God, or els life and death, health and sickenesse, peace and warre, and other thinges, which men as they couet or hate them, do by their trauaile endeuour to obteine or escape, are not determined by his certaine decree. And further they gather, that the praiers of the faithfull are disordered, or at the least superfluous, wherin petition is made that it will please the Lord to prouide for those thinges which he hath already decreed frō eternitie. To be short, they destroy all counsels that men do take for time to come as thinges against the Prouidence of God, which hath determined what he would haue done, without calling them to counsell. And thē what soeuer is already happened, they so impute it to the Prouidence of God, that they winke at the man whom they know to haue done it. As hath a ruffian slaine an honest citezen? he hath executed (say they) the purpose of God. Hath one stolen, or committed fornication? becausse he hath doen the thing that was forseene and ordeined by the Lord, he is a minister of his Prouidence. Hath the sonne carelessely, neglecting al remedies, waited for the death of his father? he coulde not resist God that had so before appointed from eternitie. So all mischeuous doinges they call vertues because they obey the ordinance of God.

4 But as touching thinges to come, Salomon doth well bring in agrement together the purposes of men with the Prouidēce of God. For as he laugheth to scorne their folly, which boldely do enterprise any

any thing without the Lorde, as though they were not ruled by his hand: so in an other place he speaketh in this maner. The hart of man purposeth his way, but the Lord doth direct his steppes, meaning that we are not hindered by the eternall Decrees of God, but that vnder his will we may both prouide for our selues, and dispose all things belonging to vs. And that is not without a manifest reason. For he that hath limitted our life within appointed boundes, hath therwithall left with vs the care thereof, hath furnished vs with meanes and helpes to preserue it, hath made vs to haue knowledge before hand of daungers, and that they should not oppresse vs vnware, he hath giuen vs prouisions and remedies. Now it is playne to see what is our duety: that is to say: If God hath committed to vs our owne life to defende, our duety is to defende it. If he offer vs helpes, our duety is to vse them. If he shew vs daungers before, our duety is not to runne rashly into them. If he minister vs remedies, our duety is not to neglect them. But no daunger shall hurt, vnlesse it be fatall, which by all remedies can not be ouercome. But what if daungers be therefore not fatal, because God hath assigned thee remedies to repulse & ouercome them? See howe thy manner of reasoning agreeth with the order of Gods disposition. Thou gatherest that daunger is not to be taken heede of, because forasmuch as it is not fatall, we shall escape it without taking heede at all: but the Lord doth therefore enioyne thee to take heede of it, because he will not haue it fatall vnto thee. These madde men do not consider that which is playne before their eyes, that the skil of taking counsell & heede is enspired into men by God, whereby they may serue his Prouidence in preseruing of their owne life: as on the other side by negligence & slouth they procure to them selues those euils that he hath appointed for them. For how commeth it to passe, that a circumspect man while he prouideth for himselfe, doth winde himselfe out of euils that hang ouer him, and the foole perisheth by vnaduised rashnesse, but for that both folly and wisdom are the instrumentes of Gods disposition on both partes? Therefore it pleased God to hide from vs all thinges to come, to this ende that we should meete with them as thinges doutefull, and not ceasse to sette prepared remedies agaynst them, till either they be ouercome or be past all helpe of care. And for this cause I haue before admonished that the Prouidence of God doth not alway shewe it selfe naked, but as God by vsing of meanes doth in a certayne maner cloth it. Pro.6.9

5 The same men do vnorderly & vnaduisedly draw the chaunces of time past to the naked prouidence of God. For because vpon

it do hang all thinges whatsoeuer happen, therfore (say they) neither robberies, nor adulteries, nor manslaughters are committed without the will of God. Why then (say they) shall a thiefe be punished, for that he spoyled him whom the Lordes will was to punish with pouerty? Why shall the murtherer be punished which hath slayne him whose life the Lorde had ended? If all such men do serue the will of God, why shall they be punished? But I deny that they serue the will of God. For we may not say that he which is caried with an euill minde doth seruice to God as commaunder of it, where in deede he doth but obey his owne wicked lust. He obeyeth God, which being enformed of his will doth labour to that end, whereunto Gods will calleth him. But wherby are we enformed of his will, but by his word? Therefore in doinge of thinges we must see that same will of God, which he declareth in his word. God requireth of vs only that which he commaundeth. If we do any thing agaynst his commaundement, it is not obedience but obstinacy & transgressiō. But vnlesse he would, we should not do it. I graunt. But do we euill thinges to this end to obey him? But he doth not commaund vs to do them, but rather we runne on headlong, not minding what he willeth, but so raging with the intemperance of our owne lust, that of set purpose we bende our trauaile against him. And by these meanes in euill doing we serue his iust ordinance, because according to the infinite greatnesse of his wisdom, he hath good skill to vse euill instrumentes to do good. And see how fooliish is their maner of arguing. They would haue ỹ doers vnpunished for mischeuous actes, because they are not cōmitted but by the disposition of God. I graunt more: that theeues and murtherers & other euill doers are the instruments of Gods Prouidence, whom the Lord doth vse to execute those iudgementes which he hath with him selfe determined. But I deny that their euill doings ought to haue any excuse therby. For why? shal they either entāgle God in the same wickednesse with them, or shall they couer their naughtines with his righteousnesse? They can do neither of both. Because they should not be able to excuse themselues, they are accused by theyr owne conscience. And because they should not be able to blame God, they finde all the euill in themselues, & in him nothing but a lawfull vse of their euilnesse. But he worketh by them. And whence I pray you, commeth the stinke in a dead carrion, which hath bin both rotted & disclosed by heate of the sunne? All men do see that it is raised by the beames of the sunne. Yet no man doth therefore say, that the sunbeames do stinke. So when there resteth in an euill man, the matter and giltinesse of euill, what cause is there why it should be thought that God is any thing defiled with it, if he vse their seruice at his pleasure. Away therfore with this doggish frowardnesse, which may in dede a far of barke at the iustice of God, but can not touch it.

6 But these cauillations or rather doting errours of phrenetike men, shall easily be shaken away, by godly and holy meditation of the Prouidence, which the rule of godlinesse teacheth vs, so that thereof may grow vnto vs a good and most pleasant fruite. Therefore a Christian hart when it is most assuredly persuaded, that all things come to passe by the disposition of God, and that nothinge happeneth by chaunce, will alway bend his eyes to him as to the principall cause of things, and yet will consider the inferiour causes in their place. Then he will not dout that the singular prouidence of God doth watch for his preseruation, which Prouidence will suffer nothing to happen, but that which shall turne to his good and saluation. And because he hath to do first of all with men, and then with the other creatures, he will assure himselfe that Gods Prouidence doth reigne in both. As touching men, whether they be good or euill, he will acknowledge that all their counselles, willes, enterprises and powers are vnder the hand of God, so that it is in Gods will to bow them whether he list, and to restrayne them so oft as pleaseth him. That the singular Prouidence of God doth kepe watch for the safety of the faithfull, there are many and most euident promises to witnesse. Cast thy burdē vpon the Lord, and he shall nourish thee, and shall not suffer the righteous to fall for euer, because he careth for vs. He that dwelleth in the helpe of the hiest, shall abide in the protection of the God of heauen. He that toucheth you, toucheth ȳ apple of mine eie. I will be thy shield, a brasen wall: I will be enemy to thy enemies. Although the mother forget her childrē, yet will I not forget thee. And also this is the principall entent in the histories of the Bible, to teach that the Lord doth with such diligence keepe the wayes of the Saintes, that they do not so much as stumble against a stone. Therfore as a litle before we haue rightfully refected their opinion which do imagine an vniuersall Prouidence of God, that stoupeth not specially to the care of euery creature: yet principally it shal be good to reknowledge the same speciall care toward our selues. Whereupon Christ after he had affirmed that not the sparow of least value, doth fall to the ground without the will of the Father, doth byandby apply it to this ende, that we should consider that howe much we be more worth than sparrowes, with so much nyer care doth God prouide for vs, and he extendeth that care so farre that we may be bold to trust that the heares of our head are numbred. What can we wish our selues more, if not so much, as a heare can fall from our head but by his will? I speake not only of all mankinde, but because God hath chosen his church for a dwellinge house for himselfe, it is no doute but that he doth by singular exãples shew his care in gouerning of it.

7 The seruaunt of God being strengthened with these both, promises & examples, will ioyne with them the testimonies which teach that all men are vnder Gods power, whether it be to winne their mindes to good will, or to restrayne their malice that it may do no hurt. For it is the Lord that giueth vs fauour not onely with them that will vs well, but also in the Ægyptians, and as for the maliciousnesse of our ennemies, he knoweth how by diuerse wayes to subdue it. For sometime he taketh away their wit from them, so that they can conceiue no sound or sober aduise, like as he sent foorth Sathan to fill the mouthes of all the Prophetes with lying to deceiue Achab. He made Rechabeam madde by the yong mens counsell, that he might be spoyled of his kingdome by his owne folly. Many times when he graunteth them wit, yet he maketh them so afraid & astonished, that they can not will or go about that which they haue conceiued. Somtime also when he hath suffered them to go about that which lust & rage did counsell them, he doth in conuenient time breake of their violences, & suffereth them not to proceede to the end that they purposed. So did he before the time bring to nought the counsell of Achitophell that should haue bin to Dauids destruction. So also he taketh care to gouerne all his creatures for the benefite and safety of them that be his, yea and to gouerne the deuill himselfe, which as we see durst enterprise nothing against Iob without his sufferaunce and cõmaundement. Of this knowledge necessarily ensueth both a thankfulnesse of minde in prosperous successe of thinges, and also patience in aduersity, and an incredible assuredenesse against the time to come. Whatsoeuer therefore shall betide vnto him prosperously and according to his hartes desire, all that he will ascribe vnto God, whether he feele the bounty of God by the ministery of men, or be holpen by liueless creatures. For thus he will thinke in his minde: Surely it is the Lord which hath enclined their mindes to me, which hath ioyned them vnto me to be instrumentes of his goodnesse toward me. In plenty of the frutes of the earth, thus he wil thinke, that it is the Lord which heareth the heauen, that the heauen may heare the earth, that the earth also may heare her fruites. In other thinges he will not dout that it is the onely blessing of the Lord, whereby all things prosper, and being put in minde by so many causes he will not abide to be vnthankefull.

8 If any aduersity happen, he will byandby therein also lift vp his minde to God, whose hand auayleth much to emprint in vs a paciẽce and quiete moderation of hart. If Ioseph had still continued in recording the falsehode of his brethren, he could neuer haue taken a brotherly minde toward them. But because he bowed his minde to the Lord, he forgate the iniurie, and inclined to mekenesse and clemency, so farrefoorth that of his owne accord he comforted his brethren & sayd: It is not you that sould me into Ægypt, but by the will of God I was sent before you to saue your liues. You in deede thought euill of me, but the Lord turned it to good. If Iob had had respect to the Chaldees, by whom he was troubled, he woulde forwith hane bin kindled to reuenge. But because he did therewithall acknowledge it to be the worke of God, he comforted himselfe with this most excellent saying: The Lord hath giuen, the Lord hath taken away, the Lordes name be blessed. So Dauid: when Semei had railed and cast stones at him, if he had looked vpon man, he would haue incouraged his souldiers to reacquite the iniury. But because he vnderstoode that Semei did it not without the mouing of the Lord, he rather appeased them. Let him alone (said he) for the Lord hath commaunded him to curse. With the same bridle in an other place doth he restraine the intemperance of sorow. I held my peace (sayth he) and became as domme, because thou O Lord, diddest it. If there be more effectuall remedy against wrath & impatience: surely he hath not a little profited which hath learned in this behalfe to thinke vpon the Prouidence of God, that he may alway call backe his minde to this poynt. It is the Lords will, therefore it must be suffered, not onely because it is not lawfull to striue against it, but also because he willeth nothing but that which is both iust & expedient. In summe this is the end, that being wrongfully hurt by men, we leauing their malice (which would do nothing but enforce our sorow, and whet our mindes to reuenge) shoulde remember to climbe vp vnto God, and learne to beleue assuredly, that whatsoeuer our enemy hath mischieuously done against vs, was both suffered and sent by Gods disposition. Paule, to refraine vs from recõpensing of iniuries doth wisely putte vs in minde, that we are not to wrastle with flesh and bloud, but with the spirituall enemy the deuill, that we may prepare our selues to striue with him. But this is the most profitable lesson for the appeasing of all rages of wrath, that God doth arme as well the deuil as all wicked men to striue with vs, & that he sitteth as iudge to exercise our patience. But if the misfortunes & miseries that oppresse vs, do chaunce without the worke of men, let vs remẽber the doctrine of the law: whatsoeuer is prosperous floweth from the fountayne of Gods blessing, and that all aduersities are his cursings: and let that most terrible warning make vs afrayd: If ye walke stubbornly against me, I will also walke stubbornly against you. In which is rebuked our sluggishnesse, when according to the common sense of the flesh accompting all to be but chaunce that happeneth, of both sortes we are neither encouraged by the benefites of God to worship him, nor pricked forwarde with his scourges to repentaunce.

Lam. 3. 38. Amo. 3. 6. Esa. 45. 6. This same is the reasō, why Hieremy & Amos did so sharply rebuke ȳ Iewes, because they thought that things as wel good as euill came to passe without ȳ cōmaundement of God. To the same purpose serueth that sermon of Esay. I the God that create light & fashion darkenesse, that make peace and create euil. I God do make all these things.

9 And yet in the meane time a godly man will not winke at the inferiour causes. Neither will he, because he thinketh them the ministers of Gods goodnes by whom he hath receiued benefite, therefore let thē passe vnconsidered, as though they had deserued no thāke by their gētleneſſe: but he will hartily thinke himselfe bound vnto them, & will willingly confesse his bond, & trauail as he shallbe able and as occasion shal serue, to recompence it. Finally in benefites receiued he will reuerence and prayse God as the principall author, but he will honor men as the ministers, & as the trueth is in dede he will vnderstand that he is by the will of God bound to them, by whose hand it was Gods will to be beneficiall vnto him. If he suffer any losse by negligence or want of foresight, he will determine in his minde that the same was done in dede with the will of God, but he will impute it also to himselfe. It any man be dead by sickenesse whom he hath negligently handled, wheras of duety he should haue taken good hede vnto him although he be not ignoraunt that the man was come to his apointed time beyond which he could not passe, yet wil he not therby lessen his offense, but because he had not faithfully discharged his duety toward him, he will so take it as if he had perished by fault of his negligence. Much lesse when there is vsed any fraude, and conceiued malice of minde in committing either murther or theft, will he excuse it vnder pretence of Gods Prouidence, but he will in one selfe euill act seuerally behold both the righteousnesse of God & the wickednes of mā, as both doth manifestly shew thēselues. But principally in things to come he wil haue consideration of such inferiour causes. For he will recken it among the blessings of God if he be not disappointed of the helpes of men which he may vse for his safety. And so he neither will be negligent in taking of counsell, nor slouthfull in craning their helpe whom he seeth to haue sufficient wherof he may be succoured:

ſuccoured:but thinking that whatſoeuer creatures can any thing profit him,the ſame are offered into his hand by God,he will apply them to his vſe as the lawful inſtrumẽts of Gods Prouidence.And becauſe he doth not certainly know what ſucceſſe the buſines will haue that he goeth about, (ſauing that in all things he knoweth that the Lord will prouide for his benefit)he will with ſtudy rrauaile to ỹ which he ſhall thinke expedient for himſelfe, ſo far as he can cõceiue in minde & vnderſtanding. And yet in taking of counſels he will not be caried on by his owne wit, but will cõmit & yeld himſelfe to the wiſdom of God,that by the guiding therof he may be directed to the right end. But his confidence ſhall not ſo ſtay vpon outward helpes, that if he haue thẽ he will careleſly reſt vpon them, or if he want them he will be afraid as left deſtitute,for he will haue his minde alway faſtened vpon the Prouidence of God,neither will he ſuffer himſelfe to be drawen away from the ſtedfaſt beholding therof,by cõſideration of preſent things. So though Ioab acknowledged that ỹ ſucceſſe of battaill is in the wil & hand of God,yet he gaue not himſelfe to ſlouthfulnes but did diligently execute that which belonged to his calling, but he leaueth it vnto ỹ Lord to gouerne the end.We wil ſtand valiant(ſaith he)for our natiõ,& for the cities of our God.But the Lord do what is good in his eyes. 2. Sam. 10.12.

This knowledge ſhal deſpoile vs of raſhnes & wrõgful cõfidence,& ſhall driue vs to continuall calling vpon God: & alſo ſhal vphold our mindes with good hope,ſo as we may not dout aſſuredly and boldly to deſpiſe thoſe daungers that compaſſe vs about.

10 In this point doth the ineſtimable felicity of a godly minde ſhewe foorth it ſelfe. Innumerable are the euils that do beſeege mans life,& do threatẽ him ſo many deathes. As,not to go further than our ſelues:foraſmuch as our body is a receptacle of a thouſãd diſeaſes,yea hath encloſed & doth nouriſh within it the cauſes of diſeaſes,man can not cary himſelfe but he muſt needes alſo cary about with him many formes of his owne deſtruction, and draw foorth a life as it were entangled with death. For what may it elſe be called,where he neither is cold,norſweateth without perill?Now whetherſoeuer thou turne thee,al things ỹ are about thee are not only vntruſty friendes to thee, but do in maner openly threaten & ſeme to ſhew thee preſent death. Go into a ſhip,there is but a fote thicknes betwene thee & death. Sit on horſebacke in the ſlipping of one foote thy life is in daunger. Go through the ſtretes of the city:euẽ how manytyles are vpon ỹ houſes to ſo many perils art thou ſubiect. If there be an iron tole in thy hand or thy friendes, the harme is ready prepared. Howe many wild beaſtes thou ſeeſt, they are all armed to thy deſtruction. If thou meane

to shutte vp thy selfe, euen in a garden well fensed, where may apeare nothing but pleasauntnesse of ayre and ground, there sometime lurketh a Serpent. The house which is continually subiect to fier doth in the day time threaten thee with pouerty, & in the night time with falling vpon thy head. Thy feeld forasmuch as it lyeth open to hayle, frost, drowth and other tempestes it warneth the of barrennesse, and thereby famine. I speake not of prisonninges, treasons, robberies, open violence, of which parte do beseege vs at home, and parte do follow vs abroade. In these streightes must not man needes be most miserable, which euen in life halfe dead doth painfully draw foorth a carefull and fainting breath as if he had a swearde continually hanging ouer his necke. But thou wilt say that these thinges chaunce seldom, or at the least not alwayes, nor to all men, and neuer all at ones. I graunt, but seeing we are put in minde by ỹ examples of other, that the same things may happen to our selues, and that our life ought of duety no more to be free than theirs, it can not be but that we must dred and feare them ás things that may light vpon vs. Now what can a man imagine more miserable than such a fearefulnesse? Beside that, it is not without dishonorable reproch of God to say, that he hath set open man the noblest of all his creatures to their blinde and vnaduised strokes of fortune. But here my purpose is to speake only of the misery of man, which he should feele if he should be brought subiect vnder fortunes dominion.

11 But when that light of Gods Prouidence hath ones shined vpó a godly man: he is now releued and deliuered not only from the extreme anguish and feare wherewith he was before oppressed, but also from all care. For as iustly he feareth fortune, so he dare boldly committe himselfe to God. This is (I say) his comfort, to vnderstand that the heauenly father doth so hold in all thinges with his power, so ruleth them with his authority and countenance, so ordreth them with his wisdom, that nothing befalleth but by his apointment: and that he is receiued into Gods tuition, and committed to the charge of Angels, and can not be touched with any hurt of water, nor fier, nor weapon, but so farre as it shall please God the gouernour to giue them place. For so is it song in the Psalme. For he shal deliuer thee from the hunters snare, and from the noysom pestilence. He wil couer thee vnder his winges, and thou shalt be sure vnder his fethers. His trueth shal be thy shield and buckler. Thou shalt not be afraid of the feare of the night, nor of the arrow that flyeth by day, nor of the pestilence that walketh in the darkenesse, nor of the plage that destroyeth at noone day. And frō thense procedeth that boldnesse of the Saintes to glory

The

The Lord is my helper, I will not feare what flesh may do to me. The Lord is my protector, why shall I be afraid? If whole campes stand vp against me, if I walke in the middest of the shadow of death, I will not cease to hope well. Whence, I pray you, haue they this that their assuredneſse is neuer shakē away from them? but hereby, that where the world semeth in shew to be without order whirled about, they know that God worketh euery where, whose worke they trust shalbe for their preseruation. Now if their safety be assailed either by the deuill or by wicked men, in that case if they were not strengthened with remembrance & meditation of Prouidence, they must needes byandby be discouraged. But when they call to minde, that the deuill and all the route of the wicked, are so euery way holden in by the hand of God as with a bridle, that they can neither conceiue any mischiefe against vs, nor go about it when they haue conceiued it, nor if they go neuer so much about it, can stirre one finger to bring it to passe but so far as he shall suffer, yea so far as he shall commaunde, & that they are not only holdē fast bound with fetters, but also compelled with bridle to do seruice: here haue they aboūdantly wherwith to comfort themselues. For as it is the Lordes worke to arme their fury and to turne & direct it whether it pleaseth him, so is it his worke also to appoint measure and end, that they do not after their owne will licentiously triumphe. With which perswasion Paule being stablished, did by the sufferance of God appoint his iourney in an other place which he said was in one place hindered by Satan. If he had onely sayd that he had bin stopped by Satan, he should haue seemed to giue him to much power, as if it had bin in Satans hande to ouerthrow the very purposes of God: but when he maketh God the iudge, vpon whose sufferaunce all iourneyes do hang: he doth therwithall shew, that Satan whatsoeuer he go about, can attaine nothing but by Gods will. For the same reason doth Dauid becausе for the sundry chaunges wherewith mans life is tossed and as it were whirled about, he doth flee to this sanctuary, sayeth that his times are in the hande of God. He might haue said ther ỹ course of his life, or time in the singular number. But by the word Times, he meant to expresse that howsoeuer the state of man be unstedfast, whatsoeuer alterations do nowe and then happen, they are gouerned by God. For which cause Rasin & the king of Israell, when ioyning their powers to the destruction of Iuda, they seemed as fierbrands kindeled to wast and consume the land, are called by the Prophete smokinge brandes, which can do nothinge but breath out a little smoke. So when Pharao was terrible to all men by reason of his riches, strength and number of men, he himselfe is compared to a beast of the Sea,and his army to fishes. Therefore God sayth that he will take the Captaine and the army with his hooke and draw them whither he list. Finally because I will not tary long vpon this point, if a man marke it he shall easily see that the extremity of all miseries is the ignoraunce of Gods Prouidence,and the chiefe blessednesse standeth in the knowledge thereof.

12 Concerning the Prouidence of God, this that is sayd were enough for so much as is profitable both for the perfect learning and comfort of the faithfull, (for to fill the vaine curiosity of men, nothing can be sufficient,neither is it to be wished that they be satisfied) were it not for certaine places, which seme to meane otherwise than is aboue declared,that God hath not a stedfast and stable purpose but

20.5. hourely decreeth this or that, as euery mans deseruings are, or as he thinketh it equity and iustice. Concerning his repentaunce this we ought to hold, that the same can no more be in God, than ignorance errour and weakenesse. For if no man do wittingly & willingly throw himselfe into the case that he nede to repēt,we can not say that God doth repent, but that we must also say,that God is ignorant what will come to passe,or that he can not auoide it,or that he headlong & vnaduisedly runneth into a purpose wherof he byandby forthinketh him. But that is so far frō the meaning of the holy Ghost, that in the very mentiō making of repentance he denieth that God had any repenting at all, because he is not a man that may repent. And it is to be noted that in ỹ same chapter they are both so ioyned together, that the cōparison doth very well bring the shew of repugnancy to agreement. His changing is figuratiuely spoken, that God repented that he had

15.29. not lye,nor shalbe moued with repenting. Because he is not a man that he may repent. In which wordes his vnchangeablenesse is affir-

med plainly without any figure. Therfore it is certaine that the ordinaunce of God in disposing the matters of men, is perpetuall & aboue all repentance. And that his constance should not be doutfull, his very aduersaries haue bin cõpelled to beare him witnes. For Balaam whether he would or no, could not choose but burst out into this saying: that he is not like a man to lye: nor as a sonne of man to be changed, & that it is not possible that he should not do that he hath sayd, and not fulfill whatsoeuer he hath spoken. Nu. 23. 19.

13 What meaneth then this name of Repentaunce? euen in the same sort that all the other phrases of speach which do describe God vnto vs after the maner of men. For, because our weakenesse doth not reach to his hienesse, that description of him which is taught vs, was meete to be framed lowe to our capacity that we might vnderstande it. And this is the manner how to frame it low for vs, to paint out himselfe not such a one as he is in himselfe, but such a one as he is perceiued of vs. Where as he himselfe is without al mouing of a troubled minde, he yet testifieth that he is angry with sinners. Like as therfore when we heare that God is angry, we ought not to imagine that there is any mouing at all in him, but rather to cõsider that this spech is borowed of our cõmon sense, because God beareth a resemblance of one chafed and angry so oft as he exerciseth iudgement: so ought we to vnderstand nothing else by this word of Repentance but a châging of deedes, because men by changing of their deedes are wont to declare that they mislike them. Because then euery châge among men is an amendement of that which misliketh them, & amendement cõmeth of repentance: therefore by the name of repentance is meant that, that God chaungeth in his workes. In the meane time yet neither is his purpose nor his will turned, nor his affection changed, but he foloweth on with one continual course that which he had from eternity foreseene, allowed & decreed, howsoeuer the alteration seeme soden in the eyes of men.

14 Neither doth the holy history shew that Gods decrees were repelled when it sheweth that the destruction was pardoned to the Niniuites which had bin before pronounced, & that the life of Ezechias was prolonged after warning giuen him of death. They that so construe it are deceiued in vnderstanding of thretenings: which although they do simply affirme, yet by ẏ succesſe it shalbe perceiued that they contayned a secret condition in them. For why did God send Ionas to the Niniuites to tell them aforehande of the ruine of their city? Why did he by Esay giue Ezechias warning of death? For he might haue brought to nought both him and them without sending them any Ion. 3. 10. Esa. 35. 5 word of their deſtruction. He meant therfore an other thing, than to make them by foreknowing of their death to ſee it comming a fe of. Euen this he meant: not to haue thē deſtroyed, but to haue them amēded that they ſhould not be deſtroyed. Therefore this that Iona prophecied that Niniue ſh ould fall after 40. dayes, was done to this end that it ſhould not fall. That hope of longer life was cut of from Ezechias, was done for this purpoſe that he might obtaine longer life. Now who doth not ſee that God meant by ſuch threatninges to awake them to repentaunce, whom he made afrayd to the ende that they might eſcape the iudgement which they had deſerued by their ſinnes? If that be ſo agreed, the nature of the things themſelues doth lead vs to this, to vnderſtand in the ſimple threatening a ſecrete em-Ge. 26. 3. plied condition, which is alſo confirmed by like examples. The Lord rebuking the king Abimelech for that he had taken away Abrahams wife from him, vſeth theſe wordes. Behold thou ſhalt die for the woman that thou haſt taken, for ſhe hath a husband. But after he had excuſed himſelfe, God ſayd thus. Reſtore the wife to her husband, for he is a Prophete and ſhall pray for thee that thou maieſt liue. If not know that thou ſhalt die the death and all that thou haſt. You ſee how in his firſt ſentence he vehemently ſtriketh his minde to bring him to be more hedefully bent to make amends, & in the other doth plainly declare to him his will. Seing the meaning of other places is like: do not gather of theſe that there was any thing withdrawē from the firſt purpoſe of God, by this that he made void the thing which he had before pronoūced. For God doth prepare the way for his eternal ordinaunce, when in giuing warning of the puniſhmēt he moueth thoſe to repentance whom his wil is to ſpare, rather than varieth any thing in his will, no not in his word, ſauing that he doth not expreſſe the ſame thing in ſillables which it is yet eaſie to vnderſtād. For that ſay-

The xviij. Chapter.

That God doth ſo vſe the ſeruice of vvicked men, and ſo bovveth their mindes to put his iudgements in execution, that yet ſtill himſelfe remayneth pure from all ſpot.

THere ariſeth a hard queſtiō out of other places, where it is ſaid that God boweth and draweth at his will, Satan himſelfe & all the reprobate. For the ſenſe of the fleſh ſcarcely conceiueth how he working by thē, ſhould not gather ſome ſpot of their fault, fault, yea in his common working be free from all fault, & iuſtly cõdemne his miniſters. Vpon this was deuiſed ỹ diſtinctiõ betwene Doing & Suffering: becauſe many haue thought this dout vnpoſſible to be diſſolued: that both Satan and all the wicked are ſo vnder the hand & power of God, that he directeth their malice vnto what end it pleaſeth him, & vſeth their wicked doings to the executing of his iudgementes. And their modeſty were peraduenture excuſable, whom the ſhew of abſurdity putteth in feare, if it were not ſo that they do wrõgfully with a lying defenſe go about to deliuer the iuſtice of God frõ all vnrightfull blame. It ſemeth to thẽ vnreaſonable, that man ſhould by the will & commaundemẽt of God be made blinde, & ſo byandby be puniſhed for his blindneſſe. Therefore they ſeke to ſcape by this ſhift, that this is done by the ſufferance, but not by the will of God. But he himſelfe plainly pronouncing that he doth it, doth reiect that ſhift. As for this that mẽ do nothing but by the ſecret cõmaundement of God, & do trouble themſelues in vaine with deliberating, vnles he do by his ſecret direction ſtabliſh that which he hath before determined, it is proued by innumerable and plaine teſtimonies. It is certayne that this which we before alleged out of the Pſalme, that God doth all things that he will, belongeth to all the doings of men. If God be the certaine appointer of war & peace, as it is there ſayd, & that without exception: who dare ſay that men are caried cauſeleſſely ẅ blinde motion while God knoweth not of it, & ſitteth ſtill? But in ſpecial examples will be more lightſom plainnes. By the firſt chapter of Iob we know, that Satan doth no leſſe appere before God to receiue his cõmaundementes than do the Angels which do willingly obey. In dede it is after a diuers maner & for a diuers end, but yet ſo that he cã not go about any thinge but with the will of God. Although there ſeeme afterward to be added a bare ſufferãce of him to afflict the holy man; yet becauſe that ſaying is true: The Lord hath giuen, the Lord hath taken away, as it pleaſed God ſo is it come to paſſe. We gather that God was the author of that triall of Iob, wherof Satan & the wicked theeues were miniſters. Satan goeth about to driue the holy man by deſperation to madnes. The Sabees cruelly & wickedly do inuade & rob his goods that were none of theirs. Iob knowledgeth that he was by God ſtripped of all his goods and made poore, becauſe it ſo pleaſed God. Therefore whatſoeuer men or Satan himſelfe attempt, yet God holdeth the ſterne to turne all their trauailes to the executing of his iudgements. It was Gods will to haue the falſe king Achab deceiued: the deuill offered his ſeruice thereunto: he was ſent with a certayne commaundement, to be a lying ſpirite in the mouth of all the Propnets. If the blinding and madnes of Achab be the iudgement of God, then the deuise of bare Sufferance is vaine. For it were a fond thing to say, that the iudge doth only suffer and not also decree what he will haue done, and commaunde the ministers to put it in executiō. It was the Iewes purpose to destroy Christ, Pilate and the souldiers do follow their raging lust, and yet in a solemne prayer the disciples

2 Now as cōcerning secret motions, that which Salomō speaketh
Pro. 21. 1. of ẏ hart of a king, that it is bowed hither or thither as pleaseth God, extendeth surely to all mankinde, and is as much in effect as if he had sayd: whatsoeuer we conceiue in mindes, is by the secret inspiration of God directed to this end. And truely if he did not work in the mindes

of men, it were not rightly sayd, that he taketh away the lip from the true speakers, and wisdom frō aged men, that he taketh the hart from the Princes of the earth, that they may wander where is no beaten way. And herto belongeth that which we oft read, that men are fearfull so far forth as their harts be taken with his feare. So Dauid went out of the campe of Saule and none was ware of it, because the slepe of God was come vpon them all. But nothing can be desired to be more plainly spoken, than where he so oft pronounceth, that he blindeth the eyes of men, and striketh them with giddinesse, that he maketh them drunke with the spirite of drowsinesse, casteth them into madnes, & hardneth their harts. These things also many do referre to Sufferance, as if in forsaking the reprobate, he suffred them to be blinded by Satan. But that solution is to fonde, forasmuch as the Holy ghost in playne wordes expresseth, that they are striken with blindnesse and madnesse by the iust iudgement of God. It is sayd, that he hardned the hart of Pharao, also that he did make dull & strengthen it. Some do with an vnsauory cauillation mocke out these phrases of spech, because where in an other place it is sayd, that Pharao did harden his owne hart, there is his owne will set for the cause of his hardening. As though these things did not very well agree together, although in diuers maners, that man while he is moued in working by God, doth also worke himselfe. And I do turne backe their obiection against themselues. For, if to harden do signifie but a bare Sufferance then the very motion of obstinacy shall not be properly in Pharao. Now how weake and fooliſh were it so to expounde, as if Pharao did only suffer himselfe to be hardened? Moreouer the Scripture cutteth of all occasions from such cauillations. For God sayth, I will holde his hart. So of the inhabitauntes of the land of Canaan Moses sayth, that they went forth to battaile, because the Lord had hardened their harts. Which same thing is repeted by an other Prophet, saying: He turned their harts that they should hate his people. Againe in Esay he sayth, that he will send the Assirians against the deceitfull nation, & will commaund them to cary away the spoyles, and violently take the pray, not meaning that he will teache wicked and obstinate men to obey willingly, but that he will bow them to execute his iudgementes as if they did beare his commaundementes grauen in theyr mindes. Wherby appeareth that they were moued by the certain appointment of God. I graunt that God doth oftentimes worke in the reprobate by Satans seruice as a meane, but yet so that Satan doth his office by Gods mouing, and proceedeth so farre as is giuen him. The euill Spirite troubled Saule, but it is sayde that it was of God,

Rom. 1. 28 According to the other maner of ſpech it is ſayd, that he geueth men into a reprobate minde: & to caſt them into filthy deſires, becauſe he is the chiefe author of his owne iuſt vengeance, & Satan is but only a miniſter therof. But becauſe we muſt entreate of this matter againe in the ſecond booke, where we ſhall diſcourſe of free or bond wil of mã, I thinke I haue already ſhortly ſpoken ſo much as this place required. Let this be the ſumme of all, that foraſmuch as the wil of God is ſaid to be the cauſe of all things, his Prouidence is thought the gouerner in all purpoſes & workes of men, ſo as it ſheweth forth her force not only in the elect, which are gouerned by the holy Spirit, but alſo cõpelleth the reprobate to obedience.

3 Foraſmuch as hitherto I haue recited onely ſuch things as are wrytten in the Scriptures, plainly & not doutfully, let them that feare not wrongfully to ſclander the heauenly oracles, take hede what maner of iudgement they take vpon them. For if by fayned pretending of ignorance they ſeeke a praiſe of modeſty, what can be imagined more proudly done, than that to ſette one ſmall word againſt the authority of God? as I thinke otherwiſe, I like not to haue this touched. But if they openly ſpeake euill, what preuaile they with ſpitting againſt the heauen? But this is no new example of waywardneſſe, becauſe there haue bin in all ages wicked & vngodly men, that with raging mouth barked againſt this point of doctrine. But they ſhall feele that things in deede to be true, which long ago the holy Ghoſt ſpake by the

Dauid doth by the way rebuke the madneſſe of men in this ſo vnbridled licentiouſneſſe, that of their owne filthineſſe they do not onely argue againſt God, but alſo take vpon them power to condemne him. In the meane time he ſhortly admoniſheth, that the blaſphemies which they vomite vp againſt the heauen do not reach vnto God, but that

For firſt where they obiect, that if nothing happen but by the will of God, then are there in him two contrary willes, becauſe he decreeth thoſe things

by secret purpose, which he hath openly forbidden by his law, that is easily wiped away. But before I aunswere it, I will ones againe geue the readers warning that this cauillation is throwen out not against me, but against the holy Ghost, which taught the holy man Iob this confession: As it pleased God, so it came to passe. When he was spoiled by theues, he acknowledged in the iniurie and hurte that they did him, the iust scourge of God. What saieth the Scripture in other places? The sonnes of Hely obeyed not their Father, because it was Gods will to kill them. Also an other Prophet crieth out, that God which sitteth in heauen doth what so euer he will. And now I haue shewed plainly enough that God is the author of all those thinges which these iudges woulde haue to happen onely by his idle sufferance. He testifieth that he createth light and darkenesse, that he formeth good and euill, that no euill happeneth which he himselfe hath not made. Let them tell me, I beseech them, whether he do willingly or against his will execute his owne iudgementes? But as Moses teacheth, that he which is slaine by the falling of an axe by chaunce, is deliuered by God into the hand of the striker: so the whole church saieth in Luke, that Herode and Pilate conspired to do those thinges, whiche the hande and purpose of God had decreed. And truly if Christ were not crucified with the will of God, whense came redemption to vs? And yet the will of God neither doth striue with it selfe, nor is chaunged, nor faineth that he willeth not the thing that he will: but where it is but one and simple in him, it semeth to vs manyfolde, because according to the weakenesse of our wit we conceiue not how God in diuers maner willeth and willeth not one selfe thing. Paule, after that he hath said, that the calling of the Gētiles is a hidde misterie, within a litle after saieth further, that in it was manifestly shewed the manyfolde wisedom of God: because for the dullnesse of our witte the wisedom of God seemeth to vs manyfolde, or (as the olde interpretour hath translated it) of many fashions: shall we therefore dreame that there is any varietie in God himselfe, as though he either chaungeth his purpose, or dissenteth from himselfe? Rather when we conceiue not how God will haue the thing to be done, which he forbiddeth to do, let vs call to minde our owne weakenesse, and therwithall consider that the light wherin he dwelleth, is not without cause called Inaccessible, by cause it is couered with darkenesse. Therfore all godly and sobre men will easily agree to this sentence of Augustine, that sometime mā with good will willeth that which God willeth not. As if a good sonne willeth to haue his father to liue, whom God will haue to die. Againe, it may come to passe, that man may will the same thing with an euill will, which God willeth with a good will. As if an euill ſonne willeth to haue his father to die, and God alſo willeth the ſame. Now the firſt of theſe two ſonnes willeth that which God willeth not, & the other ſonne willeth that which God alſo willeth, and yet the naturalneſſe of the firſt ſonne doth better agree with the will of God, although he willeth a contrary thing, than the vnnaturalneſſe of the other ſonne that willeth the ſame thing. So great a difference is there what to will doth belong to man, and what to God, & to what ende the will of euery one is to be applied, to haue it either allowed or diſalowed. For thoſe thinges which God willeth well he bringeth to paſſe by the euill willes of euill men. But a littel before he had ſaid, that the Angels apoſtataes in their falling away, and all the reprobate, in as much as concerneth them ſelues, did that which God woulde not, but in reſpect of the omnipotencie of God, they coulde by no meanes ſo do, becauſe while they did againſt the will of God, the will of God was done vpon them. Whervpon he crieth out: Great are the workes of God, and ought to be ſought out of all them that loue them: that in meruailous maner the ſame thing is not done without his will which is alſo done againſt his will, becauſe it coulde not be done if he did not ſuffre it: and yet he doth it not againſt his will, but willingly: and he being good, would not ſuffer a thing to be done euill, vnleſſe for that he is omnipotent, he coulde of euill make good.

4 In the ſame maner is aſſoiled or rather vaniſheth away the other obiection: that if God do not onely vſe the ſeruice of wicked men, but alſo gouerneth their counſels and affections, he is the author of all wicked doinges, and therfore men are vnworthily condemned, if they execute that which God hath decreed, becauſe they obey his will: for it is done amiſſe to confound his will and commaundement together, which it appeareth by innumerable examples to differ farre aſunder. For though when Abſalon abuſed his fathers wiues, it was Gods will to puniſh Dauids adulterie with that diſhonor: yet did he not therefore commaunde the wicked ſonne to committe inceſte, vnleſſe perhap you meane it in reſpect of Dauid, as he ſpeaketh of the railinges of Semei. For when he confeſſeth that Semei raileth at him by the commaundement of God, he doth not therin commende his obedience, as if that froward dogge did obey the commaũdement of God, but acknowledging his tongue to be the ſcourge of God, he patiently ſuffreth to be corrected. And this is to be holden in minde, that when God performeth by the wicked that thing which he decreed by his ſecret iudgemẽt, they are not to be excuſed, as though they did obey his commaundement, which in dede of their owne euill luſt they do purposely breake. Now how that thing is of God, and is ruled by his secret Prouidence, which men do wickedly, the election of king Iarobeam is a plaine example, in which the rashenesse and madnesse of the people is seuerly condemned, for that they peruerted the order apointed by God, and falsely fell from the house of Dauid, and yet we know it was his will that he shoulde be annointed. Whervpon in the very wordes of Osee there appereth a certaine shew of repugnãcie, that where God complayned that that kingdome was erected without his knowledge, and against his will, in an other place he saith, that he gaue the kingdome to Iarobeam in his rage. How shall these sayinges agree? that Iarobeam reigned not by God, and that he was made king by the same God? Euen thus, because neither coulde the people fall from the house of Dauid, but that they must shake of the yoke which God had layed vpon them: neither yet had God his libertie taken away, but that he might so punish the vnthankefulnesse of Salomon. We see therfore how God in not willing false breach of allegeance, yet to an other end iustly willeth a falling away from their prince, whervpon Iarobeam beside all hope was by holy annointing driuen to be king. After this maner doth the holy historie say, that there was an ennemie raised vp to spoile Salomons sonne of part of his kingdome. Let the readers diligently wey both these thinges, because it had pleased God to haue the people gouerned vnder the hand of one king. Therefore when it was diuided in two partes it was done against his will. And yet the diuision tooke beginning of his will. For surely, where as the Prophet both by wordes and ceremonie of anointing did moue Iarobeam when he thought of no such thing, to hope of the kingdome, this was not done without the knowledge or against the will of God, which commaunded it so to be done: and yet is the rebellion of the people iustly condemned, for that as it were against the will of God, they fell from the posteritie of Dauid. In this maner it is also afterward further said, that where Rehabeam proudely despised the requeste of the people, this was done by God to confirme the word which he had spoken by the hand of Ahiha, his seruant. Lo how against Gods will the sacred vnitie is torne in sunder, and yet with the will of the same God tenne tribes do forsake Salomons sonne. Let vs adde an other like example. Where the people consenting, yea laying their handes vnto it, the sonnes of Ahab were slaine, & all his offspring rooted out. Iehu said in deede truely, that nothing of the wordes of God were fallen to the grounde, but that he had done all that he had spoken by the hande of his seruant Elias. And yet not vniustly he rebuketh the citezens of Samaria, for that they had put their handes vn-

to it. Are ye righteous, saith he, If I haue conspired against my lord, who hath killed all these? I haue before (as I thinke) already declared plainly, how in one selfe worke both the faulte of man doth bewray it selfe, and also the righteousnesse of God gloriously apeareth. And for modest wittes this aunswere of Augustine shall alway suffise: where as the father deliuered the sonne, & Christ deliuered his body, & Iudas deliuered the Lord: why in this deliuering is God righteous, and man faultie? becausse in the same one thing which they did, the cause was not one, for which they did it. If any be more combered with this that we now saie, that there is no consent of God with man, where man by the righteous mouing of God doth that which is not lawfull, let them remember that which Augustine saith in an other place: Who shall not tremble at these iudgementes, where God worketh euen in the hartes of euill men what so euer he will, and yet rendreth to them according to their deseruinges? And truely in the falsehoode of Iudas, it shall be no more lawfull to laie the blame of the wicked deede to God, becausse he himselfe willed him to be deliuered, and did deliuer him to death, then it shalbe to geue away the praise of our redemption to Iudas. Therfore the same writer doth in an other place truely tel vs, that in this examinatiō God doth not enquire what men might haue done, or what they haue done, but what their will was to do, that purpose and will may come into the accompt. They that thinke this harde, let them a litle while consider, how tolerable their owne waywardenesse is, while they refuse a thing witnessed by plaine testimonies of Scripture, becausse it excedeth their capacitie, and do finde faulte that those thinges are vttered, which God, vnlesse he had knowen them profitable to be knowen, woulde neuer haue commaunded to be taught by his Prophetes and Apostles. For our being wise ought to be no more but to embrace with meke willingnesse to learne, and that without exception whatsoeuer is taught in the holy Scriptures. As for them that do more frowardly outrage in prating against it, sith it is euident that they babble against God, they are not worthy of a longer confutation.

THE

THE SECOND BOOKE OF THE INSTITVTION OF CHRISTIAN RELIGION, WHICH intreateth of the knowledge of God the Redemer in Christ, which knowledge was first opened to the Fathers in the time of the Lawe, and then to vs in the Gospell.

The first Chapter.

That by Adames sinne and falling away, mankinde became accursed, and did degenerate from his first estate: wherin is intreated of Originall sinne.

NOT without cause hath the Knowledge of himselfe bin in the olde prouerbe so much commended to man. For if it be thought a shame to be ignorant of all thinges that pertaine to the course of mans life, then much more shameful is the Not knowing of our selues, whereby it commeth to passe, that in taking coũsell of any thing necessary, we be miserably daseled, yea altogether blinded. But how much more profitable this lesson is, so much more diligently must we take heede, that we do not disordrely vse it, as we see some of the Philosophers haue done. For they in exhorting man to know him selfe, do withall appoint this to be the ende, why he shoulde know him selfe, that he shoulde not be ignorant of his owne dignitie and excellencie: and nothing els do they will him to beholde in himselfe, but that wherby he may swell with vaine confidence, and be puffed vp with pride. But the knowledge of our selues, first standeth in this pointe, that considering what was geuen vs in creation, and how bountifully God continueth his gracious fauour toward vs, we may know how great had bin the excellencie of our nature, if it had cõtinued vncorrupted: and we may withall thinke vpon this, that there is nothing in vs of our owne, but that we haue as gotten by borrowing all that God hath bestowed vpõ vs, that we may alwaies hang vpon him. Then, that we call to minde our miserable estate after the fall of Adam, the feeling wherof may throw downe all glorying and trust of our selues, ouerwhelme vs with shame and truely humble vs. For as God at the beginning fashioned vs like his owne image, to the ende to raise vp our mindes both to the Gen. 27 ſtudy of vertue and to the meditation of eternall life, ſo leaſt the ſo great nobleneſſe of our kinde, which maketh vs different from brute beaſtes, ſhoulde be drowned with our ſlothfulneſſe, it is good for vs to know, that we are therfore endued with reaſon and vnderſtanding, that in keping a holy and honeſt life, we ſhoulde procede on forward to the appointed ende of bleſſed immortalitie. But the firſt dignitie can not come in our minde, but byandby on the otherſide the heauy ſight of our filthineſſe and ſhame doth thruſt it ſelfe in preſence, ſince we in the perſon of the firſt man are fallen from our firſt eſtate, where vpon groweth the hatred and lothing of our ſelues, and true humilitie, & there is kindeled a new deſire to ſeeke for God, in whom euery of vs may recouer thoſe good thinges, wherof we are founde altogither voide and emptie.

2 This thing ſurely the truth of God appointeth to be ſought in examining of our ſelues, I meane, it requireth ſuch a knowledge as may both call vs away from all confidence of our owne power, and making vs deſtitute of all matter to glory vpon, may bring vs to ſubmiſſion. Which rule it behoueth vs to keepe, if we will attaine to the true marke both of right knowledge and welldoing. Neither yet am I ignorant how much more pleaſant is that other opinion that alloureth vs rather to conſider our good thinges, than to looke vpon our miſerable nedyneſſe and diſhonor, which ought to ouerwhelme vs with ſhame. For there is nothing that mans nature more coueteth, than to be ſtroked with flatterie: and therefore when he heareth the giftes that are in him to be magnyfied, he leaneth to that ſide with ouermuch lightneſſe of belefe: wherby it is ſo much leſſe to be marueilled, that herein the greateſt parte of men haue perniciouſly erred. For ſith there is naturally planted in all mortal men a more than blinde loue of them ſelues, they do moſt willingly perſwade them ſelues, that there is nothing in them that they ought worthyly to hate. So without any maintenance of other, this moſt vaine opinion doth ech where get credit, that man is aboundantly ſufficient of him ſelfe to make him ſelfe liue well and bleſſedly. But if there be any that are content to thinke more modeſtly, howe ſoeuer they graunt ſomewhat to God, leaſt they ſhoulde ſeeme arrogantly to take all to them ſelues, yet they ſo parte it, that the principall matter of glory and confidence alway remaineth with them ſelues. Now if there come talke, that with her allurementes tickeleth the pride that already of it ſelfe itcheth within the bones, there is nothing that may more delite them. Therefore as any hath with his extolling moſt fauourably aduaunced the excellencie of mans nature, ſo hath he bin accepted with the well lyking reioicement in manner of all ages. But what ſoeuer ſuch commendacion there be of mans excellencie that teacheth man to reſte in him ſelfe, it doth nothing but delite with that her ſweteneſſe, and in dede ſo deceiueth, that it bringeth to moſt wretched deſtruction all them that aſſent vnto it. For to what purpoſe auaileth it for vs, ſtanding vpon all vaine confidence to deuiſe, apoint, attempt and go about thoſe thinges that we thinke to be for our behoofe, and in our firſt beginning of enterpriſe to be forſakē and deſtitute of ſounde vnderſtanding and true ſtrength, and yet to go on boldely till we fall downe into deſtruction? But it can not otherwiſe happen to them that haue affiaunce that they can do any thing by their owne power. Therfore if any man geue heede to ſuch teachers that holde vs in conſidering onely our owne good thinges, he ſhall not profite in learning to know him ſelfe, but ſhall be carried violently away into the worſt kinde of ignoraunce.

3 Therfore, where as in this point the trueth of God doth agree with the common naturall meaning of all men, that the ſecond part of wiſedome conſiſteth in the knowledge of our ſelues, yet in the very manner of knowing there is muche diſagreement. For by the iudgement of the fleſh, a man thinketh that he hath then well ſearched himſelfe, when truſting vpon his owne vnderſtanding and integritie, he taketh boldeneſſe, and encourageth him ſelfe to doing the dueties of vertue and bidding battell to vices, trauaileth with all his ſtudie to bende himſelfe to that which is comly and honeſt. But he that loketh vpon and trieth himſelfe by the rule of Gods iudgement, findeth nothing that may raiſe vp his minde to good affiance: and the more inwardely that he hath examined him ſelfe, the more he is diſcouraged, till being altogether ſpoiled of all confidence, he leaueth to himſelfe nothing towarde the well ordering of his life. And yet woulde not God haue vs to forgette the firſt nobleneſſe that he gaue to our father Adam, which ought of good right to awake vs to the ſtudie of righteouſneſſe and goodneſſe. For we can not conſider either our owne firſt eſtate, or to what ende we are created, but we ſhalbe pricked forwarde to ſtudie vpon immortalitie, and to deſire the kingedome of God. But that conſideration is ſo farre from putting vs in courage, that rather diſcouraging vs, it throweth vs doune to humbleneſſe. For what is that firſt eſtate of ours? euen that from whence we are fallen. What is that ende of our creation? euen the ſame from which we are altogether turned away: ſo that lothing our owne miſerable eſtate, we may grone for ſorrowe, and in groning may alſo ſigh for the loſſe of that dignitie. But now when we ſay that man ought to beholde nothing in himſelfe that may make him of bolde courage, we meane that there is nothing in him vpon affiance wherof he ought to be proude. Wherfore, if any liſt to heare what knowledge man ought to haue of himſelfe, let vs thus diuide it, that firſt he conſider to what ende he is created, & endued with giftes that are not to be deſpiſed, by which thought he may be ſtyrred vp to the meditatiō of the hearing of God and of the life to come. Then let him weye his owne ſtrength, or rather needy want of ſtrength, by perceiuing whereof he may lie in extreme confuſion, as one vtterly brought to naught. The firſt of theſe conſiderations tendeth to this ende, that he may know what is his duetie: and the other, how much he is able to do towarde the perfourming of it. We will entreate of them both, as the order of teaching ſhall require.

4 But bicauſe it muſt nedes be that it was not a light negligence, but a deteſtable wicked acte which God ſo ſeuerely puniſhed, we muſt conſider the very fourme of the ſame in the fall of Adam, that kindeled the horrible vengeaunce of God vpon all mankinde. It is a childiſh opinion that hath commonly bin receiued, concerning the intemperaūce of glottonie, as though the ſumme and head of all vertues conſiſted in the forbearing of one only frute, when there flowed on euery ſide ſtore of all ſortes of deinties that were to be deſired, and when in that bleſſed frutefulneſſe of the earth, there was not onely plenty, but alſo varietie to make fare for pleaſure. Therefore we muſt looke further, bicauſe the forbidding him from the tree of the knowledge of good and euill, was the triall of obedience, that Adam in obeying might proue that he was willingly ſubiect to the gouernemēt of God. And the name of the tree it ſelfe ſheweth, that that commaundement was geuen for none other ende, than for this that he contented with his owne eſtate, ſhoulde not with wicked luſt aduaunce himſelfe higher. But the promiſe whereby he was bidden to hope for eternall life, ſo long as he did not eate of the tree of life, and againe the horrible threatening of death ſo ſone as he ſhoulde taſte of the tree of knowledge of good and euill, ſerued to proue and exerciſe his faith. Herof it is not harde to gather, by what meanes Adam prouoked the wrath of God againſt him ſelfe. Auguſtine in deede ſaieth not amiſſe, when he ſaieth, that pride was the beginning of all euils. For if ambitiō had not lifted vp man higher than was lawfull and than was permitted him, he might haue continued in his eſtate: but we muſt fetch a more full definition from the maner of the tentation that Moſes deſcribeth. For ſith the woman was with the deceit of the Serpent led away by infidelitie, now it appeareth that diſobedience was the beginning ginning of the fall. Which thing Paule confirmeth, teaching that all men were loſte by one mans diſobedience. But it is withall to be noted, that the firſt man fell from the ſubiection of God, for that he not onely was taken with the entiſementes of Satan, but alſo deſpiſing the trueth, did turne out of the waie to lying. And ſurely Gods worde being ones deſpiſed, all reuerence of God is ſhaken of. Bicauſe his maieſtie doth no other waies abide in honor among vs, nor the worſhip of him remaine inuiolate, but while we hang vpon his mouth. Therfore infidelitie was the roote of that falling away. But therupon aroſe ambition and pride, to which was adioyned vnthankefulneſſe, for that Adam in coueting more than was graunted, did vnreuerently deſpiſe the ſo great liberalitie of God wherwith he was enriched. And this was a mõſtruous wickedneſſe, that the ſonne of the earth thought it a ſmall thing that he was made after the likeneſſe of God, vnleſſe he might alſo be made egall with God. If Apoſtaſie be a filthy and deteſtable offence, wherby man withdraweth him ſelfe from the allegeaunce of his creatour, yea outrageouſly ſhaketh of his yoke: then it is but vaine to extenuate the Sinne of Adam. Albeit it was no ſimple Apoſtaſie, but ioyned with ſhameſull reproches againſt God, while they aſſented to the ſclaunders of Satan, wherin he accuſed God of lying, enuie, and niggardly grudging. Finally, infidelitie opened the gate to ambition, ambition was the mother of obſtinate rebellion, to make men caſt away the feare of God, and throw themſelues whether their luſt caried them. Therfore Bernard doth rightly teach that the gate of ſaluation is opened vnto vs, when at this day we receiue the Goſpell by our eares: euen as by the ſame windowes, when they ſtode open to Satan, death was let in. For Adam woulde neuer haue bin ſo bolde, as to do againſt the commaundement of God, but for this that he did not beleue his worde. Truely this was the beſt bridle for the right keping of all affections in good order, to thinke that ther is nothing better than to kepe righteouſneſſe in obeying the commaundementes of God, and then that the chiefe ende of happy life is to be beloued of him. He therfore being carried away with the blaſphemies of the Deuill, did (aſmuch as in him lay) extinguiſh the whole glory of God. Rom. 5. 19.

5 As the ſpirituall life of Adam was, to abide ioyned and bounde to his creatour, ſo his alienation from him was the death of his ſoule. Neither is it maruell if he by his falling away, deſtroyed all his owne poſteritie, which peruerted the whole order of nature in heauen and in earth. All the creatures do grone, ſaith Paule, being made ſubiect to corruption againſt their will. If one ſhould aſke the cauſe: no doubt Rom. 8.

it is for that they beare parte of that punishment that man deserued, for whose vse they were created. Sith thē the curse that goth throughout all the coastes of the worlde proceded from his fault both vpward and downewarde, it is nothing against reason, if it spread abrode into all his issue. Therfore after that the heauenly image in him was defaced, he did not alone suffer this punishment, that in place of wisdom, strength, holynesse, truth, and iustice (with which ornamentes he had bin clothed) there came in the most horrible pestilences, blindnesse, weakenesse, filthinesse, falsehode, and iniustice, but also he entangled and drowned his whole offspring in the same miseries. This is the corruption that commeth by inheritaunce, which the olde writers called original sinne, meaning by this worde sinne, the corruption of nature, which before was good and pure. About which matter they haue had much contention, bycause there is nothing farther of from common reason, than all men to be made giltie of one mans fault, and so the sinne to become common. Which semeth to haue bin the cause why the oldest Doctors of the Church did but darkely touch this point, or at least did not set it out so plainly as was conuenient. And yet that fearefulnesse could not bring to passe, but that Pelagius arose, whose prophane inuention was that Adam sinned onely to his owne losse, and hurted not his posteritie. So through this sutteltie, Satan went about by hiding the disease, to make it incurable. But when it was proued by manifest testimonie of Scripture, that sinne passed from the first man into all his posteritie, he brought this cauillation, that it passed by imitation, but not by propagation. Therefore good men trauelled in this point, and aboue all other Augustine, to shew that we are corrupted not by forrein wickednesse, but that we bring with vs from the wombe of our mother a viciousnesse planted in our begetting, which to deny was to great shamelesnesse. But the rashnesse of the Pelagians and Celestians will not seeme maruelous to him, which by the writinges of the holy man shal perceaue, how shameless beastes they were in all other thinges. Surely it is not doutefully spoken that Dauid confesseth that he was begotten in iniquities, and by his mother conceaued in sinne. He doth not there accuse the sinnes of his father or mother, but the better to set forth the goodnesse of God towarde him, he beginneth the confession of his owne wickednesse at his very begetting. Forasmuch as it is euidēt that that was not peculiar to Dauid alone, it followeth that the common estate of all mankinde is noted vnder his example. All we therfore that descend of vncleane seede, are borne infected which the contagion of sinne, yea before that we see the light of this life, we be in the sight of God filthy and spotted.

Psa. 51. 7.

Ioh. 14. 4.

For

For who coulde geue cleane of the vncleanneſſe? not one: as it is in the booke of Iob.

6 We heare that the vncleanneſſe of the parentes ſo paſſeth into the children, that all without any exception at their beginning are defiled. But of this defiling we ſhall not finde the beginning, vnleſſe we go vp to the firſt parent of all vs, to the well head. Thus it is therfore, that Adam was not only the progenitor, but alſo the roote of mans nature, and therefore in his corruption was all mankinde worthely corrupted: which the Apoſtle maketh plaine by comparing of him and Chriſt. As (ſaith he) by one man ſinne entred into the whole world, and death by ſinne, and ſo death went ouer all men, foraſmuch as all haue ſinned: ſo by the grace of Chriſt, righteouſneſſe and life is reſtored vnto vs. What will the Pelagians here prate? that Adams ſinne was ſpread abroad by imitation? Then haue we no other profit by the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt, but that he is an example ſet before vs to follow? Who can abide ſuch robberie of Gods honor? If it be out of queſtion that Chriſtes righteouſneſſe is ours by communication, and therby life: it followeth alſo, that they both were ſo loſt in Adam, as they be recouered in Chriſt: and that ſinne and death ſo crept in by Adam, as they are aboliſhed by Chriſt. The wordes are plaine, that many are made righteous by the obediēce of Chriſt, as by the diſobedience of Adam they were made ſinners: and that therfore betwene them two is this relation, that Adam wrapping vs in his deſtruction, deſtroied vs with him, & Chriſt with his grace reſtored vs to ſaluation. In ſo cleare light of truth, I thinke we nede not a longer or more laborous proofe. So alſo in the firſt Epiſtle to the Corinthians, when he goeth about to ſtabliſh the godly in the truſt of the reſurrectiō, he ſheweth that the life is couered in Chriſt that was loſt in Adam, he that pronounceth, that we all are dead in Adam, doth alſo therwithall plainly teſtifie, that we were infected with the filth of ſinne. For damnation coulde not reach vnto thē that were touched with no giltineſſe of iniquitie. But it can be no way plainlyer vnderſtāded what he meaneth, than by relation of the other member of the ſentence, where he teacheth that hope of life is reſtored in Chriſt. But it is well enough knowen that the ſame is done no other way, than whē by maruellous maner of cōmunicating, Chriſt poureth into vs the force of his righteouſneſſe. As it is written in an other place, that the ſpirite is life vnto vs, for righteouſneſſe ſake. Therfore we may not otherwiſe expounde that which is ſaid that we are dead in Adam, but thus, that he in ſinning did not onely purchaſe miſcheefe and ruine to himſelfe, but alſo threw downe our nature headlong into like deſtruction. And that not

Rom. 8. 10.

onely to the corruption of himselfe, which pertaineth nothing to but because he infected all his sede with the same corruption whe Ephe. 2. 3. into he was fallen. For otherwise the saying of Paule coulde not stan true, that all are by nature the sonns of wrath, if they were not alrea dy accursed in the wombe. And it is easily gathered, that nature there meant not such as it were create by God, but such as it was co rupted in Adam. For it were not cõuenient, that God should be mad the author of Death. Adam therfore so corrupted him selfe, that th infectiõ passed from him into all his offspring. And the heauenly iud Ioh. 3. 6 himselfe Christ, doth also plainly enough pronoũce, that all are born euill and corrupted, where he teacheth, that what soeuer is borne o flesh, is flesh, and that therefore the gate of life is closed against a men, vntill they be begotten againe.

7 Neither for the vnderstanding thereof is any curiouse disputa tion nedefull, which not a litle combred the olde writers, whethe
the soule of the sonne do procede by deriuation from the soule of th father, bycause in it the infection principally resteth. We must b content with this, that such giftes as it pleased the Lord to haue be stowed vpon the nature of man, he left them with Adam, and there fore when Adam lost them after he had receiued them, he lost the not onely from himselfe, but also from vs all. Who shall be carefull o a conueyance from soule to soule, when he shall heare that Adam re ceiued these ornamentes which he lost, no lesse for vs than for him selfe? that they were not geuen to one man alone, but assigned to th whole nature of man? Therefore it is not against reason, if he bein spoiled, nature be left naked and poore: if he being infected wit Sinne, the infection crepeth into nature. Therfore from a rotten roo arose vp rotten branches, which sent their rottennesse into the othe twigges that sprong out of them. For so were the children corrupte in the father, that they also were infectiue to their children: that is say, so was the beginning of corruption in Adam, that by continua flowyng from one to an other, it is conueyed from the aunceſters in to the posteritie. For the infection hath not her cause in the substãc of the flesh or of the soule, but bycause it was so ordeyned of God that suche giftes as he had geuen to the first man, man shoulde both haue them, and lose them as well for him selfe as for his. As for this that the Pelagians do cauill, that it is not likely that the childre do take corruption from godly parentes, sith they ought rather * Cõtra Pelag. & Celest. be sanctified by their cleanneſſe, that is easely confuted. For they des cende not of their spirituall regeneration, but of their carnall gene ration.* Therefore, as Augustine sayeth, whether the vnbeleuer be condemned as giltie, and the beleuer quitte as innocent, they both do beget not innocentes, but giltie, bycauſe they beget of the corrupted nature. Now where as they do in manner partake of the parentes holineſſe, that is the ſpeciall bleſſing of the people of God, which proueth not but that the firſt and vniuerſall curſe of mankinde went before. For of nature is giltineſſe, and ſanctification is of ſupernaturall grace.

8 And to the ende that theſe thinges be not ſpoken of a thing vncertaine and vnknowen, lette vs define Originall ſinne. But yet I meane not to examine all the definitions that are made by writers, but I will bring forth one onely, which I thinke to be moſt agreable with trueth. Originall ſinne therefore ſemeth to be the inheritably deſcending peruerſneſſe and corruption of our nature, poured abroade into all the partes of the ſoule, which firſt maketh vs giltie of the wrath of God, and then alſo bringeth forth theſe workes in vs, which the Scripture calleth the workes of the fleſh: and that is it properly that Paule oftentimes calleth Sinne. And theſe workes that ariſe out of it, as are adulteries, fornications, theftes, hatreds, murthers, banketinges, after the ſame manner he calleth the fruites of ſinne, albeit they are likewiſe called ſinnes both commonly in the Scripture, and alſo by the ſame Paule him ſelfe. Therefore theſe two thinges are diſtinctly to be noted: that is, that being ſo in all partes of our nature corrupted and peruerted, we are now euen for ſuche corruption onely holden worthily damned and conuicted before God, to whom is nothing acceptable but righteouſneſſe, innocencie and pureneſſe. And yet is not that bonde in reſpect of an others faulte. For where it is ſaid, that by the ſinne of Adam we are made ſubiect to the iudgement of God, it is not ſo to be taken, as if we innocent and vndeſeruing did beare the blame of his faulte. But bycauſe by his offending we are all clothed with the curſe, therefore it is ſaid that he hath bounde vs. Neuertheleſſe, from him not the puniſhement onely came vpon vs, but alſo the infection diſtilled from him, abideth in vs, to the which the puniſhment is iuſtly due. Wherefore howe ſo euer Auguſtine doeth oftentimes call it an others ſinne, (to ſhewe the more plainely, that it is conueyed into vs by propagation) yet doeth he alſo affirme withall that it is propre to euery one. And the Apoſtle him ſelfe expreſſely witneſſeth, that therefore death came vpon all menne, bycauſe all men haue ſinned, and are wrapped in Originall ſinne, and defiled with the ſpottes thereof. And therefore the very infantes themſelues, while they bring with them their owne damnation from their mothers wombe, are bounde,

Gal. 5. 19.

not by an others, but by their owne faulte. For though they haue not as yet brought forth the fruites of their owne iniquitie, yet they haue the ſeede thereof encloſed within them: yea their whole nature is a certaine ſeede of Sinne: therefore it can not be but hateful and abhominable to God. Wherevpon followeth, that it is properly accompted ſinne before God: for there coulde be no giltineſſe without ſinne. The other point is, that this peruerſeneſſe neuer ceſſeth in vs, but continually bringeth forth newe frutes, euen the ſame workes of the fleſhe that we haue before deſcribed: like as a burning fornace bloweth out flame and ſparcles, or as a ſpring doeth without ceaſſing caſt out water. Therefore they which haue defined Originall ſinne, to be a lacking of Originall righteouſneſſe which ought to haue bin in vs, although in deede they comprehende all that is in the thing it ſelfe: yet they haue not fully enough expreſſed the force and efficacie thereof. For our nature is not onely bare and emptie of goodneſſe, but alſo is ſo plenteous and frutefull of all euilles, that it can not be idle. They that haue ſaide, that it is a concupiſcence, haue vſed a worde not very farre from the matter, if this were added, which is not graunted by the moſt parte, that what ſo euer is in man, euen from the vnderſtanding to the will, from the ſoule to the fleſh, is corrupted and ſtuffed ful with this concupiſcence: or, to ende it ſhortlier, that whole man is of him ſelfe nothinge els but concupiſcence.

9 Wherfore, I haue ſaide that all the partes of the ſoule are poſſeſſed of ſinne, ſith Adam fell awaye from the fountaine of righteouſneſſe. For not onely the inferiour appetite allured him, but wicked impietie poſſeſſed the very caſtle of his minde, and pride pearced to the innermoſt parte of his hearte. So that it is a fonde and fooliſh thing, to reſtraine the corruption that proceded from thence, onely to the ſenſuall motions as they call them, or to call it a certaine nouriture, that allureth, ſtirreth and draweth to ſinne onely that parte, which among them is called Senſualitie. Wherein Peter Lombarde hath diſcloſed his groſſe ignoraunce, which ſeeking and ſearching for the place of it, ſaith that it is in the fleſh, as Paule witneſſeth, not proprely in dede, but bycauſe it more appeareth in the fleſh, as though Paule did meane onely a parte of the ſoule, and not the whole nature which is in compariſon ſet againſt ſupernaturall grace. And Paule there taketh away all doubte: teaching that corruption reſteth not in one parte alone, but that nothing is pure and cleane from the deadly infection thereof. For entreating of corrupted nature, he doth not onely condemne the inordinate motions of appetites that appeare,

but specially trauaileth to proue that the vnderstanding minde is subiecte to blindenesse, and the hearte to peruersnesse. And the same third chapter to the Romaines is nothing els but a description of originall sinne. That appeareth more plainely by the renewing. For the spirite which is compared with the olde man and the flesh, doth not onely signifie the grace whereby the inferiour or sensuall parte of the soule is amended, but also conteineth a full reformation of all the partes. And therefore Paule doth commaund, not onely that our grosse appetites be brought to naught, but also that we our selues be renewed in the spirite of our minde, as likewise in an other place he biddeth vs to be transformed in newnesse of minde. Wherupon followeth, that the same parte, wherein most of all shineth the excellence and nobleneſſe of the soule, is not onely wounded, but also so corrupted, that it needeth not onely to be healed, but in manner to put on a newe nature. How farre sinne possesseth both the vnderstanding minde and the hearte, we will see hereafter. Here I onely purposed shortely to touch that the whole man from the heade to the foote is so ouerwhelmed as with an ouerflowing of water, that no parte of him is free from sinne, and that therefore what soeuer procedeth from him is accompted for sinne, as Paule saith, that all the affections of the flesh or thoughtes, are enmities against God, and therefore death.

Eph. 4. 27.

Rom. 12. 2.

Rom. 8. 7.

10 Now let them go, that presume to make God author of their sinnes, bycause we say that menne are naturally sinnefull. They do wrongfully seeke the worke of God in their owne filthynesse, which they ought rather to haue sought in the nature of Adam, while it was yet sounde and vncorrupted. Therefore our destruction commeth of the faulte of our owne flesh and not of God, for asmuch as we perished by no other meane but by this, that we degendred from our first estate. But yet let not any man here murmure and say, that God might haue better foreseen for our saluation, if he had prouided that Adam shoulde not haue fallen. For this obiection both is to be abhorred of all godly mindes, for the to much presumptuous curiositie of it, and also perteineth to the secret of predestination which shall after be entreated of in place conuenient. Wherefore let vs remembre that our fall is to be imputed to the corruption of nature, that we accuse not God himselfe the author of nature. True in dede it is, that the same deadely wounde sticketh fast in nature: but it is muche materiall to knowe, whether it came into nature from elswhere, or from the beginning hath rested in it. But it is euident that the wounde was geuen by sinne. Therefore there is no cause why we shoulde complaine but of our selues: which thing the Scripture Eccl. 7. hathe diligently noted. For Ecclesiastes saieth: This haue I found, 13. that God hath made manne righteous, but they haue sought many inuentions. It appeareth that the destruction of man is to be imputed onely to him selfe, for asmuche as hauing gotten vprightnesse by the goodnesse of God, he by his owne madnesse is fallen into vanitie.

11 We saie therfore, that man is corrupted with faultinesse naturall, but such as proceded not from nature. We denie that it proceded from nature, to make appeare that it is rather a qualitie come from some other thing, whiche is happened to man, than a substantiall propertie that hathe bin putte into him from the beginning. Yet we call it Naturall, that no man shoulde thinke that euery man getteth it by euill custome, wheras it holdeth all men bounde by inheritablie descending right. And this we do not of our owne head
Eph. 2. 3 without authoritie. For, for the same cause the Apostle teacheth that we are all by nature the children of wrath. How coulde God whome all his meanest workes do please, be wrathefull against the noblest of all his creatures? But he is rather wrathefull against the corruption of his worke, than against his worke it selfe. Therefore if, for that mans nature is corrupted, manne is not vnfitly saide to be by nature abhominable to God, it shalbe also not vnaptely called naturally peruerse and corrupted. As Augustine feareth not in respect of nature corrupted, to call the sinnes natural, which do necessaryly reigne in our flesh where the grace of God is absente. So vanysheth away the foolish tryfeling deuise of the Maniches, which while they imagined an euillnesse hauing substaunce in man, presumed to forge for him a new creator, least they should seeme to assigne to the righteous God the cause and beginning of euill.

The ij. Chapter.

That man is nowe spoiled of the Freedome of wyll, and made subiect to miserable bondage.

SITH we haue seen, that the dominion of sinne, sins the time that it helde the first man bounde vnto it, doth not onely reigne in all mankinde, but also wholy possesseth euery soule: now must we more nerely examine, sins we are brought into that bondage, whether we be spoyled of all Freedome or no: And if yet there remaine any parcell, how farre the force therof procedeth.

But to the ende that the trueth of this queſtion may more eaſily appeare vnto vs, I will by the way ſet vp a marke, where vnto the whole ſumme may be directed. And this ſhalbe the beſt way to auoid errour, if the daungers be conſidered that are like to fall on both ſides. For when man is put from all vprightneſſe, byandby he therby taketh occaſion of ſlouthfulneſſe: and becauſe it is ſayd, that by himſelfe he can do nothing to the ſtudy of righteouſneſſe, forthwith he neglecteth it wholly, as if it pertayned nothing vnto him. Againe, he can preſume to take nothing vpon himſelfe, be it neuer ſo litle, but that both Gods honor ſhalbe therby taken frō him, & man himſelfe be ouerthrowen with raſh confidence. Therefore to the end we ſtrike not vpon theſe rocks, this courſe is to be kept, that man being enformed that there remaineth in him no goodnes, and being on euery ſide compaſſed about with moſt miſerable neceſſity, may yet be taught to aſpire to the goodnes whereof he is voyd, and to the liberty wherof he is depriued, and may be more ſharply ſtirred vp from ſlouthfulnes, than if it were fayned that he is furniſhed with greateſt power. How neceſſary this ſecond point is, euery man ſeeth. The firſt, I ſee is douted of by mo than it ought to be. For this beinge ſette out of controuerſie, it ought then plainely to ſtand for trueth, that nothing is to be taken away from man of his owne, as farre as it behoueth that he be throwne downe from falſe boaſting of himſelfe. For if it were not graunted to man to glory in himſelfe euen at that time, when by the bountifulnes of God he was garniſhed with moſt ſingular ornamentes, how much ought he now to be humbled, ſith for his vnthankfulneſſe he is thruſt downe from hie glory into extreame ſhame? At that time, I ſay, when he was aduaunced to the hieſt degree of honor, the Scripture attributeth nothing elſe vnto him, but that he was created after the image of God, whereby it ſecretely teacheth, that man was bleſſed, not by his own good things, but by the partaking of God. What therfore remaineth now, but that he being naked and deſtitute of all glory, do acknowledge God, to whoſe liberality he could not be thankefull when he flowed ful of the richeſſe of his grace: and that now at length with confeſſion of his owne pouerty he glorifie him, whom in the acknowledging of his good gifts, he did not glorifie? Alſo it is as much for our profitte, that all praiſe of wiſdom and ſtrength be taken from vs, as it pertayneth to the glory of God, that they ioyne our ruyne with the robbery of God, that giue vnto vs any thing more, than that which is true. For what is elſe done when we are taught to fight of our owne force, but ẏ we be lifted vpō hie on a ſtaffe of a reede, that it may byandby breake, and we fall to the ground? Albeit, our forces are yet to much commended when they are compared to the ſtaffe of reede. For it is but ſmoke all that vayne men haue imagined and do babble of them. Wherefore not without cauſe is this excellent ſentence oft repeted by Auguſtine, that free will is rather throwen down headlonge, than ſtabliſhed by them that defende it. This I thought needefull to ſpeake before, as by way of preface for many mens ſake, which when they heare mans power ouerthrowen from the ground, that the power of God may be buylded in manne, do much hate this manner of diſputinge as daungerous, much more ſuperfluous, which yet appeareth to be both in religion neceſſarie, and for vs moſt profitable.

2 Whereas we haue a litle before ſayd, that in the vnderſtanding minde, and in the heart are placed the powers of the ſoule, now let vs conſider what they both are able to do. The Philoſophers in deede with great cõſent do imagine that in the vnderſtanding minde ſitteth reaſon, which like a lampe giueth light to all coũſels, & like a Queene gouerneth the will, for they ſay ỹ it is ſo endued with diuine light, that it can giue good counſell, and ſo excelleth in liuely force that it is able well to gouerne. On the other ſide, that ſenſe is dull and bleare eyed, that it alway creepeth on the ground, and walloweth in groſſe obiects, and neuer lifteth vp it ſelfe to true inſight. That the appetite, if it can abide to obey reaſon, and do not yeld it ſelfe to ſenſe to be ſubdued, is caried on to the ſtudy of vertues, holdeth on the right way, and is transformed into will: but if it giue it ſelfe ſubiect into the bondage of ſenſe, it is by it corrupted and peruerted, ſo that it degendreth into luſt. And whereas by their opinion there do ſit in the ſoule thoſe powers that I haue ſpoken of before, vnderſtanding, ſenſe, appetite or will, which word will is now more commonly vſed, they ſay that vnderſtanding is endued with reaſon, the beſt gouerneſſe toward good and bleſſed life, ſo that it do hold it ſelfe within his owne excellence, and ſhew forth the force that is naturally giuen it. But that inferiour motion of it, which is called ſenſe, wherewith man is drawen to errour & deceite, they ſay to be ſuch, that it may be tamed with the rod of reaſon, and by litle and litle be vanquiſhed. They place will in the middeſt betwene reaſon and ſenſe, as a thing at her owne ordering, & hauinge liberty whether it liſt to obey to reaſon, or giue forth it ſelfe to be rauiſhed by ſenſe.

3 Sometime in deede they do not deny, being ouercome by very experience, how hardly man ſtabliſheth reaſon to raigne as queene within himſelfe, while ſomtime he is tickled with intiſements of pleaſures, ſometime deceiued with falſe ſemblance of good things, ſometime

time importunatly ſtricken with immoderate affections, and violently haled out of the way as it were with ropes or ſtrings of ſinowes, as Plato ſayth. For which reaſon Cicero ſayth, that theſe ſparkes giuen by nature, are with peruerſe opinions & euill maners byandby quenched: But when ſuch diſeaſes haue once gotten places in the mindes of men: they graunt that they do more outragiouſly ouerflow, than that they eaſely may be reſtrayned: and they ſticke not to compare them to wilde horſes which throwing away reaſon as it were caſting the Chariot driuen, do range vnrulely and without meaſure. But this they make no queſtion of, that vertues and vices are in our owne power. For if (ſay they) it be in our choiſe to do this or that, then is it alſo in our choiſe not to do. Now if it be in our choiſe not to do, then is it alſo to do, but of free choiſe we ſeeme to do thoſe things that we do, and to forbeare thoſe things that we forbeare. Therfore if we do any good thinge when we liſt, we may likewiſe leaue it vndone: if we do any euell, we may alſo eſchue the ſame. Yet ſome of them haue burſt forth into ſo great licentiouſneſſe, that they haue boſted that it is in deede Gods gift that we liue, but our owne that we liue well & holily. And thence commeth that ſaying of Cicero in the perſon of Cotta: becauſe euery man himſelfe getteth vertue to himſelfe, therefore neuer any of the wiſe men did thanke God for it. For (ſayth he) for vertue we be praiſed, & in vertue we glory, which ſhould not be if it were the gift of God, and not of our ſelues. And a litle after. This is the iudgement of al men that fortune is to be asked of God, but wiſdom to be taken of himſelfe. This therfore is the ſumme of the opinion of all the Philoſophers, that the reaſon of mans vnderſtanding is ſufficient for right gouernance: that Will being ſubiect to it, is in dede moued by Senſe to euill thinges. But euen as it hath free election, ſo can it not be ſtopped, but that it follow reaſon for her guide in all things.

4 Among the Eccleſiaſticall wryters, albeit there haue bin none that did not acknowledge both that the ſoundneſſe of reaſon in man hath bin ſore wounded by ſinne, and his will exceedingly entangled with peruerſe deſires, yet many of them haue to much aſſented to the Philoſophers: of which the auncient, as I thinke, did ſo much aduaunce the ſtrength of man, vpon this conſideration, leſt if they ſhould haue expreſſely confeſſed his weakeneſſe, firſt they ſhould haue made the Philoſophers, with whom they thē contended, to laugh at then: and then leaſt they ſhould giue to the fleſh, which of it ſelfe was dull to goodneſſe, a new occaſion of ſlouthfulnes. Therefore becauſe they woulde not teache any thinge that were an abſurdity in the common iudgement of men, their ſtudy was to make the doctrine of the Scripture halfe to agree with the teachings of the Philoſophers. But that they principally regarded that ſecond point, not to make place for ſlouthfulneſſe, appeareth by their owne words. Chryſoſtome hath in one place: Becauſe God hath put both good and euill thinges in our owne power, he hath giuen vs Freedome of election, and he withholdeth not ỹ vnwilling, but embraceth the willing. Againe, Oftentimes he that is euill, if he will, is turned into good, and he that is good by ſlouthfullnes falleth and becometh euill, becauſe God made our nature to haue free will, and he layeth not neceſſity vpon vs, but giuing conuenient remedies, ſuffreth all to lye in the minde of the pacient. Againe, As vnleſſe we be holpen by the grace of God, we can neuer do any thing well: ſo vnleſſe we bring that which is our owne, we can not obtaine the fauour of God. And he had ſaid before, that it ſhould not be all of Gods helpe, but we muſt alſo bring ſomwhat. And this is commonly a familiar word with him, let vs bring that which is ours, God wil ſupply the reſt. Wherwith agreeth that which Hierom ſayeth, that it is our part to beginne, but Gods to make an ende: our parte to offer what we can, his to fulfil what we can not. You ſee now that in theſe ſayinges they gaue to man towarde the ſtudy of vertue more than was meete, becauſe they thought that they could not otherwiſe awake the dullneſſe that was naturally in vs, but if they did proue that in it onely we ſinned. With what apt handeling they haue don the ſame, we ſhall after ſe. Surely that the ſayings which we haue rehearſed are moſt falſe, ſhall byandby appeare. Now although the Grecians more than other, & among them principally Chryſoſtome haue paſſed meaſure in aduauncing the power of mans will, yet all the old wryters, except Auguſtine, do in this point ſo either vary, or wauer, or ſpeake doutefully, that in manner no certainty can be gathered of their wrytings. Therefore we will not tary vpon exact reckening of euery one of their ſayinges, but heare and there we will touch out of euery one of them ſo much as the playne declaration of the matter ſhall ſeeme to require. As for them that followed after, while euery one for himſelfe ſought praiſe of witte, in defending of mans nature, they fell continually by little and little one after an other into worſe and worſe, till it came ſo farre, that man was commonly thought to be corrupted only in his ſenſuall parte, and to haue reaſon altogether, and will for the more parte vncorrupted. In the meane time this flew about in all mens mouthes, that the naturall gifts were corrupted in man, and the ſupernaturall were taken away, But to what meaning that tended, ſcarſely the hundreth man did euen ſlightly vnderſtande.

Hō. de prodi-tione Iudæ. Chryſ. in Gen. hom. 18 Hom. 52

Dialog. 3. cōtra Pelagiū

As

As for my parte, if I would plainely ſhew of what ſorte is the corruption of nature, I could be eaſely contented with theſe words. But it is much materiall that it be heedefully weyed what a man, being in all partes of his nature corrupted and ſpoiled of his ſupernaturall giftes, is able to do. They therefore which boaſted themſelues to be the Diſciples of Chriſt, ſpake of this matter to much like Philoſophers. For the name of Freewill ſtill remayned amonge the Latines, as if man had ſtill abiden in vncorrupted ſtate. And the Grecians were not aſhamed to vſe the worde much more arrogantly: For they called it Autexouſion, that is to ſay of her owne power, as if man had the power of himſelfe. Becauſe therefore all, euen to the common people, had receiued this principle, that man was endued with Free will, and many of them that would ſeeme excellent, can not tell how farre it extendeth: firſt let vs ſearch out the force of the word it ſelfe, and thē let vs proceede on by the ſimplicity of the Scripture, to ſhewe what man is able to do of his owne nature, toward good or euill. What Fre will is, where as it is a word commonly found in all mens wrytinges, yet few haue defined. Yet it ſemeth that Origen rehearſed that thing whereof they were all agreed, when he ſayd, that it is a power of reaſon to diſcerne good or euell, and a power of will to chooſe either of them. And Auguſtine varieth not from him, when he teacheth that it is a power of reaſon and will, whereby good is choſen while grace aſſiſteth, and euill when grace ceaſſeth. Bernarde, while he meaneth to ſpeake more ſuttelly, ſpeaketh more darkely, which ſayeth, that it is a conſent by reaſon of the liberty of will that can not be loſt, and the iudgement of reaſon that can not be auoyded. And the definition of Anſelmus is not familiar enough, which ſayth that it is a power to kepe vprightneſſe for it ſelfe. Therefore Peter Lombarde and the other Schoolemen, haue rather embraced Auguſtines definition, becauſe it both was playner & did not exclude the grace of God, without the which they ſawe that Will was not ſufficient for it ſelfe. But they bring alſo of their owne ſuch thinges as they thought either to be better, or to ſerue for playner declaration. Firſt, they agree that the name of Arbitrium, that is free choiſe, is rather to be referred to reaſon, whoſe parte is to diſcerne betwene good and Euill thinges: and the adiectiue Free, pertayneth properly to wil, which may be turned to either of both. Wherefore ſith Freedome properly belongeth to will, Thomas ſayth that it would very well agree, if Free will be called a power of choſing, which being mixt of vnderſtanding and appetite, doth more encline to appetite. Nowe haue we in what thinges they teach that the power of Free will conſiſteth, that is to ſay, in reaſon and will. Nowe remayneth that we ſhortly ſee howe much they giue to either parte.

5 They are commonly wont to make ſubiect to the free determination of man, thinges meane, that is which belong not to the kingdom of God : but they do referre true righteouſneſſe to the ſpeciall grace of God and ſpirituall regeneration. Which thing while the author of the booke Of the calling of the Gentiles meaneth to ſhew, he reckeneth vp three ſortes of Willes, the firſt Senſitiue, the ſecond Naturall, the third Spirituall, of which he ſayth, that man hath the firſt two at his owne liberty, the laſt is the worke of the holy ghoſt in man. Which whether it be true or no, ſhall be entreated in place fit for it, for now my purpoſe is but ſhortly to rehearſe the opinions of other, and not to confute them. Herby it cõmeth to paſſe, that when wryters ſpeake of free will, they principally ſeeke not what it is able to do to ciuile or outward doings, but what it can do to the obedience of the law of God. Which later point I thinke ſo to be the principall, that yet I thinke the other is not to be neglected. Of which meaning I truſt, I ſhall ſhew a good reaſon. There hath bin a diſtinction receiued in Schooles, that reckeneth vp three ſortes of freedomes, the firſt frõ neceſſity, the ſecond from ſinne, the third from miſery. Of which the firſt ſo naturally ſticketh faſt in man, that it can by no meane be taken away: the other two are loſt by ſinne. This diſtinction I willingly receiue, ſauing that there neceſſity is wrongfully confounded with compulſion : betwene which two how much difference there is, and how neceſſary that difference is to be conſidered, ſhall appeare in an other place.

Amb. li. 2. cap. 2.

6 If this be receiued, then ſhall it be out of controuerſie that man hath not free will to do good workes, vnleſſe he be holpen by grace, and that by ſpeciall grace, which is giuen to the onely elect by regeneration. For I do not paſſe vpon theſe phrenetike men, which babble that grace is offered generally and without difference. But this is not yet made playne, whether he be altogether depriued of power to do well, or whether he haue yet ſome power, although it be but litle and weake, which by it ſelfe in dede can do nothing, but by helpe of grace doth alſo her parte. While the Maiſter of the Sentences goeth about to make that playne, he ſayeth there are two ſortes of grace neceſſary for vs, whereby we may be made meete to do a good worke : the one they call a Working grace, whereby we effectually will to do good : the other a Together working grace, which followeth good will in helping it. In which diuiſion this I miſlike, that while he giueth to the grace of God an effectuall deſire of good, he

Libr. 2. diſt. 26.

ſecretly

ſecretly ſheweth his meaninge that man already of his owne nature, after a certaine manner, deſireth good though vneffectually. As Bernarde affirming that good will is in deede the worke of God, yet this he graunteth to man, that of his owne motion he deſireth that good will. But this is farre from the meaning of Auguſtine, from whom yet Lombard would ſeeme to haue borowed this diuiſion. In the ſecond part of the diuiſiō, the doutfulnes of ſpeach offendeth me, which hath bred a wrong expoſition. For they thought that we do therfore work together with the Seconde grace of God, becauſe it lieth in our power, either to make voyde the Firſt grace by refuſing it, or to confirm it by obediētly following it. Wheras the author of the booke Of the calling of the Gentiles, doth thus expreſſe it, that it is free for them that vſe the iudgement of reaſon, to departe from grace, that it may be worthy rewarde not to haue departed, and that the thing which could not be done but by the working together of the holy Ghoſt, may be imputed to their merites, by whoſe wil it was poſſible to haue not bin done. Theſe two thinges I had will to note by the way, that nowe, reader, thou maiſt ſee howe much I diſſent from the ſoundeſt ſorte of the Schoolemen. For I do much farther differ from the later Sophiſters, euen ſo much as they be farther gone from the auncient time. But yet ſomewhat, after ſuch a ſorte as it is, we perceaue by this diuiſion, after what manner they haue giuen Free will to man. For at length Lombard ſayth, that we haue not free will therefore, becauſe we are alike able either to do or to thinke good and euill, but onely that we are free from compulſion: which freedome is not hindered, although we be peruerſe and the bondmen of ſinne, and can do nothing but ſinne.

Amb. li. 2. cap. 4

Libr. 2. diſt. 25.

7 Therefore, man ſhalbe ſayd to haue free will after this ſorte, not becauſe he hath a free choiſe as well of good as of euil, but becauſe he doth euill by Will, and not by compulſion. That is very well ſayd: but to what purpoſe was it to garniſh ſo ſmale a matter with ſo proud a title? A goodly liberty forſooth, if man be not compelled to ſerue ſinne: ſo is he yet a willing ſeruaunt that his will is holden faſt bounde with the fetters of ſinne. Truely I do abhorre ſtriuinge about wordes wherewith the Church is vaynely wearied: but I thinke that ſuch wordes are with great religious carefullneſſe to be taken heede of, which ſound of any abſurdity, ſpecially where the errour is hurtefull. Howe fewe I pray you, are there, which when they heare that Free will is aſſigned to man, do not byandby conceaue, that he is lord both of his owne minde and will, and that he is able of himſelfe to turne himſelfe to whether parte he will? But ſome one will ſay:

this perill ſhalbe taken away, if the people be diligently warned of the meaning of it. But rather foraſmuch as the wit of man is naturally bent to falſity, he will ſooner conceiue an errour out of one litle word, than a trueth out of a long tale. Of which thing we haue a more certaine experience in this very word, than is to be wiſhed. For omitting ỹ expoſitiō of the old wryters, all they in maner that came after, while they ſticke vpon the naturall ſignification of the word, haue bin caried into a truſt of themſelues that bringeth them to deſtruction.

8 But if the authority of the fathers do moue vs, they haue in deede cōtinually the word in their mouth: but they do withall declare, how much they eſteme the vſe of it. Firſt of all Auguſtine, which ſticketh not to call it Bonde will. In one place he is angry with them that denie free will but he declareth his chiefe reaſon why, when he ſayth onely, Let not any man be ſo bold to deny the freedom of wil, that he go about to excuſe ſinne. But ſurely in an other place he confeſſeth that the will of man is not free without the holy Ghoſt, foraſmuch as it is ſubiect to luſtes that do binde and conquere it. Againe, that when will was ouercome with ſinne whereinto it fell, nature began to want freedome. Againe, that man hauing ill vſed his free will, loſt both himſelfe and it. Againe, free will is become captiue, that it can do nothing toward righteouſnes. Againe, that it can not be free, which the grace of God hath not made free. Againe, that ỹ iuſtice of God is not fulfilled when the lawe commaundeth, and man doth of his owne ſtrength, but when the holy Ghoſt helpeth, and mans will not free but made free by God, obeyeth. And of all theſe thinges he ſhortly rendereth a cauſe, when in an other place he wryteth, that man receiued great force of free will when he was created, but he loſt it by ſinning. Therefore in an other place, after that he had ſhewed that free will is ſtabliſhed by grace, he ſharply inueyeth againſt them that take it vpon them without grace. Why therefore (ſayth he) dare wretched men either be proud of free will before that they be made free, or of their owne ſtrength if they be already made free? And they marke not that in the very name of free will, is mention of freedome. But where the ſpirit of the Lord is, there is freedome. If then they be the bondmen of ſinne, why do they boaſt them of free will? For of whom a man is ouercome, to him he is made bond. But if they be made free, why do they boaſt them as of their owne worke? Are they ſo free, that they will not be his bondſeruantes, which ſayth: Without me ye can do nothing? Beſide that alſo in an other place he ſeemeth ſportingly to mocke at the vſe of that worde, when he ſayd, that will was in deede free, but not made free, free to righteouſneſſe, but the bondeſeruaunt of ſinne. Which ſaying in an other place he repeateth and expoundeth, that man is not free from righteouſneſſe, but by choiſe of will, and from ſinne he is not free but by grace of the Sauiour. He that doth teſtifie, that the freedome of man is nothing elſe but a free-making or manumiſſion from righteouſnes, ſeemeth trimly to mocke at the vaine name thereof. Therefore if any man will permit the vſe of this word with no euil ſignification, he ſhall not be troubled by me for ſo doinge. But becauſe I thinke it can not be kept without great peril, & that it ſhould turne to a great benefit to the church, if it were aboliſhed: neither will I my ſelfe vſe it, and I would wiſh other, if they aske me counſell, to forbeare it.

9 I may ſeeme to haue brought a great preiudice againſt my ſelfe, which haue confeſſed, that all the eccleſiaſticall wryters, except Auguſtine, haue ſpoken ſo doutfully or diuerſly in this matter, that no certaynety can be had out of their wrytinges. For ſome will ſo conſtrue this, that I meant therefore to thruſt them from giuinge any voice herein, becauſe they are all againſt me. As for me, I meant it to no other end but this, that I ſimply & in good faith would haue godly wittes prouided for, which if they wayte vpon thoſe mens opinion in this poynt, they ſhall alway wauer vncertayne. In ſuch ſorte do they ſometime teach, man being ſpoyled of all ſtrength of freewill, to flee to grace onely: ſometime they furniſh or ſeeme to furniſh him with his owne armour. But it is not hard to make appeare, that in ſuch doutfulneſſe of ſpeech, they nothing, or very litle eſteeminge mans ſtrength haue giuen the praiſe of all good thinges to the holy Ghoſt, if I here recite certaine ſentences of theirs, whereby that is playnely taught. For what meaneth that ſaying of Cyprian, which Auguſtine ſo oft repeateth, that we ought to glory of nothing, becauſe we haue nothing of our owne, but that man wholely deſpoyled in himſelfe, may learne to hang all vpon God. What meaneth that ſaying of Auguſtine and Eucherius, when they expound, that Chriſt is the tree of life, to whom he that reacheth his hand, ſhal liue? and that the tree of knowledge of good and euill, is the free choiſe of will, wherof who ſo taſteth, forſaking the grace of God, he ſhall dye? What meaneth that of Chryſoſtome, that euery man is naturally not onely a ſinner, but alſo altogether ſinne? If we haue no good thing of our owne: If man frō top to toe be altogether ſinne: if it be not lawfull to attempt howe much the power of free will is able to do, howe then may it be lawfull to parte the prayſe of a good worke betwene God and man? I could rehearſe of this ſort very many ſayings out of other, but leaſt any man ſhould cauill, that I chooſe out thoſe things onely that make for my purpose, and do craftily leaue out such things as make against me, therefore I do forbeare such rehearsall. Yet this I dare affirme, howsoeuer they be somtime to busie in aduauncing free will, that that yet was their purposed marke, to teach man being altogether turned away from trust of his owne power, to haue his strength reposed in God alone. Now come I to the simple setting forth of the trueth, as consideringe the nature of man.

10 But I am here constrayned to repeate that, which in the beginninge of this chapter, I spake by way of preface. As any man is most discouraged and throwen downe with conscience of his owne misery, needinesse, nakednesse and shame, so hath he best profited in knowledge of himselfe. For there is no danger to be feared, least man will take to much from himselfe, so that he learne, that what he wanteth is to be recouered in God, but to himselfe he can take nothing more than his owne right, be it neuer so litle, but that he shall destroy himselfe with vaine confidence, and conueying the honor of God to himselfe, become gilty of haynous sacrilege. And truely so oft as this lust inuadeth our minde, that we desire to haue somwhat of our own, which may rest in our selues rather than in God, let vs know that this thought is ministred vs by no other counseller, but by him that perswaded our first parentes, to haue a will to be like vnto Gods, knowing both good and euill. If it be the word of the deuill that raiseth vp man in himselfe, let vs giue no place vnto it, vnlesse we list to take counsell of our enemy. It is pleasaunt in deede, for a man to haue so much strēgth of his owne, that he may rest in himselfe. But that we be not allured to this vaine affiance, let so many sore sentences make us afraid, by which we be throwen downe: as are, Cursed is he which trusteth in mā, & setteth flesh to be his arme. Againe, that God hath not pleasure in the strength of a horse, neither deliteth in the legs of man, but deliteth in them that feare him, & attend vpon his mercy. Againe, that it is he which giueth strength vnto him that faynteth, and vnto him that hath no strength, he encreaseth power, euen the yong men shall faint and be weary, and the yong men shall stumble and fall, but they that wayte vpon the Lord, shall renue their strength. All which sayinges tend to this end, that we leane not vpon any opinion of our owne strength, be it neuer so litle, if we meane to haue God fauourable vnto vs, which resisteth the proude, & giueth grace to the humble. And then againe, lette these promises come into our remembrance. I will poure out water vpon the thirsty, & Floudes vpon the dry ground. Againe, All ye that thirst, come vnto the waters. Which promises do testifie, that none are admitted to receiue the blessinges of God, but they

they that pyne away with feeling of their owne pouerty. And such promises are not to be passed ouer, as is that of Esay: Thou shalt haue no more sunne to shine by day, neither shall the brightnesse of the Moone shine vnto thee: for the Lord shall be thine euerlasting light, and the God thy glory. The Lord in deede doth not take away the shining of the Sunne or Moone from his seruauntes, but because he will himselfe alone appeare glorious in them, he calleth their confidence far away, euen from those thinges, that are compted in their opinion most excellent.

11 Truely, that saying of Chrisostome hath alway exceedingely well pleased me, that the foundation of our Wisdom is humilitie: but yet more that saying of Augustine, As (sayth he) that same Rhethoritian beinge asked, what was the first thinge in the rules of eloquence, answered Pronunciation: and what was the second, he answered Pronunciation: and what was the third, he answered Pronunciation: so if one aske me of the rules of Christian religion, the First, the Second, and Third time, and alwayes I would answer Humilitie. But he meaneth not humility, when a man knowinge some litle vertue to be in himselfe, abstayneth from pride and hautinesse of minde, but when he truely feeleth himselfe to be such a one, as hath no refuge but in humility: as in an other place he declareth. Lette no man (sayeth he) flatter himselfe: of his owne he is a deuill. That thinge whereby he is blessed, he hath of God onely. For what hast thou of thine owne, but sinne? Take away from thee, sinne which is thine owne, for righteousnesse is Gods. Agayne, why is the possibility of nature so presumed on? it is wounded, maymed, troubled and lost, it needeth a true confession, and not a false defense. Agayne, when euery man knoweth that in himselfe he is nothing, and of himselfe he hath no helpe, his weapons in himselfe are broken, the warres are ceassed. But it is needfull, that all the weapons of wickednesse be broken in sunder, shiuered in in peeces and burnt, that thou remayne vnarmed and haue no helpe in thy selfe. Howe much more weake thou art in thy selfe, so much the more the Lord receiueth thee. So vpon the three score and tenne Psalme he forbiddeth vs to remember our owne righteousnesse, that we may acknowledge the righteousnesse of God: and he sheweth that God doth so commende his grace vnto vs, that we may knowe our selues to be nothing, that we stand onely by the mercy of God, when of our selues we are nothing but euill. Lette vs not therefore striue here with God for our right, as if that were withdrawen from our saluation which is giuen to him. For as our humblenesse is his hieneſſe, ſo the confeſſion of our humbleneſſe hath his mercy ready for remedy. Neither yet do I require that manne not conuinced ſhould willingely yelde himſelfe: nor if he haue any power, that he ſhoulde turne his minde from it, to be ſubdued vnto true humilitie. But that layinge away the diſeaſe of ſelfeloue and deſire of victory wherewith beinge blinded, he thinketh to highly of himſelfe, he ſhould well conſider himſelfe in the true lookinge glaſſe of the Scripture.

12 And the common ſaying which they haue borrowed out of Auguſtine pleaſeth me well, that the naturall giftes were corrupted in man by ſinne, and of the ſupernaturall he was made empty. For in this later parte of ſupernaturall giftes, they vnderſtande as well the light of faith as righteouſneſſe, which were ſufficient to the attayning of heauenly life and eternall felicity. Therefore baniſhing himſelfe from the Kingdome of God, he was alſo depriued of the ſpirituall giftes, wherewith he had bin furniſhed to the hope of eternall ſaluation. Whereupon followeth, that he is ſo baniſhed from the Kingdome of God, that all thinges that belong to the bleſſed life of the ſoule, are extinguiſhed in him, vntill by grace of regeneration he recouer them. Of that ſorte are faith, the Loue of God, charity toward our neighbours, the ſtudy of holineſſe and righteouſneſſe. All theſe thinges, becauſe Chriſt reſtoreth them vnto vs, are compted thinges comming from an other to vs, and beſide nature, and therefore we gather that they were once taken away. Againe, ſoundneſſe of the vnderſtandinge minde and vprightneſſe of hart were then taken away together, and this is the corruption of naturall giftes. For though there remayne ſomewhat left of vnderſtanding and iudgement together with will, yet can we not ſay, that our vnderſtanding is ſound and perfect, which is both feeble and drowned in many darkeneſſes. And as for our will, the peruerſeneſſe thereof is more than ſufficiently knowen. Sith therefore reaſon, whereby a man diſcerneth betwene good and euill, whereby he vnderſtandeth and iudgeth, is a naturall gift, it could not be altogether deſtroied, but it was partely weakened, partely corrupted, ſo that foule ruynes thereof appeare. In this ſenſe doth Iohn ſay, that the light ſhineth yet in darkeneſſe, but the darkeneſſe comprehended it not: In which wordes both thinges are plainely expreſſed, that in the peruerted and degendred nature of man, there ſhine yet ſome ſparkes that ſhewe that he is a creature hauing reaſon, and that he differeth from brute beaſtes, becauſe he is endued with vnderſtanding: and yet that this light is choked with great thickeneſſe of ignoraunce, that it can not effectually gette abroade.

Ioh. 1. 5

So

So Will, becauſe it is vnſeparable from the nature of man, periſhed not, but was bound to peruerſe deſires, that it can couet no good thinge. This in deede is a full definition, but yet ſuch as needeth to be made playne with more wordes. Therefore, that the order of our talke may proceede according to that firſt diſtinction, wherein we diuided the ſoule of man into vnderſtandinge and will: lette vs firſt examine the force of vnderſtandinge. So to condemne it of perpetuall blindeneſſe, that a man leaue vnto it no manner of skill in any kinde of thinges, is not onely againſt the worde of God, but alſo againſt the experience of common reaſon. For we ſee that there is planted in man a certayne deſire to ſearch out trueth, to which he would not aſpire at all, but hauing felt ſome ſauour therof before. This therefore is ſome ſight of mans vnderſtanding, that he is naturally drawen with loue of trueth, the neglectinge whereof, in brute beaſtes proueth a groſſe Senſe without reaſon, albeit, this litle deſire ſuch as it is, faynteth before it entre the beginning of her race, becauſe it byandby falleth into vanity. For the witte of man can not for dullneſſe keepe the right way to ſearch out trueth, but ſtrayeth in diuerſe erroures, and as it were gropinge in darkeneſſe, oftentimes ſtumbleth, till at length it wander and vaniſheth away, ſo in ſeekinge trueth, it doth bewray howe vnfitte it is to ſeeke and finde trueth. And then it is ſore troubled with an other vanity, that oftentimes it diſcerneth not thoſe thinges, to the true knowledge whereof it were expedient to bend it ſelfe, and therefore it tormenteth it ſelfe with fonde curioſity, in ſearchinge out thinges ſuperfluous and nothing worth: and to thinges moſt neceſſary to be knowen, it either taketh no heede, or negligently or ſeldome turneth, but ſurely ſcarſe at any time applieth her ſtudy earneſtly vnto them. Of which peruerſeneſſe, whereas the prophane wryters do commonly complayne, it is founde, that all menne haue entangled themſelues with it. Wherefore Salomon in all his Eccleſiaſtes, when he hadde gone through all theſe ſtudies, in which men thinke themſelues to be very wiſe, yet he pronounceth, that they are all vayne and trifling.

13 Yet do not all trauailes of Witte ſo alway become voyde, but that it attayneth ſomewhat, ſpecially when it bendeth it ſelfe to theſe inferiour thinges. Yea and it is not ſo blockiſh, but that it taſteth alſo ſome litle of the hier thinges, howeſoeuer it more negligently apply the ſearching of them, but yet not that with like power of conceauinge. For when it is caried vppe aboue the compaſſe of this preſent life, then is it principally conuinced of her owne weakeneſſe.

Wherefore, that we may the better see howe farre accordinge to the degrees of her ability it proceedeth in euery thinge, it is good that I putte foorth a distinction. Lette this therefore be the distinction, that there is one vnderstandinge of earthly thinges, an other of heauenly thinges. Earthly thinges I call those that do not concerne God and his Kingdome, true righteousnesse, and the blessednesse of eternall life, but haue all their respect and relation to this presente life, and are as it were contayned within the boundes thereof. Heauenly thinges, I call the pure knowledge of God, the order of true righteousnesse, and the mysteries of the heauenly kingdome. Of the first sorte are policy, gouernaunce of household, all handy crastes, and liberall Sciences. Of the second sorte are the knowledge of God and Gods will, and the rule to frame our life accordinge to it. Concerninge the first, this we must confesse, because man is a creature by nature giuen to liue in companies together: he is also by naturall instinction bent to cherish and to preserue the fellowshippe of these companies, therefore we see that there are in the mindes of all men vniuersal impressions of a certaine ciuill honestie and order. Hereby it commeth to passe, that there is found no man that vnderstandeth not, that all companies of menne ought to be kept in order with lawes, and that conceiueth not in his minde the principles of these lawes. Hereof commeth that same perpetuall consent, as well of all nations as of all men vnto lawes, because the seedes thereof are naturally planted in all men without any teacher or lawmaker. And I weye not the dissensions and fightinges that afterward arise while some desire to peruert lawe and right, the loose absolute gouernementes of kinges, that lust strayeth abroade in steede of right, as theeues and robbers, some (which is a fault more than common) thinke that to be vniust, which other haue stablished for iust: and on the other side stiffely say, that to be laudable, which other haue forbidden. For these men do not therefore hate lawes, because they do not knowe that lawes are good and holy, but for that they raginge with headdy lust, do fight against manifest reason, and for theyr fansie do abhorre that, which in vnderstandinge of minde they allowe. The later sorte of striuinge is such, that it taketh not away the first conceiuinge of equitie. For when men do striue amonge themselues, concerninge the poyntes of lawes, they agree together in a certayne summe of equity. Wherein is proued the weakenesse of mannes witte, which euen then when it seemeth to followe the right way, yet halteth and staggereth, but still this remayneth true, that there is sowen in all

menne a certaine ſeede of politike order. And that is a large proufe, that in the orderinge of this life, no manne is voyde of the light of reaſon.

14 Nowe do followe the artes, both the liberall, and the handy craftes: in learninge whereof, becauſe there is in vs all a certayne aptneſſe, in them alſo doth appeare the force of mannes witte: but albeit, all menne be not apt to learne them all, yet is this a token certayne enough of the common naturall power, that there is allmoſt no manne founde, whoſe conceite of witte doth not in ſome art or other ſhew foorth it ſelfe. Neither haue they onely a power or facility to learne, but alſo to deuiſe in euery art ſome newe thinge, either to amplifie or make perfecter that which hath bin learned of an other that went before, which thinge, as it moued Plato erroneouſly to teach, that ſuch conceauinge is nothinge elſe, but a callinge to remembraunce, ſo by good reaſon it ought to compell vs to confeſſe, that the beginninge thereof is naturally planted in the witte of man. Theſe poyntes therefore do playnely teſtifie, that there is giuen to men naturally an vniuerſall conceiuinge of reaſon and of vnderſtandinge. Yet is it ſo an vniuerſall benefite, that therein euery man ought for himſelfe to acknowledge the peculiar grace of God. To which thankefullneſſe the creator himſelfe doth ſufficiently awake vs, when he createth natural fooles, in whom he maketh vs to ſee with what giftes mans ſoule excelleth, if it be not endued with his light, which is ſo naturall in all men, that it is yet altogether a free gift of his liberality towarde euery man. But the inuention and orderly teachinge of the ſame artes, or a more inwarde and excellent knowledge of them which is proper but to a fewe, is no perfect argument of the common conceiuinge of witte, yet becauſe without difference it happeneth to the godlye and vngodlye, it is rightfully reckened amonge naturall giftes.

15 So oft therefore as we light vpon prophane wryters, let vs be put in minde by that maruelous light of trueth that ſhineth in them, that the wit of man, how much ſoeuer it be, peruerted and fallen from the firſt integrity, is yet ſtill clothed and garniſhed with excellent giftes of God. If we conſider that the ſpirite of God is the onely fountayne of trueth, we will neyther refuſe nor deſpiſe the trueth it ſelfe, whereſoeuer it ſhall appeare, except we will diſhonorably vſe the ſpirite of God: for the giftes of the holy Ghoſt can not be ſet light by, without contempt and reproch of himſelfe. And what? Shall we deny that the trueth ſhined to the olde Lawyers, which haue set forth Ciuile order and Discipline with so great equity? Shall we say that the Philosophers were blinde both in that exquisite contemplation, and cunning description of nature? Shall we say that they had no wit, which by setting in order the art of speach, haue taught vs to speake with reason? Shall we say that they were madde, which in setting forth Phisicke, haue emploied their diligence for vs? What of all the Mathematicall sciences? shall we thinke them doting errours of madde men? no, rather we can not reade the wrytings of the olde men, concerning these thinges, without great admiration of their wit. But shall we thinke any thinge praiseworthy or excellent, which we do not reknowledge to come of God? Lette vs be ashamed of so great vnthankefullnesse, into which the Heathen Poetes fell not, which confessed that both Philosophie and Lawes, and all good artes, were the inuentions of Gods. Sith then it appeareth that these men, whom the Scripture calleth naturall men, were of so sharpe and deepe sight in searchinge out of inferiour thinges, lette vs learne by such examples, howe many good thinges the Lorde hath left to the nature of manne, after that it hath bin spoyled of the true God.

16 But in the meane time yet let vs not forget, that these are the most excellent good giftes of the spirite of God, which for the common benefitte of mankinde he dealeth abroade to whom it pleaseth him. For if it behoued, that the vnderstandinge and skill that was required for the framinge of the tabernacle, should be poured into Beseleel and Oliab by the spirit of God, it is no maruell if the knowledge of those thinges which are most excellent in mans life, be sayde to be communicated vnto vs by the spirite of God. Neither is there cause why any man should aske, what haue the wicked to do with Gods spirite, which are altogether estranged from God. For where it is sayd that the spirite of God dwelleth in the faithfull onely, that is to be vnderstanded of the spirite of sanctification, by the which we are consecrate to God himselfe, to be his temples: yet doth he neuertheless fill, moue and quicken all thinges with the vertue of the same spirite, and that according to the property of euery kinde which he hath giuen to it by law of creation. If it haue bin the Lords will that we should be holpen by the trauaile and seruice of the wicked in naturall Philosophie, Dialecticke, the Mathematicall knowledges, and other: lette vs vse it, least if we neglect the giftes of God, willingly offered in them, we suffer iust punishment for our slouthfullnes. But least any shoulde thinke a man to be blessed, when vnder the elementes of this world there is graunted vnto him so great an abi-

abilitie to conceiue truth, it is also to be added that all this power to vnderstand, and the vnderstanding that followeth therof, is a vanishing and transitorie thing before God, where there is not a stedefast fundation of truth. For Augustine teacheth most truely, whome (as we haue said) the Master of the Sentences, and the other Schole- Lib. 2. dist. 25. men are compelled to assent vnto, as the free giftes were taken from man after his fall, so these naturall giftes which remained, were corrupted. Not that they can be defiled of themselues in asmuch as they come from God, but bycause they cease to be pure to a defiled man, that he should haue no praise of them.

17 Let this be the summe: that it is seen that in all mankinde is reason which is propre to our nature, which maketh vs to differ from brute beastes, as brute beastes do differ in sense from thinges without life. For where as there be borne certaine naturall fooles and idiotes, that defaute obscureth not the generall grace of God. But rather by such sight we are put in minde, that what is left vnto our selues, ought iustely to be ascribed to the kindenesse of God, bycause if he had not spared vs, our rebellion had drawen with it the destruction of our whole nature. But wheras some do excell in sharpenesse of conceiuing, some other do passe in iudgement, some haue a quicker witte to learne this or that arte: in this variete God setteth forth his grace vnto vs, that no man shoulde claime to him selfe as his owne, that which floweth from Gods mere liberalitie. For howe becometh one more excellent than an other, but that in common nature might appere aboue other the speciall grace of God, which in omitting many, saieth openly that it is bounde to none. Beside that, God poureth in singular motions, according to the calling of euery man. Of which thing we mete with many examples in the bookes of the Iudges, wher Iudic. 6 it is said, that the spirite of the Lord clad them, whome he called to 34. rule the people. Finally, in euery noble acte there is a speciall instruction. By which reason the strong men followed Saul, whose heartes 1. Sam. the Lord had touched. And when his ministring in the kingdome was 10. 6. prophecied of, Samuel said thus: The spirite of the Lord shall come 1. Sam. vpon thee, and thou shalt be an other man. And this was continued 16. 13. to the whole course of gouernement: as after it is spoken of Dauid, that the spirite of the Lord came vpon him from that day forwarde. But the same is spoken in an other place as touching particular motions: yea in Homere men are said to excell in witte, not onely as Iupiter hath dealte to euery man, but also as the time required. And truely experience teacheth, while many times such men stand amased as were most sharpe and depewitted, that the wittes of men are in the hand and will of God to rule them at euery moment: for which reason it is said, that he taketh witte from the wise, that they may wander out of the way. But yet in this diuersitie we see remaining some markes of the Image of God, which do make difference betwene all mankinde and other creatures.

18 Now is to be declared what mans reason seeth, when it commeth to the kingedome of God and to that spirituall insight, which consisteth chiefely in three thinges: to know God, and his fatherly fauour towarde vs, wherein our saluation standeth: and the way to frame our life according to the rule of his lawe. Both in the first two, and in the second, proprely they that are most witty, are blinder than molles. I denie not that there be here and there read in Philosophers, concerning God, many thinges well and aptely spoken, but yet such as do alway sauour of a certaine giddy imagination. The Lord gaue them in dede, as is aboue said, a little tast of his Godhead, that they shoulde not pretende ignoraunce to colour their vngodlinesse: and many times he moued them to speake many thinges, by confession wherof them selues might be conuinced: But they so sawe the thinges that they saw, that by such seyng they were not directed to the trueth, much lesse did attaine vnto it, like as a wayfaring man in the middest of the feylde, for a sodaine momēt, seeth faire and wide the glistering of lightning in the night time, but with such a quickely vanishing sight, that he is soner couered againe with the darkenesse of the night, than he can stirre his fote, so farre is it of that he can be brought into his way by such a helpe. Beside that, those small droppes of trueth, wherwith, as it were by chaunce, they sprincle their bookes, with how many and how monstruous lies are they defiled? Finally, they neuer so much as smelled that assuredneſſe of Gods good will toward vs, without which mans witte must nedes be filled with infinite confusion. Therfore mans reason neither approcheth, nor goeth toward, nor ones directeth sight vnto this trueth, to vnderstand who is the true God, or what a one he will be towarde vs.

19 But bycause we being dronke with a false persuasion of our owne deepe insight, do very hardely suffer our selues to be persuaded, that in matters of God it is vtterly blinde and dull: I thinke it shall be better to cōfirme it by testimonies of Scripture than by reasons. This doth Iohn very well teache in that place whiche I euen now alleged, whē he writeth, that life was in God from the beginning, and the same life which shoulde be the light of men, and that the light did shine in darkenesse, and the darkenesse comprehended it not. He sheweth in dede, that mans soule is lightened with the brightnesse of Gods light,

so

so that it is neuer altogether without some small flame, or at least some sparcle of it, but yet, that with such a light he comprehendeth not God. And why so? bycause mans quickenesse of wit, as towarde the knowledge of God, is but mere darkenesse. For when the holy Ghost calleth men darkenesse, he at ones spoileth them of all abilitie of spirituall vnderstanding. Therefore he affirmeth, that the faithfull which embrace Christ, are borne not of bloude, or of the will of the flesh, or of man, but of God. As if he shoulde saie: flesh is not capable of so hie wisedome to conceiue God and that which is Gods, vnlesse it be lightened with the spirite of God. As Christ testified, that this was a speciall reuelation of the father, that Peter did know him. Iohn 1. 13. Mat. 16. 17.

20 If we were perswaded of this, which ought to be out of all controuersie, that our nature wanteth all that, which our heauenly father geueth to his elect by the spirite of regeneration, then here were no matter to doubte vpon. For thus speaketh the faithfull people in the Prophet: For with thee is the fountaine of life, and in thy light we shall see light. The Apostle testifieth the same thing, when he saieth that no man can call Iesus the Lord, but in the holy Ghost. And Iohn Baptist seyng the dulnesse of his disciples, crieth out, that no man can receiue any thing, vnlesse it be geuen him from aboue. And that he meaneth by Gifte a speciall illumination, and not a common gifte of nature, appereth hereby, that he complaineth that in so many wordes as he had spoken to commende Christ to his Disciples, he preuayled nothing. I see (sayeth he) that wordes are nothing to informe mens mindes concerning diuine thinges, vnlesse the Lord geue vnderstanding by his spirite. Yea and Moses, when he reprocheth the people with their forgetfulnesse, yet noteth this withall, that they can by no meanes grow wise in the mysteries of God, but by the benefite of God. Thyne eyes (saieth he) haue seene those greate tokens and wonders, and The Lord hath not geuen thee a heart to vnderstande, nor eares to heare, nor eyes to see. What should he expresse more, if he called vs blockes in considering the workes of God? Whervpon the Lord by the Prophet promiseth for a great grace, that he will geue the Israelites a heart, that they may know him: signifiyng thereby, that mans witte is onely so much spiritually wise, as it is lightened by him. And this Christ plainely confirmed with his owne mouth, when he sayeth that no man can come to him, but he to whome it shalbe geuen from the Father. What? is not he him selfe the liuely Image of the Father, in whom the whole brightnesse of his glorie is expressed vnto vs? Therefore he coulde not better shewe what our power is to knowe God, than when he sayeth, that we haue no eyes Pſa. 34. 10. 1. Cor. 12. Iohn 3. 27. Deu. 29 2. Ier. 24. 7. Iohn 6. 44.

to see his Image, where it is so openly set presente before vs. What? Came he not into the earth for this purpose, to declare his Fathers will vnto men? And did he not faithfully do his office? Yes surely. But yet nothing is wrought by his preaching, vnlesse the inwarde Schole-master, the holy Ghost, set open the way to our mindes. Therefore none come to him, but they that haue hearde and bin taught of the Father. What maner way of learning and hearing is this? Euen, when the holy Ghost by maruellous and singular vertue formeth the eares to heare, and the mindes to vnderstande. And least that shoulde seme straung, he allegeth the prophecie of Esaie, where when he promiseth the repairing of the Church that they which shall be gathered toge-
Esa. 54. 13. ther to saluation, shall be taught of the Lord. If God there foresheweth some peculiar thing concerning his electes, it is euident that he speaketh not of that kinde of learning that was also common to the wicked and vngodly. It remaineth therefore that we must vnderstande it thus, that the way into the kingdome of God is open to no man, but to him to whom the holy Ghost by his enlightening shall make a new minde. But Paule speaketh most plainely of all, which of purpose entring into discourse of this matter, after he had condemned all mens wisedome of follie and vanitie, and vtterly brought it to naught, at
1. Cor. 2. 14. the last concludeth thus: that naturall man can not perceiue those things that are of the spirite of God: they are fooleshnesse vnto him, and he can not vnderstand them, bycause they are spiritually iudged. Whome doeth he call naturall? euen him that stayeth vpon the light of nature. He I say comprehendeth nothing in the spirituall misteries of God. Why so? is it bycause by slouthfulnesse he neglecteth it? Nay, rather although he would trauaile neuer so much, he can do nothing, bycause forsoth they are spiritually iudged. What meaneth that? bycause being vtterly hidden from the sight of man, they are opened by the onely reuelation of the spirite: so that they are reckened for follie where the spirite of God geueth not light. Before he had auaunced those thinges that God hath prepared for them that loue him, about the capacitie of eyes, eares and mindes. Yea he testified that mans wisedome was as a certaine veile, wherby mans minde was kept from
1. Cor. 1 20. seyng God. What meane we? The Apostle pronounceth, that the wisedome of this worlde is made follie by God: and shall we forsoth geue vnto it sharpenesse of vnderstanding, whereby it may pearce to the secrete places of the heauenly kingdome? Farre be such beastelinesse from vs.

21 And so that which here he taketh away from men, in an other place, in a prayer, he geueth it to God alone. God (sayeth he) and the father father of glory, geue to you the spirite of wisedome and reuelation. Ephe. 1.

Now thou hearest that all wisedom and reuelation is the gift of God. 15.
What followeth? and lighten the eyes of your minde. Surely if they neede a new reuelation, thē are they blinde of themselues. It followeth after: That ye may knowe what is the hope of your calling. &c.
Therefore he confesseth, that the wittes of men are not capable of so great vnderstanding, to know their owne calling. And let not some Pelagian babble here, that God doth remedie that dulnesse or vnskilfulnesse, when by the doctrine of his worde he directeth mans vnderstanding, whether without a guide he coulde not haue atteined.
For Dauid had a lawe, wherein was comprehended all the wisedome that may be desired, and yet not contented with that, he requireth to haue his eyes opened, that he may consider the misteries of the same lawe. By which speach truely he secretly sayeth, that the sunne riseth Ps. 119.

not much thereby, vntill he himselfe, that is therefore called the father of lightes, do geue them or open their eyes, bycause where so Iac. 1.

nesse. So the Apostles were well and largely taught by the best schole-master: yet if they had not needed the spirite of trueth to instruct their Ioh. 14.
mindes in that same doctrine which they had hearde before, he would 26.
not haue bidden them loke for him. If the thing that we aske of God, we do thereby confesse that we wante: and God in that that he promiseth it vs, doth argue our neede, let no man now doubte to confesse that he is so much able to vnderstande the misteries of God, as he is enlightened with his grace. He that geueth to him selfe more vnder-standing, is so much the more blinde, for that he doth not acknowe-ledge his owne blindenesse.

22 Nowe remaineth the thirde pointe, of knowing the rule of well framing of life, which we do rightly call the knowledge of the workes of righteousnesse, wherein mans wit semeth to be of somewhat more sharpe sight, than in the other two before. For the Apostle testifieth, that the Gentiles which haue no lawe, while they do the Rom. 2.
workes of the lawe, are to themselues in stede of a lawe, and do shewe 14.
the lawe written in their heartes, their consciences bearing them wit-nesse, and their thoughtes accusing them within themselues, or excusing them before the iugdement of God. If the Gentiles haue righte-ousnesse naturally grauen in their mindes, surely we can not say that we are altogether blinde in the order of life. And nothing is more cō-mon, than that man by the lawe naturall, of which the Apostle speaketh in that place, is sufficiently instructed to a right rule of life. But let vs weye to what purpoſe this knowledge of the lawe is planted in men: then it ſhall byandby appeare, how farre it bringeth them towarde the marke of reaſon and truth. The ſame is alſo euident by the wordes of Paule, if a man do marke the placing of them. He had ſaide a litle before, that they whiche ſinned in the lawe, are iudged by the lawe: they that haue ſinned without lawe, do periſh without lawe. Bycauſe this might ſeme vnreaſonable, that the Gentils ſhould periſh without any iudgement going before, he byandby addeth, that their conſcience is to them in ſteade of a lawe, and therfore is ſufficient for their iuſt damnation. Therefore the ende of the lawe naturall is, that man may be made inexcuſable. And it ſhall be defined not ill after this ſorte, that it is a knowledge of conſcience, that ſufficiently diſcerneth betwene iuſt and vniuſt, to take away from men the pretence of ignoraunce, while they are proued gilty by their owne teſtimonie. Such is the tenderneſſe of man towarde him ſelfe, that in doing of euils, he alway turneth away his minde ſo much as he maie from the feling of ſinne. By which reaſon it ſemeth that Plato was moued to thinke that there is no ſinne done but by ignorance. That in dede were fitly ſayd of him, if mens hypocriſie went ſo farre in hiding of vices, that the minde might not know it ſelfe gilty before God. But when the ſinne ſeking to eſcheue the iudgement emprinted in him, is now and then drawene backe vnto it, and not ſuffered ſo to winke, but that he be compelled whether he will or no, ſome time to open his eyes: it is falſely ſaid that he ſinneth onely by ignorance. Themiſtius ſaith more truely, which teacheth that vnderſtanding is ſeldome deceiued: that it is blindeneſſe when it goeth any further, that is, when he cometh downe to the ſpeciall caſe. Euery man, if it be generally aſked, will affirme, that manſlaughter is euill: but he that conſpireth to kill his enemies, deliberateth vpon it, as on a good thing. The adulterer generally will condemne adulterie, but in his owne, priuately he will flatter him ſelfe. This is ignoraunce, when a man comming to the ſpeciall caſe forgetteth the rule, that he had lately agreed vpon in the generall queſtion. Of which thing Auguſtine diſcourſeth very finely in his expoſition of the firſt verſe of the lvij. Pſalme: albeit the ſame thing is not continuall. For ſometime the ſhamefulneſſe of the euill deede ſo preſſeth the conſcience, that not deceiuing him ſelfe vnder falſe reſemblance of a good thing, but wittingly and willingly he runneth into euill. Out of which affection came theſe ſayinges: I ſee the better and allow it, but I follow the worſe. Wherefore, me thinke, Ariſtotle hath very aptely made diſtinction betwene Incontinence and Temperance. Where incontinence reigneth, he ſayeth, that there by reason of troubled affection or passion, knowledge is taken away from the minde, that it marketh not the euill in his owne acte, which it generally seeth in the like: and when the troubled affection is cooled, repentaunce immediatly followeth. But intemperaunce is not extinguished or broken by feeling of sinne, but on the other side obstinately standeth still in her conceiued choise of euill.

24 Now when thou heareſt iudgement vniuersally named in the difference of good and euill, thinke it not euery sounde and perfect iudgement. For if mans heartes are furnished with choise of iust and vniust, only to this ende, that they should not pretende ignorance, it is not then nedefull to see the trueth in euery thing. But it is enough & more, that they vnderstand so farre that they can not escape away, but being conuict by witnesse of their conscience, they euen now already beginne to tremble at the iudgemēt seate of God. And if we will trie our reason by the lawe of God, which is the exampler of true righteousnesse, we shall finde how many wayes it is blinde. Truely it atteineth not at all to those that are the chiefe thinges in the First table, as of confidence in God, of geuing to him the prayse of strength and righteousnesse, of calling vpon his name, of the true keping of Sabbat. What soule euer, by naturall sense did smell out, that the lawfull worshipping of God consisteth in these and like thinges? For when prophane men will worshippe God, although they be called away a hundred times from their vaine trifles, yet they alway slide backe thither againe. They denie in deede that sacrifices do please God, vnlesse there be adioyned a pureneſſe of minde: whereby they declare, that they conceiue somewhat of the spirituall worshipping of God, which yet they byandby corrupt with false inuentions. For it can neuer be persuaded them, that all is true that the lawe prescribeth of it. Shall I saie, that that wit excelleth in any sharpe vnderstanding, which can neither of it selfe be wise, nor harken to teaching? In the commaundementes of the Second table it hath some more vnderstanding, by so much as they came nerer to the preseruation of ciuile felowshippe among menne. Albeit euen herein also it is founde many times to faile. To euery excellent nature it semeth most vnreasonable, to suffer an vniust, and to imperious a maner of gouerning ouer them, if by any meane he may put it away: and the iudgement of mans reason is none other, but that it is the part of a seruile and base courage, to suffer it patiently: and againe, the parte of an honest and free borne hearte, to shake it of. And reuenge of iniuries is reckened for no faulte among the Philosophers. But the Lorde condemning that to much nobleneſſe of courage, commaundeth his to kepe the same patience, that is so ill reported among men. And in all the keping of the lawe, our vnderstanding marketh not desire of minde at all. For a naturall man suffereth not him selfe to be brought to this, to acknowledge the diseases of his desires. The light of nature is choked vp, before that it come to the first entrie of this bottomlesse depth. For when the Philosophers note immoderat motions of minde for faultes, they meane those motiõs that appere and shew forth themselues by grosse tokens, but they make no accompt of those euill desires that do gently tickle the minde.

25 Wherfore, as Plato was worthyly founde fault withall before, for that he imputed all sinnes to ignoraunce, so is their opinion to be reiected, which teach that purposed malice and frowardnesse is vsed in all sinnes. For we finde it to much by experience, how oft we fall with our good intent. Our reason is ouerwhelmed with so many sortes of being deceyued, is subiect to so many errours, stombleth at so many stayes, is entangled with so many streightes, that it is farre from sure directing. But how little it is estemed before the Lord in all
2.Cor. 3.5. partes of our life, Paule sheweth when he sayeth, that we are not sufficient to thinke any thing of our selues, as of our selues. He speaketh not of will or affection, but he taketh also this away from vs, that we shoulde not thinke that it can come in our mindes how any thing is to be done well. Is our diligence, insight, vnderstanding, and heade so corrupted, that it can deuise or thinke vpon nothing that is right before the Lord? that semeth to harde to vs, that do vnwillingly suffer our selues to be spoyled of the sharpenesse of reason, which we accompt a most precious gift. But to the holy Ghost it semeth most full of equitie, which knoweth that all the thoughtes of wisemen are

For he secretly sayeth therein, that his owne wit sufficeth him not, which desireth to haue a new geuen him. And that he doth not onely once, but almost ten times, in one Psalme, he repeteth the same prayer. By which repeting he priuely declareth, with how great neede he is driuen to pray it. And that which he prayeth for 16 Now is will to be examined, wherin ſtandeth the cheefe liber-tie of free choiſe, for it hath bene already ſene, that choiſe doth rather belong to will, than to vnderſtanding. Firſt, that this thing which the Philoſophers haue taught, and is receiued with common cōſent, that is, that all thinges by naturall inſtinction deſire that which is good, may not ſeeme to belōg to the vprightneſſe of mans will: Let vs marke that the force of free will, is not to be conſidered in ſuch appetite, as rather procedeth of the inclination of the eſſence, than of the aduiſement of the vnderſtanding minde. For euen the ſcholemen do confeſs, that free will hath no action, but when reaſon turneth it ſelfe to obiectes, wherby they mean that the obiect of appetite muſt be ſuch, as may be ſubiect to choiſe, and go before deliberation, which pre-pareth the way for choiſe. And truely, if a man cōſider what is the naturall deſire of good in man, he ſhall finde that it is common to him with beaſtes. For they alſo deſire to be well, and when any ſhew of good appeareth that moueth their ſenſe, they follow it. But man doth neither choſe by reaſon, that he may follow with diligence that thing which is in deede good for him, according to the excellence of his immortall nature, nor taketh reason to coũsel, nor bendeth his minde, but without reason, without counsell, like a beast, followeth the inclination of nature. This therefore maketh nothing for the freedome of will, if a mã by sense of nature be caryed to desire that which is good: but this is requisite, that he discerne good by right reason, and when he hath knowene it, that he chose it, and whẽ he hath chosen it, that he follow it. But least any man shoulde doubt, there is to be noted a double sophisticall argumẽt. For appetite is not here called the proper maner of will, but a naturall inclination: and good is called not as of vertue or iustice, but of estate, as we say. This man is well, or in good case: Finally, although a man do neuer so much desire to attaine that is good, yet he followeth it not. As there is no man to whom eternall blessednesse is not pleasant, yet is there none that aspireth vnto it, but by the mouing of the holy Ghost. Wherfore, sith the naturall desire in men to be well, maketh nothing to proue the fredome of will, no more than in metals and stones, doth the affection inclining to the perfection of their substance: let vs consider in other thinges, whether Will be so infected and corrupted in all partes, that it engendreth nothing but euill: or whether it kepeth still any parcell vnhurte, from whence do grow good desires.

27 They that do attribute to the first grace of God, that we will effectually, seme on the other side to say secretely, that there is in the soule a power of it selfe to aspire to good, but it is so weake, that it cannot growe to a perfecte affection, or raise vp any endeuour. And there is no doute that the scholemen haue commonly embraced this opinion, or which was borowed by Origen and certaine of the olde writers: forsomuch as they are wonte to consider man in pure naturall thinges, (as they terme it) such a one as the Apostle describeth him in these wordes. I do not the good that I would, but the euill that I woulde not, that I do. To will is present vnto me, but to performe it, I finde not. But after this maner is the discours that Paule there followeth, altogether wrongfully peruerted. For he entreateth of the Christian wrastling (which he shortly toucheth to the Galathians) which the faithfull continually fele within themselues, in the battel of the flesh and the spirite. But the spirite is not of nature, but of regeneration. And that the Apostle doth there speake of the regenerate, appeareth by this, that whẽ he had said, that there dwelleth no goodnesse in him, he addeth an exposition, that he meaneth it of his flesh. And therefore he saith, that it is not he that doth the euill, but sinne that dwelleth in him. What meaneth this correction in me, that is, in my flesh? Euen as much as if he had said thus: God dwelleth not in me of my my selfe, for there is no good to be founde in my flesh. Herevpon followeth that manner of excuse: I my selfe do not the euill, but sinne that dwelleth in me. Which excuse belongeth onely to the regenerate, which do with the cheefe parte of their soule tende vnto good. Nowe, the conclusion that is adioyned after, declareth all this matter euidently. I am delited (saith he) with the lawe, according to the inwarde man. But I see an other lawe in my members, fighting against the law of my mind. Who hath such a striuing in himselfe, but he that being regenerate by the spirite of God, carieth the leauinges of his flesh about with him? Therefore Augustine, whereas once he had thought, that that had bene spoken of the nature of man, reuoked his exposition as false, and ill agreing together. And truely, if we alowe this, that men without grace haue some motions to good, though they be but small, what shall we aunswere to the Apostle which saith, that we are not sufficient so much as to thinke any good? What shall we aunswere to the Lorde that pronounceth by Moses, that euery inuention of mans hearte is onely euill. Wherefore, sith they haue stumbled by false taking of one place, there is no cause why we shoulde staye vpon their iudgement. Let rather this saying of Christ preuaile. He that doth sinne, is the seruaunt of sinne. We are all sinners by nature, therefore we be all holden vnder the yoke of sinne. Nowe if whole manne be subiect to the dominion of sinne, then must it needes be, that the will it selfe which is the chiefe seate thereof, be bounde faste with most streight bondes. For otherwise the saying of Paule woulde not stande together, that it is God which worketh will in vs, if any will did go before the grace of the holy Ghost. Away therefore with all that many haue triflingly spoken concerning preparation. For although sometime the faithfull do praye to haue their hearte formed to the obedience of the lawe, as Dauid doth in many places: yet it is to be noted, that euen that desire of praying is from God. Which we may gather of his wordes, for whē he wisheth to haue a cleane hearte created within him, surely he taketh not on him selfe the beginning of creation. Therefore let rather this saying of Augustine haue place with vs: God will preuent thee in all thinges: And sometime preuent thou his wrath. Howe? Confesse that thou hast all these thinges of God that what so euer good thou haste, is of him: what soeuer euill, it is of thy selfe. And a little after. Nothing is ours but sinne.

Rom. 7. 15.

Gal. 5. 17.

The iij. Chapter.

That out of the corrupt nature of man procedeth nothing but damnable.

BVt man can not be any way better knowene in either part of his ſoule, than if he come forth with his titles wherewith the Scripture doth ſet him out. If he be painted whole in theſe wordes of Chriſt, That which is borne of fleſh, is fleſh: as it is eaſy to proue, then is he proued to be a very miſerable creature. For the affection of the fleſh, as the Apoſtle witneſſeth, is death, for aſmuch as it is enimitie againſt God, and ſo is not ſubiect, nor can be ſubiect to the lawe of God. Is fleſh ſo peruerſe, that with all her affection ſhe continually vſeth enimitie againſt God? that ſhe can not agree with the righteouſneſſe of the lawe of God? Finally, that ſhe can bring forth nothing but matter of death? Nowe, graunt that in the nature of man is nothing but fleſh, and gather any good out of it if thou canſt. But (they ſay) the name of fleſh belongeth onely to the ſenſuall, and not the hier parte of the ſoule. But that is ſufficiently confuted by the wordes of Chriſt, and of the Apoſtle. It is the Lordes argument, that man muſt be borne againe, bycauſe he is fleſh. He commaundeth not to be borne againe according to the body. But in minde he is not borne againe, if a parte of it be amended, but when it is all renewed. And that doth the compariſon, ſet in both places, confirme. For the ſpirite is ſo compared againſt the fleſh, that there is left no meane thing betwene them. Therefore whatſoeuer is not ſpirituall in man, is after the ſame reaſon called fleſhly. But we haue nothing of the Spirite but by regeneration. It is therefore fleſh whatſoeuer we haue of nature. But of that matter, if otherwiſe we coulde haue any doubte, that is taken away from vs by Paule, where after he had deſcribed the olde man, whome he had ſaide to be corrupt with concupiſcences of errour, he biddeth vs to be renewed in the ſpirite of our minde: you ſee he doth not place vnlawefull and euill luſtes onely in the ſenſitiue part, but alſo in the very minde, and therefore requireth a renuing of it. And truely a little before he had painted out ſuch an image of mans nature, as did ſhewe that there was no parte wherein we were not corrupted and peruerted: for whereas he writeth that all nations do walke in the vanitie of their minde, are darkened in vnderſtanding, eſtranged from the life of God, by reaſon of the ignoraunce that is in them, and the blindeneſſe of their hearte: it is no doubte that this is ſpoken of all them whome the Lorde hath not reformed to the vprightneſſe both of his wiſedome and iuſtice:

which is also made more plaine by the comparison byandby adioyned, where he putteth the faithfull in minde, that they haue not so learned Christ. For of these wordes we gather, that the grace of Christ is the onely remedie whereby we be deliuered from that blindenesse, and the euils that ensue thereof. For so had Esaie also prophecied of the kingdome of Christ, when he promised, that the Lorde should be an euerlasting light to his Church, when yet darkenesse couered the earth, and a mist the peoples. Whereas he testifieth, that the light of God shall arise onely in the Church, truely without the Church he leaueth nothing but darkenesse and blindenesse. I will not reherse perticularly such thinges as are written euery where, specially in the Psalmes and in the Prophetes against the vanity of man. It is a great thing that Dauid writeth, if he be weyed with vanitie, that he shall be vayner than vanitie it selfe. His wit is wounded with a greuous weapon, when all the thoughtes that come out of it, are scorned as fooliſh, triſeling, madde and peruerse. Esa. 60. 2. Psal. 62. 10.

2 No easier is the condemnation of the hearte, when it is called guilefull and peruerse aboue all thing: but bycause I studie to be short, I will be contente with one place alone, but such a one as shall be like a most bright loking glasse, wherin we may beholde the whole image of our nature. For the Apostle, when he goeth about to throwe downe the arrogance of mankinde, doth it by these testimonies, That there is not one righteous manne, There is not one manne that vnderstandeth or that seeketh God, All are gone out of the way, they are made vnprofitable together, there is none that doth good, no not one: their throte is an open sepulcher, with their tongues they worke deceitfully, the poison of Serpentes is vnder their lippes, whose mouth is full of cursing and bitternesse: whose feete are swifte to shedde bloude, in whose wayes is sorrowe and vnhappinesse, which haue not the feare of God before their eyes: With these thunderboltes he inueyeth, not against certaine menne, but against the whole nation of the sonnes of Adam. Neither declineth he against the corrupt manners of one or two ages, but accuseth the continuall corruption of nature. For his purpose is in that place, not simply to chide men, to make them amende, but to teach rather that all menne are oppressed with calamitie, impossible to be ouercome, from which they can not get vp againe, vnlesse they be plucked out by the mercie of God. And bycause, that coulde not be proued vnlesse it had bin by the ouerthrowe and destruction of nature, he brought forth these testimonies whereby is proued that our nature is more than destroyed. Let this therefore remaine agreed, that menne are such as Iere. 17. 9. Rom. 13 10. Psal. 14. 53. Esa. 59 7.

they be here deſcribed, not onely by faulte of euill cuſtome, but alſo by corruptneſſe of nature. For otherwiſe the Apoſtles argument can not ſtande, that there is no ſaluation for manne but by the mercie of God, bycauſe he is in him ſelfe vtterly loſte and paſt hope. I will not here buſie my ſelfe in prouing the applying of theſe teſtimonies that no man ſhoulde thinke them vnfitly vſed. I will ſo take them as if they had bin firſt ſpoken by Paule, and not taken out of the Prophetes. Firſt he taketh awaie from manne righteouſeneſſe, that is integritie and pureneſſe, and then vnderſtanding. The wante of vnderſtanding, he proueth by Apoſtaſie or departing from God, whome to ſeeke is the firſt degree of wiſedome. But that wante muſt nedes happen to them that are fallen awaie from God. He ſayeth further, that all are gone out of the waie and become as it were rotten, that there is none that doeth good, and then he adioyneth the haynous faultes, wherewith they defile their members that are ones let loſe into wickedneſſe. Laſt of all he teſtifieth that they are voide of the feare of God, after whoſe rule our ſteppes ſhoulde haue bin directed. If theſe be the inheritable giftes of mankind, it is in vaine to ſeke for any good thing in our nature. In deede I graunt that not all theſe faultes do appeare in euery manne: yet can not be denied that this Hydra lurketh in the heartes of all menne. For as the bodie while it already foſtreth encloſed within it, the cauſe and matter of diſeaſe, although the paine be not yet vehement, can not be called healthy: no more can the ſoule be reckened ſounde, while it ſwarmeth full of ſuch diſeaſes of vices, albeit the ſimilitude doth not agree in all pointes. For in the body be it neuer ſo muche diſeaſed, there remayneth a quickeneſſe of life: but the ſoule beyng drowned in this gulfe of deſtruction, is not onely troubled with vices, but alſo altogether voide of all goodneſſe.

3 The ſame queſtion in a manner which hath bin before aſſoyled, now riſeth vp againe of newe. For in all ages there haue bin ſome, which by guiding of nature haue bin bente to vertue in all their life. And I regarde it not, though many ſlippinges may be noted in their manners: yet by the very ſtudie of honeſtie they haue ſhewed a proſe, that there was ſome pureneſſe in their nature. What rewarde ſuch vertues haue before God, although we will more fully declare when we ſhall ſpeake of the merites of workes, yet we muſt ſomewhat ſpeake in this place: ſo farre as is neceſſarie for making plaine of this preſent argument. Theſe examples therefore ſeeme to put vs in minde, that we ſhoulde not thinke mans nature all together corrupt, for that by her inſtruction ſome men haue not onely excelled in ſome noble noble actes, but also in the whole course of their life haue behaued themselues most honestly. But here we must thinke, how in this corruption of nature there is some place for the grace of God, not to cleanse it, but inwardely to restraine it. For if the Lord woulde suffer the mindes of all men as it were with lose reines to runne wildly into all sortes of lustes, without doubte there woulde be no man, but he would in plaine experience make vs beleue, that all those euils wherewith Paule condemneth all nature, are most truely saide of him. For what? Canst thou exempt thy selfe out of the number of them, whose feete are swift to shed bloude, their handes defiled with robberies and manslaughters, their throtes like vnto open Sepulchres, their tongues deceitfull, their lippes venymous, their workes vnprofitable, wicked, rotten, deadly, whose minde is without God, whose inwardes are peruersenesse, whose eyes are bent to entrappinges, their heartes lift vp dispiteously to triumph ouer other, and all the partes of them applied to infinite mischeues. If euery soule be subiect to all such monsters, as the Apostle boldly pronounceth, truely we see what woulde come to passe, if the Lorde woulde suffer the lust of manne to wander after his owne inclination. There is no madde beast that is so hedlong caried awaye, there is no streame be it neuer so swifte and strong, whereof the ouerflowing is so violent. The Lorde healeth these diseases in his electe by this meane that we will byandby sette forth. In some he only restraineth them with putting a bridle in their mouth, onely that they breake not out, so farre as he foreseeth to be expedient for preseruing of the vniuersitie of thinges. Hereby some are holden in by shame, some by feare of lawes, that they burst not forth into many sortes of filthinesse, howebeit they do for a great part not hide their vncleanneſſe. Some bycause they thinke that an honest trade of life is good, do after a certaine sorte aspire towarde it. Some rise vp aboue the common sorte, that by their maiestie they may kepe other in their duetie. So God by his prouidence bridleth the peruersenesse of nature, that it breake not forth into doyng: but he cleanseth it not within. Rom. 3. 10.

4 But yet the doubte is not dissolued. For either we must make Camillus like vnto Catiline, or els in Camillus we shall haue an example that nature, if it be framed by diligence, is not altogether without goodnesse. I graunte in deede that those goodly giftes whiche were in Camillus bothe were the giftes of God and seeme worthy to be commended, if they be weyed by themselues, but how shall they be proues of naturall goodnesse in him? muste we not returne to the minde, and frame our argumente in this sorte? If a

Aug. li. 4. cõtra Iulianum. naturall manne excelled in ſuch vprightneſſe of manners, then nature is vndoubtedly not without power towarde the ſtudie of vertue. But what if the minde were peruerſe and crooked, and folowing any thing rather than vpright ſtraightneſſe? And that it was ſuch, there is no doubte, if you graunt that he was a naturall manne. Nowe what power of mans nature to goodneſſe will you reherſe vnto me in this behalfe, if in the greateſt ſhewe of pureneſſe it be founde that he is alway carried to corruption: Therefore, leaſt ye commende a man for vertue, whoſe vices deceyue you vnder vertues Image, do not ſo geue vnto the will of manne power to deſire goodneſſe, ſo long as it remayneth faſt in her owne peruerſeneſſe. Albeit this is a moſt ſure and eaſy ſolution of this queſtion, that theſe are not common giftes of nature, but ſpeciall graces of God, which he diuerſely and to a certaine meaſure dealeth among men that are otherwiſe vngodly. For which reaſon we feare not in common ſpeache to call one man well natured, and an other of euill nature, and yet we ceaſe not to include them bothe vnder the vniuerſall ſtate of mans corruption, but we ſhewe what ſpeciall grace God hath beſtowed vpon the one, which he hath not vouchesaued to geue to the other, when his pleaſure was to make Saule king, he formed him as a new man: and that is the reaſon why Plato alluding to the fable of Homere, ſayeth that Kinges ſonnes are created notable by ſome ſingular marke, bycauſe God prouiding for mankinde, furniſheth theſe with a princely nature whome he appointeth to beare gouernemẽt: and out of this ſtore houſe came all the great Capitaines that are renomed in hiſtories The ſame is alſo to be thought of priuate men. But bycauſe as euery man hath moſt excelled, ſo his ambition hath moſt moued him forwarde (with which ſpotte all vertues are defiled, ſo that they loſe all fauour before God,) it is to be accompted nothingworth, what ſoeuer ſemeth praiſeworthy in vngodly men, beſide that the chefe parte of vprightneſſe faileth, where there is no ſtudy to aduaunce the glory of God, which all they wante whome he hath not regenerate with his ſpirite. Neither is it vainely ſpoken in Eſaie, that vpon Chriſt reſteth the ſpirite of the feare of God, wherby we are taught, that ſo many as are ſtrange from Chriſt, are without the feare of God, which is the beginning of wiſedome. As for the vertues that deceiue vs with vaine ſhewe, I graunt they ſhall haue praiſe in the court of policie, and in the commõ fame of men, but before the heauenly iudgement ſeate, they ſhall be of no valewe to deſerue righteouſneſſe.

Eſa. 11. 3.

5 With ſuch bondage of ſinne therfore as Will is deteyned, it can not ones moue it ſelfe to goodneſſe, much leſſe apply it ſelfe. For ſuch

mouing

mouinge is the beginninge of turning to God, which in Scriptures is wholly imputed to the grace of God. As Ieremy praieth to the Lord to turne him, if he will haue hime turned. Whereupon the Prophet in the ſame chapter, deſcribing the ſpiritual redemption of the faithful people, ſayth that they were redeemed out of the hand of a ſtōger, meaning with how ſtraight fetters a ſinner is bound ſo long as being forſaken of the Lord, he liueth vnder the yoke of the Deuill. Yet Will ſtil remayneth, which with moſt bent affection is both enclined & haſteth to ſinne. For man was not depriued of Will when he did caſt himſelfe into this neceſſity, but of the ſoundeneſſe of Will. And Bernarde ſayth not vnaptly, which teacheth that to Will is in vs all: but to Will good is a profiting, to will ill is a defaut: and therefore ſimply to will, is the worke of man: to will euill, of corrupte nature: to wil wel, of grace. Now whereas I ſay, that will put from liberty is by neceſſity drawē or led into euill, it is maruell if that ſhould ſeeme a hard ſpeach vnto any man, which neither hath any abſurdity in it, nor varieth frō the vſe of holy men: But it offendeth them that can make no difference betwene neceſſity and compulſion. But if a man aske them, is not God of neceſſity good? is not the deuill of neceſſity euill? what can they aunſwere? For ſo is goodneſſe knit with Gods diuinity, that it is no more neceſſary that he be God then that he be good. And the deuill is by his fall ſo eſtranged from partaking of goodneſſe, that he can do nothing but euill. But now if any robber of God do barke againſt this and ſay, that God deſerueth ſmale praiſe for his goodnes, which he is compelled to keepe: ſhall not this be a ready aunſwere to him, that it commeth to paſſe by his infinite goodneſſe and not by violent impulſion, that he can not do euell. Therefore if this, that it is of neceſſitie that God doe well, do not hinder the free will of God in doing wel, if the deuil which can not do but euil yet willingly ſinneth who ſhall then ſay that a man doothe therefore leſſe willingly ſinne for this that he is ſubiect to neceſſity of ſinning. This neceſſity, whereas Auguſtine ech where ſpeaketh of it, euen then alſo when he was enuiouſly preſſed with the cauillation of Celeſtius, he ſticked not to affirme in theſe wordes, by liberty it came to paſſe that man was with ſinne, but now the corruption which flowed for puniſhment, hath of liberty made neceſſity. And ſo oft as he falleth into mention thereof, he douteth not to ſpeake in this manner of the neceſſary bondage of ſinne. Therefore let this ſumme of that diſtinction be kept, that man ſins he is corrupted, ſinneth in deede willingly and not againſt his will nor compelled, by a moſt bent affection of minde, and not by violent compulſion, by motion of his owne luſt, and not by fur-ten constraynt: but yet of such peruersenesse of nature as he is, he can not but be moued and driuen to euil. If this be true, then surely it is playnely expressed that he is subiect to necessity of sinning. Bernard agreeing to Augustine wryteth thus, only man among all liuing creatures is free: and yet by meane of sinne, he also suffereth a certayne violence, but of wil and not of nature, that euen therby also he should not be depriued of freedome, for that which is willing is free. And a litle after, wil being chaunged in it selfe into worse, by I wot not what corrupt and maruelous manner, so maketh necessity, that very necessity for as much as it is willing, can not excuse will, and will forasmuch as it is drawen by allurement, can not exclude necessity, for this necessity is after a certaine manner willing. Afterward he sayth, ỹ we are pressed downe with a yoke, but yet none other but of a certaine willing bondage, therefore by reason of our bondage we are miserable, by reason of our will we are inexcusable, because will when it was fre, made it selfe the bondseruaunt of sinne. At length he concludeth, that the soule is so after a certaine maruelous and euill manner holden both a bonde seruaunt and free, vnder this certaine willinge and ill free necessity: a bondseruaunt by reason of necessity, free by reason of wil, and that which is more maruelous and more miserable, therein gilty wherein it is free, therein bond wherein it is gilty, and so therein bond wherein it is free. Hereby truely the readers do perceiue that I bringe no newe thinge, which longe ago Augustine brought foorth out of the consent of all godly men, and almost a thousand yeares after was kept still in monkes Cloysters. But Lombarde when he could not distinguish necessity frō compulsion, gaue matter to a pernitious errour.

Ser. super Cā tic. 81.

6 On the otherside it is good to consider what manner remedy is that of the grace of God, whereby the corruption of nature is amended and healed. For whereas the Lord in helping vs, giueth vs that which we want, when we shall knowe what his worke is in vs, it will streightway appeare on the other side what is our needinesse. When the Apostle sayeth to the Philippians, that he trusteth that he which beganne a good worke in them, will performe it vnto the day of Iesus Christ: it is no dout, that by the beginninge of a good worke, he meaneth the very beginninge of conuersion, which is in will. Therefore God beginneth a good worke in vs by stirring vp in our heartes the loue, desire and endeuour of righteousnesse, or (to speake more properly) in bowing, framing and directing our heartes to righteousnesse: he endeth it in confirminge vs to perseuerance. And that no man should cauill that good is begonne by the Lord, when will being being of it ſelfe weake is holpen : the holy Ghoſt in an other place declareth what will is able to do beinge left vnto it ſelfe. I will giue you (ſayth he) a newe heart. I will put a newe ſpirite in the middes of you. And I will take away the ſtony heart from your fleſh, and I will giue you a heart of fleſh. And I will put my ſpirite in the middes of you, and I will make you to walke in my commaundementes. Who ſhall ſay that the weakeneſſe of mans will is ſtrengthened with helpe, whereby it may effectually aſpire to the choiſe of that that is good, when it muſt be whole transformed and renewed? If there be any ſofteneſſe in a ſtone, which by ſome helpe being made tenderer will abide to be bowed euery way, then will I graunt that the heart of man is pliable to obey that which is right, ſo that that which in it is perfect, be ſupplied by the grace of God. But if he meant to ſhewe by this ſimilitude, that no goodneſſe could euer be wrong out of our heart vnleſſe it be made throughly newe : lette vs not parte betwene him and vs, that which he chalengeth to himſelfe alone. If therefore a ſtone be transformed into fleſhe, when God turneth vs to the deſire of that which is right: then is all that which was of our owne will taken away, and that which commeth in place thereof is all of God. I ſay that will is taken away, not in that it is will, becauſe in the conuerſion of man, that which was of the firſt nature abideth whole: alſo I ſay that it is created newe, not that will then beginneth to be, but that it be turned from an euill will into a good. And this I affirme to be wholly done by God, becauſe we are not able ſo much as to thinke, as the ſame Apoſtle witneſſeth : therefore in an other place he ſayth, that God doth not onely helpe our weake will, or amende our peruerſe will, but that he worketh in vs to will. Whereupon is eaſily gathered, that which I ſayd before, that whatſoeuer good is in will, it is the worke of onely grace. In which ſenſe in an other place he ſayeth, that it is God that worketh all in all. Neither doth he there intreate of the vniuerſall gouernement, but giueth vnto God alone the praiſe of all good things that the faithfull haue. And in ſaying, all, truely he maketh God the author of ſpirituall life, euen from the beginning to the ende. Which ſelfe ſame thing he had taught before in other wordes, ſayinge that the faythfull are of God in Chriſt. where he plainely maketh mention of the new creation, wherein that which was of common nature before, is deſtroyed. For there is to be vnderſtanded a compariſon betwene Adam and Chriſt, which in an other place he more playnly expreſſeth, where he teacheth that we are the worke of God created in Chriſt to good workes, which he hath prepared that we ſhoulde walke in them. For he goeth about by this reaſon to proue, that our ſaluation is of free gift, becauſe the beginning of all goodneſſe, is at the ſeconde creation, which we obtayne in Chriſt. But if there were any power of our ſelues, were it neuer ſo ſmale, we ſhould haue alſo ſome portion of merite. But he to proue vs altogether nothing worth, reaſoneth that we haue deſerued nothing, becauſe we are create in Chriſt to good workes, which God hath prepared. In which wordes he ſignifieth againe, that all partes of good workes, euen from the firſt motiō, are propre to God onely. For this reaſon, the Prophete after he had ſayd in the Pſalme that we are the workemanſhip of God, that there ſhould be no partition, addeth byandby, We made not our ſelues. That he ſpeaketh there of regeneration, which is the beginning of ſpirituall life, appeareth by the tenor of the text, where it byandby after followeth, that we are his people & the flocke of his paſtures. We ſee now, how he not contented ſimply to haue giuen to God the praiſe of our ſaluation, doth expreſly exclude vs from all fellowſhip with him, as if he would ſay, that there reſteth no peece, be it neuer ſo litle, for man to glory in, becauſe it is all of God.

7 But there will be ſome peraduenture that will graunt, that Will being of her owne nature, turned away from good, is conuerted by the only power of the Lord: but ſo that being prepared before, it hath alſo her owne parte in doing, as Auguſtine teacheth, that grace goeth before euery good worke, but ſo, that will doth accompany it and not leade it, as a wayting maide after it, and not a foregoer. Which thing being not euill ſpoken by the holy man, Peter Lombarde doth diſorderly wryth to this purpoſe. But I affirme, that as well in the wordes of the Prophet which I haue alleaged, as in the other places, theſe two thinges be playnely ſignified, that the Lord doth both correct our corrupted will or rather deſtroy it, & alſo of himſelfe putteth in place therof a good will. In as much as it is preuented by grace, in that reſpect I giue you leaue to call it a wayting maide: but for that beinge reformed, it is the worke of the Lord, this is wrongfully giuen to man that he doth with will cōming after, obey grace going before. Therefore it is not wel wrytten of Chryſoſtome, that neither grace without will, nor will without grace can worke any thing: as if grace did not worke very well it ſelfe, as euen now we haue ſeene by Paule. Neither was it Auguſtines purpoſe, when he called mannes will the waytinge maide of grace, to aſſigne vnto her a certaine ſecond office in doing a good worke, but becauſe this only was his intent, to confute the wicked doctrine of Pelagius, which did ſet the principall cauſe of ſaluation in mans deſeruing: therefore he ſtode only vpon this point, that grace was before all deseruing: which was sufficiēt for the matter that he then had in hande, not medling in the meane time with the other question, concerning the perpetuall effect of grace, which yet in an other place he excellently well handleth. For sometimes when he saith, ỹ the lord doth preuent the vnwilling that he may wil, & followeth the willing that he wil not in vayne, he maketh him altogether the whole author of the good worke. Albeit his sentences touching this matter, are to plaine to neede any long arguing vpon them. Men (sayth he) do labour to finde in our will something that is our owne and not of God, but how it may be found I know not. And in his first booke against Pelagius and Celestius, where he doth expounde that saying of Christ, Euery one that hath heard of my father cōmeth to me, he sayth: Freewill is so holpen not only that it may know what is to be done, but also may do it when it hath knowen it. And so when God teacheth, not by the letter of the law, but by the grace of the spirite, he so teacheth, that he that hath learned, doth not only see it in knowing, but also desire it in willing, and performe it in doing.

Au. li. 2. de remiss. peccat. cap. 18. Ioh. 6. 45.

8 And becausе we are now in hand with the chiefe point wherupō the matter hangeth, let vs go forward and proue the summe thereof to the readers, onely with a fewe & ỹ most plaine testimonies of the Scripture. And then, least any man should accuse vs of wrongful wresting the Scripture, let vs shew that the trueth which we affirme being taken out of the Scripture, wanteth not the testimony of this holy man, I meane Augustine. For I thinke it not expedient, that all the thinges be rehearsed that may be brought out of the Scriptures, for confirmation of our meaning, so that by the most chosen that shalbe brought forth, ỹ way may be prepared to vnderstand all the rest that are here and there commonly red. And againe, I thinke it shall not be vnfitly done, if I openly shew that I agree well with that man whom worthily the consent of godly men doth much esteeme. Surely it is euident by plaine and certaine proufe, that the beginning of goodnesse is from no where else but only from God, for there can not be found a will bent to good, but in the elect. But the cause of election is to be sought out of man. Whereupon followeth, that man hath not right Wil of himselfe, but it proceedeth frō the same good pleasure, wherby we are elect before the creatiō of the world. There is also an other reason not vnlike vnto that. For whereas the beginning of willing and doing well is of faith, it is to be seene whense faith it selfe cōmeth. For asmuch as the whole Scripture crieth out that itis a free gift of God, it followeth, ỹ it is of the mere grace of God, whē we, which are with all our minde naturally bent to euill, begin to will that which is good.

Therfore the lord, whē he nameth theſe two things in the conuerſiō of his people, to take away from them a ſtony heart, and to giue them a heart of fleſh, plainly teſtifieth that that which is of our ſelues muſt be done away, that we may be conuerted to righteouſneſſe: and that whatſoeuer commeth in place therof, is from himſelfe. And he vtte-Ier. 32. 39. reth not this in one place only. For he ſayth in Ieremy: I wil giue them one heart and one way, that they may feare me all their dayes. And a litle after. I will giue the feare of my name into their heart, that they
Eze. 11. 19. departe not from me. Againe in Ezechiel: I will giue them one heart, and I will giue a new ſpirite in their bowels. I will take away the ſtony heart out of their fleſh, and I will giue them a heart of fleſh. He could not more euidently claime to himſelfe, & take from vs whatſoeuer is good and right in our will, than when he declareth that our conuerſion is a creation of a new ſpirite, and of a new heart. For it followeth alway, that both out of our will proceedeth no goodneſſe till it be reformed: and that after reformation, ſo much as it is good, is of God and not of vs.

9 And ſo reade we the prayers of holy men made to that effect,
1. Reg. 8 58. as, The Lord encline our heart to him (ſayth Salomon) that we may kepe his commaundementes. He ſheweth the frowardneſſe of our heart which naturally reioyſeth to rebell againſt the lawe of God if it
Pſ. 119. 36. be not bowed. And the ſame thinge is in the Pſalme: Lord incline my heart to thy teſtimonies. For the compariſon of contrariety is alway to be noted, which is betwene the peruerſe motion of the heart whereby it is caried to obſtinacy, and this correction whereby it is led
Pſa. 51. 12. to obedience. When Dauid feeling himſelfe for a time without the directing grace, prayeth God to create a new heart within him, to renue a right ſpirite within his bowelles: doth he not acknowledge that all the partes of his heart are full of vnclenneſſe, and his ſpirite wrythen with crooked peruerſeneſſe? and in calling the cleanneſſe which he prayeth for, the creature of God, doth he not attribute it wholly to God? But if any manne take exception and ſay, that the very prayer is a token of a godly and holy affection: our aunſwere is ready, that though Dauid were by that time ſomewhat come to amendement, yet doth he ſtill compare his firſt ſtate with that ſorowfull fall that he had felt. Therefore taking vpon him the perſon of a man eſtraunged from God, he for good cauſe prayeth to haue giuen him all theſe thinges that God giueth to his elect in regeneration. And ſo beinge like a deade man, he wiſheth himſelfe to be created of new, that of the bondſlaue of Satan, he may be made the inſtrument of the holy Ghoſt. Maruelous & monſtruous ſurely is the luſt of our pride.

God requireth nothing more earneſtly, thanȳ we ſhould moſt religiouſly keepe his Sabbat, that is in reſting from our owne workes, but of vs nothing is more hardly obtained, than bidding our owne works farewell, to giue due place to the workes of God. If ſluggiſhneſſe hindered not, Chriſt hath giuen teſtimony euident enough of his graces to make them not to be enuiouſly ſuppreſſed. I am (ſayth he) the Vine, you be the branches: My Father is a husbandman. As the branche can not beare fruite of it ſelfe, vnleſſe it abide in the Vine, no more can you, vnleſſe you abide in me. For without me you can do nothing. If we beare fruite none otherwiſe than a braunche buddeth being plucked out of the ground and without moyſture: we neede no more to ſeeke what is the aptneſſe of our nature to goodneſſe. And this is a playne concluſion: Without me ye can do nothing. He doth not ſay that we are to weake to be ſufficient for our ſelues: but in bringing vs to nothing, he excludeth all opinion of power be it neuer ſo litle. If we being graffed in Chriſt, beare fruite like a Vine, which taketh her efficacy of liuelineſſe both from the moiſture of the earth, and from the deaw of heauen, and from the cheriſhing of the ſunne: I ſee nothinge remayne for vs in doinge a good worke, if we keepe whole for God that which is his. That fonde ſuttle deuiſe is alleaged in vaine, that there is a iuyce already encloſed within the branch, and a certayne power to bringe foorth frute, and that therefore it taketh not all from the earth or from the firſt roote, becauſe it bringeth ſomewhat of her owne. For Chriſt doth meane nothinge elſe, but that we are a drie ſticke and nothing worth, when we be ſeuered from him, becauſe by our ſelues beinge ſeparate, we haue no power to do well: as alſo in an other place he ſayth. Euery tree that my father hath not planted, ſhall be rooted vp. Wherefore the Apoſtle aſcribeth all the whole vnto him in the place already alleaged. It is God (ſaith he) that worketh in vs both to will and to performe. The firſt parte of a good worke is will: the ſecond is a ſtrong endeuour in doing it: ȳ author of both is God. Therfore we ſteale it from God, if we take to our ſelues any thing, either in will or in effectuall working. If it were ſayd that God doth helpe our weake will, then ſomewhat were left for vs. But when it is ſayd that he maketh will, now all the good that is in it, is ſet out of vs. And becauſe the good will is yet ſtill oppreſſed with weight of our fleſh ȳ it cā not riſe vp. He ſaid further, that to ouercom the hardneſſe of that battell, there is miniſtred vnto vs ſtedfaſtneſſe of endeuour, euen to the effect. For otherwiſe it could not ſtand together which he teacheth in an other place, that it is God alone that bringeth to effect all thinges in all, wherein we haue before taught that the whole courſe of ſpirituall life is comprehended. For which Pſa. 86. 11. reaſon, Dauid, after he had prayed to haue the wayes of the Lord opened vnto him, that he might walke in his trueth, byandby addeth: Vnite thou my heart to feare thy name. In which wordes he ſignifieth, that euen they that are well minded, are ſubiect to ſo many withdrawings of minde, that they eaſily vaniſh or fal away if they be not ſtabliſhed to conſtancy. For which reaſon in an other place, after he had prayed to haue his ſteppes directed to kepe the word of God he

Pſ. 100. 19. 100. 33. requireth alſo to haue ſtrength giuen him to fight, Lette not any iniquity (ſayth he) beare rule ouer me. After this ſorte therefore doth the Lord both beginne and ende good worke in vs: that it may all be his worke, that will conceiueth a loue of that which is right, that it is enclined to the deſire thereof, that it is ſtirred vp and moued to endeuour of following it. And then that our choiſe, deſire, and endeuour faint not, but do proceede euen to the effect: laſt of all, that man goeth forward conſtantly in them, and continueth to the end.

10 And he moueth the will, not in ſuch ſorte as hath in many ages bin taught and beleued: that it is afterward in our choiſe, either to obey or withſtand the motiō, but with mightily ſtrengthning it. Therfore that muſt be reiected which Chryſoſtome ſo oft repeteth: whom he draweth, he draweth being willing. Whereby he ſecretly teacheth that God doth onely reach out his hand, to ſee if we will be holpen by his aide. We graunt that ſuch was the ſtate of man while he yet ſtoode, that he might bow to either parte. But ſith he hath taught by his example how miſerable is freewill, vnleſſe God both will and can in vs: what ſhall become of vs, if he giue vs his grace according to that ſmale proportion? But rather we do obſcure and extenuate it with our vnthankefullnes. For the Apoſtle doth not teach, that the grace of a good wil is offred vs if we do accept it, but that he wil performe it in vs: which is nothing elſe, but that the Lord by his ſpirite doth direct, bowe and gouerne our heart, and reigneth in it as in his owne

Ioh. 9. 45. walke in his commaundementes, but to make them walke in deede. Neither can Chriſts ſaying, (euery one that hath heard of my Father commeth to me) be otherwiſe taken, than to teach that the grace of Lib. de prædeſt. ſanct. God is effectuall of it ſelfe: as Auguſtine alſo affirmeth. Which grace, God vouchesaueth not to giue to all men generally without regarde, as that ſaying (as I thinke) of Occam, is commonly ſpoken among the people, that it denieth nothing to him that doth what lieth in him. Men are in deede to be taught that Gods goodneſſe is layd open for all

all men, without exception that seeke for it. But forasmuch as they onely beginne to seeke for it, whom the heauenly grace hath breathed vpon, not so much as this litle peece ought to be plucked away from his praise. Truely this is the prerogatiue of the elect, that being regenerate by the spirite of God, they are moued and gouerned by his guiding. Therfore Augustine doth worthily as well mocke them, that claime any parte of willing them to themselues, as he doth reprehend other which thinke that, that is generally giuen to all men, which is the speciall testimony of free election. Nature, (sayth he) but not grace, is common to all men. Calling it a brickle suttelty of witte like glasse, that glistereth with mere vanity, where it is generally extended to all which God giueth onely to whom it pleaseth him. And in an other place. How cameſt thou? by beleuing. Feare thou, least while thou takeſt vpon thee that thou haſt founde the iuſt way, thou periſh out of the iuſt way. I came (sayeſt thou) by Free will, I came by mine owne will, why swelleſt thou? wilt thou heare that this also is giuen thee? Heare euen him that calleth: No man commeth to me vnleſſe my Father draw him. And it is without controuersie gathered out of Iohns wordes, that the heartes of the godly are so effectually gouerned by Gods working, that they follow with an vnchangeable affection. He that is begotten of God (sayth he) can not sinne, becauſe the seede of God abideth in him. For we see that the meane motion which the Sophisters imagine, which we at our liberty may either obey or refuse, is openly excluded, where an effectuall constancy to cõtinue is affirmed.

11 Of continuaunce there shoulde no more dout haue bin made, but that it should haue bin taken for the free gift of God vnleſſe the most wicked errour had growen in force, that it is distributed according to the desert of men, as euery man hath shewed himselfe not vnthankefull to the first grace. But forasmuch as this errour hath growen vpon that point, that they thought it to be in our hand to refuse or receiue the grace of God offered, that opinion being driuen away, this other doth also fall of it selfe. Albeit herein they erre two manner of wayes. For beside this that they teach that our thankefullneſſe toward the firſt grace and our lawfull vse thereof, are rewarded with the later giftes: they adde also, that nowe grace alone doth not worke in vs, but that it is onely a worker together with vs. Of the first this we ought to beleue, that the Lord while he dayly enricheth and heapeth his seruauntes with newe giftes of his grace, becauſe he liketh and fauoureth the worke which he hath begonne in them, findeth in them somewhat whereupon to bestowe greater graces. And hereto ſerue thoſe ſayinges : To him that hath, ſhalbe giuen. Againe Mat. 25. 21. Oh, good ſeruaunt, becauſe thou haſt bin faithfull in few thinges, I will ſet thee ouer many. But here two things are to be taken heede of,

Luc. 19. 17. that neither the lawefull vſe of the firſt grace be ſayd to be rewarded with the later graces, nor it be ſo compted a rewarding, that it ceſſe to be reckened the free grace of God. I graunt therefore, that this bleſſing of God is to be looked for of the faithfull, that howe much the better they haue vſed the firſt graces, they ſhalbe encreaſed with ſo much the greater. But I ſay, that this vſe alſo is of the Lord, and that this rewarding is of his free good will. And they vſe no leſſe wrongfully than vnhappily that olde deſtruction of workinge and together working grace. Auguſtine vſed the ſame in deede, but delaying it with a fit definition, ỹ God in together working with vs doth ende, that w in working he beginneth, and that it is ſtill the ſame grace but chaungeth name, according to the diuerſe manner of effect. Wherupon followeth, that he doth not parte it betwene God and vs, as if there were a mutuall meeting together by ỹ motiõ of both, but only noteth the multiplicatiõ of grace. To which purpoſe belõgeth that which in another place he teacheth, that many giftes of God do go before the good will of man, among the which the ſelfe ſame is one. Wherupon followeth, that he leaueth nothing that it may claime to it ſelf. Which
Phi. 2. 13. thing Paul alſo hath namely expreſſed : For when he had ſayd that it is God, which worketh in vs both to will and to perfome, he byandby addeth, that he doth them both of his good will declaringe by this word, that it is his free goodneſſe. Whereas they are wont to ſay, that after we haue once giuẽ place to the firſt grace, our owne endeuours do now worke together with the grace that followeth. To this I anſwere : If they meane that we, after we haue bin once by the power of the Lorde broken to the obedience of righteouſneſſe, do of our owne accorde go forward, and are inclined to follow the working of grace, I ſpeake nothinge againſt it. For it is moſt certayne, that there is ſuch a readines of obeying, where the grace of God reigneth. But whenſe commeth that, but from this, that the ſpirite of God alway agreeinge with it ſelfe, doth cheriſhe and confirme to ſtedfaſtneſſe of continuing, the ſame affection of obeying, which it ſelfe engendred at the beginning. But if they meane that man taketh of himſelfe ſomwhat wherby to labour with the grace of God, they are moſt peſtilently deceiued.

12 And to this purpoſe is that ſayinge of the Apoſtle wrongfully 1 Cor. 15. 10. wraſted by ignoraunce: I haue laboured more than they all: not I, but the grace of God with me. For they take it ſo: that becauſe it might ſeeme ſomwhat arrogantly ſpoken that he preferred himſelfe before them all, therfore he corrected it with referring the praiſe to the grace of God, but yet ſo, that he calleth himſelfe a worker together with grace. It is maruell that ſo many which otherwiſe were not euill men, haue ſtombled at this ſtraw. For the Apoſtle doth not wryte that the grace of the Lord laboured with him, to the intent to make himſelfe partener of the labour, but rather by this correction he giueth away all ỹ praiſe of the labour to grace only. It is not I (ſayth he) that haue laboured, but the grace of God that was with me. But the doutfulnes of the ſpeach deceiued them: but ſpecially the ill tranſlation wherein the force of the Greke article was left out. For if it be tranſlated word for word, he doth not ſay, that grace was a worker together with him, but that the grace that was with him was the worker of all. And the ſame thing doth Auguſtine teach, not darkely, though ſhortly, where he thus ſaith: The good will of man goeth before many gifts of God, but not before all. But of them which it goeth before, it ſelfe is one, then followeth his reaſon: becauſe it is wrytten: His mercy hath preuēted me: And his mercy ſhall follow me. It preuenteth man not willinge, to make him will: & it followeth him willinge, that he wil not in vaine. With whom Bernard agreeth bringing in the church ſpeaking thus: Drawe me in a maner vnwillinge, that thou maiſt make me willing: draw me lying ſlouthfull, that thou maiſt make me runne.

Ser. 2 in Cant.

13 Now let vs heare Auguſtine ſpeaking in his owne wordes, leaſt the Pelagians of our age, that is to ſay, the Sophiſters of Sorbone, ſhoulde as they are wont, lay to our charge that all antiquitie is againſt vs, wherein they followe their father Pelagius, by whom long ago Auguſtine was drawen foorth into the ſame contention. In his booke of Correption and Grace wrytten to Valentine he entreateth largely that which I will rehearſe ſhortely, but yet do it in his owne wordes: that to Adam was giuen the grace of continuinge in good if he would: and to vs is giuen to will, and by will to ouercome concupiſcence: that he therefore had to be able if he would, but not to will that he might be able: to vs is giuen both to will and to be able. That the firſt liberty was to be able not to ſinne, ours is much greater, not to be able to ſinne. And leaſt he ſhoulde be thought to ſpeake of the perfection to come after immortality (as Lombard wrongfully draweth it to that meaning) within a litle after he plucketh out this dout. For (ſayth he) the will of holy men is ſo much kindeled by the holy Ghoſt, that they therfore are able, becauſe they ſo wil: they therefore will, becauſe God worketh ỹ they ſo will. For if in ſo great weakeneſſe, in which yet behoueth the power to be made perfect, for repreſſing of pride, their owne will were left vnto thē, that by the help of God they may if they will, and God doth not worke in them to will: then amonge ſo many temptations will ſhoulde needes fall downe for weakeneſſe, and therefore could not continue. Therfore is ſuccour giuen to the weakeneſſe of mans will, that it ſhould be moued without ſwaruing or ſeuering by the grace of God, and therfore ſhoulde not faint how weake ſo euer it be. Then he entreateth more Cap.14. largely howe our heartes do of neceſſity follow the mouing of God that worketh affectiō in them. And he ſayth, that the Lord doth draw men in deede with their owne wills, but with ſuch as he himſelfe hath wrought. Nowe haue we that thinge teſtified by Auguſtines mouth, which we principally deſire to obtaine, that grace is not only offered by God to be receiued or refuſed at euery mans Free election, but alſo that grace is the ſame, that formeth the election and will in the heart: ſo that euery good worke that followeth after, is the frute and effect thereof, and that it haue no other will obeying it, but the ſame which it hath made. For theſe are alſo his wordes out of an other place, that nothing but grace maketh euery good worke in vs.

14 But whereas he ſayth in an other place, that will is not taken Epi.100 5. away by grace, but from an euill will turned into a good, and holpen when it is good: he meaneth onely that man is not ſo drawen, that without any motion of heart he is caried as by an outwarde impulſion, but that he is inwardly ſo affected, that from his very heart he obeyeth. That grace is ſpecially and freely giuen to the elect, he wry-Epi.100 6. teth thus vnto Boniface: We know that grace is not giuen to all men, and to them to whom it is giuen, it is not giuen according to the merites of workes, nor according to the merites of will, but of free fauour: and to them to whom it is not giuen, we know that it is by the iuſt iudgement of God that it is not giuen. And in the ſame Epiſtle he ſtrongly fighteth againſt that opinion, that the grace followinge is giuen to the deſeruinges of men, becauſe in not refuſinge the firſt grace, they ſhewed themſelues worthy. For he will haue Pelagius graunt, that grace is neceſſary to vs for euery of our doinges, and is not giuen in recompenſe to workes, that it may be grace in deede. But the matter can not be comprehended in a ſhorter ſumme, than out of the eight chapter of his booke to Valentine of Correption and Grace, where firſt he teacheth that mans will obtayneth not grace by liberty, but liberty by grace: and that by the ſame grace, by affection of delite printed in him, it is framed to continuance, that it is ſtrengthened with inuincible force: that while grace gouerneth, it neuer fal-

by the free mercy of God it both is conuerted to good, and beinge conuerted abideth in it, that the direction of mans will to good, and ſtedfaſtneſſe after direction, hangeth vpon the onely will of God, and not vpon any merite of his owne. And ſo to man is left ſuch a free will, if we liſt ſo to call it, as he wryteth of in an other place, that can neither be turned to God, nor abide in God but by grace, & by grace is able all that it is able.

The iiij. Chapter.

Howw God vvorketh in the heartes of men.

YT is ſufficiently proued, as I thinke, that man is ſo holden captiue with the yoke of Sinne, that of his owne nature he can neither aſpire by deſire, nor trauaile by endeuour to goodneſſe, beſide that, we haue rehearſed a diſtinction betwene compulſion & neceſſity, whereby it might appeare, that when he ſinneth of neceſſity, yet neuertheleſſe he ſinneth willingly. But foraſmuch as while he is ſubiect in bondage to the Deuill, he ſeemeth rather to be ledde by the deuils will than his owne, it reſteth nowe to be declared of what ſorte are both kindes of workinge. And then is this queſtion to be aſſoiled, whether in euill workes there be any thinge to be attributed to God: in which the Scripture ſheweth that there is vſed ſome working of his. In one place Auguſtine compareth mans will to a horſe, which is ready to be ruled by the will of his rider: and God and the Deuill he compareth to riders. If God (ſayth he) ſit vpon it, he like a ſober and cunning rider, gouerneth it temperatly, ſpurreth it forward if it be to ſlow, plucketh it backe if it be to quicke, reſtrayneth the wantonneſſe and wildneſſe of it, tameth the ſtubbornneſſe of it, and guydeth it into the right way. But if the Deuill haue poſſeſſed it, he like a fooliſh and wanton rider, violently carieth it through places where no way is, driueth it into ditches, rolleth it downe ſteepe places, ſpurreth it forward to ſtubbbornneſſe & fearceneſſe: which ſimilitude we will for this time be cõtented with, ſith there commeth not a better in place. Where it is ſayd that the will of a naturall man is ſubiect to the rule of the Deuill, to be ſtirred by him, it is not ment therby that man as it were ſtriuing againſt it, & reſiſting is compelled to obey, as we compell bondſlaues againſt their wil, by reaſon of being their lordes, to do our cõmaundementes: but that beinge bewitched with the deceites of Satan, it of neceſſity yeldeth it ſelfe obedient to euery leading of him. For whom the Lord vouchesaueth not to rule with his ſpirite, them by iuſt iudgement he ſendeth away to be moued of Satan. Where-

Eph. 2. 2. ſee the light of the Goſpell. And in an other place: That he worketh in the diſobedient children. The blindinge of the wicked, and all the wicked deedes that follow therupon, are called the workes of Sathan, of which yet the cauſe is not to be ſought elſewhere, than in the will of man, out of which ariſeth the roote of euell, wherin reſteth the fundation of the kingdome of Sathan, which is Sinne.

2 But farre other is the order of Gods doing in ſuch thinges. And that the ſame may appeare more certainly vnto vs: let the hurt done to
Iob. 1. the holy mã Iob by the Chaldees, be an example. The Chaldees killed his herdmen, and like enemies in warre, droue away his cattell for booties. Now is their wicked deede plainely ſeene, and in that worke Sathan is not idle, from whome the Hiſtory ſayeth, that all this did proceede. But Iob himſelfe did acknowledge the worke of the Lorde in it, whom he ſayth to haue taken away from him thoſe thinges, that were taken away by the Chaldees. How can we referre the ſelfe ſame worke to God, as author, to Sathan as author, and to man as author of it, but that we muſt either excuſe Sathan by the company of God, or report God to be the author of euill? Very eaſily: if firſt we looke vpõ the ende, why it was done, and then the manner how. The purpoſe of the Lord is by calamity to exerciſe the patience of his ſeruaunt: The deuil goeth about to driue him to deſpeir. The Chaldees againſt right and law, ſeeke gayne of that which is an other mans. Such diuerſity in purpoſes, maketh great difference in the worke. And in the manner of doing there is no leſſe diuerſity. The Lord leaueth his ſeruaunt to Sathan to be afflicted: and the Chaldees, whom he did choſe for miniſters to execute it, he did leaue & deliuer to him to be driuen to it. Sathan with his venemous ſtings, pricked forward the mindes of the Chaldees which otherwiſe were peruerſe of thẽſelues to do that miſchiefe: they furiouſly runne to do wrong, and do binde and defile al their members with wicked doing. Therfore it is properly ſaid, that Sathan doth worke in the reprobate, in whom he exerciſeth his kingdome: that is to ſay, the kingdome of wickedneſſe. It is alſo ſayd that God worketh in them after his maner, becauſe Sathan himſelfe, foraſmuch as he is the inſtrument of his wrath, according to his biddinge & commaundement, turneth himſelfe hither & thither to execute his iuſt iudgements. I ſpeake not here of Gods vniuerſall mouing, whereby as all creatures are ſuſteined, ſo from thence they take their effectuall power of doing any thing. I ſpeake only of that ſpeciall doinge, which appeareth in euery ſpeciall act. We ſee therfore that it is no abſurdity, that one ſelfe act be aſcribed to God, to Sathan, and to man: but the diuerſity in the end and maner of doing, cauſeth that therein appeareth the iuſtice of God to be without fault, and alſo the wickednes of Sathan and man, bewrayeth it ſelfe to their reproch.

3 The old wryters in this point alſo, are ſomtime preciſely afraid, ſimply to confeſſe the trueth, becauſe they feare leaſt they ſhould ſo open a windowe to wickednes, to ſpeke irreuerently of the workes of God. Which ſobriety as I embrace, ſo I thinke it nothing daũgerous, if we ſimply holde what the Scripture teacheth. Auguſtine himſelfe ſomtime was not free frõ ỹ ſuperſtition, as where he ſayth, that hardninge and blindinge, pertaine not to the worke of God, but to his foreknowledge. But the phraſes of Scripture allow not theſe ſutteltes, which phraſes do plainly ſhewe that there is therin ſomewhat elſe of God, beſides his foreknowledge. And Auguſtine himſelfe in his fift booke againſt Iulianus, goeth earneſtly about with a long proceſſe, to proue that ſinnes are not only of the permiſſion or ſufferance of God, but alſo of his power, that ſo former ſinnes might be puniſhed. Likewiſe, that which they bring foorth, concerning permiſſion, is to weake to ſtande. It is oftentimes ſayd, that God blindeth and hardeneth the reprobate, that he turneth, boweth, & moueth their hearts as I haue elſe where taught more at large. But of what manner that is, it is neuer expreſſed, if we flee to free foreknowledge or ſufferance. Therfore we anſwere that it is done after two manners, For firſt, where as when his light is taken away, there remayneth nothing but darkeneſſe and blindnes: wheras when his ſpirite is take away, our heartes waxe hard & become ſtones: where as when his direction ceſſeth, they are wrafted into crookednes, it is wel ſayd that he doth blinde, harden & bow them frõ whom he taketh away the power to ſee, obey & do rightly. The ſecond maner, which cõmeth nere to the property of the words, is that for the executing of his iudgementes by Sathan the miniſter of his wrath, he both appointeth their purpoſes to what end it pleaſeth him, and ſtirreth vp their willes, & ſtrengtheneth their endeuours. So when Moiſes rehearſeth that king Sehon did not giue paſſage to the people, becauſe God had hardned his ſpirit, & made his hart obſtinate, he byandby adioyneth the end of his purpoſe: that he might (ſayth he) giue him into our handes. Therfore becauſe it was Gods will to haue him deſtroied, the making of his heart obſtinate, was Gods preparation to his deſtruction.

Becauſe they iudge rather of what ſorte God maketh men by forſakinge them, than how he performeth his worke in them. But there are other teſtimonies that go further: as are theſe of the hardening of Pharao. I will harden the heart of Pharao, that he do not

5 Now that the miniſtery of Sathan is vſed to pricke forward the reprobate, ſo oft as the Lord by his prouidence appointeth them to this or to that, may ſufficiently be proued, though it were but by one

ſent by God, that they which haue not obeyed the trueth, may beleue lies. But there is alway great difference in one ſelfe ſame worke, betwene that which the Lorde doeth, and that which Sathan and the wicked go about. He maketh the euill inſtrumentes that he hath vnder his hand, and may turne whether he liſt, to ſerue his iuſtice. They, in as much as they are euill, do bring fourth in effect the wickedneſſe that they haue conceiued by corruptneſſe of nature. The reſte, of ſuch thinges as ſerue for to deliuer the maieſtie of God from ſlaunder, and to cut of all ſhifting from the wicked, are already ſet fourth in the chapter concerning Prouidence. For in this place my purpoſe was onely to ſhewe how Sathan reigneth in the reprobate man, and how God worketh in them both.

6 Although we haue before touched, yet it is not plainely declared what libertie man hath in thoſe doinges, which are neither iuſt nor faulty of them ſelues, and belong rather to the bodely than the ſpirituall life. Some in ſuch thinges haue graunted him free election, rather, as I thinke, becauſe they woulde not ſtriue about a matter of no great importance, than that they minded certainely to proue the ſame thing that they graunt. As for me, although I confeſſe that they which do holde that they haue no power to righteouſneſſe, do holde the thing that is principally neceſſarie to ſaluation: yet I do thinke that this point alſo is not to be neglected, that we may know that it is of the ſpeciall grace of the Lorde, ſo oft as it cometh in our minde to choſe that which is for our profit, ſo oft as our will enclineth therunto: againe ſo oft as our wit and minde eſchueth that whiche els woulde haue hurte vs. And the force of Gods prouidence extendeth thus farre, not only to make the ſucceſſes of thinges to come to paſſe, as he ſhal forſee to be expedient, but alſo to make the willes of men to tende therunto. Truely if we conſider in our wit the adminiſtration of outwarde thinges, we ſhall thinke that they are ſo farre vnder the will of man: but if we ſhall geue credit to ſo many teſtimonies, which crie out that the Lord doth in theſe thinges alſo rule the heartes of men, they ſhall compelle vs to yelde our will ſubiect to the ſpeciall mouing of God. Who did procure the good willes of the Egyptians to the Iſraelites, to lende them all their moſt precious iewels? They woulde neuer haue founde in their heartes to haue ſo done of their owne accorde. Therfore their heartes were more ſubiect to the Lord, than ruled by them ſelues. And truely if Iacob had not bene perſuaded that God put into men diuerſe affections as pleaſeth him, he woulde not haue ſaid of his ſonne Ioſeph, whom he thought to be ſome Heathē Egyptian: God graunt you to finde mercie before this man. As alſo

Againe, when Saul so waxed on fire with anger, that he prepared him to warre, the cause is expressed, for that the spirite of God did enforce him. Who turned away Absolons minde from embracing the counsell of Achitophel, which was wont to be holden as an oracle? Who inclined Rehabeam to be persuaded with the yong mens aduise? Who made the nations that before were great, to be afrayde at the cōmyng of Israell? Truely the harlot Rahab confessed, that it was done by God. Againe, who threw downe the hartes of Israell with dread and fearfulnesse, but he that in the lawe threatened that he woulde geue them a fearefull hearte?

7 Some man will take exception and say, that these are singular examples, to the rule wherof all thinges vniuersally ought not to be reduced. But I say, that by these is sufficiently proued that which I affirme, that God so oft as he meaneth to prepare the way for his prouidence, euen in outwarde thinges doth bow and toutne the willes of men, and that their choise is not so free, but that Gods will beareth rule ouer the freedome therof. That thy minde hangeth rather vpon the mouing of God, than vpon the freedome of thine owne choise, this dayly experience shall compell thee to thinke whether thou wilt or no: that is, for that in thinges of no perplexitie thy iudgement and wit oft faileth thee, in thinges not heard to be done thy courage fainteth: againe in thinges most obscure, byandby present aduise is offred thee: in thinges great & perillous, thou hast a courage ouercōming all difficultie. And so do I expounde that which Salomon saieth: That the eare may heare, that the eye may see, the Lord worketh both. For I take it that he speaketh not of the creation, but of the speciall grace of vsing them. And when he writeth that the Lord holdeth in his hande and boweth whether he will the hearte of the king as the streames of waters: truely vnder the example of one speciall sorte, he comprehendeth the whole generaltie. For if the will of any man be free from subiection, that preeminence principally belongeth to the will of a King, which vseth as it were a kingdome vpon the willes of other: but if the will of the King be ruled with the hande of God, no more shall our will be exempted from the same estate. Vpon this point there is a notable saying of Augustine. The Scripture if it be diligently looked vpon doth shew, that not onely the good willes of men which he of euill maketh good, and so beyng made by him selfe doth direct to good doinges and to eternall life, but also these willes that preserue the creature of the worlde, are so in the power of God,

God, that he maketh them to be inclined whether he will and when he will, either to do benefites, or to execute punishemētes, by a iudgement most secret in deede, but the same most righteous.

8 Here let the Readers remember, that the power of mans will is not to be weyed by the successe of thinges, which some vnskilful men are vnorderly wont to do. For they seme to them selues to proue trimly and wittely that mans will is in bondage, because euen the hyest Monarches haue not all thinges flowyng after their owne desire. But this power wherof we speake, is to be considered within man and not be measured by outwarde successe. For in the disputacion of freewil, this is not to the questiō, whether man may for outwarde impedimentes, perfourme and put in execution all those thinges that he hath purposed in minde: but whether he haue in euery thing both a free election of iudgement, and a free affection of will, which both if man haue, then Attilius Regulus, enclosed in the narroweneſſe of a tonne, set full of sharp prickes, shal no lesse haue free will than Augustus Cesar, gouerning a great part of the worlde with the becke of his countenaunce.

The v. Chapter.

A confutacion of the obiections that are vvont to be brought for defence of Free vvill.

IT might seme that we haue saide enough already, concerning the bondage of mans will, if they that with false opinion of libertie, labour to throw it downe hedlong, did not on the contrary part pretende certaine reasons to assaile our meaning. First they heape vp together diuerse absurdities, whereby they may bring it in hatred as a thing abhorring from common reason: afterwarde they set vpon it with testimonies of Scripture. Both these engines we shall beate backe in order. If (say they) Sinne be of necessitie, then cesseth it to be sinne: if it be voluntarie, then may it be auoyded. These were also the weapons of Pelagius to assaile Augustine, with whose name we will not yet haue them oppressed, till we haue satisfied them, concerning the matter it selfe. I deny therfore that sinne ought the lesse to be imputed, because it is necessarie. I denie againe that this doth follow which they conclude, that it may be auoyded, because it is voluntarie. For if any man will dispute with God, and seeke to escape from his iudgement by this pretense, because he coulde none otherwise do: God hath that answere ready which we in an other place haue spoken of, that it is not of creation, but of the corruption of nature that men being made bondslaues to sinne, can will nothing but euil. For whēce cometh this want of power which the wicked would gladly pretende, but vpon this, that Adam of his owne accorde made him selfe subiect to the tyrannie of the Deuill? Hereupon therefore grewe the corruptiō, with the bondes wherof we are holden fast tyed, for that the first man fell from his creator. If all men be iustly holdē gilty of his falling away, let them not thinke them selues excused by necessitie, in which it selfe they haue a most euident cause of their dampnation. And this I haue aboue plainely set fourth, and I haue geuen an example in the Deuill him selfe, wherby it might appeare, that he which necessarely sinneth, doth neuertheless willingly sinne: as againe in the elect Angels, where as their will can not decline from good, yet it cesseth not to be a will. Which same thing Bernard also aptly teacheth: that we are therefore the more miserable, because our necessitie is voluntarie: which yet holdeth vs so subiect vnto it, that we be the bondeslaues of sinne, as we haue before rehearsed. The second parte of their argument is faulty, because from voluntarie it streightway leapeth to free: but we haue before proued, that it is voluntarely done which yet is not subiect to free election.

Ser. 81. in Can.

2 They further say: that if both vertues and vices procede not of free choise of will, it is not reasonable that either punishment should be laide vpon man or rewarde geuen to him. This argument, although it be Aristotles, yet I graunt is in some places vsed by Chrysostome and Hierome. But that it was a common argument with the Pelagians, Hierome him selfe hideth nor, & also rehearseth it in their own wordes. If the grace of God worke in vs: then it, not we that labour, shalbe crowned. Of punishmentes I aunswere, that they are iustly laid vpon vs from whom the giltinesse of sinne procedeth. For what matter maketh it, whether sinne be done by free or bonde iudgement, so it be done by voluntarie lust: specially sith man is hereby proued a sinner, for that he is vnder the bondage of sinne? As to the rewardes of righteousnesse: a great absurditie forsoth it is, if we confesse that they hang rather vpon Gods bountifullnesse, than vpon our owne deseruinges. How oft finde we this thing repeted in Augustine: that God crowneth not our deseruinges, but his owne giftes: and that they are called rewardes, not as due to our deseruinges, but such as are rendred to the graces already bestowed vpō vs? Wisely in deede they note this, that now there remaineth no place for deseruinges, if they come not out of the foūtaine of free will: but where they recken that which we say so farre differing from trueth they are much deceiued. For Augustine doubteth not, commonly to teach for necessarie, that which they thinke so vnlawefull to confesse, as where he saith: What

be the merites of any men what soeuer they be? when he commeth, not with due rewarde, but with free grace, then he alone being free, and that maketh free from sinne? He findeth all men sinners. Againe, If that shall be rendred to thee that is due to thee, thou arte to be punyshed: what is done then? God hath not geuen thee punyshement which is due, but geueth thee grace which is not due. If thou wilt be estraunged from grace, boaste of thy deseruinges. Againe: Thou art nothing by thy selfe. Sinnes are thine, but deseruinges are Gods, punyshment is due to thee: and when rewarde commeth, he shall crowne his owne giftes, and not thy deseruinges. And in the same meaning in an other place, he teacheth that grace is not of deseruing, but deseruing of grace. And a little after he concludeth, that God with his giftes goeth before all deseruinges, that out of the same he may gather his owne deseruinges, and doth geue altogether freely, bycause he findeth nothing wherevpon to saue. But what neede is it to make a longer regiſter, when such sentences are often founde in his writinges? But the Apostle shall yet better deliuer them from this error, if they heare from what beginning he conueyeth the glorie of the Saintes: Whome he hath chosen, them he hath called: whome he hath called, them he hath iustified: whome he hath iustified, them he hath glorified. Why then, as witnesseth the Apostle, are the faithfull crowned? bycause by the Lordes mercy and not by their owne endeuour they are both chosen and called and iustified. Away therefore with this vaine feare, that there shall no more be any deseruinges, if free will shall not stande. For it is most fooliſh to be frayed away and to flee from that to which the Scripture calleth vs. If (saith he) thou hast receyued all thinges, why gloryest thou, as if thou haddest not receyued them? Thou seest that for the same cause he taketh all thinges from free will, to leaue no place for deseruinges: but as the bountiefullnesse and liberalitie of God is manyfolde, and impossible to be spent out, those graces which he bestoweth on vs, bycause he maketh them ours, he rewardeth as if they were our owne vertues.

3 Moreouer they bring fourth that which may seeme to be taken out of Chrysostome: If this be not the power of our will, to choose good or euil, then they that are partakers of the same nature, must either all be euill or all be good. And not farre from that is he, what soeuer he was, that wrote the booke Of the calling of the Gentyles, which is carried about vnder the name of Ambrose, when he maketh this argument, that no man shoulde euer departe from the faith, vnlesse the grace of God did leaue vnto vs the state of mutabilitie: wherin it is marueile, that so excellēt men fell beside them selues.

Neither is it of any other cauſe, that ſome contynew to the ende, and ſome fall in their courſe begon. For continuaunce it ſelfe is the gift of God, which he geueth not to all indifferently, but dealeth it to whom it pleaſeth him ſelfe. If a man aske for a cauſe of the difference, why ſome continew conſtantly, and ſome faile by vnſtedfaſtneſſe, we know none other cauſe but that God ſuſteyneth the one ſorte ſtrenghthenedwith his power that they periſh not, and doth not geue the ſame ſtrengthe to the other ſorte, that they maie be examples of inconſtancie.

4 Further they preſſe vs, ſaying, that exhortations are vainely taken in hande, that the vſe of admonitions is ſuperfluous, that it is a fonde thing to rebuke, if it be not in the power of the ſinner to obey. When the like thinges in time paſt were obiected againſt Auguſtine, he was compelled to write the booke of Correption and grace. Where although he largely wipe them away, yet he bringeth his aduerſaries to this ſumme: O man, in the commaundement learne what thou oughteſt to do: in correction learne that by thine owne faulte thou haſt it not: in prayer learne whenſe thou maieſt receiue that which thou wouldeſt haue. Of the ſame argument in a maner is the booke of the Spirite and Letter, where he teacheth that God meaſureth not the commaundementes of his lawe by the ſtrength of man, but when he hath commaunded that which is right, he freely geueth to his elect power to fullfill it. And this is no matter of long diſputation. Firſt we are not onely in this cauſe, but alſo Chriſt and all the Apoſtles. Now let the other looke how they will get the mayſterie in ſtri-

Rom. 9. 16. charitie? and yet he prayeth for charitie to be geuen to the ſame men from God. He teſtifieth in the Epiſtle to the Romaines, that it is neither ther of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but of God that hath mercy, and yet he ceſſeth not afterwarde to admoniſh, to exhorte and to rebuke. Why do they not therefore ſpeake to the Lorde, that he do not ſo loſe his labour in requiring of menne thoſe thinges which he him ſelfe alone can geue, and in puniſhing thoſe thinges which are done for wante of his grace? Why do they not admoniſh Paule to ſpare them, in whoſe power it is not to will or to runne, but in the mercie of God, going before them which nowe hath forſaken them? As if the Lorde had not a very good reaſon of his doctrine, which offreth it ſelfe redily to be founde of them that reuerently ſeeke it, but howe much doctrine, exhortation and rebuking do worke of themſelues, to the chaunging of the minde, Paule declareth, when he writeth, that neither he that planteth is any thing, nor he that watereth, but the Lord that geueth the encreaſe onely effectually worketh. So we ſee that Moſes ſeuerally ſtabliſheth the commaundementes of the lawe, and the Prophetes do ſharpely call vpon them, and threaten the tranſgreſſors, whereas they yet confeſſe, that men do then onely waxe wiſe, when a hearte is giuen them to vnderſtand, that it is the propre worke of God to circumciſe the heartes, and in ſteede of ſtony heartes to geue hearts of fleſh, to write his law in the bowells of menne: finally in renewyng of ſoules to make that his doctrine may be effectuall. 1. Cor. 3. 7.

5 Wherfore then ſerue exhortations? For this purpoſe: if they be deſpiſed of the wicked with an obſtinate heart, they ſhal be for a witneſſe vnto them when they ſhall come to the iudgement ſeate of the Lorde, yea and euen nowe alreadie they beate and ſtrike their conſcience: for howeſoeuer the moſt frowarde man laugheth them to ſcorne, yet can he not diſproue them: but thou wilt ſay, what may ſilly miſerable man do, if the ſofteneſſe of hearte, which was neceſſarily required to obedience, be denied him? Nay rather, why doth he excuſe him ſelfe, when he can impute the hardeneſſe of heart to none but to him ſelfe? Therefore the wicked that are willingely ready to mocke them out if they might, are throwen downe with the force of them whether they wil or no. But the chiefe profite towarde the faithfull is to be conſidered: in whome as the Lord worketh all thinges by his ſpirite, ſo he leaueth not the inſtrumentes of his worde, and vſeth the ſame not without effect. Let this therfore ſtande which is true, that all the ſtrēgth of the godly reſteth in the grace of God, according to that ſaying of the Prophet: I will geue them a newe hearte that they may walke in them. But thou wilt ſaie: Why are they nowe admoniſhed of their duetie, and not rather left to the direction of the Ezec. 11. 19.

holy Ghoſt? why are they moued with exhortation, ſith they can make no more haſt than the ſtirring forwarde of the holy Ghoſt worketh? why are they chaſtiſed if at any time they be gone out of the way, ſith they fell by the neceſſary weakeneſſe of the fleſh? O man, what art thou to appoint a law for God? If it be his pleaſure, that we be prepared by exhortation to receiue the ſelfe ſame grace, wherby is wrought that the exhortation is obeied, what haſt thou in this ordre to bite or carpe at? If exhortations and rebukinges did nothing els profit with the godly, but to reproue them of ſinne, they were euen for that thing only to be compted not altogether vnprofitable. Now, for aſmuch as by the holy Ghoſt working inwardly, they much auaile to enflame the deſire of goodneſſe, to ſhake of ſluggiſhneſſe, to take away the pleaſure and venimous ſweteneſſe of wickedneſſe, and on the other ſide to engendre a hatred and irkeſomneſſe therof: who dare cauill that they are ſuperfluus? If any man require a plainer aunſwere, let him take this: God worketh after two ſortes in his electe, inwardely by his ſpirite, outwardely by his worde: By his ſpirite, by enlightning their mindes, by framing their heartes to the loue and keping of iuſtice, he maketh them a newe creature: By his worde, he ſtirreth them to deſire, to ſeke and atteine the ſame renuing: by them both he ſheweth fourth the effectual working of his hande, according to the proportion of his diſtribution. When he ſendeth the ſame word to the reprobate, though not for their amendement, yet he maketh it to ſerue for an other vſe: that both for the preſent time they may be preſſed with witneſſe of conſcience, and may againſt the day of iudgement be made more inexcuſable. So though Chriſt pronounce that no man commeth to him, but whom the Father draweth, and that the elect do come when they haue hearde and learned of the father? yet doth not he neglect the office of a teacher, but with his voice diligently calleth them, whome it neceſſarily behoueth to be inwardly taught by the holy Ghoſt, that they maie any thing profite. And Paule teacheth, that teaching is not in vaine with the reprobate, bycauſe it is to them the ſauour of death to death, but a ſwete ſauour to God.

2. Cor. 2. 16.

6 They be verie laborious in heaping together of teſtimonies of Scripture: and that they do of purpoſe, that when they can not oppreſſe vs with weight, they maie yet with numbre. But as in battelles, when it commeth to hand ſtrokes, the weaker multitude how much pompe and ſhew ſoeuer it hath, is with a fewe ſtripes diſcomfited and put to flight: ſo ſhall it be very eaſy for vs to ouerthrowe them with all their route. For, bycauſe the places that they abuſe againſt vs, when they are ones diuided into their ordres, do meete vpon a fewe ſpeciall pointes, we ſhall with one aunſwere ſatyſfie many of them: therefore it ſhall not be needefull to tarry vpon diſſoluing euery one of them particularly. Their chiefe force they ſet in the commaundementes, which they thinke to be ſo tempered to our ſtrengthes, that what ſoeuer is proued to be required by the one, it neceſſarily followeth that it may be perfourmed by the other. And therefore they runne through euery of the commaundementes, & by them do meaſure the proportion of our ſtrength. For (ſay they) either God mocketh vs when he chargeth vs with holyneſſe, godlyneſſe, obedience, chaſtitie, loue, and mekeneſſe: and when he forbiddeth vs vncleanneſſe, idolatrie, vnchaſteneſſe, wrath, robberie, pride, and ſuch like: or he requireth onely thoſe thinges that are in our power. Nowe, we may diuide into three ſortes in manner all the commaũdementes that they heape together. Some require our firſt conuerſion to God, ſome ſpeake ſimply of the keping of the lawe: ſome commaunde vs to cõtinue in the grace of God that we haue receyued. Firſt let vs ſpeake of them all in generalitie, and then deſcende to the ſpeciall ſortes. To extende the power of man to the commaundementes of the law, hath in deede long agoe begonne to be commune, and hath ſome ſhewe: but it proceded from moſt rude ignoraunce of the lawe. For they that thinke it a heynous offence, if it be ſaide that the keping of the lawe is impoſſible, do reſt forſoth vpon this moſt ſtrong argument, that ells the lawe was geuen in vaine. For they ſpeake in ſuch ſorte as if Paule had no where ſpoken of the lawe. For, I beſeeche them, what meane theſe ſayinges, that the lawe was ſet bycauſe of tranſgreſſions: That by the lawe is the knowledge of ſinne: That the lawe maketh ſinne: that the lawe entred, that ſinne might abounde: was it meant that the lawe was to be limited to our ſtrengthes, leaſt it ſhoulde be geuen in vaine? or rather that it was ſet farre aboue vs to conuince our weakeneſſe? Truely by the ſame mans definition, the ende and fullfilling of the lawe is Charitie. But when he wiſheth the mindes of the Theſſalonians to be filled with charitie, he doth ſufficiently confeſſe, that the lawe ſoundeth in our eares without profite, vnleſſe God inſpire the whole ſumme thereof in our heartes.

Gala. 3. 10. Rom. 3 20. Rom. 7. 7 1. Tim. 1. 5. 1. Theſ. 3. 12.

7 Truely, if the Scripture did teach nothing ells, but that the law is a rule of life where vnto we ought to frame our endeuour, I woulde alſo without delay agree to their opinion: but whereas it doth diligently and plainely declare vnto vs the manyfolde vſe of the lawe: it is conuenient rather to conſider by that interpretation, what the lawe may do in man. For ſo much as concerneth this preſente cauſe: it teacheth that ſo ſone as it hath appointed what we ought to do, the power to obey commeth of the goodneſſe of God, and therefore moueth vs to prayer, whereby we may require to haue it giuen vs. If there were onely the commaundement and no promiſe, then were our ſtrength to be tried whether they were ſufficient to aunſwere the commaundement, but ſith there are promiſes ioyned withall, whiche crie out, that not onely our aide, but alſo all our whole power conſiſteth in the helpe of Gods grace, they do teſtifie enough and more, that we are altogether vnfitte, much more inſufficient to kepe the law. Wherfore let this proportion of our ſtrengthes with the commaundementes of Gods lawe be no more enforced, as if the Lord had meaſured the rule of iuſtice, which he purpoſed to geue in his lawe, according to the rate of our weakeneſſe. Rather by his promiſes we ought to conſider, how vnready we are of our ſelues which in euery behalfe do ſo much neede his grace. But who (ſay they) ſhall be perſwaded that it is like to be true, that the Lorde appointed his lawe to ſtockes and ſtones? Neither doth any man go about to perſwade it. For the wicked are neither ſtockes nor ſtones, when being taught by the lawe that their luſtes do ſtriue againſt God, they are proued gilty by their owne witneſſe. Nor yet the godly, when being put in minde of their weakeneſſe, they flee vnto grace. For which purpoſe ſerue theſe ſayinges of Auguſtine. The Lorde commaundeth thoſe thinges that we can not do, that we may know what we ought to aſke of him. Great is the profite of the commaundementes, if ſo much be geuen to free will, that the grace of God be the more honoured. Faith obtaineth that which the lawe commaundeth, yea the lawe therfore commaundeth, that faith may obtaine that which was commaunded by the law: yea God requireth faith it ſelfe of vs, and findeth not what to require, vnleſſe he geue what to finde. Againe, Let God geue what he commaundeth, and commaunde what he will.

8 That ſhall more plainely be ſeen in reherſing the three ſortes of commaundementes which we touched before. The Lorde oftentimes commaundeth both in the lawe and in the Prophetes, that we be conuerted vnto him. But on the other ſide, the Prophet anſwereth, Conuerte me, Lorde, and I ſhall be conuerted: for after that thou didſt conuerte me, I repented, &c. He commaundeth vs to circumciſe the vncircumciſed ſkinne of our hearte: and by Moſes he declareth that this circumciſion is done by his owne hande. He ech where requireth newneſſe of hearte, but in an other place he teſtifieth that it is geuen by himſelfe. That which God promiſeth (ſaith Auguſtine) we do not by free will or nature, but he himſelfe doth it by grace. And this is the ſame note that he himſelfe reherſeth in the fifth place among the rules of Ticonius, that we well make difference betwene the lawe and the promiſes, or betwene the commaundementes and grace. Now let them go, that gather by the commaundementes whether man be able to do any thing towarde obediences in ſuch ſorte that they deſtroy the grace of God, by which the commaundemētes them ſelues are fulfilled. The commaundementes of the ſeconde ſorte are ſimple, by which we are bidden to honour God, to ſerue and cleaue vnto his will, to kepe his commaundementes, to follow his doctrine. But there are innumerable places that do teſtifie that it is his gifte what ſoeuer righteouſneſſe, holyneſſe, godlineſſe or puritie may be had. Of the thirde ſorte was that exhortacion of Paule and Barnabas to the faithfull, which is rehearſed by Luke, that they ſhoulde abide in the grace of God. But from whence that ſtrength of conſtancie is to be had, the ſame Paule teacheth in an other place. That remaineth, ſaieth he, brethren, be ye ſtrong through the Lorde. In an other place he forbiddeth vs, that we do not greue the ſpirite of God, wherewith we are ſealed vp vnto the day of our redemption. But becauſe the thing that he there requireth, coulde not be perfourmed by men, therefore he wiſheth it, to the Theſſalonians, from God, namely, that he woulde recken them worthy of his holy calling, and fulfill all the purpoſe of his goodneſſe, and the worke of faith in them. Likewiſe in the ſeconde Epiſtle to the Corinthians, entreating of almes, he oftentimes commendeth their good and godly will: yet a litle after, he thanketh God that put it in the hearte of Titus, to take vpon him to geue exhortacion. If Titus coulde not ſo much as vſe the office of his mouth to exhorte other, but onely ſo farre as God did put it vnto him, how ſhoulde other haue bene willing to do, vnleſſe God him ſelfe had directed their heartes?

9 The craftier ſorte of them do cauill at all theſe teſtimonies: becauſe there is no impediment, but that we may ioyne our owne ſtrengthes, and God to helpe our weake endeuours. They bring alſo places out of the Prophetes, where the effect of our conuerſion ſeemeth to be parted in halfe betwene God and vs. Tourne ye to me, and I will tourne to you. What maner of helpe the Lord bringeth vs, we haue aboue ſhewed, and it is not needefull here to repete it. This one thing I woulde haue graunted me, that it is vainely gathered that there is required in vs a power to fulfill the lawe, becauſe God doth commaunde the obedience of it: For as much as it is euident, that for the fulfilling of all the commaundementes of God, the grace of the lawegeuer is both neceſſarie for vs & promiſed vnto vs. Thereby then it appeareth, that at leaſt there is more required of vs than we

Ier. 13. 3. are able to paye. And that saying of Hieremie can not be wiped away with any cauillations: that the couenaunt of God made with the auncient people, was voide, because it was onely literall, and that it coulde no otherwise be stablished, than when the spirite cometh vnto it, which frameth the heartes to obedience. Neither doth that saying, Tourne ye to me, and I will tourne vnto you, fauour their errour. For there is meant, not that tourning of God, wherewith he renueth our heartes to repentaunce, but wherewith he by prosperitie of thinges doth declare him selfe fauorable and mercifull: as by aduersitie he sometime sheweth his displeasure. Where as therefore the people being vexed with many sortes of miseries and calamities, did complaine that God was turned away from them: he aunswereth, that they shall not be destitute of his fauour, if they retourne to vprightnesse of life, and to him selfe that is the paterne of righteousnesse: Therefore the place is wrongfully wrested, when it is drawen to this purpose, that the worke of our conuersion shoulde seeme to be parted betwixte God and men. These thinges we haue comprehended so much the shortelier, bycause the propre place for this matter shall be where we entreate of the Lawe.

10 The seconde sorte of their argumentes is much like vnto the first. They allege the promises whereby God doth couenaunt with

Amos 5. 14. our wil, of which sorte are, Seeke good and not euill, and ye shall liue. If ye will and do heare, ye shal eate the good thinges of the earth: but if ye will not, the swerde shall deuoure you, bycause the Lordes mouth hath spoken it. Againe, If thow put away thine abhominations out

Leu. 26. 3. other like. They do inconueniently and as it were in mockerie thinke, that these benefites which the Lorde doth offer in his promises, are assigned to our owne wil: vnlesse it were in vs to stablish them or make them voide. And right easy it is to amplifie this matter with eloquent complaintes, that the Lorde doth cruelly mocke vs, when he pronounceth that his fauour hangeth vpon our will, if the same will be not in our power: And that this liberality of God should be a goodly thing forsoth, if he so set his benefits before vs that we haue no power to vse them: and a merueilous assurednes of his promises, which hag vpon a thing impossible, so as they might neuer be fulfilled. But of such promises as haue a condition adioined, we wil speake in an other place: so that it shall be plaine, that there is no absurditie in the impossible possible fullfilling of them. And for so much as concerneth this place: I deny that God doth vngently mocke vs, when he moueth vs to deserue his benefites, whome he knoweth to be vtterly vnable to do it. For whereas the promises are offered both to the faithfull and to the wicked, they haue their vse with both sortes. As God with his commaundemētes pricketh the consciēces of the wicked, that they should not to swetely take pleasure in their sinnes, without any remembrance of his iudgementes: so in his promises he doth in a manner take them to witnesse, howe vnworthy they are of his goodnesse. For who can denie that it is most rightfull and conueniente, that the Lord do good to them of whome he is honored, and punish the despisers of his Maiesty, according to his seueritie? Therefore God doth well and ordrely, when in his promises he adioyneth this condition to the wicked that are bounde with the fetters of sinne, that they shall then only enioy his benefites, if they departe from their wickednesse: or for this purpose only, that they may vnderstand that they are worthily excluded from these thinges, that are due to the true worshippers of God. Againe, bycause he seeketh by all meanes to stirre vp the faithfull to call vpon his grace, it shall not be inconuenient, if he attempt the same thing also by promises, which we haue shewed that he hath done to great profit with commaundementes towarde them. Being enfourmed of the will of God, by his commaundementes, we are put in minde of our miserie, which do withall our hearte to farre dissent from the same, and we be therewithall pricked forward so call vpon his spirite, whereby we may be directed into the right waie. But because our sluggishnesse is not sufficiently sharpened with commaūdementes, there are added promises which with a certaine sweteneſse may allure vs to the loue of them. And that the more desire that we haue of righteousnesse, we may be the more feruent to seeke the fauour of God. Loe howe in these requestes, (If you will: If you shall heare,) the Lorde neither geueth vs power to will nor to heare, and yet mocketh vs not for our want of power.

11 The third sorte of their argumentes, hath also great affinitie with the two fourmer. For they bring fourth the places wherein God reprocheth the vnthankefull people, and sayeth that they them selues onely were the cause that they receyued not of his tender loue all kindes of good thinges. Of which sorte are these places. Amaleck and the Chananee are before you, with whose swerde you shal fall, because ye woulde not obey the Lorde, because I called and ye aunswered not, I will do to this house as I did to Silo. Againe, this nation hath not hearde the voyce of the Lorde their God, nor hath recey- Num. 14 43. Ier. 32. 13.

Iere.32. ued diſcipline, therefore it is caſt away from the Lorde. Againe, becauſe ye haue hardened your hearte and woulde not obey the Lorde, all theſe euilles are happened vnto you. Howe (ſay they) coulde ſuch reproches be laide againſt them which might redely aunſwere? As for vs, we loued proſperitie, and feared aduerſitie. But where as for to obteine the one and auoyde the other we obeyed not the Lorde, nor hearkened to his voice: this was the cauſe thereof, for that it was not at our libertie ſo to do, becauſe we were ſubiect to the dominion of ſinne. Vainely therfore are theſe euilles layde to our charge, which it was not in our power to auoyde. But leuing the pretenſe of neceſſitie, wherein they haue but a weake and ſickly defence, I aſke of them whether they can purge them ſelues of all fault. For if they be found guilty of any faulte, then the Lorde doth not without cauſe reproche them, that it came to paſſe by their peruerſineſſe, that they felt not the fruite of his clemencie. Let them aunſwere therfore, whether they can denie, that their frowarde will was the cauſe of their ſtubbournneſſe. If they finde the ſpring head of the euill within them ſelues, why gape they to finde out foreine cauſes, that they might ſeme not to haue bene authours of their owne deſtruction? But if it be true that by their owne faulte and none others, ſinners are both depriued of the benefites of God, and chaſtiſed with puniſhementes, then is there great reaſon why they ſhould heare theſe reproches at the mouth of God: that if they go obſtinatly forwarde in their faultes, they may learne in their miſeries rather to accuſe and abhorre their owne wickedneſſe, than to blame God of vniuſt crueltie: that if they haue not caſt of all willingneſſe to learne, they may be wery of their ſinnes, by the deſeruinges whereof they ſee them ſelues miſerable and vndone, and may retourne into the way, and acknowledge the ſame with earneſt

For which purpoſe it appeareth by the ſolempne prayer of Daniel, which is in the ninth Chapter, that thoſe chidinges of the Prophetes which are alleged, did auayle with the Godly. Of the firſt vſe we ſee an example in the Iewes, to whome Hieremie is commaunded to declare the cauſe of their miſeries, wheras yet it ſhoulde not haue fallen otherwiſe than the Lorde had foreſaide. Thou ſhalt ſpeake vnto them all

To what ende then did they ſinge to deafe men? that being euen loth and vnwilling, yet they ſhoulde vnderſtande that it was true that they hearde, that it were wicked ſacrilege if they ſhoulde lay vpon God the blame of their euils which reſted in them ſelues. By theſe fewe ſolutions thou mayſt eaſily deliuer

thy ſelfe from the infinite heape of teſtimonies, which, for to erect an image of free will, the enemies of the grace of God are wont to gather together, as well out of the commaundementes as out of the proteſtations againſt the profeſſors of the law. It is reprochefully ſpoken in the Pſalme concerning the Iewes: A frowarde generation that haue not made their hearte ſtreight. Alſo in an other Pſalme, the Prophete exhorteth the men of his age, not no harden their heartes, and that bycauſe all the faulte of obſtinacie remaineth in the peruerſneſſe of men. But it is fondely gathered therof, that the hearte is pliable to either ſide, the preparing wherof is onely of God. The Prophet ſaith: I haue enclined my hearte to keepe thy commaundementes: bycauſe he had willingely and with a cheerefull earneſt affection of minde addicted himſelfe to God, and yet he doth not boaſt him ſelfe to be the author of his owne inclinatiō, which he confeſſeth in the ſame Pſalme to be the gift of God. Therfore we muſt holde in minde the admonition of Paule, where he biddeth the faithfull to worke their owne ſaluation with feare and trembling, bycauſe it is the Lorde that worketh both the willing and the perfourming. In deede he aſſigneth them offices, to be doing, that they ſhoulde not geue them ſelues to ſluggiſhneſſe of the fleſh: but in that he commaundeth thē to haue feare and carefulneſſe, he ſo humbleth them, that they may remembre that the ſame thing which they are cōmaunded to do, is the propre worke of God, wherin plainely he expreſſeth, that the faithful worke, paſſiuely, as I may ſo call it, in ſo much as power is miniſtred them from Heauen, that they ſhould claime nothing at all to them ſelues. Wherfore when Peter exhorteth vs that we ſhould adde power in faith, he graunteth not vnto vs a ſeconde office, as if we ſhoulde do any thing ſeuerally by our ſelues, but only he awaketh the ſlothefullneſſe of the fleſh, wherwith commonly faith it ſelfe is choked. To the ſame purpoſe ſeemeth that ſaying of Paule: Extinguiſh not ỹ ſpirite, for ſlouthfullneſſe doth oftentimes crepe vpon the faithfull, if it be not corrected. But if any man conclude thereupon, that it is in their owne choiſe to cheriſh the light being offred them, his ignoraunce ſhall be eaſily confuted: bycauſe the ſelfe ſame diligence that Paule requireth, cometh onely from God. For we are alſo oftentimes commaunded to purge our ſelues from all filthyneſſe: whereas the holy Ghoſt dothe claime to him ſelfe alone the office of making holy. Finally that by way of graunting the ſame thing, is conueyed to vs that propely belongeth to God, is plaine by the wordes of Iohn: Whoſoeuer is of God, ſaueth him ſelfe. The aduauncers of freewill take holde of this ſaying, as if we were ſaued partely by the power of God,

1. Ioh. 5. 4. abideth in them. And in an other place, he rendreth a reaſon why: for that our faith is the victorie that ouercometh the worlde.

12 Yet there is alleged a teſtimonie out of the law of Moſes, which ſemeth to be much againſt our ſaluation. For after the publiſhing of
Deu. 30. 11. the law, he proteſteth vnto the people in this maner. The commaundement that I commmaunde thee this day, is not hid from thee, neither farre of: It is not in heauen, but harde by thee, it is in thy mouth and in thy heart, thou ſhouldeſt do it. Truely if this be taken to be ſpoken of the bare cõmaundementes, I graunt they be of no ſmal weight to this preſent matter. For though it were eaſy to mocke it out with ſaying, that here is ſpoken not of the eaſineſſe and redineſſe of obſeruation, but of knowledge: yet euen ſo, peraduenture it woulde alſo
Rom. 10. 8. leaue ſome doubt. But the Apoſtle which is no doubtfull expoſitour, taketh away all doubt from vs, which affirmeth that Moſes here ſpake of the doctrine of the Goſpell. But if any obſtinate man will ſay, that Paule violently wreſted thoſe wordes, that they might be drawene to the Goſpel: although his boldeneſſe ſo to ſay ſhal not be without impietie, yet is there ſufficiēt matter beſide the authoritie of the Apoſtle to conuince him withall. For if Moſes ſpake of the cõmaundementes only, then he puffed vp the people with a moſt vaine confidence. For what ſhould they els haue done, but throwen them ſelues down headlong, if they had taken vpõ them the keping of the lawe by their own ſtrength, as a thing not hard for them? Where is then that ſo ready eaſineſſe to keepe the lawe, where there is no acceſſe vnto it, but by a hedlong fall to deſtruction? Wherfore there is nothing more certaine, than that Moſes in theſe wordes did meane the couenant of mercie, which he had publiſhed together with the ſtreight requiring of ẏ law.
Deu. 30. 8. For in a few verſes before he had taught, that our heartes muſt be circumciſed by ẏ hãd of God, that we may loue him. Therfore he placed ẏ eaſineſſe, wherof he ſtreightway after ſpeaketh, not in the ſtrẽgth of mã, but in ẏ helpe & ſuccour of ẏ holy Ghoſt, ẇ performeth his worke

mightely in our weakeneſſe. Albeit the place is not ſimply to be vnderſtanded of the commaundementes, but rather of the promiſes of the Goſpell, which are ſo farre from ſtabliſhing a power in vs to obtayne righteouſneſſe, that they vtterly ouerthrow it. Paul conſidering that ſame, proueth by this teſtimony, that ſaluation is offred vs in the Goſpell, not vnder that hard and impoſſible condition, wherwith the law dealeth with vs, that is, that they onely ſhall attayne it which haue fulfilled all the commaundements, but vnder a condition that is eaſie, ready, and playne to come vnto. Therfore this teſtimony maketh nothing to chalenge freedom to the will of man.

13 There are alſo certaine other places wōt to be obiected, whereby is ſhewed that God ſomtime, withdrawing ỹ ſuccour of his grace, trieth men, and wayteth to ſee to what end they will applie their endeuours, as is that place in Oſee: I will go to my place till they put it in their heart and ſeeke my face. It were a fond thing (ſay they) if the Lord ſhould conſider whether Iſrael would ſeke his face, vnleſſe their mindes were pliable that they might after their owne wil incline thēſelues to the one ſide or the other. As though this were not a thinge commonly vſed with God in the Prophetes, to make a ſhewe as if he did deſpiſe and caſt away his people, till they haue amended their life. But what will the aduerſaries gather out of ſuch threatninges? If they meane to gather, that the people beinge forſaken of God, may purpoſe their owne ſaluation: all the Scripture ſhall cry out againſt them in ſo doing. If they confeſſe that the grace of God is neceſſary to conuerſion, why ſtriue they with vs? But they ſo graunt it neceſſary, that ſtill they will haue mans power preſerued vnto him. Howe proue they that? truely not by this place, nor any like to it. For it is one thing, to depart aſide from man, and to looke what he will do being giuen ouer and left to himſelfe, and an other thinge to helpe his litle ſtrength after the meaſure of his weakeneſſe. What then (will ſome man ſay) do theſe manners of ſpeaking meane? I aunſwere that they are aſmuch in effect, as if God had ſayd: Foraſmuch as I preuaile nothing with this ſtubborne people by admoniſhinge, exhorting and rebukinge, I will withdraw my ſelfe a while: and ſitte ſtill and ſuffer them to be afflicted: I will ſee if at length, after longe miſeries, they will beginne to remember me, to ſeeke my face. The Lordes goinge farre away, ſignifieth the taking away of Prophecy: his lookinge what men will do, ſignifieth that he keepinge ſilence, and as it were hidinge himſelfe, doth for a time exerciſe them with diuerſe afflictions. Both theſe thinges he doth to humble vs the more. For we ſhoulde ſooner be dulled than amended with the ſcourges of aduerſity, vnleſſe he did frame vs to that tractablenelle by his Spirite. Now whereas the Lorde beinge offended, and in a manner weryed with our obſtinate ſtubbornneſſe, doth not for a time leaue vs (that is by takinge away his word in which he is wont to geue vs a certayne preſence of himſelfe) and doth make a proufe what we would do in his abſence, it is falſely gathered hereof that there is any ſtrength of free will that he ſhould behold and trie, foraſmuch as he doth it to no other ende, but to driue vs to acknowledge our owne being nothing.

14 They bringe alſo for their defence the continuall manner of ſpeakinge, that is vſed both in the Scriptures and in the talke of men. For good workes are called ours, and it is no leſſe ſayd that we do the thing that is holy and pleaſinge to God, than that we committe ſinnes. But if ſinnes be iuſtly imputed to vs, as proceedinge from vs, truely in righteous doinges alſo ſomewhat by the ſame reaſon ought to be aſſigned vnto vs. For it were againſt reaſon that it ſhoulde be ſayd that we do thoſe thinges, to the doing whereof being vnable of our owne motiõ, we are moued by God like ſtones. Therfore though we giue the chiefe parte to the grace of God, yet theſe manners of ſpeaking do ſhew that our endeuour hath alſo yet a ſecond parte. If that thing onely were ſtil enforced, that good workes are called ours,

Mat. 6. I would obiect againe, that the bread is called ours, which we pray to haue giuen vs of God. What will they get by the title of poſſeſſion, but that by the bountifulnes & free gift of God, the ſame thing becommeth ours, which otherwiſe is not due vnto vs? Therefore either lette them laugh at the ſame abſurdity in the Lordes prayer, or let them not recken this to be laughed at, that good workes are called ours, in which we haue no property, but by the liberality of God. But this is ſomewhat ſtronger, that the Scripture oftentimes affirmeth that we our ſelues do worſhip God, obey the law & apply good workes. Sith theſe are the dueties properly belonging to the minde and will: howe could it agree that theſe thinges are both referred to the holy Ghoſt, & alſo attributed to vs, vnleſſe there were a certaine communicatinge of our endeuour with the power of God? Out of theſe ſnares we ſhall eaſily vnwinde our ſelues, if we well conſider the manner how the ſpirite of the Lorde worketh in the holy ones. The ſimilitude wherwith they enuiouſly preſſe vs is from the purpoſe, for who is ſo fonde to thinke that the mouing of man differeth nothing from the caſting of a ſtone? Neither doth any ſuch thinge follow of our doctrine. We recken among the naturall powers of man, to allow and refuſe, to will and not will, to endeuour and to reſiſt, that is, to

allowe vanity and to refuſe perfect goodneſſe, to will euill and to be vnwilling to good, to endeuour our ſelues to wickedneſſe and to reſiſt righteouſneſſe. What doth the Lord herein? If it be his will to vſe that peruerſeneſſe as an inſtrument of his wrath, he directeth and appointeth it to what end he will, that he by an euill hand may execute his good worke. Shall we then compare a wicked man that ſo ſerueth the power of God, when he laboureth onely to obey his owne luſt, to a ſtone that beinge throwen by the violence of an other, is caried neither with mouing nor ſenſe nor will of his owne? We ſe how much difference there is. But what doth he in good thinges, of which is our principall queſtion? when he erecteth his kingdom in them, he by his ſpirit reſtrayneth mans will, that it be not caried vp and downe with wandering luſtes, according to the inclination of nature: & that it may be bent to holineſſe and righteouſneſſe, he boweth, frameth, faſhioneth & directeth it to the rule of his righteouſnes: and that it ſhould not ſtumble or fall, he doth ſtabliſh and confirme it with the ſtrength of his ſpirite. For which reaſon Auguſtine ſayth: Thou will ſay vnto me: then we are wrought, and worke not. Yea thou both worke ſt and art wrought, and thou worke ſt well when thou art wrought of that which is good. The ſpirite of God that worketh thee, helpeth them that worke, and giueth himſelfe the name of a helper, for that thou alſo worke ſt ſomewhat. In the firſt parte he teacheth, that mans working is not taken away by the mouing of the holy Ghoſt, becauſe will is of nature, which is ruled to aſpire to goodneſſe. But where he byandby addeth, that by the name of help, may be gathered that we alſo do worke ſomewhat, we ought not ſo to take it, as if he did giue any thing ſeuerally to vs: but becauſe he woulde not cheriſh ſlouthfullneſſe in vs, he ſo matcheth the working of God with ours, that to will may be of nature, and to will well of grace. Therefore he ſayd a litle before, Vnleſſe God helpe vs, we ſhall not be able to ouercome, no nor yet to fight at all.

15 Hereby appeareth, that the grace of God (as the word is taken when we ſpeake of regeneration) is the rule of the ſpirite, to direct & gouerne the will of man. And it can not gouerne it, vnleſſe it correct it, reforme it, and renew it (from whenſe we ſay that the beginninge of regeneration is, that that which is ours might be deſtroyed) & vnleſſe it moue it, ſtirre it, driue it forward, cary it and hold it. Whereupon we do truely ſay, that all the doinges that proceede from it, are wholly the only worke of the ſame grace. In the meane time we denie not that it is very true that Auguſtine teacheth, that will is not deſtroyed by grace, but rather repayred. For both theſe thinges do ſtand very well together: that mens will be ſayd to be reſtored, when the faultineſſe and peruerſeneſſe thereof being reformed, it is directed to the true rule of iuſtice: and alſo that a new will be ſayd to be created in man, foraſmuch as it is ſo defiled and corrupted, that it needeth vtterly to put on a new nature. Nowe is there no cauſe to the contrary, but that we may well be ſayd to do the ſame thing that the ſpirit of God doth in vs, although our owne will do of it ſelfe giue vs toward it nothing at all, that may be ſeuered from his grace. And therfore we muſt kepe that in mind, which we haue elſewhere alleged out of Auguſtine, that ſome do in vayne trauaile to finde in the will of man ſome good thinge that is properly her owne. For whatſoeuer mixture men ſtudy to bring from the ſtrength of free wil to the grace of God, it is nothinge but a corruptinge of it, as if a man would delay wine with dirty and bitter water. But although whatſoeuer good is in the wil of man, it proceedeth from ỹ mere inſtinct of the holy Ghoſt, yet becauſe it is naturally planted in vs to will, it is not without cauſe ſayd, that we do thoſe thinges whereof God chalengeth the praiſe to himſelfe. Firſt, becauſe it is ours whatſoeuer by his goodneſſe he worketh in vs, ſo that we vnderſtand it to be not of our ſelues: and then becauſe the minde is ours, the will is ours, the endeuour is ours, which are by him directed to good.

16 Thoſe other teſtimonies beſide theſe, that they ſcrape together here and there, ſhall not much trouble euen meane wittes that haue well conceiued onely the ſolutions aboue ſayd. They allege that Ge. 4.7. ſaying out of Geneſis, Thine appetite ſhalbe vnder thee, and thou ſhalt beare rule ouer it. Which they expound of ſinne, as if ỹ Lord did promiſe to Cain, that the force of ſinne ſhould not get the vpper hãd in his minde, if he would labour in ſubduinge of it. But we ſay that it better agreeth with the order of the text, that this be taken to be ſpoken of Abell. For there Gods purpoſe was to reproue the wickednes of the enuy that Cain had conceiued againſt his brother. And that he doth two wayes. One, that in vayne he imagined miſchiefe to excell his brother in Gods ſight, before whom no honor is giuen but vnto righteouſneſſe: the other, that he was to much vnthankefull for the benefit of God which he had alredy receiued, which could not abide his brother, although he had him ſubiect vnder his authority. But leaſt we ſhould ſeme therfore to embrace this expoſition, becauſe the other is againſt vs: let vs admitte that God ſpake of ſinne. If it be ſo, then God either promiſeth or commaundeth that which he there declareth. If he commaundeth, then haue we already ſhewed that therby followeth no prouſe of the power of man. If he promiſeth, where is the fulfilling of the promiſe? for Cain became ſubiect to ſinne, ouer which he ſhould haue had dominion. They will ſay, that in the promiſe was included a ſecrete condition, as if it had bin ſayd, that he ſhould haue the victory if he would ſtriue for it. But who will receiue theſe crooked compaſſes? For if this dominion be meant of ſinne, then no man can doubt that it is ſpoken by way of commaundement, wherein is not determined what we are able to do, but what we ought to do, yea though it be aboue our power. Albeit both the matter it ſelfe and the order of Grammer do require, that there be a compariſon made of Cain and Abel, becauſe the elder brother ſhould not haue bin ſet behinde the yonger, vnleſſe he had become worſe by his owne wicked doing.

17 They vſe alſo the teſtimony of the Apoſtle, which ſaith, that it is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but of God that hath mercy. Wherby they gather that there is ſomewhat in mans will and endeuour, which of it ſelfe, though it be weake, beinge holpen by the mercy of God, is not without proſperous ſucceſſe. But if they did ſoberly wey what matter Paule there intreateth of, they woulde not ſo vnaduiſedly abuſe this ſentence. I know that they may bringe forth Origen and Hierome for maintainers of their expoſition: and I coulde on the other ſide ſet Auguſtine againſt them. But what they haue thought, it maketh no matter to vs, if we know what Paul meant There he teacheth that ſaluation is prepared only for them, to whom the lord vouchſaueth to graunt his mercy: and that ruine and deſtruction is prepared for all thoſe that he hath not choſen. He had vnder the example of Pharao declared the ſtate of the reprobate, & had alſo confirmed the aſſurednes of free election by the teſtimony of Moſes, I will haue mercy vpon whom I will haue mercy. Nowe he concludeth, that it is not of him that willeth, or him that runneth, but of God that hath mercy. If it be thus vnderſtanded, that wil or endeuour are not ſufficiēt, becauſe they are to weake for ſo great a weight, that which Paule ſayth, had not bin aptly ſpoken: Therefore away with theſe ſutteltes, to ſay: It is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, therfore there is ſome will, there is ſome running. For Paules meaning is more ſimply, thus: It is not will, it is not running that get vs the way to ſaluation, herin is only the mercy of God. For he ſpeaketh no otherwiſe in this place than he doth to Titus, where he writeth, that the goodneſſe and kindeneſſe of God appeareth not by the workes of righteouſnes, which we haue done, but for his infinite mercy. They themſelues that make this argument, that Paule meant that there is ſome will & ſome running, becauſe he ſaid, ỹ it is not of him that willeth nor of him that runneth, would not giue me leaue to reason after the same fashion, that we haue done some good workes, because Paul sayth, that we haue not attayned the goodnesse of God by the good works that we haue done. If they see a fault in this argumẽt, let them open their eyes, & they shall perceiue that their owne is not without the like deceite. For that is a sure reason that Augustine resteth vpon, If it were therfore sayd that it is not of him that willeth nor of him that runneth, because neither the will nor the running is sufficient. Then it may be turned on the contrary parte that it is not of the mercy of God, because it alone worketh not. Sith this second is an absurdity, Augustine doth rightfully conclude, that this is spoken to this meaning, that there is no good will of man, vnlesse it be prepared of the Lord, not but that we ought both to will and to runne, but because God worketh both in vs. No lesse vnaptly do some wrest that sayinge of Paule: We are the workers with God, which out of dout ought to be restrayned only to the ministers: and that they are called workers with him, not that they bring any thing of thẽselues, but because God vseth their seruice, after that he hath made thẽ mete and furnished with necessary giftes.

Rom. 9. 16.

Li. 7. in epiſt. ad Rom. Hiero. dial. in Pela.

Tit. 3. 4.

Epi. 107 ad Vitalem.

1. Cor. 3. 9.

18 They bring foorth Ecclesiasticus, who, as it is not vnknowen, is a wryter of whose authority is douted. But although we refuse it not (which yet we may lawfully do) what doth he testifie for free wil? He sayth, that man so soone as he was created, was left in the hand of his owne counsell: that commaundementes were giuen him, which if he obserued, he shoulde agayne be preserued by them: that before man was set life and death, good and euill: that whatsoeuer he would, should be giuen him. Be it, that man receiued from his creation power to obtaine either life or death. What if on the other side we answere that he lost it? Truely my minde is not, to speake against Salomon, which affirmeth that man at the beginning was create vpright, and he forged vnto himselfe many inuentions. But because man in swaruing, lost as it were by shipwrecke both himselfe and all his good things, it followeth not byandby, that all that is giuen to his first creation belongeth to his nature being corrupted and degenerate. Therfore I answere, not to them onely, but also to Ecclesiasticus himselfe whatsoeuer he be. If thou meane to instruct man, to seeke within himselfe power to attayne saluation, thy authority is not of so great force with vs, that it may be any preiudice, be it neuer so small, against the vndouted word of God. But if thou only study to restrayne the malice of the flesh, which in laying the blame of her owne euills vpon God, vseth to seeke a vayne defense for it selfe, & therefore thou answerest

Eccl. 15 14.

Eccle. 7 30.

that

that vprightneſſe was giuen vnto men, whereby it may appeare that himſelfe was cauſe of his owne deſtruction, I willingly agree vnto it: ſo that againe thou agree in this with me, that now by his owne fault he is ſpoyled of thoſe ornamentes, wherwith God had clothed him at the beginning: & that ſo we confeſſe together, that now he more needeth a Phiſician than a defender.

19 Yet they haue nothing oftener in their mouth thā ỹ parable of Chriſt of the wayfaringe man, whom theeues layd abroad halfe dead in the way. I know that it is common almoſt with all wryters, that the calamity of mākinde is repreſented vnder the figure of that wayfaring man. Therupon do our aduerſaries gather an argument, ỹ man is not ſo maymed with the robbery of ſinne and the Deuill, but ỹ he keepeth ſtill remayning the leauinges of his former good things, foraſmuch as it is ſayd, that he was left halfe aliue. For where is that halfe life, vnles ſome portion both of right reaſon & will remayned? Firſt if I would not giue place to their allegory, I beſeech you, what would they do? For there is no dout that it was deuiſed by the fathers beſide the naturall ſenſe of the Lordes wordes. Allegories ought to go no further than they haue the rule of Scripture going before them: ſo farre is it of, that they be by themſelues ſufficient to ground any doctrines. And there want not reaſons, whereby I can, if I liſt, ouerthrow this deuiſe, for the word of God leaueth not to man halfe a life, but teacheth that he is vtterly dead, for ſomuch as cōcerneth bleſſed life. And Paul whē he ſpeaketh of our redemption, doth not ſay that we were healed, whē we were halfe dead and halfe aliue, but that we were raiſed vp againe when he were dead. He calleth not vpon them that are halfe aliue to receiue the light of Chriſt, but them that ſlepe and are buried. And in like maner ſpeaketh the Lord himſelfe, when he ſayth, that the houre is come when the dead ſhall riſe againe at his voice. With what face would they ſet this light alluſiō againſt ſo many plaine ſentences? But let this allegory haue the force of a certaine teſtimony, yet what ſhall they wring out of vs therby? Mā is halfe aliue, therfore he hath ſomwhat left ſafe. I graunt: he hath a wit capable of vnderſtāding, althogh it pearce not to ỹ heauenly and ſpirituall wiſdom: he hath true iudgement of honeſty: he hath ſome feeling of the godhead howbeit ỹ he attaine not the true knowledge of God. But to what purpoſe come all theſe thinges? Truely they bring not to paſſe that the ſame ſaying of Auguſtine be taken frō vs, which is alſo approued by cōmon conſent of the Schooles: that after mans fall the freely giuen good thinges, whereupon ſaluation hangeth, are taken away from him, and that his naturall giftes are corrupted and defiled. Lette therefore this trueth remayne with vs vndouted, which can be ſhaken by no engines, that the minde of man is ſo eſtranged frō the righteouſnes of God, that it cōceiueth, coueteth, & enterpriſeth al wickednes, filthines, vncleannes, and miſchiefe: that his heart is ſo throughly ſoked in poyſon of ſinne, that it can breath out nothinge but corrupt ſtinke: But if at any time they do vtter any goodnes in ſhew, yet ſtill the minde remayneth alway wrapped in hypocriſie and deceitfull crookedneſſe, and the heart entangled with inward peruerſnes.

The vj. Chapter.

That man being loſt, muſt ſeeke for redemption in Chriſt.

SIth all mankinde hath periſhed in the perſon of Adam, that excellence and nobility of beginninge which we haue ſpoken of would ſo litle profit vs, that it would rather turne to our greater ſhame, till God appeare the redeemer in the perſon of his onely begotten Sonne, which acknowledgeth not men defiled and corrupted with ſinne to be his worke. Therefore ſith we are fallen from life into death, all that knowledge of God the creator whereof we haue entreated, were vnprofitable, vnleſſe there followed alſo faith ſetting foorth God a father vnto vs in Chriſt. Truely this was the naturall order that the frame of the world ſhould be a Schoole vnto vs to learne godlineſſe, from whenſe might be made a paſſage for vs to eternalll life and perfect felicity: but ſince our fallinge away, whether ſoeuer we turne our eyes, vpward and downeward, the curſe of God ſtill preſenteth it ſelfe vnto our ſight, which while it poſſeſſeth and enwrappeth innocent creatures by our fault, muſt needs ouerwhelme our owne ſoules with deſperation. For although Gods will is that his fatherly fauour toward vs do ſtill many wayes appeare: yet by beholding of the worlde we cannot gather that he is our Father when our conſcience inwardly pricketh vs, and ſheweth that there is in ſinne iuſt cauſe of forſaking, why God ſhould not accompt or recken vs for his children. Beſide that there is in vs both ſlouthfullneſſe and vnthankfulneſſe: becauſe both our mindes, as they be blinded, do not ſee the trueth, and alſo as all our ſenſes be peruerſe, we malicioufly defraude God of his glory. Therefore we muſt come to that ſayinge of Paule:

1. Cor. 1 becauſe in the wiſdom of God, the world knew not God by wiſdom,
22. it pleaſed God by the fooliſhneſſe of preachinge to ſaue them that beleue. The wiſdom of God he calleth this honorable ſtage of heauen and earth, furniſhed with innumerable miracles, by beholdinge whereof we ought wiſely to haue knowen God. But becauſe we ſo ill profited therein, he calleth vs backe to the fayth of Chriſt, which for that it ſeemeth fooliſh, ỹ vnbeleuers do diſdaine. Wherfore although the preaching of the croſſe do not agree with mãs wit, yet ought we humbly to embrace it, if we deſire to returne to God our creator and maker, that he may beginne againe to be our father. Truely ſince the fall of the firſt man, no knowledge of God auailed to ſaluation, without the Mediatour. For Chriſt ſpeaketh not of his owne age onely, Ioh. 17.

but comprehendeth all ages, whẽ he ſayth that this is the eternall life, 3.
to know the father the one true God, & him whom he hath ſent Ieſus Chriſt. And ſo much the fowler is their ſluggiſhneſſe, which take vpon them to ſet open heauen to all prophane and vnbeleuing men, without his grace whom, the Scripture ech where teacheth to be the only gate wherby we entre into ſaluation. But if any wil reſtrayne that ſaying of Chriſt only to the publiſhing of the Goſpel, we haue in readineſſe wherwith to confute him. For this hath bin a cõmon ſentence in all ages & among all nations, that without reconciliation they that are eſtranged from God & pronounced, accurſed and the children of wrath, can not pleaſe God. And here may be alſo alleaged that which Iohn. 4.
Chriſt anſwered to the womã of Samaria: Ye worſhip what ye know 21.
not, but we worſhip that which we know: becauſe the ſaluation is frõ the Iewes. In which wordes he both condemneth of falſehood all the religions of the Gentiles, and alſo aſſigneth a reaſon why, for that the Redeemer was promiſed vnder the lawe to the onely choſen people. Whereupon it followeth, that no worſhip euer pleaſed God, but that which had reſpect vnto Chriſt. For which cauſe alſo Paule affirmeth Ephe. 2.
that all the nations of the Gentiles were without God, and voide of 12.
the hope of life. Now wheras Iohn teacheth that life was from the beginning in Chriſt, and that all the world fell from it, we muſt nedes returne to the ſame fountayne Chriſt. And therfore Chriſt, inſomuch as he is the reconciler, affirmeth himſelfe to be the life. And truly the inheritance of heauen belongeth to none, but to the childrẽ of God. But it is not meete that they be accompted in the place and degree of childrẽ, that are not grafted into the body of the only begotten ſonne And Iohn plainely teſtifieth, that they which beleue in his name, are made the children of God. But becauſe it is not directly my purpoſe yet to diſcourſe of fayth in Chriſt, therefore it ſhall for this time be ſufficient to haue touched it by the way.

2 And therefore God neuer ſhewed himſelfe merciſull to the olde people, nor euer did put them in any hope of grace without the Mediatour. I omitte to ſpeake of the ſacrifices of the lawe, wherein the faithfull were openly and plainely taught, that ſaluation is no where elſe to be ſought, but in the clenſing which was performed by Chriſt alone. Only this I say, that the blessed and happy state of the church hath bin alway grounded vpon ỹ person of Christ. For though God comprehended all the issue of Abraham in his couenant, yet doth Paule wisely reason, that Christ is properly that seede in whom all nations were to be blessed, forasmuch as we know that not all they were reckened his seede that were begotten of him according to the flesh. For (to speake nothing of Ismael and other) how came it to passe that of the two sonnes of Isaac, that is Esau and Iacob, brethren borne at one birth, while they were yet together in their mothers wombe, the one was chosen, the other refused? Yea how came it to passe that the elder was reiected and the yonger only tooke place? And how also came it to passe, that the greater parte should be forsaken? It appeareth therefore, that the seede of Abraham was principally reckened in one person, and that the promised saluation did neuer stande sure till it came to Christ, whose office is to gather together the thinges that were scattered abroad. Therefore the first adoption of the chosen people did hang vpon the grace of ỹ Mediatour. Which though it be not in so plaine wordes expressed by Moses, yet it sufficiently appeareth that it was commonly knowen to all the godly. For before that there was any king create among the people, Hanna the mother of Samuell entreatinge of the felicity of the godly, euen then sayd thus in her song: God shall giue strength to his king, and shal exalt the horne of his anointed. In which wordes she meaneth that God shall blesse his church. Wherewith also agreeth the oracle that is within a litle after adioyned: The Priest whom I shall appoint shall walke before mine anointed. Neither is it to be douted, but that the will of the heauenly father was to haue the liuely image of Christ to be seene in Dauid and his posterity. Therefore meaning to exhorte the godly to the feare of God, he biddeth them to kisse the Sonne. Wherwith this saying of the Gospell also agreeth: He that honoreth not the sonne, honoreth not the father. Therefore although by fallinge away of ten tribes the kingdome decayed: yet it behoued the couenant to stande which God had made in Dauid and his successours: as also he sayd by the Prophets: I will not altogether cut of the kingdom, for Dauid my seruauntes sake, and for Hierusalems sake, whom I haue chosen: but there shall remaine one tribe to thy sonne. Where the same thing is repeted the second and third time. It is also expressely added. I will afflict the seede of Dauid, but not for euerwith in a litle space of time after, it is sayd. For Dauid his seruantes sake God hath geuen a light in Hierusalem, to rayse vp a sonne and to kepe Hierusalem in sauetie. Now when the state grew toward destruction, it was said agayne: God would woulde not ſcatter Iuda for Dauid his ſeruantes ſake, becauſe he had ſpokē ẏ he would giue a light to hī & his ſonnes for euer. Finally this is the ſumme, that all other being paſſed ouer, only Dauid was choſen, vpon whom the good pleaſure of God ſhould reſt. As in an other place it is ſayd: He hath refuſed the tabernacle of Silo, and the tabernacle of Ioſeph, and he hath not choſen the tribe of Ephraim, but he hath choſen the tribe of Iuda, the mount Sion which he hath loued. He hath choſen his ſeruant Dauid to feede Iacob his people, and Iſraell his inheritāce. To cōclude, it pleaſed God ſo to ſaue his church, that the ſafety and preſeruation thereof ſhould hange vpon that one head, & therfore Dauid crieth out, The Lord ẏ ſtrength of his people, the ſtrength of the ſaluations of his Chriſt. And byandby he addeth a prayer: Saue thy people & bleſſe thine inheritaunce: meaning that the ſtate of the church is with vnſeparable knot ioyned to the gouernmēt of Chriſt. And in ẏ ſame meaning in an other place: Lord ſaue vs: Let the king heare vs in the day ẏ we ſhall call vpon him. In which words he plainly teacheth, that the faithfull did vpon none other confidence flee to the helpe of God, but becauſe they were hidden vnder the ſuccour of the king. Which is gathered by an other Pſalm. Lord ſaue vs: Bleſſed is he that cōmeth in the name of the Lord. Where it is plaine enough, that the faithfull are called backe vnto Chriſt, that they may hope that they ſhalbe ſaued by ẏ hand of God. The ſame reſpect hath the other prayer, where all the Church calleth vpon ẏ mercy of God. Let thy hand be vpon the man of thy right hand, vpon the ſonne of mā, whom thou haſt preſerued (or appointed) to thy ſelfe. For though the author of the Pſalme bewayleth ẏ ſcattring abrode of the whole people, yet he praieth for their reſtitution in the head alone. Where, when the people was led away into exile, the land waſted, & all things to mans ſeruing deſtroyed, Hieremy lamenteth the ouerthrow of the Church, he doth principally complaine that by deſtruction of the kingdom all hope was cut of from the faithfull. Chriſt (ſayth he) the ſpirit of our mouth is taken in our ſinnes, to whom we ſayd, In thy ſhadowe we ſhall liue among the nations. Hereby now it ſufficiently appeareth, that becauſe God can not be merciful to mankinde without the Mediatour, therefore Chriſt was alway ſet before the holy fathers in time of the law, to whom they might direct their faith.

4 It was Gods will to haue the Iewes ſo inſtructed with theſe prophecies,that to ſeke for their deliuerance,they ſhould bend their eyes directly to Chriſt. And though they had ſhamfully ſwarued,yet could not the remẽbrance of the generall principle be aboliſhed,that God by the hand of Chriſt,as he had promiſed to Dauid,would be the deliuerer of his church,and ſo the couenant ſhould be of his owne free graunt,wherby God had adopted his choſen. Hereby it came to paſſe, that this ſonge ſounded in the mouth of the children when Chriſt a litle before his death entred into Hieruſalẽ,Hoſianna to the ſonne of Dauid. For it appeareth that it was commonly knowen and ſpoken of, & according to common vſe that they ſong,that the only pledge of Gods mercy remayned vnto them, in the cõming of the Redemer. Mat.21.9.

For this cauſe Chriſt himſelfe, to make his diſciples plainly and perfectly beleue in God, biddeth thẽ to beleue on himſelfe, Beleue ye in God,(ſaith he) then beleue alſo in me. For though (to ſpeake properly) faith climeth vp from Chriſt to the father,yet he meaneth that the ſame faith,albeit it reſt vpon God,doth by litle and litle vaniſh away, vnleſſe he become a meane to hold it in aſſured ſtedfaſtneſſe. Otherwiſe the maieſty of God is to hie for mortall men, which creepe vpon the grounde like wormes,to attaine vnto it. Wherefore I allowe that common ſaying,that God is the obiect of faith,but in ſuch ſorte that it needeth correction. Becauſe Chriſt is not in vaine called the inuiſible Image of God, but by this title we are put in minde,that if we finde not God in Chriſt, ſaluation can not be knowen vnto vs. For although amonge the Iewes, the Scribes and Phariſees had darkened with falſe inuentions, that which the Prophetes had ſpoken concerning the Redeemer:yet Chriſt tooke it for a thing confeſſed as receiued by common cõſent,that there was none other remedy, deſpered caſe,and no other meane of deliuering the church, but by giuing the Mediatour. In deede that was not commonly knowen amonge the people as it ought to haue bin, which Paule teacheth, that Chriſt is the ende of the lawe. But howe true and aſſured it is, doth playnely Ioh.14.1. appeare by the law and the Prophetes. I ſpeake not yet of fayth, becauſe there ſhalbe elſewhere a more conuenient place for it. Only let the readers hold this as faſt ſtabliſhed, that the firſt degree of godlineſſe be, to acknowledge God to be a Father vnto vs, to defend, gouerne and cheriſh vs, till he gather vs together into the euerlaſting inheritance of his kingdom: and that hereby it plainly appeareth which we ſayd euen now, that the knowledge of God which bringeth ſaluation, ſtandeth not without Chriſt, and that therefore from the beginning he hath bin ſet forth vnto all the elect, that they ſhould looke vpon him, and that in him ſhould reſt all their affiance. Accordinge to this meaning writeth Ireneus, that the Father which is vnmeaſurable, is in his Sonne meaſured, becauſe he hath applied himſelfe to ỹ meaſure of our capacity, leaſt he ſhould drowne our mindes with the vnmeaſurablnes of his glory. Which thing the phrentike men not conſidering, do wreſt a profitable ſentence to a wicked fantaſy, as though there were in Chriſt but a portion of the godhead deriued from the whole perfection: whereas it meaneth nothing elſe, but that God is
1. Ioh. 2. 31. comprehended in Chriſt alone. That ſayinge of Iohn hath alway bin true: He ỹ hath not the Sonne, neither hath he the father. For though in old time many did boſt that they worſhipped the ſoueraigne God, the maker of heauen and earth: yet becauſe they had no Mediatour, it was impoſſible that they ſhould truely taſt of the mercy of God, & ſo be perſuaded ỹ he was their father. Therefore becauſe they knew not ỹ head that is Chriſt, the knowledge of God was but vaine amõg them: whereby alſo it came to paſſe, that at length falling into groſſe & filthy ſuperſtitions, they bewrayed their owne ignorance. As at this day the Turkes, although they report with full mouth, that the creator of heauen and earth is their God, yet do they thruſt an idole in place of the true God while they ſwarue from Chriſt.

That the lavv vvas giuen, not to hold ſtill the people in it, but to nourish the hope of ſaluation in Chriſt vntill his comming.

BY this continuall proceſſe that we haue rehearſed, may be gathered, that the law was added about foure hundred yeres after the death of Abraham, not for this entẽt to lead away the choſen people from Chriſt: but rather to keepe theyr mindes in expectation vntill his comminge, to kindle a deſire of him, & to confirme them in looking for him, that they ſhould not waxe faint with long tariance. I meane by this word Law, not only the ten commaundementes dementes, which preſcribe a rule how to liue godlily and righteouſly, but alſo the forme of religion deliuered by the hand of Moſes. For Moſes was not made a lawgiuer to aboliſh the bleſſinge promiſed to the kinred of Abraham: but rather we ſee how euery where he putteth the Iewes in remembrance of that free couenaunt made with their fathers whoſe heires they were, as if he had bin ſent to renewe the ſame. That was moſt plainely ſet foorth by the ceremonies. For what were more vaine and fonde, than for men to offer vp lothſome ſtinke of the fat of cattell, to reconcile themſelues to God therby? to flee to the ſprinkling of water or bloud to waſh away their filthines? Finally, all the ſeruice of God apointed in the law (if it be conſidered by it ſelfe, and do not containe ſhadows and figures, which the trueth ſhould anſwere vnto) ſhalbe but a very mockery. Wherfore not without a cauſe both in Stephens ſermō, & in the Epiſtle to the Hebrues is that place ſo diligently weyed, where God commaūdeth Moſes to make all things pertaining to the tabernacle, according to the paterne that had bin ſhewed him in the mount. For if there had not bin ſome ſpirituall thing appointed that they ſhould tend vnto, ỹ Iewes ſhould no leſſe haue fondly ſpent their labour in them, than the Gentiles did in their trifles. Prophane men that neuer earneſtly applied the ſtudy of godlineſſe, cannot without lothſome tediouſneſſe abide to here ſo many ſundry faſhions of vſages: and they not onely maruell why God wearied his people with ſuch a heape of ceremonies, but alſo they deſpiſe and ſcorne them as childrens playes. And the cauſe is, for that they conſider not the end, frō which if the figures of the law be ſeuered, they muſt needes be condemned of vanity. But that ſame figure ſheweth, that God did not therefore commaund ſacrifices, becauſe he would occupie them that worſhipped him with earthly exerciſes, but rather to raiſe vp their minds hier. Which may alſo plainly appeare by his nature: for as he is ſpirituall, ſo he is delited with no other worſhippinge but ſpirituall. This do the ſayinges of the Prophetes teſtifie, wherein they rebuke the Iewes of ſluggiſhnes, for that they thought that any ſacrifices were of any value with God. Is that becauſe their purpoſe is to derogate any thing from the law? No, but according as they were true expoſitours of the law, ſo they would by this meane haue mens eyes directed to the marke frō which the cōmon people ſtrayed. Now by the grace offered to the Iewes it is certainly gathered, that the law was not void of Chriſt. For Moſes did ſet forth vnto them this end of the adoption, that they ſhoulde become a prieſtly kingdom to God. Which they coulde not obtaine vnles there were had for the meane therof a greater and more excellent reconciliation, than by the bloud of beastes. For what is lesse likely than Adams children, which by inheritably descending infection are all borne the bondslaues of sinne, to be aduaunced to royal dignity, & so to become partakers of the glory of God, vnlesse that so excellent a benefit shoulde come vnto them from elsewhere than from themselues? Also how could ỹ right of priesthoode remaine in force amõg them, who by filthinesse of sinnes were abhominable to God, vnles they had bin consecrate in a holy head? Wherefore Peter doth very aptly turne that saying of Moises, where he teacheth, that the fulnes of grace, the tast wherof the Iewes had taken vnder the law, was giuen in Christ: Yea are (sayth he) a chosen kinred, a kingly priesthoode. For to this end tendeth that turning of the wordes, to shewe that they, to whom Christ appeared by the Gospel, haue obtained more than their fathers, because they are all endued both ẅ priestly and kingly honor, that trusting vpon their mediatour, they may freely be bold to come forth into the sight of God.

1. Pet. 2. 9.

2 And here by the way it is to be noted, that the kingdom which at length was erected in the house of Dauid, is part of the law, & contained vnder the ministery of Moses. Whereupon followeth, that as wel in all the kinred of the Leuites as in the posterity of Dauid Christ was set before the eyes of ỹ olde people as in a double looking glasse. For, as I sayd euen now, they could not otherwise be before God either kings or priestes, which were both the bondslaues of sinne and of death, & defiled by their owne corruption. Herby appeareth that that saying of Paul is most true, that the Iewes were holden as vnder the keping of a Schoolemaister, till the sede came for whose sake the promise was giuen. For, because Christ was not yet familiarly knowen, they were like vnto children, whose weakenesse could not yet beare a full knowledge of heauenly thinges, but howe they were by ceremonies as it were led by the hand to Christ, is before spoken, & may be better vnderstanded by many testimonies of the Prophetes. For although it was commaunded them to come daily with newe sacrifices to appease God: yet Esay promiseth that all their sinnes shalbe cleansed with one onely sacrifice. Wherewith Daniell agreably sayeth: The priestes appointed of the tribe of Leui, did enter into the Sanctuary: but of the only priest it was once sayd, that by an oth he was chosen of God to be a priest for euer, according to the order of Melchisedec. At that time the anointing with oile was visible: but Daniel by his vision pronounceth ỹ there shalbe an other manner of anointing. And because I will not tary vpon many examples, the author of the Epistle to the Hebrues euen from the 4. chapter to the 11. doth largely and plainly plainely enough ſhewe, that the ceremonies are nothing worth and vaine till we come to Chriſt. As concerning the tenne commaundemẽtes: that leſſon of Paule is likewiſe to be kept in minde, that Chriſt is the ende of the law vnto ſaluation, to euery one that beleueth: And an other leſſon, that Chriſt is the Spirite that quickeneth the letter which of it ſelfe ſlayeth. For in the firſt of theſe two, he meaneth that righteouſneſſe is vainely taught by commaundementes, vntill Chriſt do geue it both by free imputation and by the ſpirite of regeneration. Wherfore he worthily calleth Chriſt the fulfilling or ende of the law. Bycauſe it ſhoulde nothing profit vs to knowe what God requireth of vs, vnleſſe he did ſuccour vs fainting and oppreſſed vnder the yoke & vntolerable burden. In an other place he teacheth that the lawe was made for tranſgreſſions, that is to bring men to humilitie being proued gilty of their owne damnation. And, bycauſe this is the true and onely preparation to ſeke Chriſt, what ſo euer he teacheth in diuerſe wordes, do all very well agree together. But bycauſe he then was in contention with peruerſe teachers, which fained that we do deſerue righteouſneſſe by the workes of the lawe, to confute their errour, he was compelled ſometime to ſpeake preciſely of the bare lawe, which yet otherwiſe is clothed with the couenant of free adoption.

Rom. 10 4. 2. Cor. 3 6. Gal. 3. 19.

3 But now it is good to know, how being taught by the morall lawe, we are made more inexcuſable, that our owne giltyneſſe may moue vs to craue pardon. If it be true that we be taught perfection of righteouſneſſe in the lawe: then this alſo followeth, that the abſolute keping thereof is perfect righteouſneſſe before God, that is, whereby a man may be demed and accompted righteous before the heauenly throne of iudgement. Wherefore Moſes, when he had publiſhed the lawe, doubted not to proteſt before heauen and earth, that he had ſet before Iſraell life and death, good and euill. And we may not denie, but that the reward of eternall ſaluation belongeth to the vpright obedience of the lawe, as the Lord hath promiſed it. Againe, yet it is good to examine, whether we performe that obedience, vpon deſert whereof we may conceiue a truſt of that reward. For to what ſmall purpoſe is it, to ſee the reward of eternall life ſet in keping of the lawe, vnleſſe we further knowe whether we may by that way attaine to eternall life? But herein the weakeneſſe of the lawe doth ſhewe it ſelfe. For bycauſe that keping of the lawe is founde in none of vs all, we are excluded from the promiſes of life, and do fall into curſe only. I do not nowe tell what doth come to paſſe, but what needes muſt ſo come to paſſe. For where as the doctrine of the lawe is farre aboue the power of man, he may in deede a farre of, looke at the promiſes,

Deu. 30. 19.

but yet not gather any fruite of them. Therefore this one thing remayneth, that by the goodneſſe of them he may the better weye his owne miſerie, while he conſidereth, that all hope of ſaluation being cut of, death doth certainely hang ouer him. On the other ſide do preſſe vs terrible penall lawes, which do holde entangled and faſt bounde not onely a fewe of vs, but euery one without exception: they preſſe vs, I ſay, and do purſue vs, with vnappeaſable rigour, ſo that we may ſe moſt preſent death in the lawe.

4 Therfore if we loke only vpon the lawe, we can do nothing but be diſcouraged, be confounded, and deſpeire, foraſmuch as by it we are all damned and curſed, & kept farre of from the bleſſedneſſe that he offreth to them that worſhip him. Wilt thou ſay then, Doth the Lord ſo mocke vs? For how ſmally doth it differ from mocking, to ſhewe forth a hope of felicitie, to allure and exhorte men vnto it, to proteſt that it is layed open for vs, when in the meane ſeaſon the entrie vnto it is forcloſed and impoſſible to be come to? I aunſwere: although the promiſes of the lawe, in ſo much as they are conditional, do hang vpon the perfect obedience of the lawe, which can no where be founde, yet are they not geuen in vaine. For when we haue learned that they ſhalbe voide and of no effect vnto vs, vnleſſe God embrace vs with his free goodneſſe without regarde of our workes, and vnleſſe we do embrace by faith the ſame goodneſſe geuen vs by the Goſpell, then want they not their effectualneſſe, yea with their condition annexed. For then he doth ſo freely geue all thinges vnto vs, that he addeth this alſo to the heape of his bountifulneſſe, that not refuſing our halfe full obedience, and remitting ſo much as it wanteth of full performance, he ſo maketh vs to enioy the frute of the promiſes of the lawe, as if we our ſelues had fulfilled the condition. But we will at this preſent procede no further in this matter, bycauſe it ſhalbe more largely to be entreated of, when we ſhall ſpeake of the Iuſtification of faith.

5 Wheras we ſaid that it is impoſſible to kepe the lawe, that is in fewe wordes to be both expounded and proued. For it is wont among the people commonly to be accompted an opinion of great abſurditie, ſo farre that Hierome doubted not to pronounce it accurſed: what Hierome thought, I do nothing ſtay vpon: as for vs, let vs ſearch what is truth. I will not here make long circumſtances of diuerſe ſortes of poſſibilities. I call that impoſſible, which both neuer hath ben, and alſo is hindered by the ordinance and decree of God, that it neuer herafter may be. If we recorde from the fartheſt time of memorie, I ſay that there hath none of the holy men, that being clothed with the

bodie of death, hath euer attained to that full perfection of loue, to loue God with all his heart, with all his minde, with all his soule, with all his power: Againe, that there hath bene none that hath not bene troubled with concupiscence. Who can say Nay? I see in deede what maner holy men fooliſh ſuperſtition doth imagine vnto vs, euen ſuch whoſe pureneſſe the heauenly Angels do ſcarcely counteruaile: but againſt both the Scripture and profe of experience. I ſay alſo, that there ſhall none herafter be, that ſhall come to the marke of true perfection, vnleſſe he be looſed from the burden of his bodie. For this point there are open teſtimonies of Scripture. Salomon ſaid, there is not a righteous man vpon the earth that ſinneth not. And Dauid ſaid: euery liuing man ſhal not be iuſtified in thy ſight. Iob in many places affirmeth the ſame. But Paule moſt plainly of all: that the fleſh luſteth againſt the ſpirite, and the ſpirite againſt the fleſh. And by no other reaſon he proueth that all that are vnder the lawe, are ſubiect to the curſe. But bycauſe it is written, that curſed are all they that do not abide in all the commaundementes therof: meaning, or rather taking it as a thing confeſſed, that no man can abide in them. And what ſoeuer is foreſpoke by the Scriptures, that muſt be holden for perpetuall, yea and neceſſarie. With ſuch ſutteltie did the Pelagians trouble Auguſtine, ſaying that there is wrong done to God, to ſay that he doth commaund more than the faithful are able by his grace to performe. Auguſtine, to auoide their cauillation confeſſed, that the Lord might in deede, if he woulde, aduaunce a mortall man to the pureneſſe of Angels: but that he neither hath done ſo at any time, nor will do, bycauſe he hath otherwiſe affirmed in the Scriptures. And that do I alſo not denie. But I adde further, that it is inconuenient to diſpute of his power againſt his truth, and that therfore this ſentence is not ſubiect to cauillations if a man ſhoulde ſay, that that thing is impoſſible to be, wherof the Scriptures do pronounce that it ſhall not be. But if they diſpute of the worde: when the Diſciples aſked the Lorde, who may be ſaued, he aunſwered: with men in deede it is impoſſible, but with God all thinges are poſſible. Alſo Auguſtine with a moſt ſtrong reaſon ſtiffely defendeth, that in this fleſh we neuer yelde to God the due loue that we owe him. Loue (ſaith he) ſo followeth knowledge, that no man can perfectly loue God, but he that hath firſt fully knowē his goodneſſe. We, while we wander in this worlde, ſee by a glaſſe and in a darke ſpeech: it followeth therfore, that our loue is vnperfect. Let this therefore remaine out of controuerſie, that in this fleſh it is impoſſible to fulfill the lawe, if we behold the weakeneſſe of our owne nature, as it ſhall yet alſo in an other place be proued by Paule.

6 But that the whole matter may be more plainly ſet forth: let vs in a compendious order gather vp together the office and vſe of the lawe which they call Moral. Now, as farre as I vnderſtand, it is conteined in theſe three partes. The firſt is, that while it ſheweth to euery man the righteouſneſſe of God, that is, the righteouſneſſe which only is acceptable to God, it admoniſh, certifie, proue gilty, yea and condemne euery man of his owne vnrighteouſneſſe. For ſo is it nedefull that man blinded and dronke with loue of himſelfe, be driuen both to the knowledge and the confeſſion of his owne weakeneſſe and vncleanneſſe: for aſmuch as if his vanitie be not euidently conuinced, he ſwelleth with madde affiance of his owne ſtrength, and can neuer be brought to thinke of the ſclēderneſſe therof, ſo long as he meaſureth it by the proportion of his owne will. But ſo ſone as he beginneth to compare his ſtrength to the hardneſſe of the lawe, there he findeth matter to abate his courage. For how ſo euer he before conceiued a great opinion of it, yet byandby he feeleth it to pante vnder ſo great a burden, and then to ſhake and folter, at laſte euen to fall downe and faint. So being taught by the ſcholing of the lawe, he putteth of that arrogancie wherwith before he was blinded. Likewiſe he is to be healed of an other diſeaſe of pride, wherof we haue ſaid that he is ſicke. So long as he is ſuffred to ſtand to his owne iudgement, he deuiſeth Hypocriſie in ſtede of righteouſneſſe, wherwith being contented, he riſeth vp in courage, by I wote not, what forged righteouſneſſes, againſt the grace of God. But ſo ſone as he is compelled to trie his life by the balaunce of the lawe, thē leauing the preſumption of the counterfait righteouſneſſe, he ſeeth himſelfe to be an infinite ſpace diſtant from holyneſſe: Againe, that he floweth full of infinite vices, wherof before he ſeemed cleane. For the euils of luſte are hidden in ſo deepe and crooked priuie corners, that they eaſily deceiue the ſight of mā. And not without cauſe the Apoſtle ſaith, that he knewe not luſte, except the lawe had ſaid: Thou ſhall not luſte: bycauſe except it be by the law diſcloſed out of her lurking holes, it deſtroieth miſerable man ſo ſecretly, that he feeleth not the deadely darte thereof.

Rom. 7. 7.

7 So the lawe is like a certaine looking glaſſe wherein we beholde, firſt our weakeneſſe, and by that our wickedneſſe, and laſte of all by them both our accurſedneſſe, euen as a glaſſe repreſenteth vnto vs the ſpottes of our face. For when power faileth man to follow righteouſneſſe, then muſte he needes ſticke faſte in the mire of ſinnes. And after ſinne byandby followeth curſe. And of howe much the greater tranſgreſſion the lawe holdeth vs giltie and conuict, with ſo much the more greuous iudgement it condemneth vs. For this purpoſe maketh

the saying of the Apostle, that by the lawe is the knowledge of sinne. For there he speaketh onely of the first office of the lawe, the proofe wherof is in sinners not yet regenerate. And like to this are these two sayinges, that the lawe entred that sinne might abound, and therfore that it is the ministration of death that worketh wrath and slayeth. For without doubt so much more groweth iniquitie, with how much more vnderstanding of sinne the conscience is striken, bycause vnto breach of lawe is added obstinacie against the maker of the lawe. It followeth therfore that the lawe armeth the wrath of God to the destruction of the sinner, bycause of it selfe it can do nothing but accuse, condemne and destroie. And as Augustine writeth, if the spirite of grace be absent, the lawe is present with vs, onely to this ende, to accuse vs and kill vs. And yet when this is said, neither is the lawe dishonored thereby, nor any thing taken from the excellencie thereof. Truely if our will were wholy framed and disposed to the obedience of the lawe, then plainely the onely knowledge of it were sufficient to saluation. But for asmuch as our fleshly and corrupt nature fighteth, as an enemie with the spirituall lawe of God, and is nothing amended with the discipline thereof, this followeth that the lawe which was geuen for saluatiō, (if it hadde founde fitte hearers) tourneth to the occasion of sinne and death. For sith we are all proued transgressors of it, the more plainely that it openeth the righteousnesse of God, so much the more on the other side it discloseth our iniquitie: the more surely that it confirmeth the rewarde of life and saluation laide vp for righteousnesse, so much the more assured it maketh the destruction of the wicked. So farre is it of therefore that these sayinges shoulde be to the dishonour of the lawe, that they much auaile to the more glorious commendations of Gods bountie. For truely it hereby appeareth that we are hindered by our owne wickednesse, and peruersnesse, that we enioy not the blessednesse of life set openly abroade for vs by the lawe. Whereby the grace of God that helpeth vs without the succour of the lawe, is made so much the sweter, and the mercie more louely that geueth it vnto vs, wherby we learne that he is neuer wearied with often doing vs good and heaping new giftes vpon vs.

8 And wheras the iniquitie and condemnation of vs all is sealed by the testimonie of the lawe, it is not done for this purpose (if at leaste we well profit in it) to make vs fall downe with despeire, or with discouraged mindes to tumble downe hedlong. In deede the reprobate are amased after that manner, but that is by reason of their obstinacie, but with the children of God there behoueth to be an other ende of instructiō. Rom.11 32. the ſame Apoſtle in an other place teacheth, that God hath concluded all vnder vnbeliefe, not to deſtroy all, or to ſuffer all to periſh, but that he might haue mercy of all, that leauing the fooliſh opinion of their owne ſtrength, they might vnderſtand, that they ſtand and are vpholden by the onely hande of God: that they being naked and emptie, may flee to his mercie, that they may reſte them ſelues wholly vpon it, hide them ſelues wholly in it, take holde of it alone in ſteede of righteouſneſſe and merites, which is laide open in Chriſt for all men who ſoeuer they be that with true faith do deſire and looke for it. For God in the commaundementes of the lawe appeareth but a rewarder of perfect righteouſneſſe, wherof we all are deſtitute, and on the other ſide a rigorous iudge of euill doinges. But in Chriſt his face ſhineth full of grace and lenity, euen towarde the wretched and vnworthy ſinners.

Let all be little ones, and let all the worlde be gilty before thee. But I am not wiſe to heape vp ſo many teſtimonies, ſith that holy man hath writtē a booke properly of that matter, which he hath intituled, Of the Spirite and Letter. The ſeconde profiting he doth not ſo liuely deſcribe, either bycauſe he knewe that it did hang vpon the former, or bycauſe he did not ſo well vnderſtand it, or bycauſe he wanted wordes where with diſtinctly & plainly to expreſſe his meaning of it, which yet he rightly conceyued: but this firſt office of the lawe is not idle euen in the reprobate alſo. For though they go not thus farre forwarde with the children of God, that after the throwing downe of their fleſh they be renued and floriſh againe in the inward man, but amaſed with the firſt terrour do lie ſtill in deſperation: yet it ſerueth to ſhewe forth the equitie of Gods iudgement, that their conſciences be toſſed with ſuch wayes. For they euer willingly deſire to make ſhifte againſt the iudgement of God. Nowe while the ſame is not yet opened, they yet ſo aſtoniſhed with the teſtimonie of the lawe and their conſcience do bewraie in them ſelues what they haue deſerued.

10 The ſecond office of the lawe, is that they which are touched with no care of that which is iuſt and right, vnleſſe they be compelled, when they heare the terrible penall ordinaunces therein, may be reſtrayned at leaſt with feare of puniſhment. But they are reſtrained, not becauſe their inwarde minde is moued or affected withall, but bycauſe being as it were brideled, they withholde their hande from outwarde worke, and do keepe in their peruerſeneſſe within them, which otherwiſe they woulde haue outragiouſly poured out. Thereby they become truely nether the better, nor the more righteous before God. For although being letted either by feare or by ſhame, they dare not put that in practiſe which they haue conceiued in their minde, nor openly blow abrode the rages of their luſt: yet haue they not a hearte framed to the feare & obediēce of God, yea the more that they holde backe them ſelues, ſo much the ſtronglier within they are kindeled, they burne, they boile, ready to do any thing, and to breake forth any whether, if this terrour of the lawe did not ſtay them. And not that onely, but alſo they moſt ſpitefully hate the lawe, and do deteſt God the lawemaker, ſo that if they coulde, they would very faine take him away, whome they can not abide, neither when he commaundeth rightfull thinges, nor when he reuengeth him vpon the deſpiſers of his maieſtie. In ſome in deede more darkly, and in ſome more plainely, but in all generally that are not regenerat, is this feeling, that they are drawen to the following of the lawe not by willing ſubmiſſion, but reſiſting and againſt their willes, only by violence of feare. But this conſtrained and enforced righteouſneſſe is neceſſarie for the publike common ſtate of men, the quiet wherof is herin prouided for, while ordre is taken that all thinges be not cōfounded with vprore, which woulde come to paſſe, if all thinges were lawefull for all men. Yea it is not vnprofitable for the childrē of God to be exerciſed with this Scholing, so long as they before their calling being yet destitute of the spirite of sanctification, are still wanton with the folly of the flesh. For when they are drawen backe, though it be but from outwarde licentiousnesse, by the terrour of Gods vengeance, although for that they are not yet tamed in minde, they go for the present time but a little forwarde, yet they partly grow in vre to beare the yoke of Christ, so that when they are called, they be not altogether rude and raw to discipline, as to a thing vnknowen. This office the Apostle seemeth proprely to haue touched, when he saieth that the lawe was not set for the righteous man, but for the vnrighteous and disobedient, wicked and sinners, euill doers and prophane men, slaiers of their parētes, and murtherers, fornicators, Sodomites, robbers of children, lyers and periured men, and what soeuer ells is against sounde doctrine. For he saieth, that it is a stay to the wilde outraging lustes of the flesh, that ells woulde stray abroade without measure.

1. Tim. 1. 9.

11 But to both may that be applyed which he saith in an other place, that the lawe was to the Iewes a Schoolemaister to Christ, for there are two sortes of men, whom with her schooling she leadeth by the hande to Christ. The one sorte, of whome we first spake, bycause they are to full of affiance of their owne strength or righteousnesse, are not meete to receiue the grace of Christ, vnlesse they be first emptied, therefore the lawe bringeth them downe to humilitie by knowledge of thē selues, that so they may be prepared to desire that which before they thought they wanted not. The other sorte neede a bridle to be holden backe, least they so geue loose the reines to the wantonnesse of their flesh, that they fall of altogether from all studie of righteousnesse. For where the spirite of God doth not yet gouerne, there sometime lustes do so boile, that it is in great perill least they throw downe the soule that is subiect to them into the forgetfulnesse and despising of God: and so woulde it cōme to passe if God did not with this remedy prouide for it. Therfore those whom he hath apointed to the inheritaunce of his kingdome, if he do not byandby regenerate them, he keepeth them by the workes of the lawe vnder feare, vntill the time of his visitation, not that chaste and pure feare such as ought to be in children, but yet a profitable feare for this that they may according to their capacitie be taught by introduction to true godlinesse. Of this we haue so many proues, that it needeth no example. For who soeuer haue any time continued in not knowing of God, will cōfesse that this happened vnto them, that they were holden by the bridle of the law in some feare & obediēce of God, vntil the time that being regenerate by his spirit, they beganne hartely to loue him.

Gal. 3. 24.

11 The third vſe, which is alſo the principall vſe, and more nearely loketh vnto the propre ende of the lawe, concerneth the faithfull, in whoſe heartes already liueth and reigneth the ſpirite of God. For although they haue the lawe written and grauen in their heartes by the finger of God, that is to ſay, be ſo affectioned and minded by the direction of the ſpirite that they deſire to obey God, yet do they ſtill two waies profite in the lawe. For it is to them a very good meane, whereby they may dayly better and more aſſuredly learne what is the will of the Lord which they aſpire vnto, and may be confirmed in the vnderſtanding thereof. As if a ſeruaunt be already bente with all the affection of his hearte, to pleaſe his Lorde: yet hath he neede diligentely to ſearche out and marke the faſhions of his Lorde, that he may frame and apply him ſelfe vnto them. And let none of vs exempt him ſelfe from this neede. For no manne hath hetherto attained to ſo great wiſedome, but that he may by dayly inſtruction of the lawe get newe profit in proceding to the purer knowledge of Gods will. Then bycauſe we neede not onely doctrine but alſo exhortation: this other profite ſhall the ſeruaunt of God take by the lawe, to be by the often meditation thereof ſtirred vp to obedience, to be ſtrengthened in it, to be holden backe from the ſlippery way of offending. For after this maner, muſt theſe holy ones drive forwarde them ſelues, which with how great cheerefulneſſe ſo euer they trauaile to Godwarde according to the ſpirite, yet they are alway loden with the ſluggiſhneſſe of ỹ fleſh, that they procede not with ſuch ful redineſſe as they ought. To this fleſh is the lawe geuen as a whippe, that like a ſlowe and dull Aſſe it may be pricked forwarde to worke. Yea to the ſpirituall man, bycauſe he is not yet diſpatched of the burden of the fleſh, it ſhall be a continuall pricke that ſuffereth him not to ſtand ſtill. Euen to this vſe Dauid hadde reſpect, when he did ſet forth the lawe with thoſe notable praiſes: The lawe of the Lorde is vndefiled, conuerting ſoules: the iuſtices of the Lorde are vpright, and chearing heartes: the commaundemente of the Lorde is bright, that geueth light to the eyes. &c. Againe: A launterne to my feete is thy worde, and a light vnto my pathes, and innumerable other that he rehearſeth in all that Pſalme. Neither are theſe thinges againſt the ſayinges of Paule, wherein is ſhewed, not what vſe the lawe miniſtreth to the regenerate, but what it is able to geue to manne of it ſelfe. But here the Prophet reporteth with howe great profite the Lorde doth inſtruct them by reading of his lawe, to whome he inwardely inſpireth a readyneſſe to obey. And he taketh holde not of the commaundementes onely, but alſo the promiſe of grace annexed to the thinges, whiche onely maketh the bitterneſſe to waxe ſweete. For what were leſſe ameable than the lawe, if it ſhoulde onely with requiring and threatening trouble ſoules carefully with feare, and vexe them with terrour? But ſpecially Dauid ſheweth, that he in the lawe conceyued the Mediatour, without whome there is no delite or ſweeteneſſe.

13 Which while ſome vnſkillfull men canne not diſcerne, they boldely ſhake a way all Moſes, and bidde the two tables of the lawe farewell, bycauſe they thinke it is not agreable for Chriſtians to cleaue to that doctrine that conteineth the miniſtration of death. Let this prophane opinion departe farre out of our mindes. For Moſes taught excellently well, that the ſame Lawe which with ſinners can engendre nothing but death, ought in the holy to haue a better and more excellent vſe. For thus, when he was ready to die, he openly ſaide to the people: Lay your heartes vpon all the wordes that I do teſtifie to you this daie, that ye maie committe them to your chil-
Deu. 31 6. dren, that ye maie teache them to keepe, to do, and to fullfill all the thinges that are written in the volume of this lawe, bycauſe they are not vainely commaunded you, but that euery one ſhoulde liue in them: but if no manne canne denie that there appeareth in it an abſolute paterne of righteouſneſſe, then either we muſte haue no rule at all to liue iuſtely and vprightely, or els it is not lawefull for vs to departe from it. For there are not many but one rule of life which is perpetualll and canne not be bowed. Therefore, whereas Dauid Pſal. 1. 2 maketh the life of a righteous manne continually buſied in the meditation of the lawe, let vs not referre that to one age onely, bycauſe it is moſte meete for all ages to the ende of the worlde: and let vs not therefore be frayed awaie, or flee from being inſtructed by it, bycauſe it appointeth a muche more exact holyneſſe than we ſhall performe, while we ſhall carry about the perſon of our bodie. For nowe it executeth not againſt vs the office of a rigorous exacter that will not be ſatiſfied, but with his full taſke performed: but in this perfection where vnto it exhorteth vs, it ſheweth vs a marke, towarde which in all our life to endeuour, is no leſſe profitable for vs, than agreable with our dutie. In which endeuour if we faile not, it is well. For all this life is a race, the ſpace whereof being runne out, the Lord wil graunt vs to atteine to that marke, towarde which our endeuoures do trauaile a farre of.

14 Nowe therefore, whereas the lawe hath towarde the faithfull a power to exhorte, not ſuch a power as may binde their conſciences with curſe, but ſuche as with often calling on, may ſhake of ſluggiſh-

neſſe and pinche imperfection to awake it: many when they meane to expreſſe this deliueraunce from the curſe thereof, do ſay, that the lawe is abrogate to the faithfull. (I ſpeake yet of the lawe morall) not that it doth no more commaunde them that which is right, but only that it be no more vnto them that which it was before, that is, that it do no more, by making afraide and confounding their conſciences, damne and deſtroie them. And truely ſuch an abrogation of the lawe, Paule dothe plainely teache, and alſo that the Lord himſelfe ſpake of it, appeareth by this that he woulde not haue confuted that opinion Mat. 5. that he ſhoulde diſſolue the lawe, vnleſſe it hadde bene commonly re- 17. ceyued among the Iewes. But foraſmuch as it coulde not riſe cauſeleſly and without any colour, it is likely that it grewe vpon falſe vnderſtanding of his doctrine, as in a maner all erroures are wonte to take occaſion of truthe, but leaſt we ſhoulde alſo ſtumble at the ſame ſtone, let vs diligently make diſtinction, what is abrogate in the lawe, and what remaineth yet in force. Where the Lord proteſteth that he came not to deſtroie the lawe, but to fullfill it: and that till heauen and earth paſſe away, no one iote of the lawe ſhoulde paſſe away, but that all ſhoulde be fullfilled: he ſufficiently confirmeth that by his comming nothing ſhould be taken away from the due keeping of the lawe. And for good cauſe: ſith he came rather for this ende, to heale offences. Wherefore the doctrine of the lawe remaineth for all Chriſtians, inuiolable, which by teaching, admoniſhing, rebuking and correcting may frame and prepare vs to euery good worke.

15 As for thoſe thinges that Paule ſpeaketh of the curſe, it is euident that they belong not to the very inſtruction, but onely to the force of binding the conſcience. For the lawe not onely teacheth, but alſo with authoritie requireth that which it commaundeth. If it be not perfourmed, yea if duety be ſlacked in any parte, it bendeth her thunderboulte of curſe. For this cauſe the Apoſtle ſaith, that all they Gala. 3. that are of the workes of the lawe, are ſubiect to the curſe, bycauſe it 10. is written: Curſed is euery one, that fulfilleth not all. And he ſaieth, Deu. 27 that they be vnder the workes of the lawe, that do not ſet righteouſ- 26. neſſe in the forgeueneſſe of ſinnes, by which we are looſed from the rigor of the lawe. He teacheth therefore that we muſt be looſed from the bondes of the lawe, vnleſſe we will miſerably periſh vnder them. But from what bondes? the bondes of that rigorous and ſharp exacting, that releaſeth nothing of the extremitie of the lawe, and ſuffreth not any offence vnpuniſhed. From this curſe (I ſay) that Chriſt might redeme vs, he was made a curſe for vs. For it is written: Curſed is Gal. 3. euery one that hangeth vpon the tree. In the chapter following in 12. and 5.4.

deede he saith, that Christ was made subiect to the lawe, to redeme them that were vnder the lawe: but all in one meaning, for he by-andby addeth, that by adoption we might receiue the right of children. What is that? that we shoulde not be oppressed with perpetuall bondage, that shoulde holde our conscience fast strained with anguish of death. In the meane time this alway remaineth vnshakē, that there is nothing withdrawen of the authority of the lawe, but that it ought still to be receiued of vs with the same reuerence and obedience.

16 Of ceremonies it is otherwise, which were abrogate not in effect, but in vse onely. And this, that Christ by his comming hath made an ende of them, doth so nothing diminish their holinesse, that it rather setteth them forth, and maketh them glorious. For as they shoulde haue geuen but a vaine shew to the olde people, vnlesse the power of the death & resurrection of Christ had bene shewed therin, so if they had not ceased, we coulde not at this day discerne to what purpose they were ordained. Therefore Paule, to proue that the keping of them now is not onely superfluous, but also hurtfull, teacheth that they were shadowes wherof we haue the body in Christ. We see therefore how in the abolishing of them, the trueth shineth better than if they did still a farre of, and as it were with a veile spred before, shewe a figure of Christ that hath already plainely appeared. And therefore the veile of the temple at the death of Christ was torne in two peeces and fell downe: because now the true and expres image of the heauenly good thinges was come to light, which before had bene but vnperfectly begonne with darke rude daughters, as the author of the Epistle to the Hebrues saith. Herevnto serueth that saying of Christ, that the lawe & the Prophetes were vnto the time of Iohn, and that from that time forwarde, the kingdome of God beganne to be ioyfully preached: not meaning that the holy fathers were without the preaching that cōtaineth the hope of saluation, & of eternall life, but because a farre of, and vnder shadowes only they did beholde that which we at this day see in the full light. But why it behoued that the church of God shoulde climbe vp hyer from those first instructions, Iohn the Baptist declareth: for that the lawe is geuen by Moses, but grace and trueth beganne by Iesus Christ. For although the purging of sinnes were truely promised in the olde sacrifices, and the Arke of the couenant was a sure pledge of the fatherly fauor of God: yet all this had bene but a shadowe, if it had not bene grounded vpon the grace of Christ, wherein is founde, perfect, and eternall stedfastnesse. Let this then remaine sure, that although the cremonial vsages of the lawe haue ceased to be obserued, yet by the ende of them it is the better better knowne howe great was the profit of them before Christes cõming, which in taking away the vse of them hath sealed the force and effect of them with his death.

17 Somewhat more hard is the point that Paule noteth. And he hath renued you together with him, when ye were dead by sinnes, and the vncircumcision of your flesh, forgiuing you all your offences, blotting out the handwriting that remained in the decrees against vs, which was contrary vnto vs, and he hath taken it away, fastening it to the crosse. &c. For he seemeth to stretch the abolishing of the lawe somewhat further that now we haue nothing to do with the decrees thereof. For they erre that expounde it of the lawe morall, whose vnappeasable rigor rather then doctrine thereof they thinke to be taken away. Some more depely waying the wordes of Paule, do espie that it is properly spoken of the lawe ceremoniall, and do shew that this worde Decree, doth more than once so signifie in Paule. For to the Ephesians he saith thus: He is our peace, that maketh both to be one, that maketh voide the lawe of commaundementes consisting in the decrees, that he might make two in himselfe into one newe man. It is no dout that he speaketh there of the ceremonies, for he calleth it the partition wherewith the Iewes were seuered from the Gentiles: wherefore I graunt that those first expositors are rightfully reproued by these: but yet me thinkes that these do not sufficiently well set forth the minde of the Apostle. For I like not at all, to haue these two places compared together in all pointes, when his purpose was to aduertyse the Ephesians of their adoption into the fellowship of Israel, he teacheth that the stop is taken away, wherby they were before time kept asunder, that was in ceremonies. For the vsages of washinges and sacrifices, wherewith the Iewes were made holy vnto the Lorde, do seuer them from the Gentiles. But in the Epistle to the Colossians, who seeth not that he toucheth a hyer misterie? In deede the point of the disputation there, is of Mosaicall obseruations wherevnto the false Apostles did labor to driue the Christian people. But, as in the Epistle to the Galathians he fetcheth that controuersie further of, and as it were bringeth it backe to the first head therof, so doth he also in this place. For if in the ceremonies you consider nothing els but a necessitie of the vse of them, to what purpose was it, to call it a handwriting against vs? moreouer to set the whole summe in a maner of our redemption in this, that it shoulde be cancelled? Wherefore the matter it selfe trieth out, that here is some more secret thing to be cõsidered. And I trust that I haue attained the naturall vnderstanding of it, if at leaste this be graunted me to be true, which in one place is most

Heb.7. & 9. & 10. wordes of the Apoſtle, that in the Iewiſh ceremonies was rather a confeſſiō than a clenſing of ſinnes. For what did they els by ſacrifices, but confeſſe them ſelues in their conſcience gilty of death, that did put clenſinges in their place? What did they with their clenſinges, but teſtifie them ſelues to be vncleane? And ſo was the handwriting of their ſinne, and vncleanneſſe oft renued by them, but there was no diſcharge in that teſtifying thereof. For which cauſe the Apoſtle writeth
Heb. 9. 15. that at length by meane of the death of Chriſt, was perfourmed the redemption of the offences that remained vnder the olde Teſtament. Therfore the Apoſtle doth worthily cal the ceremonies handwritinges againſt thoſe that obſerue them: foraſmuch as by them they did openly ſeale to their owne damnation and vncleanneſſe. And it hindereth not, that they were alſo partakers of the ſame grace with vs. For this they obteined in Chriſt, not in the ceremonies, which there the Apoſtle doth ſeuer from Chriſt, becauſe being at that time vſed, they did obſcure the glorie of Chriſt. Thus learne we, that the ceremonies, if they be conſidered by themſelues, are well and fitly called handwritinges againſt the ſaluation of men, becauſe they were as ſolemne inſtrumentes that teſtified their being bounde. When the falſe Apoſtles went about to binde the Chriſtian Church to them againe. Paule did not without cauſe admoniſh the Coloſſians, by fetching the ſignification of them further of, to what pointe they ſhoulde fall backe againe, if they ſuffered them ſelues in ſuch ſorte to be yoked by them. For therewithal was the benefite of Chriſt wreſted away from them, in as much as he hauing once performed the eternall clenſing, hath vtterly aboliſhed thoſe dayly obſeruations, which were only of force to ſeale ſinnes, but coulde do nothing to the putting away of them.

The viij. Chapter.

An expoſition of the Morall lawe.

HEre I thinke it ſhall not be from the purpoſe, to enterlace the tenne commaundementes of the lawe with a ſhorte expoſition of them, becauſe thereby both that ſhall better appeare which I haue touched, that the ſame keping of them which God hath once appointed, remaineth yet in force: and then alſo we ſhall haue beſides that a proofe of the ſeconde point, that the Iewes did not only learne by it what was the true force of godlyneſſe, but alſo by the terror of the iudgement, ſith they ſaw themſelues vnable to keepe it, they were compelled whether they woulde or no, to be drawen to the Mediator. Nowe in ſetting forth the ſumme of

thoſe things that are required in the true knowledge of God, we haue allready taught, that we cannot conceiue him according to his greatneſſe, but that byandby his maieſty preſenteth it ſelfe vnto vs, to binde vs to the worſhip of him. In the knowledge of our ſelues we haue ſet this for the chiefe point, that being voide of the opinion of our owne ſtrength, and cleane ſtripped of the truſt of our owne righteouſneſſe, and on the other ſide diſcouraged and beaten downe with conſcience of our owne nedineſſe, we ſhoulde learne perfect humilitie and abaſement of our ſelues. The Lord ſetteth forth both theſe pointes in his lawe, where firſt chalenging to himſelfe due power to gouerne, he calleth vs to the reuerence of his diuine maieſtie, and apointeth out vnto vs wherein it ſtandeth and conſiſteth: and then publiſhing a rule of his righteouſneſſe, (againſt the righteouſneſſe whereof our nature as it is peruerſe and crooked, doth alway ſtriue, and beneth the perfection whereof our power as of it ſelfe it is weake and feble to do good, lieth a greate way belowe) he reproueth vs both of weakeneſſe and vnrighteouſneſſe. Moreouer that inwarde lawe which we haue before ſaid to be grauen and as it were imprinted in the hartes of al men, doth after a certaine maner enforme vs of the ſame thinges that are to be learned of the two tables. For our conſcience doth not ſuffer vs to ſleepe a perpetuall ſleepe without feeling, but that it inwardly is a witneſſe and admoniſher of thoſe thinges that we owe to God, and layeth before vs the difference of good and euill, and ſo accuſeth vs when we ſwarue from our duetie. But man being wrapped in ſuch darkeneſſe of errours as he is, ſkarſe euē ſlenderly taſteth by that lawe of nature, what worſhip pleaſeth God: but truely he is very farre diſtant from the right knowledge thereof. Beſide that, he is ſo ſwollen with arrogancie and ambition, and ſo blinded with ſelfe loue, that he can not yet looke vpon, and as it were, deſcend into him ſelfe to learne to ſubmit and humble him ſelfe, and confeſſe his owne miſerie. Therfore (as it was neceſſary both for our dulneſſe and ſtubborneſſe) the Lorde hath ſet vs a lawe written, which ſhoulde both more certainely teſtifie that which in the law naturall was too obſcure, and alſo ſhould ſhake away our drowſineſſe, and more liuely touche our minde and remembraunce.

2 Nowe it is eaſy to vnderſtand what is to be learned of the lawe, that is, that as God is our creator, ſo of right he hath the place of our father and Lorde, and that by this reaſon we owe to him glorie, reuerence, loue and feare. Yea and alſo that we are not at our owne libertie, to followe whether ſo euer that luſt of our minde doth moue vs, but that we ought to hang vpon his becke, and to reſt onely vpon that which pleaſeth him. Then we learne, that he deliteth in righteouſneſſe and vprightneſſe, that he abhorreth wickedneſſe, and therefore, that vnleſſe we will with wicked vnthankefulneſſe fall away from our creator, we muſt neceſſarily obſerue righteouſneſſe all our life lõg. For if then only we yelde vnto him the reuerence that we owe, when we prefer his will before our owne, it followeth, that there is no other due worſhip of him, but the obſeruation of righteouſneſſe, holyneſſe & cleanneſſe. Neither may we pretend this excuſe that we want power, and like waſted detters be not able to pay. For it is not conuenient that we ſhoulde meaſure the glory of God by our owne power: for whatſoeuer we be, he alway abideth like to himſelfe, a louer of righteouſneſſe, a hater of wickedneſſe. What ſoeuer he requireth of vs (becauſe he cã require nothing but that which is right) by bonde of nature we muſte of neceſſitie obey: but that we are not able, is our owne fault. For if we be holden bounde of our owne luſt wherin ſin reigneth, ſo ẏ we are not loſe at libertie to obey our father, there is no cauſe why we ſhould allege neceſſitie for our defence, the euill wherof is both within vs, and to be imputed vnto our ſelues.

3 When we haue thus farre profited by the teaching of the lawe, then muſt we by the teaching of the ſame lawe alſo deſcend vnto our ſelues: whereby at length we may cary awaie two thinges. The firſt is, by comparing the righteouſneſſe of the lawe with our life, to learne, that we are farre of from being able to ſatisfie the will of God, and that therefore we are not worthy to haue place among his creatures, much leſſe to be reckened among his children. The ſecond is, in conſidering our ſtrength, to learne that it is not onely inſufficient to fulfill the lawe, but alſo vtterly none at all. Hereupon followeth both a diſtruſt of our owne ſtrength, and a care and fearefullneſſe of minde. For conſcience can not beare the burden of iniquitie, but that byandby the iudgement of God is preſent before it: and the iudgement of God can not be felte, but that it ſtriketh into vs a dreadefull horrour of death. And likewiſe being conſtrained with proues of her owne weakeneſſe, it can not chooſe but byandby fall into deſpeire of her own ſtrength. Both theſe affectiõs do engendre humility & abatement of courage. So at length it commeth to paſſe, that man made afraide with feling of eternal death, which he ſeeth to hang ouer him by the deſeruing of his owne vnrighteouſneſſe, turneth him ſelfe to the only mercy of God, as to the onely hauen of ſaluation: that feling that it is not in his power to pay that he oweth vnto the lawe, deſpeiring in him ſelfe, he may take breath againe and beginne to craue and looke for helpe from els where.

4 But the Lord not contented to haue procured a reuerēce of his righteousnesse, hath also added promises and threatninges, to fill our heartes with loue of him, and with hatred of wickednesse. For, because our minde is to blinde, to be moued with the onely beauty of goodnesse, it pleased the most mercifull Father of his tender kindenesse, to allure vs with sweetenesse of rewardes, to loue and long for him. He pronounceth therefore, that with him are rewardes layd vp for vertue, and that he shall not spende his labour in vaine, whosoeuer he be, that shall obey his commaundementes. He proclaimeth on the other side, that he not only abhorreth vnrighteousnesse, but also that it shal not escape vnpunished, for that he will be a reuenger of the contempt of his maiesty. And to exhort vs by all meanes, he promiseth as well the blessinges of this present life, as also eternall blessednesse, to their obedience that keepe his commaundementes: and to the transgressours therof, he threatneth both present miseries and the punishment of eternall death. For the same promise, (he that doth these thinges, shall liue in them:) and also the threateninge that answereth it, (the soule that sinneth, that same shall die) do without dout belong to the immortality or death that is to come, and shall neuer be ended. Albeit, whereſoeuer is mentioned the good will or wrath of God, vnder the one is contained the eternity of life, vnder the other eternall destruction. Of present blessinges and curses there is a long register rehearsed in the law. And in the penall ordinaunces appeareth the soueraigne cleannesse of God, that can suffer no iniquity: but in his promises, beside his great loue of righteousnesse, (which he cannot finde in his heart to defraude of her reward) there is also proued his maruelous bountifullnesse. For whereas we and all ours are indetted vnto his maiesty, by good right whatsoeuer he requireth of vs, he demaundeth it as due det, but the payment of det is not worthy of rewarde. Therfore he departeth with his owne right, whē he offereth reward to our obediences, which we do not yeld of our selues as things that were not due: but what those promises do bring vnto vs, is partly sayd already, and partly shall appeare more plainly in place fit for it. It sufficeth for this present, if we remember and consider, that there is in the promises of the law, no small commendation of righteousnesse, that it may the more certainely appeare howe much the keepinge thereof pleaseth God: that the penall ordinaunces are set for the more detestation of vnrighteousnesse, least the sinner, delited with the swete flatterings of vices, should forget that the iudgement of the lawmaker is prepared for him.

Heb.7. & 9. & 10. wordes of the Apoſtle, that in the Iewiſh ceremonies was rather a confeſſiō than a clenſing of ſinnes. For what did they els by ſacrifices, but confeſſe them ſelues in their conſcience gilty of death, that did put clenſinges in their place? What did they with their clenſinges, but teſtifie them ſelues to be vncleane? And ſo was the handwriting of their ſinne, and vncleanneſſe oft renued by them, but there was no diſ-
Heb. 9. 15. charge in that teſtifying thereof. For which cauſe the Apoſtle writeth that at length by meane of the death of Chriſt, was perfourmed the redemption of the offences that remained vnder the olde Teſtament. Therfore the Apoſtle doth worthily cal the ceremonies handwritinges againſt thoſe that obſerue them: foraſmuch as by them they did openly ſeale to their owne damnation and vncleanneſſe. And it hindereth not, that they were alſo partakers of the ſame grace with vs. For this they obteined in Chriſt, not in the ceremonies, which there the Apoſtle doth ſeuer from Chriſt, becauſe being at that time vſed, they did obſcure the glorie of Chriſt. Thus learne we, that the ceremonies, if they be conſidered by themſelues, are well and fitly called handwritinges againſt the ſaluation of men, becauſe they were as ſolemne inſtrumentes that teſtified their being bounde. When the falſe Apoſtles went about to binde the Chriſtian Church to them againe. Paule did not without cauſe admoniſh the Coloſſians, by fetching the ſignification of them further of, to what pointe they ſhoulde fall backe againe, if they ſuffered them ſelues in ſuch ſorte to be yoked by them. For therewithal was the benefite of Chriſt wreſted away from them, in as much as he hauing once performed the eternall clenſing, hath vtterly aboliſhed thoſe dayly obſeruations, which were only of force to ſeale ſinnes, but coulde do nothing to the putting away of them.

Leu. 18. 5. Eze. 18. 4. & 20.

Leu. 26. 4. De. 28. 1

5 Now whereas the Lord giuing a rule of perfect righteousnesse, hath applied all the partes thereof to his owne will, therein is declared that nothing is to him more acceptable than obedience, which is so much more diligētly to be marked, as the wantonnesse of mans minde is more ready to deuise nowe and then diuerse sortes of worshipping to winne his fauour withall. For in all ages that irreligious affectation of religion, because it is naturally planted in the witte of man, hath shewed and yet doth shew foorth it selfe, that men do alway delite to inuent a way to obtaine righteousnesse beside the word of God, wherby it commeth to passe, that the commaundementes of the law haue but smale place among the workes that are commonly called good works, while that innumerable route of mens workes occupieth almost all the roome. But what other thing meant Moses than to restraine such licentiousnesse, when after the publishing of the law he spake thus to the people: Giue heede, and heare all ỹ things that I commaund thee, that it may be well to thee and to thy children after thee for euer, when thou shalt do that which is good and pleasaunt before thy God. What I commaunde thee, that onely do: adde not vnto it, nor diminish it. And before, when he had protested, that this was his wisedom and vnderstanding before other nations that he had receiued iudgementes, righteousnesse and ceremonies of the Lord, he sayd further, keepe therefore thy selfe & thy soule carefully, that thou forget not the wordes which thine eyes haue seene, and that at no time they fall out of thy heart. For, because God did foresee, that the Israelites woulde not rest, but that after they had receiued the lawe, they would beside it trauaile in bringinge foorth new righteousnesse, if they were not seuerely holden backe: therfore he pronounceth that herein is contained the perfection of righteousnesse, which shoulde haue bin the strongest stay to hold them backe, and yet they did cesse from that boldnesse so much forbidden them. But what of vs? we are surely comprehended within the same charge: for it is no dout that that continueth still whereby the Lord hath chalenged to his law the absolute doctrine of righteousnesse, yet we not contented therwith, do monstruously trauaile with forginge and coyninge of newe good workes one vpon an other. For the healing of this fault, the best remedy shalbe, if this thought shalbe stedfastly settled in vs, that the law is giuen vs from God to teach vs a perfect righteousnesse: that therin is taught no righteousnesse, but the same that is examined, by the appointed rule of Gods will: that therefore new formes of workes are vainely attempted to winne the fauour of God, whose true worship standeth in onely obedience: but rather that such study of good works as wandereth out of the lawe of God, is an intolerable defilinge of

Gods

Gods righteousnes and of the true righteousnes Augustine also sayth most truely, which calleth the obedience that is done to God, sometime the mother and keeper, somtime the originall of all vertues. Lib.4. de ciui. Dei. ca. 12. de bono coniugali cõtra aduer. Legis & proph. 6.

6 But when we haue expounded the lawe of the Lord, then more fitly and with more profite shall that be confirmed which I haue before spoken of the office & vse of the law. But before that I beginne to discusse euery seuerall commaundement by it selfe, it shall be good now to giue such lessons as serue to the vniuersall knowledge therof. First let vs hold for determined, that the life of mã is instructed in the law not onely to outward honesty, but also to inward and spirituall righteousnesse. Which thinge whereas no man can deny, yet there be fewe that rightly marke it. That commeth to passe, because they looke not vpon the lawmaker, by whose nature the nature of the law also ought to be weyed. If any king do by proclamation forbid to cõmit fornication, to kill, or to steale: in this case I graunt that if a man do only conceiue in his minde a lust to commit fornication, to sinne, or to steale, and do not commit any of these thinges in dede, he is out of the compasse of this prohibitiõ. And the reason is, for that because the foresight of a mortal lawmaker, could not extend but to outward ciuility: his commaundementes are not broken, but when the outward offences are committed. But God (whose eye nothing escapeth, and which regardeth not so much the outward shew as the cleannes of the heart) vnder the forbidding of fornication, manslaughter and theft, forbiddeth lust, wrath, hatred, coueting of an other mans, guile, and whatsoeuer is like to these. For insomuch as he is a spiritual lawmaker, he speaketh no lesse to the soule than to the body. But the mãslaughter of the soule, are wrath and hatred: the theft of the soule, is euell desire and couetousnesse: the fornication of the soule, is lust. But mans lawes also (will some man say) haue regard to ententes & willes, and not to successes of fortune. I graunt, but yet they are such ententes and willes, as haue outwardly broken out. They weye with what entent euery outwarde act hath bin done, but they searche not the secrete thoughtes. Therefore they are satisfied when a man onely withholdeth his handes from offendinge. On the other side, because the heauenly lawe is made for our mindes, therefore the restrainte of myndes is principally needefull to the keepinge thereof. But the common sorte of menne, euen when they mightily dissemble there contempt of the lawe, do frame their eyes, their feete, their handes, and all the partes of their body to some obseruation of the law, in the meane time they hold their heart most farre of from all obedience, and thinke themselues well discharged, if they keepe close frō men ẏ which they do in the sight of God. They heare it sayd: Thou shalt not kill: Thou shalt not commit adultery: Thou shalt not steale: they draw not out their swerd to kill; they ioyne not their bodies with harlots: they lay not their handes vpon other mens goods. All this is well hitherto. But in their whole heartes they breath out murders, they boile in lust, they cast their eyes aside at all mens goods, and deuour them with couetinge. Now wanteth that which was the chiefe point of the lawe. Whence, I pray you, commeth so grosse dulnesse, but that leauing the lawemaker, they rather measure righteousnesse by their owne wit? Against these doth Paul mightily cry out, affirming that the law is spirituall: whereby he meaneth, that it not onely demaundeth an obedience of the soule, minde and will, but also requireth an Angelike pureness, which hauing all the filthinesse of the flesh cleane wiped away, may sauour nothinge but of the spirite.

Rom. 7. 14.

7 When we say that this is the meaninge of the lawe, we thrust not in a new exposition of our owne, but we follow Christ the best expositour of the law. For when the Pharisees had infected the people with a false opinion, that he performeth the law that hath with outward worke committed nothing against the law, he reproued this most perilous errour, and pronounced that vnchast looking at a woman is fornication: he protested that they are manslayers that hate their brother, for he maketh them gilty of iudgement that haue but conceiued wrath in their minde, and them gilty of the counsell that in murmuring or grudging haue vttered any token of a displeased mind: and them gilty of Hell fier, that with tauntes and railing breake forth into open anger. They that haue not espied these thinges, haue fayned Christ to be an other Moses, the giuer of the law of the Gospell, which supplied the imperfection of the law of Moses. Whereupon commeth that common principle of the perfection of the law of the Gospell, which far passeth the old law, which is a most pernicious opinion. For hereafter, where we shall gather a summe of the cōmaundementes, it shall appeare by Moses himselfe, how reprochfully they dishonor the law of God. Truely it sheweth that all the holinesse of the fathers did not much differ from hypocrisie, & it leadeth vs away from that only and perfect rule of righteousnesse. But it is very easie to confute that errour: for that they thought that Christ did adde vnto the law, whereas he did but restore the law to her integrity, while he made it free, & clensed it being obscured with lies, and defiled with leuen of the Pharises.

Matt. 5. 21.

8 Let this be our second note, that there is alway more contayned

in

in the commaundementes and prohibitions, than is by words expreſſed, which yet is ſo to be tempered, that it be not like a Lesbion rule, whereby licentiouſly wreſting the Scriptures, we may make of euery thing what we liſt. For many bring to paſſe by this vnmeaſured liberty of running at large, that with ſome the authority of Scripture groweth in contempt, and other ſome deſpeire of vnderſtanding it. Therfore, if it be poſſible, we muſt take ſome ſuch way, that may by right and perfect path lead vs to the will of God, we muſt I ſay ſearch how farre our expoſition may exceede the boundes of the wordes, that it may appeare that it is not an additiō of mens gloſes knit to the word of God, but rather that the pure and naturall meaning of the lawgiuer is faithfully rendred. Truely in a manner in all the commaundementes it is ſo manifeſt, that there are figuratiue ſpeaches, meaninge more in expreſſing parte that he may worthily be laughed at that will reſtraine the meaning of the law to the narrowneſſe of the wordes. It is euident therfore, that ſober expoſitiō doth paſſe beyond the words: but how farre, that remayneth hard to iudge, vnleſſe there be ſome meaſure appointed: wherefore I thinke this to be the beſt meaſure, that if it be directed to the entēt of the commaundement, that is, that in euery commaundement be weyed, why it was giuen vs. As for example: Euery commaundement is either by way of bidding, or of forbidding: the trueth of both ſortes ſhall foorth with be founde, if we conſider the intent or the end thereof. As the end of the fift commaūdement is, that honor is to be giuen to them to whom God appointeth it. This therefore is the ſumme of the commaundement, that it is right and pleaſeth God, that we honor them to whom he hath giuen any excellency, and that he abhorreth contempt and ſtubbornneſſe againſt them. The intent of the firſt commaundement is, that God alone be honored. The ſumme therefore of the commaundement ſhall be, that true godlineſſe, that is to ſay, true worſhippe of his maieſty pleaſeth God, and that he abhorreth vngodlineſſe. So in euery commaundement we muſt looke, vpon what matter it treateth: then muſt we ſearch out the ende, till we finde what the lawemaker doth teſtifie therein properly to pleaſe or diſpleaſe him: and laſt of all muſt we draw an argument from the ſame to the contrary, after this maner: If this pleaſeth God, then the contrary diſpleaſeth him: if this diſpleaſe him, then the contrary pleaſeth him: if he commaunde this, then he forbiddeth the contrary, if he forbid this then he commaundeth the contrary.

9 That which is now ſomewhat darkely touched, ſhall in expounding of the commaundements become very plaine by practiſe, wher-

fore it ſuffiſeth to haue touched it,ſauinge that this laſt point,is to be ſhortly confirmed with ſome prouſe thereof,becauſe otherwiſe either it ſhould not be vnderſtanded,or being vnderſtand, it might perhaps at the beginning ſeeme to ſound like an abſurdity, This needeth no proofe,that when a good thing is commaunded,the euill is forbidden that is contrary to it:for there is no man but he wil graunt it me. And common iudgement will not much ſticke to admitte, that when euill thinges are forbidden,the contrary dueties are commaunded. It is an vniuerſall opinion that vertues are commended, when the contrary vices are condẽned.But we require ſomwhat more than thoſe formes of ſpeach do ſignifie commonly among the people. For they for the moſt parte take the vertue contrary to any vice,to be the abſtaininge from the ſame vice: we ſay that it proceedeth farther,that is to contrary dueties & doings.Therfore in this commaundemẽt, Thou ſhalt not kill the common ſenſe of men will conſider nothing elſe,but that we muſt abſtaine frõ all hurt doing, or luſt to do hurt. I ſay that there is further contained, that we ſhould by all the helpes that we may, ſuccour the life of our neighbour. And, leaſt I ſpeake without a reaſon,I proue it thus:God forbiddeth that our brother be hurt or miſuſed,becauſe he willeth that our neighbours life be deare & precious vnto vs:he doth therfore require withal thoſe duties of loue that may be done by vs for ẏ preſeruation of it. And ſo may we ſee how the end of the commaundement doth alway diſcloſe vnto vs all that we are therein commaunded or forbidden to do.

10 But why God, in ſuch as it were halfe cõmaundementes,hath by figures rather ſecretly ſignified, than expreſſed what his will was, whereas there are wont to be many reaſons rendered therof,this one reaſon pleaſeth me aboue the reſt. Becauſe ẏ fleſh alway endeuoreth to extenuate the filthineſſe of ſinne,& to colour it with faire pretenſes,ſauing where it is euẽ palpable for groſſenes,he hath ſet forth for an example in euery kinde of offenſe that which was moſt wicked & abhominable, at the hearing whereof our very ſenſes might be moued with horrour, thereby to imprint in our mindes a more haynous deteſtinge of euery ſorte of ſinne. This many times deceiueth vs in weying of vices,that if they be any thing ſecret,we make them ſeeme ſmall.Theſe deceites the Lord doth diſcloſe,when he accuſtometh vs to referre all the whole multitude of vices to theſe principall heades, which do beſt of all ſhew,how much euery kinde is abhominable.As for example, wrath and hatred are not thought ſo haynous euills, when they are called by their owne names,but whẽ they are forbiddẽ vs vnder the name of manſlaughter,we better vnderſtand how abhominable they are before God, by whoſe word they are ſet in the degree of ſo horrible an offenſe: and we moued by his iudgement, do accuſtome our ſelues better to wey the haynouſneſſe of thoſe faultes that before ſeemed but light vnto vs.

11 Thirdly is to be conſidered, what meaneth the diuiding of the lawe of God into two tables, whereof all wiſe men will iudge that there is ſometime mention made not vnfitly from the purpoſe, nor without cauſe. And we haue a cauſe ready, that doth not ſuffer vs to remayne in dout of this matter. For God ſo diuided his law into two partes, in which is contayned the whole righteouſneſſe, that he hath aſſigned the firſt to the dueties of religiō that do peculiarly pertaine to the worſhipping of his Godhead, the other to the dueties of Charity which belong vnto men. The firſt foundation of righteouſneſſe is the worſhip of God: which being once ouerthrowen, all the other members of righteouſneſſe are torne in ſunder and diſſolued, like to the partes of a houſe vniointed and fallen downe. For what manner of righteouſneſſe wilt thou call it, that thou vexeſt not menne with robbery & extorcions, if in the meane time by wicked ſacrilege thou ſpoyleſt Gods maieſty of his glory? that thou defileſt not thy body with fornication, if with thy blaſphemies thou prophanely abuſe the ſacred name of God? that thou murthereſt no man, if thou trauaill to deſtroy and extinguiſh the memorie of God. Wherefore righteouſneſſe is vainly boſted of without religion, & maketh no better ſhew, than if a mangeled body with the head cutte of, ſhoulde be brought foorth for a beautifull ſight. And religion is not onely the principall parte of righteouſnes, but alſo the very ſoule wherwith it breatheth: and is quickned. For men keepe not equity and loue among themſelues without the feare of God. Therefore we ſay, that the worſhip of God is the beginning and foundation of righteouſnes, becauſe when it is taken away all the equity, continence and temperance that men vſe amonge themſelues, is vaine and triflinge before God. We ſay alſo that it is the ſpringe heade and liuely breath of righteouſneſſe, becauſe hereby men do learne to liue amonge themſelues temperately & without hurt doing one to an other, if they reuerence God as the iudge of right and wronge. Wherefore in the firſt table he inſtructeth vs to godlineſſe and the proper dueties of religion, wherewith his maieſty is to be worſhipped: in the other he preſcribeth howe for the feares ſake of his name, we ought to behaue our ſelues in the fellowſhip of men. And for this reaſon our Lord (as the Euangeliſtes reherſe it) did in a ſumme gather the whole lawe into two principall pointes, the one that we ſhould loue God with all our heart, with all our ſoule, Mat. 22. 37. Luc. 10. 27.

with all our ſtrength : the other, that we loue our neighbour as our ſelues. Thus thou ſeeſt how of the two partes wherein he concludeth the whole law, he directeth the one toward God, & appointeth the other toward men.

12 But although the whole lawe be contained in two principall pointes, yet, to the ende to take away all pretenſe of excuſe, it pleaſed our God, to declare in the ten cõmaundements more largely & plainly all things that belong both to the honor, feare & loue of himſelfe, and alſo to that charity which he commaundeth vs to beare to men for his ſake. And thy ſtudy is not ill ſpent to know the diuiſion of the commaundementes, ſo that thou remember that it is ſuch a matter wherein euery man ought to haue his iudgement free, for which we ought not contentiouſly to ſtriue with him that thinketh otherwiſe. But we muſt needes touch this point, leaſt the readers ſhoulde either ſcorne or maruell at the diuiſion that we ſhall vſe, as newe and lately deuiſed. That the law is diuided in ten words, becauſe it is oft approued by the authority of God himſelfe, it is out of controuerſie, wherfore there is no dout of the number, but of the manner of diuidinge. They that ſo diuide them, that they giue three commaundements to the firſt table, and put other 7. into the ſecond, do wipe out of the nũber the commaundement concerninge images, or at leaſt they hide it vnder the firſt: whereas without dout it is ſeuerally ſet by the Lord for a commaundement, and the tenth commaundement of not coueting the things of his neighbour, they do fondly teare into two. Beſide that it ſhall byandby be done to vnderſtand, that ſuch manner of diuiding was vnknowen in the purer age. Other do recken, as we do, fower ſeuerall cõmaundementes in the firſt table, but in place of the firſt they ſet the promiſe without the commaundement. As for me, becauſe vnleſſe I be conuinced by euident reaſon, I take the ten wordes in Moſes for ten commaundementes, me thinkes I ſee ſo many diuided in very fit order. Therefore, leauing to them their opinion, I will follow that which I beſt allowe, that is, that the ſame which theſe later ſorte make the firſt commaundement, ſhalbe in ſteede of a preface to the whole law, and then ſhal follow the commmaundements, foure of the firſt table, and ſixe of the ſeconde, in ſuch order as they ſhalbe rehearſed. Auguſtine alſo to Boniface agreeth with vs which in rehearſinge them kepeth this order: that God onely be ſerued with obedience of religion, that no idole be worſhipped, that the name of the Lord be not taken in vaine, when he had before ſeuerally ſpoken of the ſhadowiſhe commaundement of the Sabbat. In an other place in deede that firſt diuiſion pleaſeth him, but for to ſclender a cauſe, that is, because in the number of three, if the first table cõsist of three cõmaundementes, the mistery of the trinity more plainly appeareth. Albeit in the same place he sticketh not to confesse that otherwise he rather liketh our diuision. Beside these, the author of the Vnperfect worke vpon Matthew is of our side. Iosephus, vndoutedly according to the cõmon consent of his time, assigneth to either table fiue commaundements. Which is both against reason, because it confoundeth the distinction of religion & charity, and also is confuted by the authority of the Lord himselfe, which in Matthew reckeneth the commaundement of honoringe our parentes, in the number of the second table. Mat. 19 19. Now let vs heare God himselfe speaking in his owne wordes.

The first commaundement.

I am the Lord thy God, which haue brought thee out of the lande of AEgypt, out of the house of bondage. Thou shalt haue no straunge Gods before my face.

13 Whether you make the first sentence a parte of the first commaundemẽt, or read it seuerally, it is indifferent to me, so that you do not deny me that it standeth in stede of a preface to the whole lawe. First in making of lawes is heede to be taken, that they be not shortly after abrogate by contempt. Therfore God first of all prouideth, that the maiesty of the law that he shal make, may neuer at any time come in contempt. For stablishinge whereof he vseth three maners of argumentes. First he chalengeth to himselfe power and right of dominion, whereby he may constraine his chosen people, that they must of necessity obey him: thẽ he setteth forth a promise of grace with swetnesse therof to allure them to study of holines. Thirdly he reciteth the benefit that he did for them, to reproue the Iewes of vnthankefulnes, if they do not with obedience answere his kindnes. Vnder the name of Iehouah, the Lord, is meant his authority & lawful dominion. And if all things be of him and do abide in him, it is right that all things be referred to him, as Paule sayth. Therfore we are with this word alone Rom. 11 sufficiently brought vnder the yoke of Gods maiesty, because it were 36. monstruous for vs to seeke to withdrawe our selues from vnder his gouernment, out of whom we can not be.

14 After that he hath shewed that it is he that hath power to cõmaund, to whom obedience is due, least he should seeme to draw by onely necessity, he also allureth with sweteneſse in pronouncing, that he is the God of the Church. For there is hidden in this speach a mutuall relation, which is contained in the promise: I will be to thẽ Ier. 31. a God, & they shalbe to me a people. Wherupon Christ proueth that 33. Mat. 22

Abraham, Isaac and Iacob haue immortall life, by this that God testified that he is their God. Wherefore it is as much in effect, as if he should say thus: I haue chosen you to be my people, not only to do you good in this present life, but also to giue you ỹ blessednes of the life to come. But to what end this tendeth, it is noted in diuerse places in the law. For when the Lord doth vouchsaue to deale thus mercifully with vs, to call vs into the company of his people, he choseth vs (sayth Moses) that we shoulde be a peculiar people vnto himselfe, a holy people, & should kepe his commaundements. From whense also cõmeth this exhortation: Be ye holy, for I am holy. Now out of these two is deriued that protestatiõ that is in the Prophet: The sonne honoreth the father, and the seruaunt honoreth his Lord. If I be a Lord, where is my feare? If I be a father, where is my loue?

Deut. 7. 6. & 14. 2. & 26. 18. Leu. 19. 2. Mal. 1. 6

15 Now followeth the rehearsall of his benefit, which ought to be of so much more force to moue vs, as ỹ fault of vnthankefullnes is more detestable euen amõng men. He then did put Israell in remembrance of a benefit lately done, but such a one as for the miraculous greatnesse therof being worthy to be had in remembrance for euer, should remaine in force with their posterity. Morouer it is most agreable for this present matter. For ỹ Lord seemeth to say that they were deliuered out of miserable bondage for this purpose, that they should with obedience and redines of seruice honor him, the author of their deliuerance. He vseth also, (to the end to hold vs fast in the true worshipping of him alone) to set out himselfe with certaine titles, wherby he maketh his sacred maiesty to be differently knowen from all idols & forged gods. For, as I sayd before, such is our redy inclinatiõ to vanity, ioyned with rash boldnes, ỹ so soone as God is named, our minde can not take hede to it selfe, but that it byandby falleth away to some vaine inuention. Therfore, when the Lord meaneth to bring a remedy for this mischiefe, he setteth out his owne godhead with certaine titles and so doth compasse vs in, as it were within certaine grates, least we should wander hither and thither & rashly forge our selues some new God, if forsaking ỹ liuing God, we should erect an idole. For this cause, so oft as the Prophetes meane properly to point out him, they cloth him, and as it were enclose him, within those markes, whereby he had opened himselfe to the people of Israell, And yet when he is called the God of Abrahã, or the God of Israell, when he is set in the temple of Hierusalem among the Cherebins, these & like formes of speache do not binde him to one place or to one people, but are set onely for this purpose, to stay the thoughts of the godly in that God, which by his couenant, that he hath made with Israell, hath so represented himselfe; that it is no way lawfull to vary from such a paterne. Es. 37. 16.

But let this remaine stedfastly emprinted, that there is mention made of the deliuerance to this end, that the Iewes might the more cherefully giue themselues to the God that doth by right claime them vnto him. And we (least we should thinke that the same nothing belongeth to vs,) ought to consider, that the bondage of Ægipt is a figure of the spiritual captiuity, wherin we are all holden boũd, vntil our heuenly deliuerer do make vs free by the power of his arme, & conuey vs into the kingdom of liberty. As therfore, when in the old time he minded to gather together the Israelites that were scattered abroad, to the worshipping of his name, he deliuered them out of the intolerable dominion of Pharao, wherwith they were oppressed: so al those to whõ at this day he professeth himselfe a God, he doth now deliuer frõ the deadly power of the deuil, which was in a shadow signified by ẏ corporall bondage. Wherfore there is no man, but his minde ought to be inflamed to harken to the law which he heareth to haue proceded frõ the soueraigne king. From whom as all things take their beginning, so is it meete that they haue also their ende appointed & directed to him. There is no man (I say) but he ought to be rauished to embrâce the lawmaker, to the keeping of whose commaundementes, he is taught that he is peculiarly chosen: frõ whose bounty he looketh both for flowing store of all good things, & also the glory of immortall life: by whose maruelous power and mercy, he knoweth himselfe to be deliuered out of the iawes of death.

16 After that he hath grounded and stablished the authority of his law, he setteth forth the first cõmaundement, That we haue no straunge Gods before him. The ende of this commaundement is, that God will only haue preeminẽcie, and wholly enioy his owne authority among his people. And that it may so be, he commaundeth that there be far from vs all vngodlines and superstition, whereby the glory of his godheade is either diminished or obscured: and by the same reason he commaundeth, that we worshippe and honor him with true endeuour of godlinesse. And the very simplicity of the wordes themselues do in a manner expresse the same, For we cannot haue God, but we must also comprehende therein all thinges that properly belonge to him. Whereas therfore he forbiddeth vs to haue other Gods, he meaneth therby, that we should not giue away elsewhere ẏ which is propre to him. For although ẏ things ẏ we owe vnto God be innumerable, yet not vnfitly they may be brought vnto foure principal points: Adoration, whereunto as a thing hanging vpon it, is adioyned spiritual obedience of cõscience: Affiance, Inuocation, & Thankesgiuing.

Adoration I call the reuerẽce & worſhip which euery one of vs yeeldeth vnto him, when he ſubmitteth himſelfe vnto his greatnes: wherfore I do not without cauſe make this a part therof, ỹ we yeelde our conſciences in ſubiection to his lawe. Affiance is an aſſurednes of reſting in him by reknowledging of his powers, whẽ repoſing al wiſdom, righteouſnes, power, trueth and goodnes in him, we thinke our ſelues bleſſed with onely partaking of him. Inuocation, is a reſorting of our minde to his faith and help as to our only ſuccour, ſo oft as any neceſſity preſſeth vs. Thankeſgiuing, is a certaine thankefulnes whereby the praiſe of all good things is giuen vnto him. Of theſe, as God ſuffreth nothing to be conueyed away elſe where, ſo he commaunded all to be wholly giuen to himſelfe. Neither ſhal it be enough to abſtaine from hauing any ſtraunge God, vnleſſe thou reſtraine thy ſelfe in this, that many wicked cõtemners are wont, which thinke the redieſt way, to ſcorne all religions: but true religion muſt go before, whereby our mindes may be directed to the liuinge God, with knowledge whereof they being endued, may aſpire to reuerence, feare & worſhip his maieſty, to embrace the communicatinge of all his good thinges, euery where to ſeeke for his help, to reknowledge and aduaunce with confeſſion of praiſe the magnificence of his works, as to the only marke in all the doings of our life. Then, that we beware of peruerſe ſuperſtition, whereby our mindes ſwaruing from the true God, are drawen hither and thither as it were vnto diuerſe gods. Wherefore, if we be cõtented with one God, let vs call to remembrance that which is before ſaid, that all forged gods are to be driuen farre away, and that the worſhip is not to be torne in ſunder, which he alone claimeth to himſelfe. For it is not lawfull to take away any thing from his glory, be it neuer ſo litle, but that all thinges that belong to him may wholly remaine with him. The percell of ſentence that followeth (Before my face) encreaſeth the hainouſnes: for that God is prouoked to ialouſy, ſo oft as we thruſt our owne inuentions in his place, as if an vnchaſt woman by bringing in an adulterer openly before her husbands eyes ſhould the more vexe his minde. Therefore when God teſtified that with his preſent power & grace he looked vpon ỹ people that he had choſen, the more to fray them from the wicked act of falling from him, he giueth them warning that there can be no new gods brought in, but that he is witnes and beholder of their ſacrilege. For this boldneſſe is encreaſed with much wickedneſſe, that man thinketh that in his fleinges away he can begile the eyes of God. On the other ſide, God crieth out that whatſoeuer we purpoſe, whatſoeuer we go about whatſoeuer we practiſe, it commeth in his ſight. Let therefore our cõ-

ſcience be cleane euen from the moſt ſecret thoughtes of ſwaruinge from him, if we will haue our religion to pleaſe the Lord. For he requireth to haue the glory of his godhead whole & vncorrupted not only in outward confeſſion, but alſo in his eyes, which do behold the moſt ſecret corners of heartes.

The ſecond Commaundement.

Thou ſhalt not make to thee any grauen image, nor any ſimilitude of thoſe thinges that are in heauen aboue, or in earth beneth, or in the waters vnder the earth. Thou ſhalt not worſhip them, nor ſerue them.

As in the firſt commaundement he pronounced that he is the one God beſide whom there are no other gods to be deuiſed or had, ſo nowe he more openly declareth what manner of God he is, and with what kinde of worſhip he is to be honored: that we may not preſume to forge any carnall thing for him. The end therfore of this cõmaundement is, that he will not haue the lawful worſhip of him, to be prophaned with ſuperſtitious vſages. Wherfore in ſumme, he calleth and draweth vs away from the carnall obſeruations, which our fooliſhe minde is wont to inuent, when it conceiueth God according to her owne groſneſſe. And therefore he frameth vs to the lawfull worſhip of him, that is the ſpirituall worſhip, and which is appointed by him. He ſpeaketh of ỹ groſſeſt fault that is in this offenſe, namely outward idolatry. And there be two partes of this commaundement, The firſt reſtraineth our liberty, that we do not preſume to make ſubiect to our ſenſes or by any forme to repreſent God, which is incomprehenſible. The ſecond parte forbiddeth vs to honor any images for religions ſake. Moreouer he ſhortly reciteth all the formes wherewith he was wont to be expreſſed in ſhape, by the prophane and ſuperſtitious nations. By thoſe thinges that are in heauen, he meaneth the Sunne, the Moone, and other Starres, and paraduenture alſo birdes, as expreſſing his meaning in the fourth of Deuteronomy he meaneth as wel birdes as ſtarres. Which note I would not haue ſpokẽ of but that I ſaw ſome vnskilfully to apply it to Angels. Therefore I omit the other partes, becauſe they are ſufficiently knowen of themſelues. And we haue alreadi in the firſt booke taught plainely enough, that whatſoeuer viſible formes of God man doth inuent, they are directly contrary to his nature, and that therefore ſo ſoone as images come foorth, true religion is corrupted and defiled. Deut. 4. 15.

18 The penall ordinance that followeth ought not a litle to auaile to ſhake of our ſlouthfulneſſe. For he threatneth: That he is the Lord our God, a ielous God, that visiteth the iniquity of the fathers vpon the children vnto the third and fourth generation, in them that hate his name, and sheweth mercy vnto thousandes to them that loue him and keepe his commaundementes. This is asmuch in effect, as if he shoulde haue sayd, that it is he onely vpon whom we ought to sticke. And to bring vs thereunto, he speaketh of his power, that doth not without punishment suffer it selfe to be contemned or diminished. Here is in deede set the name El, which signifieth God. But because it is deriued of strength, to expresse the sense the better, I did not sticke so to translate it, or to put it into the text. Thē he calleth himselfe ielous that can abide no fellow. Thirdly he affirmeth that he will be a reuenger of his maiesty and glory if any do transferre it to creatures or to grauen images, and that not with a shorte or slender reuenge, but such as shall extende to the children and childrens children, and childrens childrens children, that is such as shalbe followers of their fathers vngodlinesse: as also he sheweth a perpetualll mercy & bountifulnes vnto longe continuance of posterity, to those that loue him and keepe his lawe. It is a common manner with God to take vpon him the persone of a husband toward vs. For the coniunction wherwith he bindeth himselfe vnto vs, when he receiueth vs into the bosome of his church, is like vnto a certaine holy wedlocke, that must stand by mutuall faithfulnes. As he doth all the dueties of a faithfull and true husband, so againe he requireth of vs such loue and chastity as ought to be in wedlocke, that we yeelde not our soules to Satan, to lust, and to filthy desires of the flesh, to be defiled by them. Whereupon he that rebuketh the Apostasie of the Iewes, complaineth that they did throw away chastity, & were defiled with adulteries. Therefore, as the husband, the more holy and chast that he himselfe is, the more is he kindeled to anger if he see his wiues minde encline to a strāge louer: so the Lord that hath wedded vs vnto himselfe in trueth, testifieth that he hath a most fervētly burning ialousie, so oft as neglecting the purenes if his holy mariage, we are defiled with wicked lustes, but specially then when we transferre to any other, or do infect with any superstition the worshippe of his name, which ought to be most vncorrupted: Forasmuch as by this meane we do not only break the faith giuen in wedlocke, but also do defile the very weddinge bed with bringing into it adulterers.

Ier. 3. Osee. 2.

19 In the thretening is to be seene what he meaneth by this, when he sayth, that he will visite the iniquity of the fathers vpon the children vnto the third and fourth generation. For, beside that it standeth not with the equity of Gods iustice, to punish the innocent for an others

thers offence. God himselfe also saith, that he will not make the sonne to beare the wickednes of the father. But this sentence is more than once repeated, of prolonging the punishmēt of the sinnes of the auncesters vpon the generations to come. For so doth Moses oftentimes speake vnto him: Lord, Lord, that rendrest the iniquity of the fathers to the children, vnto the third & fourth generation. Likewise Ieremy: Thou that shewest mercy in thousandes, that rendrest the iniquity of the fathers into the bosome of the children after them. Many, while they trauaile much in losinge this knot, thinke that it is to be vnderstanded onely of temporall punishmentes, which if the children suffer for the parentes faultes, it is no absurdity, forasmuch as they are oftentimes layed vpon them for their saluation, which is in dede true For Esay declared to Ezechias, that his sonnes should be spoiled of the kingdom, & caried into exile for ỹ sinne that he had committed. The houses of Pharao & Abimelech were plaged for offending Abraham. But when that is alleaged for assoilinge of this question, it is rather a shift than a true exposition. For here & in like places he threatneth a more greuous reuenge thā that it may be limited within the bounds of this present life. It is therefore thus to be taken: that the iust curse of the Lord, lieth not only vpon the head of the wicked mā himselfe, but also vpon his whole family: whē the curse once lieth vpon them, what is else to be looked for, but that the father being destitute of the spirit of God, liue most wickedly, and the sonne likewise forsaken of the Lord for the fathers fault, do follow the same way of destruction: & finally, the childes child, & the childe of the childes childe, the cursed seede of detestable men do fall headlong after them?

Eze. 18. 20. Num. 14 8. Ier. 32. 18. Esa. 39. 7. Gen. 12. 17. & 20 3.

20 First let vs see, whether such reuēge be vnsemely for the iustice of God. If all the nature of man be dānable, we know that destruction is prepared for them, to whom the lord vouchsaueth not to communicate his grace, Neuertheles they do perish by their own vnrighteousnesse, & not by vnrighteous hatred of God. Neither is there left any cause to quarell, why they be not holpen by ỹ grace of God to saluation as other are. Wheras therfore this punishmēt is laid vpon wicked mē & euil doers for their offenses, that their houses be depriued of the grace of God during many generations: who can accuse God for this most iust reuenge? But ỹ Lord on ỹ other side pronounceth, that ỹ punishmēt of ỹ fathers sinne shal not passe ouer vnto ỹ sonne. Note what is there entreated of. When the Israelites had bin long & continually vexed wᵗʰ many calamities, they began to vse for a Prouerbe, that their fathers had eatē a sower grape, wherwith the childrens teeth were set on edge: whereby they meant that their fathers had cōmited sinnes, whereof they, being otherwise righteous, and not deseruing it, did suffer the punishment, rather by the vnappeaseable wrathfulnesse of God, than by a moderate seuerity. The Prophet pronounceth vnto thē ỹ it is not so: because they are punished for their owne offenses, & that it standeth not with the iustice of God, ỹ the righteous sonne shoulde suffer punishment for the naughtinesse of the wicked father. Which thing also is not contained in this present ordinance. For if ỹ Visiting, wherof mention is now made, be fulfilled when the lord taketh away from the house of the wicked his grace, the light of his trueth and other helps of saluation: in this that the children beinge blinded & forsaken of him, do go on in the steps of their fathers, they susteine curses for their fathers offenses. But inasmuch as they are put to temporall miseries, & at last to eternal destruction, herein they are punished by the iust iudgement of God, not for ỹ sinnes of other, but for their owne iniquity.

21 On the other side is offered a promise of enlarging the mercy of God into a thousand generatiōs, which promise is also often found in the Scriptures, & is set in ỹ solemne couenant of the church: I wil be thy God, and of thy seede after thee. Which thing Salomon hauing respect vnto, wryteth that ỹ childrē of the righteous shalbe blessed after their death not only by reasō of holy bringing vp, which also not a litle auaileth therunto, but also for ỹ blessing promised in the couenāt, that the grace of God shall rest eternally in the houses of the godly. Hereupō groweth great cōfort to the faithfull, great terrour to the wicked. For if euen after death, the remembrance both of righteousnes & wickednesse be of so great force with God, that the cursing of the one, and the blessinge of the other redoundeth vnto posterity, much more shal it light & rest vpon the heads of the doers thēselues. But it maketh nothinge against vs, that the issue of the wicked many times cōmeth to good proufe, & ỹ issue of the faithfull swarueth out of kinde: becausethe lawmaker meant not here to stablish such a perpetuall rule as should derogate his free electiō. For it sufficeth for the comforte of the righteous and for the terrour of the sinner, that the penalty is not vaine or of no effect, although it do not alway take place. For as the temporall punishmentes that are layed vpon a fewe wicked men, are testimonies of the wrath of God against sinnes, and of the iudgement that shal one day be giuē vpon all sinners, although many escape vnpunished euen to the ende of their life: so when God giueth one example of this blessing to shew mercy & bountifulnesse to the sonne for the fathers sake, he giueth a proufe of his cōstant & perpetuall fauour to them that worship him: and when he once purſueth the wickedneſſe of the father in the ſonne, he ſheweth what iudgement is prepared for all the reprobate for their owne offences. Which aſſuredneſſe he had in this place principally reſpect vnto. And by the way he commendeth vnto vs the largeneſſe of his mercie, which he extendeth vnto a thouſand generations, wheras he aſſigned but onely fower generations to vengeance.

The third Commaundement.

Thou ſhalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vaine.

The ende of this commaundement is, that his will is to haue the maieſty of his name to be holy amõg vs. Therfore the ſumme ſhalbe, that we do not defile it with cõtempteouſly and irreuerently vſing it. With which prohibition the commaundement hangeth orderly together, that we take ſtudie and care godlily to reuerence it. Therfore we ought ſo to order our ſelues both in our mindes and ouf tonges, that we neither thinke nor ſpeake any thing of God himſelfe or his miſteries, but reuerently and with much ſobrietie: that in weying his workes, we conceiue nothing but honorable towarde him. Theſe three thinges I ſay, it behoueth vs not negligently to marke, that what ſoeuer our minde conceiueth of him, what ſoeuer our tong vttereth, it may ſauour of his excellencie, and may agree with the holy highneſſe of his name: and finally may ſerue to aduaunce his magnificẽce, That we do not raſhly or diſorderly abuſe his holy word and reuerẽd miſteries either to ambition, or to coueteouſneſſe, or to our owne triflinges: but that as they beare the dignitie of his name emprinted in them, ſo they may keepe their honour and eſtimation among vs. Laſt of all, that we do not carp againſt or ſpeake euill of his workes, as theſe wretched men are wont to babble reprochefully againſt thẽ: but that what ſoeuer we rehearſe done by him, we reporte it with wordes of praiſe of his wiſedome, righteouſneſſe & goodneſſe. That is to ſanctifie the name of God. Where otherwiſe is done, it is defiled with vaine and peruerſe abuſe, bycauſe it is violently carried from the right vſe wherunto onely it was apointed: and though there be no other hurt done, yet it is ſpoiled of his dignitie, and by little and little brought to contempt. Now, if there be ſo much euil in this raſh readineſſe to vſe the name of God out of ſeaſon, much more miſchiefe is in this, if it be employed to euill vſes, as they do that make it to ſerue the ſuperſtitions of Necromancie, cruell execrations, vnlawfull coniurations, and other wicked enchauntementes. But ſwearing is chiefly mentioned in the commaundement, as the thing wherin the peruerſe abuſe of Gods name is moſt deteſtable, that thereby we may be the better altogether frayed away from all defiling thereof. But that here is commaundement geuen of the worſhip of God, and of the reuerence of his name, and not of the truthe and equitie that is to be kept among men, appeareth by that that he afterwarde in the ſecond table condemneth periurie and falſe witneſſe, whereby hurte is done to the fellowſhip of men: but it were in vaine to repete it againe, if this commaundement entreated of the dutie of charitie. And alſo the diuiſion of the lawe it ſelfe requireth it, bycauſe as it is ſaid, God did not in vaine apointe two tables for his lawe, whereby is gathered that in this commaundement he chalengeth his owne right to himſelfe, and defendeth the holyneſſe of his name, and teacheth not what men owe to men.

23 Firſt is to be learned what is an othe. It is a taking of God to witneſſe, to confirme the truthe of that which we ſpeake. For thoſe curſed ſpeaches that conteine manifeſt reproches againſt God, are vnworthy to be reckened among othes. That ſuch taking to witneſſe, whan it is rightly done, is a kinde of worſhipping of God, is ſhewed in diuerſe places of the Scripture. As when Eſaie prophecieth of the calling of the Aſſyrians and Egyptians into fellowſhip of the couenaunt with Iſrael, They ſhall ſpeake (ſaith he) in the tongue of Chanaan, and ſhall ſwere in the name of the Lorde. That is to ſay, in ſwering by the name of the Lorde, they ſhall yelde a confeſſion of his religion. Againe when he ſpeaketh of the enlargemēt of his kingdome, he ſaith: Whoſoeuer ſhall bleſſe himſelfe, ſhall bleſſe in the God of the faithfull: and he that ſhall ſwere in the lande, ſhall ſwere in the true God. Hieremie ſaith, If they ſhall teache the people to ſwere in my name as they haue taught them to ſwere by Baal, they ſhalbe builded vp in the middes of my houſe. And for good cauſe it is ſaide, that when we call vpon the name of the Lorde to witneſſe, we do witneſſe our religion towarde him. For ſo we confeſſe that he is the eternall and vnchaungeable truthe, whome we call vpon, not onely as a moſt ſubſtantiall witneſſe of truth aboue all other, but alſo as the onely defenſe thereof, which is able to bring forth hidden thinges into light, and then as the knower of heartes. For where teſtimonies of men do faile, there we flee to God for witneſſe, ſpecially where any thing is to be proued that lieth ſecrete in conſcience. For which cauſe the Lorde is bitterly angry with them that ſweare by ſtrange gods, and he iudgeth that maner of ſwearing to be an argumēt of manifeſt falling from his allegeance: Thy ſonnes haue forſaken me, and do ſweare by them that are no gods. And he declareth the haynouſneſſe of this ofenſe by threatening of puniſhment: I will deſtroy them that ſweare by

by the name of the Lorde, and ſweare by Melchan.

24 Nowe when we vnderſtand that it is the Lordes will that there be in our othes a worſhip of his name: ſo much the more diligent hede is to be taken, that in ſtede of worſhipping they do not conteine diſhonour, contempt or abacement of it. For it is no ſmall diſhonour, when periurie is committed in ſwearing by him, wherefore it is called in the lawe, Profanation. For what is left to the Lorde when he is ſpoiled of his truth? he ſhall then ceaſſe to be God. But truely he is ſpoiled therof, when he is made an affirmer and approuer of falſhod. Wherefore, when Ioſua minded to driue Achan to confeſſe the truth, he ſaid: My Sonne, geue glorie to the Lorde of Iſraell, meaning thereby, that the Lorde is greuouſly diſhonored if a man ſweare falſely by him. And no maruell. For we do as much as in vs lieth, in a maner, to ſtaine his holy name with a lie. And that this manner of ſpeech was vſed among the Iewes ſo oft as any was called to take an othe, appeareth by the like proteſtation, that the Phariſees vſe in the Goſpell of Iohn. To this heedefulneſſe the formes of othes that are vſed in the Scriptures do inſtruct vs: The Lord lyueth, The Lord do theſe thinges vnto me, and adde theſe thinges, The Lorde be witneſſe vpon my ſoule. Which do proue, that we can not call God for witneſſe of our ſayinges, but that we alſo wiſhe him to take vengeance of our periurie, if we ſpeake deceiptfully. Leui.19 12. Ioſue.7. 19. Iohn.9. 24 1.Sam. 14 2 Reg.6 31. 2.Cor.1 23.

25 The name of the Lorde is made vile and common, when it is vſed in ſuperfluous othes, although they be true. For in ſuch caſe it is alſo taken in vaine. Wherfore it ſhal not be ſufficient to abſteine from ſwearing falſely, vnleſſe we do alſo remember, that ſwearing was ſuffred and ordeined not for luſte or pleaſure, but for neceſſities ſake: and therefore they go beyond the lawfull vſe thereof, that applie it to thinges not neceſſarie. And there can no other neceſſitie be pretended, but where it is to ſerue either religion or charitie, wherin at this day men do to much licentiouſly offende, and ſo much the more intolerablie, for that by very cuſtome it hath ceſſed to be reckned for any offenſe at all, which yet before the iudgement ſeate of God is not ſlenderly weyed. For euery where without regard, the name of God is defiled in trifling talkes, and it is not thought that they do euill, bycauſe by long ſuffred and vnpuniſhed boldeneſſe, they are come to reſt as it were in poſſeſſion of ſo great wickedneſſe. But the commaundement of the Lord remaineth in force, the penaltie abideth in ſtrength, and ſhall one day haue his effect, whereby there is a certaine ſpeciall reuenge proclaimed againſt them that vſe his name in vaine. This commaundement is alſo tranſgreſſed in an other point, that in our othes we put the holy ſeruantes of God in the place of God, with manifeſt vngodlyneſſe, for ſo we tranſfer the glorie of his godhead to them. Neither is it without cauſe, that the Lorde hath geuen ſpeciall commaundement to ſwere by his name, and by ſpeciall prohibition forbidden, that we ſhoulde not be heard ſwere by any ſtrange gods. And the Apoſtle euidently teſtifieth the ſame, when he writeth, that men in ſwearing do call vpon a hier than themſelues, and that God which had none greater than his owne glorie to ſwere by, did ſwere by himſelfe.

Deut.6. 13. and 10 20. Exod. 23.13.

26 The Anabaptiſtes not contented with this moderatiō of ſwearing, do deteſt all othes without exception, bycauſe the prohibition of Chriſt is generall: I ſay vnto ye, ſwere not at all, but let your talke be yea yea, and nay nay, what ſo euer is more than this, is of euill. But by this meane, they do without conſideration ſtumble againſt Chriſt: while they make him aduerſarie to his father, and as if he had come downe from heauen to repeale his fathers decrees. For the eternall God doth in the lawe not onely permit ſwearing as a thing lawfull, which were enough: but alſo in neceſſitie doth commaunde it. But Chriſt affirmeth that he is all one with his father? that he bringeth no other thing, but that which his father commaunded him, that his doctrine is not of himſelfe, &c. What then? will they make God contrarie to himſelfe, which ſhall afterwarde forbidde and condemne the ſame thing in mens behauiours, whiche he hath before allowed by cōmaunding it? But bycauſe there is ſome difficultie in the wordes of Chriſt, let vs a little weye them. But herein we ſhall neuer atteine the truth, vnleſſe we bende our eyes vnto the entent of Chriſt, and take heede vnto the purpoſe that he there goeth about. His purpoſe is not either to releaſe or reſtreigne the lawe, but to reduce it to the true and naturall vnderſtanding, whiche had bene very muche depraued by the falſe gloſes of the Scribes and Phariſees. This if we holde in minde, we ſhall not thinke than Chriſt did vtterly condemne othes, but only thoſe othes which do tranſgreſſe the rule of the lawe. Thereby it appeareth, that the people at that time did forbeare no maner of ſwearing but periuries, wheras the lawe doth not onely forbidde periuries, but alſo all idle and ſuperfluous othes. The Lord therefore the moſt ſure expoſitour of the lawe, doth admoniſh them, that it is not onely euill to forſweare, but alſo to ſweare. But how to ſweare? in vaine. But as for theſe othes that are commended in the lawe, he leaueth them ſafe and at libertie. They ſeme to fight ſomewhat more ſtrongly when they take earneſt holde of this worde At all, which yet is not referred to the worde Sweare, but to the formes of ſwearing

that are after rehearſed. For this was alſo parte of their errour, that when they did ſweare by heauen and earth, they thought that they did not touch the name of God. Therefore after the principall kinde of offenſe againſt this commaundement, the Lorde doth alſo cut of from them all byeſhiftes, that they ſhoulde not thinke that they haue eſcaped, if not ſpeaking of the name of God they call heauen and earth to witneſſe. For here by the way it is alſo to be noted, that although the name of God be not expreſſed, yet mē by indirect formes do ſweare by him, as if they ſweare by the liuely light, by the bread that they eate, by their Baptiſme, or other tokens of Gods liberalitie toward them. Neither doth Chriſt in that place where he forbiddeth them to ſweare by heauen and earth and Hieruſalem, ſpeake it to correct ſuperſtition, as ſome men falſely thinke, but he rather confuteth their ſophiſticall ſutteltie, which thought it no faulte babblingly to throwe out indirect othes, as though they ſpared the holy name of God, which is engrauen in all his benefites. But otherwiſe it is, where either a mortall man, or a dead man, or an Angell is put in the place of God: as among the prophane nations flatterie deuiſed that ſtinking forme of ſwearing by the life or ſoule of the King: for then the falſe making of Gods doth obſcure and miniſh the glorie of the one onely God. But when we meane only, to procure credit to our ſayinges by the holy name of God, although the ſame be indirectly done, yet in all ſuch trifling othes his maieſtie is offended. Chriſt taketh from this licentiouſneſſe, all pretenſe of excuſe, in this that he forbiddeth to ſweare at all. And Iames tendeth to the ſame purpoſe, reciting the ſame wordes of Chriſt which I haue before alleged, bycauſe that ſame raſh boldeneſſe hath alway bene in the worlde, which is a prophane miſuſe of the name of God. For if ye referre this worde, At all, to the ſubſtance, as if without any exception it were altogether vnlawfull to ſweare: wherefore ſerueth that expoſition which is added afterward: Neither by heauen nor by earth, &c? Wherby it ſufficiently appereth that thoſe cauillations are met withall, by which the Iewes thought their faulte to be excuſed. Iac. 5. 12.

27 Therefore it can not nowe be doubtefull to ſounde iudgementes, that the Lorde in that place did onely reproue thoſe othes that were forbidden by the lawe. For he himſelfe which ſhewed in his life an examplar of the perfection that he taught, did not ſticke to ſweare when occaſion required. And his diſciples, who (we doubte not) did obey their maiſter in all thinges, followed the ſame example: who dare ſay that Paule woulde haue ſworne, if ſwearing had ben vtterly forbidden? but when matter ſo required, he ſware without any sticking at it, yea sometime adding an execration. But this question is not yet ended, bycause some do thinke that onely publike othes are excepted out of this prohibitiō, as those othes that we take when the Magistrate doth offer them to vs and require them of vs. And such as Princes vse to take in stablishing of leagues, or the people when they sweare allegeance to their Prince, or the Soldiar when he is put to an othe for his true seruice in the warre, and such like. And to this sorte they adioyne, and that rightfully, such othes, as are in Heb. 6 16. Paule to confirme the dignitie of the Gospell, for asmuch as the Apostles in their office are not priuate men but publicke ministers of God. And truely I denie not that those are the safest othes, bycause they are defended with soundest testimonies of Scripture. The magistrate is commaunded in a doubtefull case to driue the witnesse to an othe, and he on the other side to aunswere by othe: and the Apostle saith, that mens controuersies are by this meane ended. In this cōmaundement bothe these haue a perfect allowance of their offices. Yea and we may note, that among the olde heathen men, the publike and solemne othe was had in great reuerence, but common othes that were vsually spoken without consideration, were either nothing or very little regarded, bycause they thought that in these they had not to do with the maiestie of God at all. But yet it were to much daungerous to condemne priuate othes, that are in necessarie cases soberly, holily, and reuerently taken, which are mainteined both by reason and examples. For if it be lawefull for priuate men in a weighty and earnest matter to appele to God as iudge betwene them, much more is it lawefull to call him to witnesse. Put the case: thy brother will accuse thee of false breache of faith, thou endeuorest to purge thy selfe according to the dutie of charitie, and he by no meanes will suffer himselfe to be satisfied. If thy good name come in perill by his obstinate maliciousnesse, thou shalt without offense appele to the iudgement of God, that it will please him in time to make thine innocency knowen. Now if the weight of the wordes be considered, it is a lesse matter to call him to witnesse. Therefore I see not why in this case we shoulde affirme, that the calling him to witnesse is vnlawfull. And we are not without many examples thereof. For though the othe of Gen. 21 24. and 26. 31. and 31. 53. Abraham and Isaac with Abimelech be said not to serue for our purpose, bycause it was made in the name of a publike companie, yet Iacob and Laban were priuate men, which stablished a couenaunt with mutuall othe betwene themselues. Booz was a priuate man, which Ruth. 3. 13. by the same meane cōfirmed his promise of mariage to Ruth. Abdias was a priuate man, a iust man and fearing God, which affirmed vnto

Elias by othe, the thing that he meant to perſuade him. Therefore I haue no better rule, but that othes be ſo tempered, that they be not vnaduiſed, that they be not common without regard, that they be not vſed of raging luſte, nor trifling, but that they ſerue iuſte neceſſitie, as where the Lordes glorie is to be mainteined, or the edification of our brother furthered, to whiche ende the commaundement of the lawe tendeth. 1.Re.18. 10.

The fourth Commaundement.

Remember that thou kepe holy the Sabbat day. Six dayes ſhalt thou worke and do all thy workes. But on the ſeuenth day is the Sabbat of the Lord thy God. In it thou ſhalt do no worke. &c.

28 The ende of this commaundement is, that we being dead to our owne affections and workes, ſhoulde be buſied in meditation of the kingdome of God, and to the ſame meditation ſhoulde be exerciſed, by ſuch meanes as he hath ordeined. But bycauſe this cõmaundement hath a peculiar and ſeuerall conſideratiõ from the reſt, therefore it muſt haue alſo a ſeuerall manner of expoſition. The olde writers vſe to call it a ſhadowiſh commaundement, for that it conteineth the outward obſeruatiõ of the day, which by the comming of Chriſt was taken away with the other figures. Wherin I graũt they ſay truely, but they touch but halfe the matter. Wherefore we muſt fetch the expoſition of it farther of. And (as I thinke) I haue marked that there are three cauſes to be conſidered, wherupon this commaundement conſiſteth. For firſt the heauenly lawemaker meant vnder the reſt of the ſeuenth day, to ſet out in figure to the people of Iſraell the ſpirituall reſt, whereby the faithfull ought to ceſſe from their owne workes, that they might ſuffer God to worke in them. Secondarily, his will was to haue one apointed day, wherin they ſhoulde meete together to heare the law, & execute the ceremonies, or at leaſt beſtow it peculiarly to the meditation of his workes: that by ſuch calling to remembrance, they might be exerciſed to godlineſſe. Thirdly, he thought good to haue a day of reſt graunted to ſeruauntes, and ſuch as liued vnder the gouernement of other, wherein they might haue ſome ceſſing from their labour.

29 But we are many waies taught, that the ſame ſhadowing of the ſpirituall reſt, was the principall point in the Sabbat. For the Lorde required the keping of no commaundement in a maner more ſeuerely, than this: when his meaning is in the Prophetes to declare that all religiõ is ouerthrowen, thẽ he complaineth that his Sabbates are polluted, defiled, not kept, not ſanctified: as though that peece of ſeruice Num.15 22. Eze.20. 21. 22 23. 38.

Iere.17. 22. and 27. being omitted, there remained no more wherein he might be honored. He did set forth the obseruing thereof with hie praises. For Exo.31. 13. and 35.2. whiche cause the faithfull did among other oracles maruelously esteeme the reueling of the Sabbat. For in Nehemiah thus spake the Leuites in a solemne conuocation, Thou hast shewed to our fa- Nehe.9. 14. thers thy holy Sabbat, and hast geuen them the commaundementes and the ceremonies, and the lawe by the hande of Moses. You see how it is had in singular estimation among all the commaundemētes of the lawe. All which thinges do serue to set forth the dignitie of the misterie, whiche is very well expressed by Moses and Ezechiel. Thus you haue in Exodus. See that ye kepe my Sabbat day, bycause it is a token betwene me and you in your generations: that you may knowe that I am the Lord that sanctifie you: kepe my Sabbat, for it is holy vnto you. Let the children of Israell kepe the Sabbat and celebrate it in their generations, it is an euerlasting couenant betwene me and the children of Israell, and a perpetuall token. Yet Ezechiel Eze.20. 12. speaketh more at large. But the summe therof cometh to this effect, that it is for a token whereby Israell shoulde knowe that God is their sanctifier. If our sanctification be the mortifiyng of our owne will, then appeareth a most apte relation of the outwarde signe with the inward thing it selfe: we must altogether rest, that God may worke in vs: we must depart from our owne will, we must resigne vp our heart, we must banish all lustes of the flesh. Finally, we must cesse from all Hebr.3. 13. and 4.9. the doinges of our owne wit, that we may haue God working in vs, that we may reste in him, as the Apostle also teacheth.

30 This perpetuall cessing was represented to the Iewes, by the keping of one day among seuen: which day, to make it be obserued with greater deuotion, the Lord commaunded with his owne example. For it auaileth not a litle to stirre vp mans endeuour, that he may knowe that he tendeth to the following of his Creator. If any man search for a secret signification in the number of seuen: For asmuch as that number is in the Scripture the number of perfection, it was not without cause chosen to signifie euerlasting continuance. Wherwith this also agreeth that Moses in the day that he declared that the Lord did rest from his workes, maketh an ende of describing the succediug of dayes and nightes. There may be also brought an other probable note of the number, that the Lord thereby meant to shew that the Sabbat shoulde neuer be perfectly ended, till it came to the last day. For in it we beginne our blessed rest, in it we do dayly procede in profiting more and more. But bycause we haue still a continuall Esa.66. 23. warre with the flesh, it shall not be ended vntill that saying of Esaie be fulfilled, concerning the continuing of newe Moone with newe Moone, of Sabbat with Sabbat, euen then when God shalbe all in all. 1. Cor. 15.28.

It may seeme therfore that the Lord hath by the seuenth day set forth to his people the perfection to come of his Sabbat at the laste day, that our whole life might by continuall meditation of the Sabbat, aspire to this perfection.

31 If any man mislike this obseruation of the number as a matter to curious, I am not against him, but that he may more simply take it: that the Lorde ordeined one certaine day, wherein his people might vnder the scholing of the lawe be exercised to the continuall meditation of the spirituall reste: And that he assigned the seuenth day, either bycause he thought it sufficiét, or that by setting forth the likenesse of his owne example, he might the better moue the people to keepe it: or at leaste to put them in minde, that the Sabbat tended to no other ende, but that they should become like vnto their Creatour. For it maketh small matter, so that the misterie remaine which is therein principally set forth, concerning the perpetual rest of our workes. To consideration whereof the Prophetes did now and then call backe the Iewes, that they should not thinke them selues discharged by carnall taking of their rest. Beside the places already alleaged, you haue thus in Esay: If thou turne away thy foote from the Sabbat, that thou doe not thine owne will in my holy day, and shalt call the Sabbat delicate and holy of the glorious Lorde, and shalt glorifie him while thou doest not thine owne wayes, and seekest not thine owne will to speake the word, thē shalt thou be delited in ỹ Lord, &c. But it is no doubt, that by the comming of our Lorde Christ, so much as was ceremoniall herein, was abrogate. For he is the truth, by whose presence all figures doe vanish away: he is the body at sight whereof the shadowes are left. He, I say, is the true fulfilling of the Sabbat, we being buried with him by Baptisme, are graffed into the fellowship of his death, that we being made partakers of the resurrection, we may walke in newnesse of life. Therefore in an other place the Apostle writeth, that the Sabbat was a shadow of a thing to come: and that the true body, that is to say, the perfect substance of truth is in Christ, which in the same place he hath well declared. That is not contained in one day, but in the whole course of our life, vntill that we being vtterly dead to our selues, be filled with the life of God. Therefore superstitious obseruing of dayes ought to be farre from Christians.
Esa. 58. 13. Rom. 6. 4. Col 2. 16. & 17

32 But for asmuch as the two later causes ought not to be reckened among the olde shadowes, but doe belong a like to all ages: since the Sabbat is abrogate, yet this hath still place with vs, that we should

meete at appoynted dayes to the hearing of the word, to the breaking of the misticall bread, and to publike prayer: and then, that to seruauntes and laborers be graunted their rest from their labour. It is out of doubt that in commaunding the Sabbat the Lorde had care of both these thinges. The first of them hath sufficient testimonie by the only vse of the Iewes to proue it. The second, Moses spake of in Deuteronomie in these wordes: that thy man seruaunt and thy mayde seruaunt may rest as well as thou: remember that thou thy selfe didst serue in Egypt. Againe in Exodus: that thy Oxe and thy Asse may rest, and the sonne of thy bondwoman may take breath. Who can deny that both these thinges doe serue for vs as well as for the Iewes? Meetings at the Church, are commaunded vs by the word of God, and the necessitie of them is sufficiently knowen in the very experience of life. Vnlesse they be certainly appoynted and haue their ordinarie dayes, how can they be kept? All thinges by the sentence of the Apostle are to be done comly and in order among vs. But so farre is it of, that comlinesse and order can be kept without this policie and moderation, that there is at hand present trouble and ruine of the Church, if it be dissolued. Now if the same necessitie be among vs, for releefe whereof the Lord appointed the Sabbat to the Iewes: let no man say that it belongeth nothing vnto vs. For our most prouident and tender Father, willed no lesse to prouide for our necessitie than for the Iewes. But thou wilt say, why doe we not rather daily meete togither, that the difference of dayes may be taken away? I would to God, that were graunted, and truely spirituall wisedome was a thing worthy to haue daily a peece of the time cut out for it. But if it can not be obtained of the weakenesse of many to haue daily meetings, and the rule of charitie doth not suffer vs to exact more of them, why should we not obey the order which we see layed vpon vs by the will of God.

1. Cor. 14.40.

33 I am compelled here to be somewhat long, because at this day many vnquiet spirites doe raise trouble, concerning the Sunday. They crie out that the Christian people are nourished in Iewishnesse, because they keepe some obseruation of dayes. But I answere, that we keepe those dayes without any Iewishnesse, because we doe in this behalfe farre differ from the Iewes. For we keepe it not with streight religion as a ceremonie, wherein we thinke a spirituall misterie to be figured, but we retaine it as a necessary remedie to the keeping of order in the Church. But Paule teacheth that in keeping thereof they are not to be iudged Christians, because it is a shadow of a thing to come. Therefore he feared that he had laboured in vaine among the Galathians, thians, becauſe they did ſtill obſerue dayes. And to the Romanes he affirmeth that it is ſuperſtition if any man doe make difference betwene day and day. But who, ſauing theſe madde men onely doth not ſee, of what obſeruing the Apoſtle meaneth? For they had no regarde to this politicall ende and the order of the Church, but whereas they kept them ſtill as ſhadowes of ſpiritual thinges, they did euen ſo much darken the glory of Chriſt and the light of the Goſpell. They did not therefore ceaſe from handy vvorkes, becauſe they were thinges that did call them away from holy ſtudies and meditations, but for a certaine religion, that in ceaſing from worke they did dreame that they ſtill kept their miſteries of olde time deliuered them. The Apoſtle, I ſay, inueyeth againſt this diſordered difference of dayes, and not againſt the lawefull choiſe of dayes that ſerueth for the quietneſſe of Chriſtian fellowſhip, for in the Churches that he him ſelfe did ordaine, the Sabbat was kept to this vſe. For he appointeth the Corinthians the ſame day, wherein they ſhould gather the collection to releeue the brethren at Ieruſalē. If they feare ſuperſtitiō, there was more daunger thereof in the feaſt dayes of the Iewes, than in the Sundayes that the Chriſtians now haue. For, ſo as was expedient for the ouerthrowing of ſuperſtition, the day that the Iewes religiouſly obſerued is taken away: and, ſo as was neceſſary for keeping of comlineſſe, order, and quiet in the Church, an other day was appoynted for the ſame vſe.

Rom. 14. 5.

34 Albeit the old fathers haue not without reaſon of their choiſe, put in place of the Sabbat day the day that we cal Sunday. For whereas in the Reſurrection of the Lorde is the ende and fulfilling of that reſt, whereof the olde Sabbat was a ſhadow: the Chriſtians are by the very ſame day that made an ende of ſhadowes, put in minde that they ſhould no longer ſticke vnto the ſhadowiſh ceremonie. But yet I doe not ſo reſt vpon the number of ſeuen, that I would binde the church to the bondage thereof. Neither will I condemne thoſe Churches, that haue other ſolemne dayes for their meetings, ſo that they be without ſuperſtition, which ſhall be, if they be onely applyed to the obſeruation of Diſcipline and well appoynted order. Let the ſumme hereof be this: as the truth was geuen to the Iewes vnder a figure, ſo is it deliuered vs without any ſhadowes at all. Firſt that in all our life long we ſhould be in meditation of a continuall Sabbat or reſt from our owne workes, that the Lord may worke in vs by his ſpirite: then that euery man priuately ſo oft as he hath leaſure, ſhould diligently exerciſe him ſelfe in godly calling to minde the workes of God, and alſo. hat we all ſhould keepe the lawfull order of the Church appoyn-

ted, for the hearing of the worde, for the miniſtration of the Sacraments and for publike prayer: thirdly that we ſhould not vngently oppreſſe them that be vnder vs. And ſo doe the trifelinges of the falſe prophets vaniſh away that in the ages paſt haue infected the people with a Iewiſh opinion, that ſo much as was ceremoniall in this commaundement is taken away, which they in their tongue call the appointing of the ſeuenth day, but that ſo much as is morall remaineth, which is the keeping of one day in the weeke. But that is nothing elſe in effect, than for reproch of the Iewes to chaunge the day, & to kepe ſtill the ſame holineſſe in their minde. For there ſtill remaineth with vs the like ſignification of myſterie in the dayes as was among the Iewes. And truely we ſee what good they haue done by ſuch doctrine. For they that cleaue to their conſtitutions, doe by theſe as much as exceede the Iewes in groſſe and carnall ſuperſtition of Sabbat: ſo that Eſ. 1. 13 & 58. 13 the rebukings that are read in Eſay, doe no leſſe fitly ſerue for them at theſe dayes, than for thoſe that the Prophet reproued in his time. But this generall doctrine is principally to be kept, that leſt religion ſhould fall away or waxe faint among vs, holy meetings are to be diligently kept, and thoſe outward helpes are to be vſed that are profitable for to nouriſh the worſhipping of God.

The fift Commaundement.

Honour thy Father and thy Mother, that thou maiſt liue long vpon the Land which the Lord thy God ſhall geue thee.

35 The ende of this commaundement is, that becauſe the Lorde deliteth in the preſeruation of his order, therefore he willeth that thoſe degrees of preeminence which he hath ordained be not broken, the ſumme therefore ſhall be that we reuerence thoſe whom the Lord hath ſet ouer vs, that we yeld to them honour, obedience and thankefulneſſe. Whereupon followeth that it is forbidden vs, to withdraw any thing from their dignitie, either by contempt or obſtinacie or vnthankefulnes. For ſo doth the word Honour, in the Scripture
1. Tim. 5. 17. ſignifie very largely: as when the Apoſtle ſayeth, that the elders which rule well are worthy of double honour, he meaneth not onely that reuerence is due vnto them, but alſo ſuch recompenſe as their miniſterie deſerueth. And becauſe this commaundement of ſubiection, doth moſt of all diſagree with the peruerſeneſſe of mans nature, which as it ſwelleth with greedineſſe of climbing hie, ſo it hardly abideth to be brought lowe: therefore he hath ſet that kinde of ſuperiority for example, which by nature is moſt amiable and leaſt enuious: becauſe he might the eaſelyer meeken and reclaime our mindes to the

vſe of ſubmiſſion. Therefore the Lorde doth by litle and litle traine vs to all lawfull ſubiection by that which is moſt eaſy to beare, forasmuch as the rule of all is alike. For to whome he geueth any preeminence, he doth communicate his owne name with them, ſo farre as is neceſſarie to preſerue the ſame preeminence: The name of Father, God, and Lord, do ſo belong vnto him alone, that ſo ofte as we heare one of them named, our minde muſt needes be touched with a feeling of his maieſty. Therfore whom he maketh partakers of theſe thinges, he maketh to gliſter with a certaine ſparke of his brightneſſe, that they may be honorable euery one according to his degree. Therfore in him that is our father we haue to cõſider ſomewhat of the nature of God, bycauſe he beareth not the name of God without cauſe. He that is our Prince or our Lord, hath ſome partaking of honour with God.

36 Wherfore it ought not to be doubted that God doth here ſet a generall rule, that as we know any man to be by his ordinaunce ſet ouer vs, ſo we yeelde vnto him reuerence, obedience, thankefulneſſe, and ſuch other dueties as it lieth in vs to do. And it maketh no differẽce, whether they be worthy or vnworthy. For of what ſorte ſoeuer they be, they haue not without the prouidence of God atteined that place, by reaſon wherof the lawemaker would haue them to be honored. Yet namely he hath geuen commaundement of reuerẽce to parentes, that haue brought vs into this life, to which reuerence very nature ought in a maner to inſtruct vs. For they are monſters and not men, that breake the authoritie of parentes with diſhonor or ſtubburneſſe. Therefore the Lord commaunded all the diſobedient to their parentes, to be ſlaine, as men vnworthy to enioy the benefite of light, that do not reknowledge by whoſe meanes they came into it. And by many additions of the lawe it appeareth to be true that we haue noted, that there are three partes of honour that he here ſpeaketh of, Reuerence, Obedience, and Thankefullneſſe. The firſt of theſe the Lord eſtablyſheth when he commaũdeth him to be killed that curſeth his Father or his Mother, for there he puniſheth the contempt and diſhonour of them. The ſeconde he confirmeth when he appointeth the puniſhment of death for the diſobedient and rebellious children. To the thirde belongeth that ſaying of Chriſt in the fiftene of Matthew, that it is the commaundement of God that we do good to our parentes. And ſo oft as Paule maketh mention of a cõmaundement, he expoundeth that therein obedience is required.

Exo. 21. Leui. 20 9. Leu. 10. 9 Pro. 10. 10. Deu. 21. 18. Mat. 15. 4. Eph. 5. 1 Col. 3. 20.

37 There is annexed a promiſe for a commendation, which doth the rather put vs in minde, how acceptable vnto God is the ſubmiſſion that is here commaunded. For Paule vſeth the ſame pricke to

ſtirre vp our dulneſſe when he ſaieth: that this is the firſt commaundement with promiſe. For the promiſe that went before in the firſt Table, was not ſpeciall and proprely belonging to one commaundement, but extéded to the whole law. Now this is thus to be taken: The Lord ſpake to the Iſraelites peculiarly of the lande which he had promiſed them for their inheritance. If then the poſſeſsion of lande was a pledge of Gods bountyfullneſſe: let vs not meruell if it pleaſed God to declare his fauour by geuing length of life, by which a man might long enioye his benefit. The meaning therefore is thus. Honour thy Father and thy Mother, that by a long ſpace of life thou mayſt enioy the poſſeſſion of that lande that ſhalbe vnto thee for a teſtimonie of my Father. But ſith all the earth is bleſſed to the faithfull, we do not worthily recken this preſent life among the bleſſinges of God. Therfore this promiſe doth likewiſe belong vnto vs, forſomuch as the continuance of this life is a proofe of Gods good will. For it neither is promiſed to vs, nor was promiſed to the Iewes, as though it contained bleſſedneſſe in it ſelfe, but bycauſe it is wont to be to the Godly a token of Gods tender loue. Therfore if it chaunce that an obedient child to his parétes be taken out of this life before his ripe age, which is oftentimes ſeene, yet doth God no leſſe conſtantly continue in the perfourmance of his promiſe, than if he ſhoulde rewarde, him with a hundreth Acres of lande, to whome he promiſed but one Acre. All conſiſteth in this, that we ſhould cõſider that long life is ſo farre promiſed vs, as it is the bleſſing of God, and that it is his bleſſing ſo farre as it is a proofe of his fauour, which he by death doth much more plentifully and perfectly witneſſe and ſhew in effect to his ſeruauntes.

38 Moreouer, when the Lorde promiſeth the bleſſing of this preſente life to the children that honour their parentes with ſuch reuerence as they ought, he doth withall ſecretly ſay, that moſt aſſured curſe hangeth ouer the ſtubborne and diſobedient children. And that the ſame ſhoulde not want execution: he pronounceth them by his law ſubiect to the iudgement of death, and commaundeth them to be put to execution: & if they eſcape that iudgement, he him ſelfe taketh vengeaunce on them by one meane or other. For we ſee how great a numbre of that ſorte of men are ſlaine in battailes and in fraies, and ſome other tormented in ſtrange vnaccuſtomed faſhions, and they all in a manner are a proofe that this threatning is not vaine. But if any eſcape to olde age, ſith in this life being depriued of the bleſſing of God, they do nothing but miſerably languiſh and are reſerued for greater paines hereafter, they are farre from being partakers of the bleſſing promiſed to the godly children. But this is alſo by the way to be noted, that we are not commaunded to obey them but in the Lorde. And that is euident by the foundation before layed: for they ſit on hie in that place whereunto the Lorde hath aduaunced them, by communicating with them a portion of his honour. Therfore the ſubmiſſion that is vſed towarde them, ought to be a ſteppe towarde the honouring of that ſoueraigne Father. Wherefore, if they moue vs to tranſgreſſe the lawe, then are they worthily not to be accompted parentes, but ſtraungers that labour to withdraw vs from obedience to the true Father. And ſo is to be thought of Princes, Lordes and all ſortes of ſuperioures. For it is ſhamefull and againſt conuenience of reaſon, that their preeminence ſhoulde preuaile to preſſe downe his highneſſe, ſith theyres as it hangeth wholy vpon it, ſo ought onely to guide vs vnto it.

The ſixt Commaundement.

Thou ſhalt not kill.

39 The ende of this commaundement is, that foraſmuch as God hath bounde togethe all mankinde with a certaine vnitie, that euery man ought to regarde the ſafetie of all men, as a thing geuen him in charge. In ſumme therefore, all violence and wrong, yea and all harme doing, wherby our neighboures bodie maie be hurte, is forbidden vs. And therfore we are commaunded, if there be any power of ſuccour in our trauaile to defende the life of our neighboures, that we faithfully imploy the ſame, that we procure thoſe thinges that may make for their quiet, that we watch to keepe them from hurte, and if they be in any daunger, that we geue them our helping hand. If thou conſider that it is God the lawemaker that ſo ſaith, then thinke withall that his meaning is by this rule alſo to gouerne thy ſoule. For it were a fonde thing to thinke, that he which eſpieth the thoughtes of the hearte, and principally reſteth vpon them, ſhould inſtruct nothing but the body to true righteouſneſſe. Therefore the manſlaughter of the hearte is alſo forbidden in this lawe, and an inwarde affection to preſerue our brothers life is here geuen in commaundement. The hande in deede bringeth fourth the manſlaughter, but the minde conceiueth it, when it is infected with wrath and hatred. Looke whether thou canſt be angry with thy brother without burning in deſire to do him hurte. If thou canſt not be angry with him, then canſt thou not hate him, for aſmuch as hatred is nothing but an olde rooted anger. Although thou diſſemble and go about to winde out thy ſelfe by vaine circumſtances: yet where anger or hatred is, there is an affection to hurte. If thou wilt ſtill dally out with ſhiftes to defende it, it is already 1. Ioh. 3.

pronounced by the mouth of the holy Ghoſt, that he is a manſleyer that hateth his brother in his hearte. It is pronounced by the mouth
Matt. 5. 22. of the Lorde Chriſt, that he is gilty of iudgement that is angry with his brother: that he is gilty of the counſell that ſaith Racha: that he is gilty of Hell fier, that ſaith vnto him, Foole.

40 The Scripture noteth two pointes of equitie, vpon which this commaundement is grounded: bycauſe manne is both the image of God and our owne fleſh, wherefore vnleſſe we will defile the image of God, we muſt haue care to touche man none otherwiſe, than as a ſacred thing: and vnleſſe we will put of all naturallneſſe of man, we muſt cheriſh him as our owne fleſh. That maner of exhortation that is fetched from the redemption and grace of Chriſt, ſhall be entreated of in an other place. God willed theſe two thinges naturally to be conſidered in man, that might perſwade vs to the preſeruatiō of him, that we ſhould both reuerence the image of God emprinted in him, and embrace our owne fleſhe. He hath not therefore eſcaped the crime of manſlaughter, that he hath kept him ſelfe from ſheding of bloude. If thou committe any thinge in dede, if thou go about any thing with endeuour, if thou conceiue any thing in deſire and purpoſe that is againſt the ſafetie of an other, thou art holden gilty of manſlaughter. And againe: If thou do not trauaile to thy power and as occaſion may ſerue to defende his life, thou doeſt with like haineouſneſſe offende the lawe. But if there be ſo much care taken for the ſafetie of his body, let vs hereby gather, how much ſtudie and trauaile is due to the ſafetie of his ſoule, which in the Lordes ſight doth infinitely excell the bodie.

The ſeuenth Commaundement.

Thou ſhalt not committe adulterie.

41 The ende of the cōmaundement is, that bycauſe God loueth charitie and cleanneſſe, therefore all vncleanneſſe ought to departe farre away from vs. The ſumme therefore ſhall be, that we be defiled with no vncleanneſſe or luſtfull intemperance of the fleſh: Whervnto aunſwereth the affirmatiue commaundement, that we chaſtely and continently ordre all the partes of our life. But fornication he forbiddeth by name, to which all vnchaſte luſte tendeth, that the filthineſſe of that which is more groſſe and ſenſible, for ſomuch as it alſo defileth the body, he might bring vs to abhorre all filthy luſte. Sith manne was created in this eſtate, not to liue a ſolitarie life, but to vſe a helper ioined vnto him: and ſins that by the curſe of ſinne he is driuen the more to this neceſſitie, the Lord hath in this behalfe prouided ded help for him ſo much as was ſufficient, when he ordained mariage, when he ſanctified with his bleſſinge the fellowſhip begonne by his authority. Whereby followeth, that all other fellowſhip of man & woman out of mariage, is accurſed before him, & that the fellowſhip of mariage it ſelfe, was ordained for remedy of neceſſity, ỳ we ſhould not runne out into vnbridled luſt. Therefore let vs not flatter our ſelues, ſith we heare that man can not be coupled with woman out of mariage, without the curſe of God.

42 Nowe foraſmuch as by the condition of nature, and by luſt more enkindeled ſins the fall of man, we are become doutely ſubiect to deſire of company of women, except it be thoſe whom God of his ſingular grace hath exempted from it: let euery man looke well what is giuen vnto him. Virginity, I graunt, is a vertue not to be deſpiſed: but ſith it is to ſome denied, and to ſome graũted but for a time, lette them that are troubled with incontinence and ſtriuinge with it, can not get the vpper hande, reſorte to the helpe of mariage, that ſo they may keepe chaſtity in the degree of their vocation. For they that can not conceiue this word, if they do not ſuccour their owne intemperance with the remedy that is offered and graunted them, they ſtriue againſt God and reſiſt his ordinaunce. And let no man carpe againſt me (as many do at this day) that beinge aided with the helpe of God, he can do all thinges. For the helpe of God is preſent only with thoſe, that walke in his wayes, that in their vocation from which they do all withdrawe themſelues, which forſakinge the helpes of God, do trauell to ouercome and maiſter their neceſſity with vaine raſh boldneſſe. The Lord affirmeth that continence is a ſingular gift of God, & of that ſorte that are not giuen generally, nor vniuerſally to the whole body of the Church, but to a few members thereof. For firſt he ſayth, that there is a certaine kinde of men, that haue gelded themſelues for the kingdome of Heauen, that is, that they might the more looſely and freely applie themſelues to the affayres of the heauenly kingdome. But, that no man ſhould thinke that ſuch geldinge is in the power of man, he ſhewed a litle before, that all men are not able to receiue it, but they to whom it is peculiarly giuen from heauen, whereupon he concludeth: He that can take it, let him take it. But Paul yet affirmeth it more plainly, where he wryteth, that euery man hath his proper gift of God, one thus, and an other thus. Pſa. 19. 1. & 14. Mat 19 12. 1. Cor. 7 7.

43 Whereas we are by open declaration admoniſhed, that it is not in euery mans power to keepe chaſtity in ſingle life, although with ſtudy and trauaile he indeuour neuer ſo much vnto it, and that it is a peculiar grace, which God giueth but to certaine men, that he may haue thē the more ready to his worke: do we not ſtriue againſt God and nature which he hath inſtitute, if we do not apply the kinde of our life to the proportion of our power? Here the Lord forbiddeth fornication, therefore he requireth cleanneſſe and chaſtity of vs. To keepe the ſame there is but one way, that euery man meaſure him ſelfe by his owne meaſure. Neither lette a man deſpiſe mariage as a thinge vnprofitable or ſuperfluous for him, nor otherwiſe deſire ſingle life, vnleſſe he be able to liue without a wife. And therein alſo let him not prouide onely for the quiet and commodity of the fleſh, but only that being looſed from this bond, he may be the more in readineſſe & prepared to all dueties of Godlineſſe. And foraſmuch as this benefit is giuen to many but for a time, let euery mā ſo long abſtaine frō mariage as he ſhalbe meete to liue to kepe ſingle eſtate, If ſtrēgth faile him to tame his luſt, let him learne that the Lord hath now laied

1. Cor. 7 vpon him a neceſſity to marry. This the Apoſtle ſheweth when he
2. & 9. commaundeth that to auoide fornication euery man haue his owne wife, and euery woman haue her owne husband, that he that can not liue continently ſhould mary in the Lord. Firſt he declareth, that the moſt part of men are ſubiect to ỹ vice of incōtinence: & then of thoſe that be ſubiect vnto it, he excepteth none, but cōmaundeth all to that only remedy, wherewith vnchaſtity is reſiſted. Therefore if they that be incontinent do neglect to helpe their infirmity by this meane, they ſinne euen in this that they obey not the commaundemēt of the Apoſtle. Neither let him flatter himſelfe that toucheth not a woman as though he coulde not be rebuked of vnchaſtity, while in the meane
1. Cor. 6 ſeaſon his minde burneth inwardly with luſt. For Paule defineth cha-
24. ſtity to be a cleannes of the minde, ioyned with chaſtity of the body. A woman vnmaried (ſayth he) thinketh vpon thoſe things that are of the Lord, foraſmuch as ſhee is holy both in body and in ſpirit. Therfore when he bringeth a reaſon to confirme that former commaundement, he doth not only ſay, that it is better for a mā to take a wife, than to defile himſelfe, with company of a harlot, but he ſayth, that it is better to mary than to burne.

44 Now if maried folkes do confeſſe that their fellowſhip together is bleſſed of the Lord, they are thereby admoniſhed not to defile it with intemperate and diſſolute luſt: For though the honeſty of mariage do couer ỹ filthines of incontinence, yet it ought not forthwith to be a prouocation therof. Wherfore let not maried folkes thinke, that all thinges are lawfull vnto them, but let euery husbande haue his owne wife ſoberly, and likewiſe the wife her husband, and ſo doinge, lette them committe nothing vnbeſeeming the honeſty and temperance of mariage. For ſo ought mariage made in the Lord to be reſtrained to meaſure and modeſty, and not to ouerflow into euery kinde of extreme laſciuiouſneſſe. This wantonneſſe Ambroſe reproued with a ſaying very ſore in deede, but not vnfite for it, when he calleth the husbande, the adulterer of his owne wife, which in vſe of wedlocke hath no care of ſhamefaſtneſſe or honeſty. Laſt of all, let vs conſider what lawemaker doth here condemne fornication, euen he which ſith of his owne right he ought to poſſeſſe vs wholly, requireth pureneſſe of the ſoule, ſpirite and body. Therefore when he forbiddeth to commit fornication, he alſo forbiddeth with wanton attire of body, with vncleanly geſtures, & with filthy talke to lay waite to trap an others chaſtity. For that ſaying is not without good reaſon, which Archelaus ſpake to a yong man aboue meaſure wantonly and deintely clothed, that it made no matter in what parte he were filthily vnchaſt: if we haue regard vnto God that abhorreth all filthines in what ſoeuer part either of our ſoule or body it appeareth. And to put thee out of dout, remember that the Lord here commendeth chaſtity. If the Lorde require chaſtity of vs, then he condemneth all that euer is againſt it. Therefore if thou couet to ſhew obedience, neither let thy minde burne inwardly with euill luſt, nor lette thine eyes runne wantonly into corrupt affections, nor let thy body be trimmed vp for allurement, nor let thy tongue with filthy talke entiſe thy minde to like thoughtes, nor let thy gluttonous belly enflame thee with intemperance. For all theſe vices are, as it were, certaine blottes, wherwith the pureneſſe of chaſtity is beſported.

Am. lib. de phil.

The eight Commaundement.

Thou ſhalt not ſteale.

45 The ende of this commaundement is, becauſe God abhorreth vnrighteouſneſſe, ỳ euery man may haue his owne rendred vnto him. The ſumme therefore ſhall be, that we are forbidden to gape for other mens goodes, & that therefore we are commaunded euery man to employ his faythfull trauaile to preſerue to eche man his owne goodes. For thus we ought to thinke, that what euery man poſſeſſeth is not happened vnto him by chaunce of fortune, but by the diſtribution of the ſoueraigne Lord of all things, & therfore no mans goods can be gotten from him by euill meanes, but that wronge be done to the diſpoſition of God. But of theftes there be many kindes: one ſtandeth in Violence, whẽ ỹ goods of an other are by any manẽr of force and robbinge licentiouſneſſe bereued. The other kinde conſiſteth in malicious deceite, where they are guilefully conueied away. An other ſorte there is that ſtandeth in a more hidden ſuttelty, when they are wrong from the owner by colour of lawe. An other ſorte in flatterie, where they are ſucked away by pretenſe of gift. But leaſt we ſhoulde tary too longe vpon rentinge of all the ſeuerall kindes of theft, lette vs know, that all crafty meanes whereby the poſſeſſions and money of our neighboures are conueyed vnto vs, when they once go by crooked wayes from ſincereneſſe of heart, to a deſire to beguile, or by any meane to do hurt, are to be accompted for theftes. Although by pleadinge the lawe, they may preuaile, yet God doth not otherwiſe wey them. For he ſeeth the longe captious ſutteltie, wherewith the guilefull man beginneth to entangle the ſimpler minde, till at length he drawe him into his nettes. He ſeeth the hard and vngentle lawes, wherwith the mightier oppreſſeth and throweth downe the weaker. He ſeeth the alluremente, wherwith as with baited hookes, the craftier taketh thee vnware. All which things are hidden from the iudgement of man, and come not in his knowledge. And this manner of wrong is not only in money, in wares, or in landes, but in euery mans right. For we defraude our neighbour of his goodes, if we deny him thoſe dueties which we are bound to do for him. If any idle factor or bailie do deuour his maiſters ſubſtance, & is not heedeful to the care of his thrift, if he either do wrongfully ſpoile, or do riotouſly waſt the ſubſtance commited vnto him, if a ſeruaunt do mocke his maiſter, if he diſcloſe his ſecretes by any meanes, if he betray his life and his goodes: againe if the Lord do cruelly oppreſſe his houſeholde, they are before God gilty of theft. For he both withholdeth & conueieth an other mans goodes, which performeth not that which by the office of his calling he oweth to other.

46 We ſhall therfore rightly obey this commaundement, if being contented with our owne eſtate, we ſeeke to get no gaine but honeſt and lawful, if we couet not to waxe rich with wrong, nor go about to ſpoile our neighbour of his goodes that our owne ſubſtance may encreaſe, if we labour not to heape vp cruell riches and wronge out of others mens blood, if we do not immeaſurably ſcrape together euery way, by right and by wrong, that either our couetouſneſſe may be filled, or our prodigality ſatisfied. But on the other ſide, lette this be our perpetuall marke, to aide all men faithfully by counſell and helpe to keepe their owne ſo farre as we may: but if we haue to do with falſe and deceitfull men, lette vs rather be ready to yeelde vp ſome of our owne, then to ſtriue with them. And not that only, but let vs communicate to their neceſſities, & with our ſtore relieue their neede, whom we ſee to be oppreſſed with hard and poore eſtate. Finally, lette euery man looke how much he is by duety bounde vnto other, and let him faithfully pay it. For this reaſon lette the people haue in honor all thoſe that are ſet ouer them, let them paciently beare their gouernement, obey their lawes and commaundementes, refuſe nothing that they may beare, ſtill keepinge God fauourable vnto them. Againe, let them take care of their people, preſerue common peace, defende the good, reſtraine the euil, & ſo order all things, as ready to giue accompt of their office to the ſoueraigne iudge. Let the Miniſters of churches faithfully applie their miniſtery, and not corrupt the doctrine of ſaluation, but deliuer it pure & ſincere to the people of God, and let thē inſtruct them not onely with learning, but alſo with example of life: finally, let thē ſo be ouer thē, as good ſhepeherdes be ouer the ſhepe. Let the people likewiſe receiue them for the meſſingers & Apoſtles of God, giue them that honor whereof the hieſt maiſter hath voutſaued them, and miniſter vnto them ſuch thinges as are neceſſary for their life. Lette parentes take on them to feede, rule and teach theyr children, as committed to them of God, & greue not, nor turne away their mindes from them with cruelty, but rather cheriſh & embrace them with ſuch lenity and tenderneſſe, as becommeth there perſon. After which manner, we haue already ſayd, that children owe to their parentes their obedience. Let yong men reuerence olde age, euen as the Lord willed that age to be honorable. Let old men alſo gouerne the weakenes of youth with their wiſedom and experience, wherein they excell yonge men, not ratinge them with rough and loude brawlings, but tempering ſeuerity with mildeneſſe and gentleneſſe. Lette ſeruauntes ſhew themſelues diligent and ſeruiſable to obey: and that not to the eye, but from the heart, as ſeruing God himſelfe. Alſo lette maiſters ſhewe themſelues not teſty and hard to pleaſe, nor oppreſſe them with to much ſharpenes, not reprochfully vſe them, but rather acknowledge that they are their brethren and their fellow ſeruauntes vnder the heauēly Lord, whom they ought mutually to loue & gētly to entreat. After this manner, I ſay, let euery man conſider what in his degree and place he oweth to his neighbours, and let him pay that he oweth. Morouer our minde ought alwayes to haue reſpect to the law maker, that we may know that this law is made as wel for our mindes, as for our handes, that men ſhould ſtudy to defend & further the commodities and profite of other.

The ninth commaundement.

Thou ſhalt not be a lying witneſſe againſt thy neighbour.

47 The end of this commaundement is that becauſe God whichis trueth abhorreth lyinge, we ought to obſerue trueth without deceitfull colour. The ſumme therefore ſhall be, that we neither hurt any mans name either with ſlaunders or falſe reportes, nor hinder him in his goodes by lyinge: finally that we offende no man, by luſt to ſpeake euill, or to be buſie: with which prohibition is ioyned a commaundement, that ſo farre as we may, we employ our faithfull endeuour for euery man in affirminge the trueth, to defende the ſafety both of his name and goodes. It ſeemeth that the Lord purpoſed to expounde the meaning of his cõmaundement in the three & twenty Chapter of Exodus in theſe wordes. Thou ſhalt not vſe the voyce of lying, nor ſhalt ioyne thy hande to ſpeake falſe witneſſe for the wicked. Againe, Thou ſhalt flee lying. Alſo in an other place he doth not onely call vs away from lyinge in this point that we be no accuſers, or whiſperers in the people, but alſo that no man deceiue his brother for he forbiddeth them both in ſeuerall commaundementes. Truely it is no dout, but that as in the commaundementes before, he hath forbidden cruelty, vnchaſtity & couetouſnes, ſo in this he reſtraineth falſhoode. Whereof there are two partes as we haue noted before. For either we offende the good name of our neighbours by maliciouſneſſe and froward minde to backebite, or in lying and ſometime in euill ſpeakinge we hinder their commodities. There is no difference whether in this place be vnderſtanded ſolemne & iudiciall teſtimony, or common teſtimony that is vſed in priuate talkes. For we muſt alway haue recourſe to this principle, that of all the generall kindes of vices one ſpeciall ſorte is ſet for an example, whereunto the reſt may be referred, and that that is chiefely choſen, wherein the filthineſſe of the fault is moſt apparaunt. Albeit, it were conuenient to extende it more generally to ſlaunders and ſiniſter backebitinges wherewith our neighbours are wrongfully greeued, for that falſhoode of witneſſinge which is vſed in iudiciall courtes, is neuer without periury. But periuries inſomuch as they do prophane and defile the name of God, are already ſufficiently met withall in the third commaundement. Wherfore the right vſe of this commaundement is, that our tongue in affirminge the trueth do ſerue both the good name and profite of our neighbours. The equity thereof is more than manifeſt. For if a good name be more precious than any treaſures, whatſoeuer they be: then is it no leſſe hurt to a man to be ſpoyled of the goodneſſe of his name than of his goodes. And in bereuing his ſubſtaunce, ſometime falſe witneſſe doth as much as violence of handes.

Exo.23. 1. Leui.19 15.

48 And yet it is maruelous ẅ how negligent careleſſeneſſe men do commonly offende in this point, ſo ẏ there are found very few that are not notably sicke of this disease: we are so much delited with a certaine poisoned swetenes both in searching out & in disclosing the euills of other. And let vs not thinke ỹ it is a sufficient excuse, if oftentimes we lye not. For he ỹ forbiddeth thy brothers name to be defiled w̃ lying, willeth also that it be preserued vntouched so farre as the trueth will suffer. For howsoeuer he taketh heede to himselfe only, so that he tell no lye, yet in the same he secretly confesseth that he hath some charge of him. But this ought to suffice vs to kepe safe our neighbours good name, that God hath care of it. Wherfore without dout all euill speaking is vtterly condemned. But we meane not by euill speakinge, that rebukinge which is vsed for chastisement: nor accusation, or iudiciall processe, wherby remedy is sought for an euill, nor publike reprehension which tendeth to put other sinners in feare, nor bewrayinge of faultes to them for whose safety it behoued that they should be forwarned least they should be in daunger by ignoraunce: but we meane only hatefull accusing, which ariseth of maliciousnesse and of a wanton will to backebite. Also this commaundement is extended to this point, that we couet not to vse a scoffing kinde of a pleasauntnes, but mingeled with bitter tauntes, thereby bitingly to touch other mens faultes vnder pretense of pastime, as many do that seeke praise of mery conceites with other mens shame yea & greefe, also when by such wanton railing many times our neighbours are not a litle reproched. Now if we bende our eyes to the lawmaker, which must accordinge to his rightfull authority beare rule no lesse ouer the eares and minde than ouer the tongue: truely we shall finde that greedinesse to heare backebitings, and a hasty readines to euill iudgementes are no lesse forbidden. For it were very fond if a man should thinke that God hateth the fault of euill speakinge in the tongue, and doth not disalowe the fault of euill maliciousnesse in the hearte. Wherefore if there be in vs a true feare and loue of God, let vs endeuour so farre as we may and as is expedient, and as charity beareth, that we giue neither our tongue, nor our eares to euill speakinges, and bitter iestinges, least we rashly without cause yeelde our mindes to indirect suspicions. But being indifferent expositours of all mens sayinges and doinges, let vs both in iudgement, eares, and tongue gently preserue their honor safe.

not

The tenth Commaundement.

Thou shalt not couet thy neighbours house, &c.

49 The end of this cõmaundement is, ỹ becausse ỹ lords wil is that our ſoule be wholly poſſeſſed with the affectiō of loue: all luſt is to be ſhakē out of our minde that is contrary to charity. The ſumme therfore ſhall be, that no thought creepe into vs, which may moue our mindes with a concupiſcens hurtfull and turninge toward an others loſſe: wherewith on the other ſide agreeth the commaundement, that whatſoeuer we conceiue, purpoſe, will or ſtudy vpon, be ioyned with the benefit and commodity of our neighbours. But here, as it ſemeth, ariſeth a hard and comberſome difficulty. For if it be truely ſayd of vs before that vnder the names of fornication and theft are contayned the luſt of fornication, and the purpoſe to hurt and deceiue, it may ſeeme ſuperfluouſly ſpoken, that the couetinge of other mens goodes ſhoulde afterward be ſeuerally forbidden vs. But the diſtinction betwene purpoſe and couetinge, will eaſily loſe vs this knot. For purpoſe (as we haue meant in ſpeakinge of it in the other commaundementes before) is deliberate conſent of will, when luſt hath ſubdued the minde: but couetinge may be without any ſuch either aduiſement or aſſent, when the minde is only pricked & tickled with vaine and peruerſe obiectes. As therefore the Lord hath heretofore commaunded, that the rule of charity ſhoulde gouerne our willes, ſtudies and workes: ſo he now commaundeth the conceptions of our minde to be directed to the ſame rule, that there be none of them crooked and writhen, that may prouoke our minde an other way. As he hath forbidden our minde to be bowed and ledde into wrath, hatred, fornication, robbery, and lying: ſo he doth now forbid vs to be moued thereunto.

50 And not without cauſe doth he require ſo great vprightneſſe. For who can deny that it is righteous, that al the powers of the ſoule be poſſeſſed with charity? But if any of thē do ſwarue from the marke of charity, who can deny that it is diſeaſed? Now whenſe commeth it that ſo many deſires hurtefull to thy neighbour do enter into thy heart, but of this, that neglecting him thou careſt onely for thy ſelfe? For if thy minde were altogether throughly ſoked with charity, no percell thereof ſhoulde be open to ſuch imaginations. Therefore it muſt needes be void of charity, ſo farre as it receiueth concupiſcens. But ſome man will obiect, that yet it is not meete that phantaſies that are wout order toſſed in mans wit, & at length do vaniſh away, ſhould be condemned for concupiſcence, whoſe place is in the heart. I aunſwere: that here our queſtion is of that kinde of phantaſies, which while they are preſent before our mindes, do together bite and ſtrike our heart with deſire, foraſmuch as it neuer commeth in our minde, to wiſh for any thing, but that our heart is ſtirred vp and leapeth with-

all. Therfore God cõmaundeth a maruelous feruẽtnes of loue which he willeth not to be entangled with neuer so small snares of concupiscence. He requireth a maruelously framed minde, which he suffereth not so much as with slight prouocatiõs to be any thing stirred against the law of loue. To this exposition Augustine did first open me the way: because thou shouldest not thinke that it is without consent of some graue authority. And though the Lords purpose was to forbid vs all wrongfull couetting: yet in rehearsing that same, he hath brought forth for example those things that most cõmonly do deceiue vs with a false image of delight: because he would leaue nothing to concupiscence when he draweth it from these things, vpon the which it most of all rageth and triumpheth. Loe, here is the seconde Table of the law, wherein we are taught sufficiently what we owe to men for Gods sake, vpon consideration wherof hangeth the whole rule of charity. Wherfore you shall but vainely call vpon those ducties that are contained in this Table, vnlesse your doctrine do stay vpon the feare and reuerence of God, as vpon her foundation. As for them which seeke for two commaundementes in the prohibition of couetinge, the wise reader, though I say nothing, will iudge that by wrong diuision, they teare in sunder that which was but one. And it maketh nothinge against vs, that this worde, Thou shalt not couet, is the second time repeated, for after that he had first set the house, then he renteth the partes thereof, beginning at the wife: whereby it plainely appeareth, that (as the Hebrues do very well) it ought to be read in one whole sentence, and that God in effect commaundeth, that al that euery man possesseth, should remaine safe and vntouched, not onely from wrong and lust to defraude them, but also from the very least desire that may moue our mindes.

51 But now to what ende the whole lawe tendeth, it shall not be hard to iudge: that is, to the fulfilling of righteousnesse, that it might frame the life of man after the example of the pureneſſe of God. For God hath therein so painted out his owne nature, as if a man do performe in deedes that which is there commaunded, he shall in a manner expresse an image of God in his life. Therefore when Moses meant to bring the summe thereof into the mindes of the Israelites, he sayd: And nowe Israell, what doth the Lorde thy God aske of thee, but that thou feare the Lorde, and walke in his wayes? loue him and serue him in all thy heart, and in all thy soule, and keepe his commaundementes? And he ceassed not still to sing the same song againe vnto them, so oft as he purposed to shewe the ende of the law. The doctrine of the lawe hath such respect hereunto, that it ioyneth Deu.10 12.

Deut.6. 5.& 11. 13. man, or as Moſes in an other place termeth it, maketh man to ſticke faſt to his God in holineſſe of life. Now the perfection of that holyneſſe conſiſteth in the two principall pointes already rehearſed, That we loue the Lorde God with all our hearte, all our ſoule, and all our Mat.22 ſtrength, and our neighbour as our ſelues. And the firſt in deede is, that our ſoule be in all partes filled with the loue of God. From that byandby of it ſelfe foorth floweth the loue of our neighbour. 1.Tim.1 15. Which thing the Apoſtle ſheweth when he wryteth, that the ende of the law is Loue out of a pure conſcience, and a faith not fayned. You ſee how, as it were, in the heade is ſet conſcience and faith vnfayned, that is to ſay in one worde true Godlineſſe, and that from thenſe is charity deriued. Therefore he is deceiued, whoſoeuer thinketh that in the lawe are taught onely certaine rudimentes and firſt Introductions of righteouſneſſe, wherewith men became to be taught their firſt ſchoolinge, but not yet directed to the true marke of good woorkes: whereas beyonde that ſentence of Moſes and this of Paule, you canne deſire nothinge as wantinge of the higheſt perfection. For howe farre, I pray you, will he proceede that will not be contented with this inſtitution, whereby manne is inſtructed to the feare of God, to ſpirituall worſhippinge, to obeyinge of the commaundementes, to follow the vprightnes of the way of the Lord: finally to pureneſſe of conſcience, ſincere faith and loue? Whereby is confirmed that expoſition of the law, which ſearcheth for and findeth out in the commaundementes thereof all the dueties of Godlineſſe and loue. For they that follow onely the drie and bare principles, as if it taught but the one halfe of Gods will, know not the end thereof, as the Apoſtle witneſſeth.

52 But whereas in rehearſing the ſumme of the law, Chriſt & the Apoſtle do ſomtime leaue out ỹ firſt Table: many are deceiued therin while they woulde faine draw their words to both the Tables. Chriſt in Matthew calleth the chiefe pointes of the law, Mercy, Iudgemẽt & Faith: vnder the word Faith, it is not doutful to me, but that he meaneth trueth or faithfulneſſe toward men. But ſome, that the ſentence might be extended to the whole law, take it for religiouſneſſe toward Matt.5. 13. God. But they labour in vaine. For Chriſt ſpeaketh of thoſe workes wherwith man ought to proue himſelfe righteous. This reaſon if we note, we will alſo ceſſe to maruell why, when a yong man asked him what be the commaundementes by keping wherof we enter into life: he anſwered theſe things only: Thou ſhalt not kil. Thou ſhalt not cõmit adultery. Thou ſhalt not ſteale. Thou ſhalt beare no falſe wit- Mat.19. 18. neſſe. Honor thy Father and thy Mother. Loue thy neighbour as thy ſelfe.

ſelfe. For the obtying of the firſt Table conſiſted in manner all either in the affection of ỹ heart, or in ceremonies: the affection of the heart appeared not, & as for the ceremonies the hypocrites did continually vſe. But the workes of charity are ſuch, as by them we may declare a perfect righteouſneſſe. But this commeth eche where ſo oft in the prophetes, that it muſt needes be familiar to a reader but meanely exerciſed in them. For in a manner alway when they exhorte to repentaunce, they leaue out the firſt Table, and only call vpon Fayth, Iudgemẽt, Mercy & Equity. And thus they do not ouerskip the feare of God, but they require the earneſt profe thereof by the tokens of it. This is well knowẽ, that when they ſpeake of the keeping of the law, they do for ỹ moſt part reſt vpon the ſecond Table, becauſe therin the ſtudy of righteouſnes and vprightneſſe is moſt openly ſeene. It is needeleſſe to rehearſe the places, becauſe euery man will of himſelf eaſily marke that which I ſay.

53 But thou wilt ſay, is it then more auaileable to the perfectiõ of righteouſnes, to liue innocently among men, than with true godlines to honor God? No, but becauſe a man doth not eaſily kepe charity in all pointes, vnles he earneſtly feare God, therfore it is therby proued, that he hath godlineſſe alſo. Beſide that, foraſmuch as the Lord well knoweth, that no benefit can come from vs vnto him, which thing he doth alſo teſtifie by ỹ Prophet: therefore he requireth not our duties to himſelfe, but doth exerciſe vs in good workes towarde our neighbour. Therfore not without cauſe the Apoſtle ſetteth the whole perfectiõ of the holy ones in charity. And not incõueniently in another place he calleth ỹ ſame the fulfillinge of the law: adding that he hath performed ỹ law that loueth his neighbour. Againe, That all ỹ law is comprehended in one word, Loue thy neighbour as thy ſelfe. For he teacheth no other thinge but the ſame which Chriſt doth when he ſaith: Whatſoeuer ye will that men do to you, do ye the ſaine to thẽ. For this is the law & the Prophets. It is certaine, that in the law & the Prophetes, Faith and all that belongeth to the true worſhip of God, holdeth the principall place, & that Loue is beneth it in a lower degree: but the Lords meaning is, that in the law is only preſcribed vnto vs an obſeruation of right and equity, wherin we be exerciſed to teſtifie our godly feare of him, if there be any in vs.

54 Here therfore let vs ſticke faſt, that then our life ſhalbe beſt framed to Gods will and the rule of his law, when it ſhall be euery way moſt profitable to our brethren. But in the whole lawe there is not redde one ſillable that appointeth to man any rule of ſuch thinges as he ſhall do or leaue vndone to the commodity of his owne fleſh. And surely sith men are so borne of such disposition naturally that they be too much caried all headlong to the loue of themselues, and how much soeuer they fall from the trueth yet still they keepe that selfe loue, there needed no law any more to enflame that loue, that was naturally of it selfe, too much beyonde measure. Whereby it plainly appeareth, that not the loue of our selues, but ỹ loue of God & of our neighbour is the keeping of the commaundements, & that he liueth best & most holily, ỹ (so nere as may be) liueth & trauaileth least for himselfe, & that no man liueth worse & more wickedly than he that liueth and trauaileth for himselfe & only thinketh vpon and seeketh for things of his owne. And the Lord, the more to expresse with how great earnestnesse we ought to be led to the loue of our neighbours, appointed it to be measured by the loue of our selues as by a rule, because he had no other vehement or stronger affection to measure it by. And the force of the maner of speakinge is diligently to be weyed. For he doth not, as certaine Sophisters haue foolishly dreamed, giue the first degree to the loue of our selues, and the second to charity, but rather that affection of loue which we do all naturally draw to our selues he giueth away vnto other, wherupon ỹ Apostle sayth, that Charity seketh not her owne. And their reasō is not to be estemed worth a heare that ỹ thing ruled is euer inferiour to his Rule. For God doth not make the loue of our selues a rule whereunto charity towarde other should be subiect, but whereas by peruersnes of nature, ỹ affectiō of loue was wont to rest in our selues, he sheweth that now it ought to be elsewhere spred abroad, that we should with no lesse cherefullnesse, feruentnesse, & carefulnesse be ready to do good to our neighbour than to our selues.

1. Cor. 13. 5.

55 Now sith Christ hath shewed in the parable of the Samaritane that vnder the name of Neighbour euery man is cōtained be he neuer so straunge vnto vs: there is no cause why we shoulde restraine the commaundement of loue within the boūdes of our owne frendships and acquaintances. I deny not that the nerer that any man is vnto vs, the more familiarly he is to be holden with our endeuours to do him good. For so the order of humanity requireth, that so many mo dueties of friendshippe men shoulde communicate together, as they are bound together with streighter bonds of kinred, familiarity or neighbourhoode, & that without any offense of God, by whose prouidence we are in a manner driuen therunto. But I say that all mākinde without exception is to be embraced with one affection of charity: & that in this behalfe is no difference of Barbarous or Grecian, of worthy or vnworthy, of friend or foe, because they are to be considered in God

Luc. 10. 36.

& not in themſelues: from which conſideration when we turne away, it is no maruell if we be entangled with many errours. Wherefore if we will keepe the true trade of louing, we muſt not turne our eyes vnto man, the ſight of whom would ofter enforce vs to hate thā to loue, but vnto God which cōmaundeth that the loue which we offer him, be poured abroade amonge all men: that this be a perpetuall foundation, that whatſoeuer the man be, yet he ought to be loued becauſe God is loued.

56 Wherfore it was a moſt peſtilent either ignorāce or malice, that the Schoolemen of theſe commaundementes, touchinge not deſiring of reuengement, and louing our enemies, which in the olde time both were giuen to the Iewes and at the ſame time were commonly giuen to all Chriſtians, haue made Councels which it is in our liberty to obey, or not obey. And the neceſſary obeying of them, they haue poſted ouer to Mōkes which were though but in this one point forſoth more righteous thā ſimple Chriſtians, that they willingly bound themſelues to kepe the Councels. And they render a reaſon why they receiue them not for lawes, for that they ſeme too burdenous & heauy, ſpecially for Chriſtians that are vnder the law of grace. So dare they preſume to repell the eternall law of God touching the louing of our neighbours? Is there any ſuch difference in any leafe of the law? & are not therein rather eche where founde commaundementes that do moſt ſeuerely require of vs to loue our enemies? For what manner of ſaying is that, where we are commaunded to feede our enemy whē he is hungry? to ſet into the right way his Oxen or Aſſes ſtraying out of the way, or to eaſe them when they faint vnder their burden? Shall we do good to his beaſtes for his ſake without any good wil to himſelfe? What? is not the word of the Lord euerlaſtinge: Leaue vengeance to me, and I will requite it? Which alſo is ſpoken more plainely at large in an other place. Seke not vengeance, neither be mindeful of the iniury of thy Citizens. Either let them blot theſe things out of the law, or let them acknowledge that the Lord was a lawmaker, and not lyingly faine that he was a councell giuer.

Pro. 25. 21. Exo. 23. 4. Deu. 32. 35. Leu. 19. 18.

57 And what I pray you meane theſe things that they haue preſumed to mocke withall in their vnſauory gloſe? Loue your enemies, do good to them that hate you, pray for thē that perſecute you, bleſſe them that curſe you, that ye may be the childrē of your father which is in heauen. Who can not heare reaſon with Chryſoſtome, that by ſo neceſſary a cauſe it plainely appeareth that they are no exhortations but commaundementes? What remaineth more when we be blotted out of the numbre of the children of God? But by their opinion, only

Matt. 5. 44. Lib. de compūctione cordis.

Monkes ſhall be the children of the heauenly father, they onely ſhall be bolde to call vpon God their Father: what ſhall the Church do in the meane ſeaſon? it ſhall by like right be ſent away to the Gentils & Publicans. For Chriſt ſayth: If ye be friendely to your friendes, what fauour looke you for therby? do not ỹ Gentiles & publicans the ſame? But we ſhall be in good caſe forſoth, if the title of Chriſtians be left vnto vs, and the inheritaunce of the kingdome of heauen taken away from vs. And no leſſe ſtrong is Auguſtines argument. When (ſaith he) the Lord forbiddeth to commit fornication, he no leſſe forbiddeth to touch the wife of thine enemy thā of thy friend. When he forbiddeth theft, he giueth leaue to ſteale nothing at all, either frō thy friende or from thine enemy. But theſe two, not to ſteale, & not to commit fornication, Paule bringeth within the compaſſe of the rule of loue, yea & teacheth that they are contained vnder this cōmaundement, Thou ſhalt loue thy neighbour as thy ſelfe. Therfore, either Paul muſt haue bin a falſe expoſitour of the lawe, or it neceſſarily followeth hereby, that our enemies ought alſo to be loued, euen by commaundement, like as our friendes. Therfore they do truely bewray themſelues to be the children of Satan, that do ſo licentiouſly ſhake of the cōmon yoke of the children of God. It is to be douted, whether they haue publiſhed this doctrine with more groſſe dulnes or ſhameleſnes. For there are none of the olde wryters that do not pronounce as of a thing certaine, that theſe are mere cōmaundementes. And that euen in Gregories age it was not douted of, appeareth by his owne affirmatiō, for he without controuerſie taketh them for commaundementes. And how fooliſhly do they reaſon? They ſay ỹ they are to weighty a burden for Chriſtiās. As though there could be deuiſed any thing more weighty, than to loue God with all our heart, with all our ſoule, with all our ſtrēgth. In cōpariſon of this law any thing may be cōpted eaſy, whether it be to loue our enemy, or to lay away all deſire of reuenge out of our minde. In dede all things are hie & hard to our weakenes euen the leaſt title of the lawe. It is the Lord in whom we vſe ſtrength Let him giue what he commaundeth, & commaund what he wil. Chriſtian men to be vnder the law of grace, is not vnbridledly to wander without law, but to be graffed in Chriſt, by whoſe grace they are free from the curſe of the law, and by whoſe ſpirite they haue a law wrytten in their heartes. This grace Paule vnproperly called a law, alludinge to the law of God againſt which he did ſet it in compariſon. But theſe men do in the name of the law, diſpute vpon a matter of nothing.

Mat. 5. 46.

Lib. de doctri. Chriſti. cap. 30.

Ro. 13. 9.

58 Of like ſorte it is, that they called Veniall ſinne, both ſecrete vngodlineſſe that is againſt the firſt table, and alſo the direct tranſgreſ-

greſſinge of the laſt commaundement. For they define it thus, that it is a deſire without aduiſed aſſent, which reſteth not long in the heart. But I ſay, that it can not come at all into the heart, but by want of thoſe things that are required in the law. We forbid to haue ſtrange gods. When the minde ſhaken with the engines of diſtruſt, looketh about elſewhere: whē it is touched with a ſoden deſire to remoue her bleſſedneſſe ſome other way: whenſe come theſe motions, although they quickely vaniſh away, but of this, that there is ſome thing in the ſoule empty, to receiue ſuch tentations? And to the ende not to draw out this argumēt to greater length, there is a commaundement giuē to loue God with all our heart, with all our minde, with all our ſoule: if then all the powers of our ſoule be not bent to the loue of God, we haue already departed from the obedience of the law, Becauſe the enemies that do therein ariſe againſt his kingdome, and interrupt his decrees, do proue that God hath not his throne wel ſtabliſhed in our conſcience. As for the laſt commaundement, we haue already ſhewed that it properly belongeth hereunto. Hath any deſire of minde pricked vs? we are already gilty of couetinge, and therewithall are made tranſgreſſors of the law. Becauſe the Lord doth forbid vs, not only to purpoſe & practiſe any thing that may be to an others loſſe, but alſo to be pricked & ſwell with coueting it. But the curſe of God doth alway hang ouer the tranſgreſſiō of the law. We can not therfore proue euen the very leaſt deſires free from iudgement of death. In weyinge of ſinnes (ſaith Auguſtine) let vs not bring falſe balances to wey what we liſt and how we liſt at our owne pleaſure, ſaying: this is heauy, and this is light. But let vs bring Gods balāce out of the holy Scriptures, as out of the Lordes treaſorie, and let vs therein wey what is heauy: rather let vs not wey, but reknowledge thinges already weyed by the Lorde. But what ſayth the Scripture? Truely when Paule ſayth that the rewarde of ſinne is death, he ſheweth that he knew not this ſtinkinge diſtinction. Sith we are to much enclined to hypocriſie, this cheriſhmēt therof ought not to haue bin added to flatter our ſlouthfull conſciences.

Li. 2. de bap. cōtra Donatiſt. cap. 6.

59 I would to God, they would conſider what ẏ ſaying of Chriſt meaneth: He that tranſgreſſeth one of the leaſt of theſe commaundementes, & teacheth men ſo, ſhalbe compted none in the kingdom of heauē. Are not they of that ſort, when they dare ſo extenuate the trāſgreſſion of the law, as if it were not worthy of death? but they ought to haue conſidered, not only what is cōmaunded, but what he is that cōmaundeth, becauſe his authority is diminiſhed in euery tranſgreſſion, howe litle ſoeuer it be, of the lawe that he hath giuen in commaundement. Is it a ſmall matter with them, that Gods maieſty be offended in any thinge? Moreouer if God hath declared his will in the lawe, whatſoeuer is contrary to the lawe, diſpleaſeth him. Will they imagine the wrath of God to be ſo diſarmed, that puniſhment of death ſhall not foorwith follow vpon them? And he himſelfe hath pronounced it plainely, if they would rather finde in their heartes to heare his voyce, than to trouble the cleare trueth with their vnſa-

But albeit they graunt it to be a ſinne, becauſe they can not denie it: yet they ſtand ſtiffe in this, that it is no deadly ſinne. But ſith they haue hitherto too much borne with their owne madneſſe, lette them yet at length learne to waxe wiſer. But if they continue in dotage, we will bid them farewell: and let the children of God learn this, that all ſinne is deadly, becauſe it is a rebellion againſt the will of God, which of neceſſity prouoketh his wrath, becauſe it is a breach of the law, vpon which the iudgemēt of God is pronounced without exception: and that the ſinnes of the holy ones are venial or pardonable, not of their owne nature, but becauſe they obtayne pardon by the mercy of God.

The ix. Chapter.

That Chriſt, although he vvas knovven to the Iewes vnder the lavv, yet vvas deliuered only by the Goſpell.

BEcauſe it pleaſed God in the olde time not vainely by expiations and ſacrifices to declare himſelfe a Father, and not in vaine he did conſecrate a choſen people to himſelfe: euen then without dout he was knowen in the ſame image, wherein he Mal 4.2 nowe appeareth to vs with full brightneſſe. Therefore Malachie, after that he had bidden the Iewes to take heede to the law of Moſes, and to continue in ſtudy therof, (becauſe after his death there ſhould come a certaine interruptiō of the office of the Prophetes) did forthwith declare, that there ſhoulde ariſe a ſonne of righteouſneſſe. In which wordes he teacheth, that the law auaileth to this purpoſe to hold ỹ godly in expectation of Chriſt to come: but yet that there was much more light to be hoped for, when he ſhould be come in deede.
1.Pet.1. 12. For this reaſon doth Peter ſay, that the Prophetes did make ſearch, and diligently enquire, of the ſaluation that is now opened by the Goſpell: & that it was reueled vnto them, that they ſhould miniſter, not to themſelues, nor to their owne age but vnto vs, thoſe things that are declared by the Goſpell. Not that their doctrine was vnprofitable to the people in olde time, or nothing auailed themſelues: but bycauſe they enioyed not the treaſure which God ſent vnto vs by their hand. For at this day the grace whereof they teſtified, is familiarly ſet before our eyes. And wheras they did but a litle ſippe of it, there is offred vnto vs a more plentifull enioying thereof. Therefore Chriſt himſelfe, which affirmeth that he had witneſſe borne him by Moſes, yet extolleth the meaſure of grace whereby we excell the Iewes. For ſpeaking to the Diſciples, he ſaid: Bleſſed are the eyes that ſee that which ye ſee, & bleſſed are the eares that heare that which ye heare. For many kinges and Prophetes haue wiſhed it, and haue not obteined it. This is no ſmall commendation of the reueling of the Goſpell, that God preferred vs before the holy fathers that excelled in rare godlineſſe. With which ſentence that other place diſagreeth not, where it is ſaid, that Abraham ſawe the day of Chriſt, and reioyſed. For though the ſight of a thing farre diſtant was ſomewhat darke, yet he wanted nothing to the aſſurance of good hope. And thenſe came that ioye which accompanied the holy Prophet, euen to his death. And that ſaying of Iohn Baptiſt, No man hath ſeen God at any time, the only begotten that is in the boſome of the father, hath declared him vnto vs, doth not exclude the godly which had ben dead before him, from the felowſhip of the vnderſtanding and light that ſhineth in the perſone of Chriſt. But comparing their eſtate with oures, he teacheth that thoſe miſteries, which they ſaw but darkely vnder ſhaddowes, are manifeſt to vs: as the author of the epiſtle to the Hebrewes doth well ſet out, ſaying, that God diuerſly and many wayes ſpake in olde time by the Prophets, but now by his beloued Sonne. Although therfore that only begotten one, which is at this day to vs the brightneſſe of the glory, and the point of the ſubſtance of God the father, was in olde time knowen to the Iewes, as we haue in an other place alleaged out of Paule, that he was the guide of the olde deliuerance: yet is it true, which the ſame Paul els where teacheth, that God which commaunded the light to ſhine out of darkeneſſe, hath nowe ſhined vpon our heartes to ſet forth the knowledge of the glorie of God in the face of Ieſus Chriſt: bycauſe when he appered in this his image, he did in a maner make himſelfe viſible, in compariſon of the darke and ſhadowiſh forme that had ben of him before. And ſo much the more fowle and deteſtable is their vnthankefulneſſe and peruerſneſſe, that are here ſo blinde at midde day. And therefore Paule ſaith, that their mindes are darkened by Satan, that they ſhoulde not ſee the glorie of Chriſt ſhining in the Goſpell, though there be no veile ſet betwene them and it.

Goſpell the doctrine of faith, all the promiſes that we here and there finde in the lawe, concerning the free forgeueneſſe of ſinnes, whereby God reconcileth men to himſelfe, are accompted partes therof. For he compareth faith againſt theſe terrors, wherewith the conſcience ſhould be troubled and vexed, if ſaluation were to be ſought by workes. Wherevpon followeth, that in taking the name of the Goſpell largely, there are conteined vnder it all the teſtimonies that God in olde time gaue to his fathers, of the mercie and fatherly fauour. But in the more excellent ſignification of it, I ſay it is applied to the publiſhing of the grace geuen in Chriſt. And that meaning is not onely receyued by common vſe, but alſo hangeth vpon the authoritie of

2. Tim. 1 the life and immortalitie by the Goſpell. By which wordes Paule
10. meaneth, not that the fathers were drowned in darkeneſſe of death, vntill the ſonne of God did put on fleſh: but clayming this prerogatiue of honour to the Goſpell, he teacheth that it is a newe and vnwonted kinde of meſſage, wherby God performed thoſe thinges that he had promiſed, that the truth of his promiſes ſhoulde be fulfilled in the perſone of the Sonne. For although the faithful haue alway found by experience, that ſame ſaying of Paule to be true, that in Chriſt are all the promiſes, yea and Amen, bycauſe they were ſealed in their heartes: yet bycauſe he hath accompliſhed all partes of our ſaluation in his fleſh, therefore that ſelfe liuely deliuering of the thinges rightfully obteined a newe and ſingular title of praiſe. Wherevpon cometh Iohn. 1. that ſaying of Chriſt: Hereafter ye ſhall ſee the heauens open, and the 51. Angels of God aſcending and deſcending vpon the ſonne of man. For though he ſeeme to haue relation vnto the ladder ſhewed in a viſion to the Patriarch Iacob: yet he ſetteth out the excellencie of his comming by this marke, that he opened the gate of heauen to all men, that the entrie thereof maie ſtand familiarly open to all men.

3 But yet we muſt take hede of the deueliſh imagination of Seruettus, which when he goeth about, or at leaſt faineth that he goeth about, to extoll the greatneſſe of the grace of Chriſt, vtterly aboliſheth the promiſes, as if they were ended together with the lawe. He layeth for him, that by the faith of the Goſpell there is brought

vnto vs the accomplishmēt of all the promises: as though there were no difference betwene vs and Christ. I did in deede euen nowe declare that Christ lefte nothing vnperfourmed of the whole summe of our saluation: but it is wrongfully gathered thereupon, that we do already enioy the benefites purchaced by him, as though that saying of Paule were false, that our saluation is hidde in hope. I graunt in deede, that we by beleuing in Christ, do also passe from death to life: But in the meane season we must holde this saying of Iohn, that although we knowe we be the children of God, yet it hath not as yet appeared, till we shalbe like vnto him: that is, till we shall see him suche as he is. Therefore although Christ offer vnto vs in his Gospell present fulnesse of spiritual good thinges, yet the enioying therof lieth stil hidde vnder the keping of hope, till being vnclothed of the corruptible flesh, we be transfigured into the glorie of him that goeth before vs. In the meane time the holy Ghost biddeth vs to reste vpon the promises, whose authoritie ought with vs to put to silence all the barkinges of that filthy dogge. For as Paule witnesseth, godlinesse hath a promise as well of the life to come, as of the life present. For which reason he boasteth that he is an Apostle of Christ, according to the promise of life that is in him. And in an other place he putteth vs in minde, that we haue the same promises, which in the olde time were geuen to the holy men. Finally, he setteth this for the summe of felicitie, that we are sealed vp with the holy spirite of promise, but yet we do no otherwise enioy Christ, but so farre as we embrace him clothed with his promises. Wherby it cometh to passe, that he in dede dwelleth in our heartes, and yet we wander in iourney abrode from him: bycause we walke by faith & not by sight. And these two thinges do not ill agree together: that we possesse in Christ all that perteineth to the perfection of the heauenly life: and yet that faith is a beholding of good thinges that are not seene. Onely there is a difference to be noted in the nature or qualitie of the promises: bycause the Gospell sheweth with her finger that thing, whiche the lawe did shadow vnder figures.

1. Tim. 4 8.
2. Cor. 7

4 And hereby also is their errour conuinced, whiche do neuer otherwise compare the lawe with the Gospell, but as they compare the merites of workes with the free imputation of righteousnesse. Although in deede this comparison of contraries be not to be reiected: bycause Paule doth oftentimes vnderstand by the name of the law, a rule to liue righteously, wherin God requireth of vs, that which is his, not geuing vs any hope of life, vnlesse we in all pointes obey it: and on the other side adding a curse if we do neuer so litle swarue from it: that is in ſuch places as he diſputeth, the we do freely pleaſe God, and are by pardon reckened righteous, bycauſe the obſeruation of the lawe, wherunto the rewarde is promiſed, is no where founde. Therefore Paule doth fitly make the righteouſneſſe of the lawe and of the Goſpell, contrarie the one to the other. But the Goſpell did not ſo ſuccede in place of the whole lawe, that it ſhoulde bring any diuers meane of ſaluation, but rather to confirme and proue to be of force, what ſo euer the lawe had promiſed, and to ioine the body to the ſhadowes. For when Chriſt ſaith, that the lawe and the Prophets were vntill Iohn: he maketh not the fathers ſubiect to the curſe, which the bond ſeruantes of the lawe can not eſcape: but rather only that they were inſtructed with certaine rudimentes, ſo as they ſtayed a great way beeneath the heigth of the doctrine of the Goſpell.

Rom. 1. 16. Therefore Paule calling the Goſpell the power of God, to ſaluation to euery beleuer, by and by addeth, that it hath witneſſe of the lawe and the Prophetes. But in the ende of the ſame Epiſtle, although he ſhewe that the title of praiſe of Ieſus Chriſt is the reuelation of the miſterie kept ſecret in euerlaſting times: yet he doth qualifie that ſaying, with adding an expoſition, teaching that he is openly ſhewed by the writinges of the Prophets. Wherupon we gather, that when we are to entreate of the whole lawe, the Goſpell differeth from the lawe onely in reſpect of the plaine diſcloſing thereof. But yet for the ineſtimable flowing ſtore of grace, which hath ben layed open for vs in Chriſt, it is not without cauſe ſaid, that at his cõming the heauenly kingdome of God was erected in earth.

5 Now betwene the lawe and the Goſpell came Iohn, which had an office that was meane and of affinitie to them both. For though when he called Chriſt the lambe of God, and the ſacrifice for the cleanſing of ſinnes, he ſhewed forth the ſumme of the Goſpell: yet bycauſe he did not expreſſe that ſame incõparable ſtrẽgth and glorie, which at length appered in his reſurrection, therefore Chriſt ſayeth,

Mat. 11. 11. that he was not egal to the Apoſtles. For ſo do thoſe wordes of his meane: that though Iohn excell among the ſonnes of women, yet he that is leaſt in the kingdome of heauen, is greater than he. Bycauſe he doeth not there commend the perſones of men, but after he had preferred Iohn before all the Prophetes, he auaunceth the preaching of the Goſpell to the hieſt degree: which preaching we ſee in an

Iohn. 1. 23. other place ſignified by the kingdome of heauen. But whereas Iohn himſelfe doth aunſwere that he is but a voice, as though he were inferiour to the Prophetes, he doth not that for fained humilities ſake, but meaneth to teach that the propre office of the Embaſſadour was not committed to him, but that he onely executeth the office of an apparitor: as it was foreſpoken by Malachie: Beholde, I ſende Elias the prophet, before that the great and terrible day of the Lorde do come. And truely he did nothing els in the whole courſe of his miniſterie, but endeuour to get diſciples to Chriſt: as alſo Eſaie proueth, that this was enioyned him from God. And in this ſenſe Chriſt is called a candell burning and ſhining, bycauſe the broade day had not yet appeared. And yet this is no let, but that he may be reckened among the publiſhers of the Goſpel, like as he vſed the ſame Baptiſme, which was afterwarde deliuered to the Apoſtles. But that which he beganne, was not fulfilled but by the Apoſtles, with free proceding, after that Chriſt was taken vp from them into the heauenly glorie.

Iohn.5. 35.

The x. Chapter.

Of the likeneſſe of the olde and newe Teſtament.

BY the thinges aforſaid it may nowe appeare euidently, that all the men whome from the beginning of the worlde God adopted into the eſtate of his people, were with the ſame lawe, and with the bonde of the ſame doctrine, which nowe remaineth in force among vs, bound in conuenant to him. But bycauſe it is of no ſmall importance that this point be well eſtabliſhed, I will adioyne vnto it for an addition, ſith the fathers were partakers of all one inheritance with vs, and hoped for all one ſaluation by the grace of al one Mediatour, how farre their eſtate differed from oures in this fellowſhip. But although the teſtimonies that we haue gathered out of the lawe and the Prophets for proofe therof, do make it plaine that there was neuer any other rule of religion and godlineſſe in the people of God: yet bycauſe in writers there are oftentimes many thinges ſpoken of the difference of the olde and new Teſtament, that may make the reader that is not of very ſharp iudgement to be in doubt: therefore we ſhall rightfully apoint one peculiar place for the better and more exact diſcuſſing of this matter: Yea and that thing alſo, which otherwiſe ſhoulde haue bene very profitable for vs, is nowe made neceſſarie by that monſtruous loſel Seruettus, and by diuerſe other mad men of the ſect of Anabaptiſtes, which haue no other opinion of the people of Iſraell, than as of a hearde of ſwine: which they fondely faine to haue bene fatted vp by the Lorde here in this earth, without any hope of heauenly immortalitie. Therefore that we may keepe away this peſtilent errour from godly mindes, and alſo to plucke out of them all doubtes which are wont byandby to ariſe vpon hearing mention of the diuerſitie betwene the olde and newe Teſtament: let vs by the way looke, what they haue in them like, and what vnlike one to the other: what couenant the Lorde made with the Israelites in the olde time before the cõming of Christ, and what couenant he hath nowe made with vs sins Christ hath bene openly shewed.

2 And both these pointes may be made plaine with one worde. The couenãt of all the fathers so differeth nothing from ours in substance and in the matter it selfe, that it is altogether one and the selfe same: but the ministration is diuers. But bycause of so great shortnesse no man were able to attaine a certaine vnderstanding, we must needes proceede on with a longer declaration if we meane to profit any thing at all. But in shewing how they are like or rather all one, it shalbe superfluous to discourse againe of new vpõ all the speciall particulars that haue already bene declared: and it shalbe out of season to mingle those thinges together that remaine yet to be spoken in other places. Here we must chiefly rest vpon three principall pointes: First, that we holde, that carnall wealth and felicitie was not the marke apointed to the Iewes to aspire vnto, but that they were by adoption chosen vnto the hope of immortalitie: and that the truth of this adoption was certainly assured vnto them both by oracles, and by the lawe, & by the prophecies. Secondarily, that the couenant whereby they were ioyned to the Lord, was vpholden not by any merites of theires, but by the onely mercie of God that called them. Thirdly, that they both had and knew Christ the mediatour, by whome they shoulde both be ioyned to God and enioie his promises. Of which pointes, bycause the second paraduẽture is not yet sufficiẽtly knowen, it shall in place apointed for it be declared at large. For we shall confirme by many and cleere testimonies of the Prophetes, that it was of his owne meere goodnesse and tender fauour, what so euer good the Lord at any time did, and promised to the people of Israell. The third also hath already had here and there some plaine declarations of it, and we haue not left the first altogether vntouched.

3 Therefore in setting out of this point, bycause it most specially belongeth to this present matter, and for that they make vs most controuersie about it, we will emploie the more earnest trauaile: but yet so that if there wante yet any thing of the explication of the other, it may be by the way supplied, or in conuenient place be added. Truely
Rom. 1. 2. the Apostle taketh away all doubt of them all, when he saith, that God the Father long before by the Prophetes in the holy Scriptures promised the Gospell, which he afterwarde published according to
Rom. 3. 21. the time apointed. Againe, that the righteousnesse of faith which is taught by the Gospell it selfe, hath witnesse of the lawe and the Prophetes.

phetes. For the Goſpell doth not holde the heartes of men in the ioy of this preſent life, but lifteth them vp to the hope of immortalitie: doth not faſten them to earthly delites, but preaching to them a hope layed vp in heauen, doth in a manner tranſport them thether. For thus he defineth in an other place. Sins that ye beleeued the Goſpell, ye are ſealed vp with the holy Spirite of promiſe, which is the earneſt of our inheritaunce, for the redemption of the poſſeſſion purchaced. Eph. 1. 13. Againe, we haue heard of your faith in Chriſt Ieſu, and of your charitie towarde the holy ones, for the hopes ſake that is layed vp for you in heauē, wherof ye haue heard by the true ſpeech of the Goſpel. Col. 1. 4. Againe: He hath called vs by the Goſpel to the partaking of the glorie of our lorde Ieſus Chriſt. Wherefore it is called, both the worde of ſaluation, and the power of God to ſaue the faithful, and the kingdome of heauen. Now if the doctrine of the Goſpell be ſpirituall, and openeth the entrie to the poſſeſſiō of an incorruptible life: let vs not thinke that they to whome it was promiſed and declared, did paſſe ouer and neglect the care of their ſoule, & lie dully like beaſtes in ſeeking pleaſures of the body. Neither let any man here cauill that the promiſes which are ſealed in the law and the Prophetes, cōcerning the Goſpel, were ordeined for the new people. For within a little after that which he ſpake of the Goſpell promiſed in the lawe, he addeth, that all the thinges that the law conteineth, are without doubt properly directed to them that are vnder the lawe. I graunt in deede it is in an other argument. But he was not ſo forgetfull, that when he had ones ſaid that all the thinges which the lawe conteineth belong to the Iewes, he did not remember what in a fewe verſes before he had affirmed of the Goſpell promiſed in the lawe. Wherefore the Apoſtle ſheweth moſt plainly, that the old Teſtamēt chiefly tended to the life to come, when he ſaith, that vnder it are conteined the promiſes of the Goſpell. 1. Theſſ. 2. 14. Rom. 3. 19.

4 By the ſame reaſon followeth, both that it ſtoode vpon the free mercie of God, and alſo was confirmed by the meane of Chriſt. For the very preaching of the Goſpell pronounceth no other thing, but that ſinners are iuſtified by the fatherly kindeneſſe of God, without their owne deſeruing: and the whole ſumme therof is fulfilled in Chriſt. Who then dare make the Iewes without Chriſt, with whome we heare that the couenant of the Goſpell was made, whereof Chriſt is the only foundation? Who dare make them ſtrangers from the benefite of free ſaluation, to whome we heare that the doctrine of the righteouſneſſe of faith was miniſtred? But, that we diſpute not longe of an euidēt matter, we haue a notable ſentence of the Lord. Abrahā reioyſed that he might ſee my day, he ſawe it and was glad. And the Iohn. 8. 56.

same thing whiche Christ there testifieth of Abraham, the Apostle sheweth that it was vniuersall in the faithfull people, when he saith, Heb. 13. 8. that Christ abideth, yesterday, this day, and for euer. For he speaketh not there only of the eternal godhed of Christ, but also of his power, which was continually opened to the faithfull. Wherefore both the Luke 1. 54. and 72. blessed Virgin and Zacharie in their songes, do say, that the saluation reueled in Christ, is the performance of the promises, which God in olde time had made to Abraham and the Patriarches. If the Lorde in geuing his Christ, discharged his olde othe, it can not be said but that the ende therof was alway in Christ, and euerlasting life.

5 Yea and the Apostle doth make the Israelites egall with vs, not onely in the grace of the couenant, but also in signification of Sacramentes. For meaning by examples of punishmentes, wherewith the Scripture reciteth that they were corrected in the olde time, to make 1. Cor. 10. 1. & 11. the Corinthians afraide, that they shoulde not runne into the like offenses, he beginneth with this preface, that there is no cause why we shoulde chalenge any prerogatiue vnto our selues, to deliuer vs from the vengeance of God which they susteined, for asmuch as the Lord did not onely graunt vnto them the same benefites, but he hath gloriously set forth his grace among them with the same tokens: As if he shoulde haue sayd: If ye trust that ye be out of peril, bycause both Baptisme wherewith ye be marked, and the Supper which ye daily receyue, haue excellent promises, and in the meane time despising the goodnesse of God, ye are licētiously wanton: Know ye, that the Iewes also were not without such sacramentes, against whome yet the Lord did most seuerely put his iudgementes in execution. They were Baptized in passing ouer the Sea, and in the cloude wherewith they were defended from the burning heate of the sonne. They say, that that same passage was a carnall Baptisme, which after a certaine proportion aunswereth to our spirituall Baptisme. But if that were allowed true, the Apostles argument coulde not procede, which meaneth here to haue this taken away from the Christiās, that they thinke that they excell ỹ Iewes by the prerogatiue of Baptisme. Neither is that which byandby after followeth, subiect to this cauillation: that they did eate the same spirituall meate that we eate, and dronke the same spirituall drinke, which he expoundeth to be Christ.

6 To ouerthrow this sentence of Paule, they obiecte that which Christ saith: Your fathers did eate Manna in the wildernesse, and are Iohn. 6. dead: he that eateth my flesh, shall not die for euer. Which two places are very easily made to agree together. The Lord, bycause he then talked to hearers that sought onely to be filled with foode of their belly, belly, but cared not for the meate of the soule, tempered his talke somewhat to their capacitie, but specially he frameth the comparison of Manna and of his body according to their sense. They required that he, to gette himselfe some credite, woulde approue his power with doing some such miracle, as Moses did in the wilderneſſe, when he obteined Manna from Heauen. But in Manna they conceyued nothing but the remedie of carnall hunger, wherewith the people was then vexed: but they pearced not to that hier misterie which Paule hath respect vnto: Christ therefore, to shew how much greater a benefite they ought to looke for at his hande, than that which they reported that Moses did bestow vpon their fathers, frameth this comparison: If it were a great miracle in your opinion, and worthy to be remembred, that the Lord by Moses ministred foode from Heauen to his people, to susteine them for a small time, that they shoulde not perish for hunger in the wilderneſſe: gather hereby how much more excellent is the meate that geueth immortalitie. We see why the Lord passed ouer that thing which was principall in Manna, and spake only of the baseſt profit of it: euen bycause the Iewes as it were of purpose to reproche him, did caste Moses in his teeth, which succored the neceſſitie of the people with remedie of Manna: he aunswered that he is the minister of a much hier grace, in cõparison wherof, the carnall feding of the people, which alone they so much esteemed, ought of righte to be nothing regarded. But Paule, bycause he knew that the Lorde when he rained Manna from heauen, did not onely poure it downe for the feding of their belly, but also did distribute it for a spirituall mysterie, to be a figure of the spirituall quickning that is had in Christ, did not neglect that parte that was most worthy of cõsideration. Wherfore it certainely and clerely followeth, that the same promises of eternall and heuenly life, which now the Lorde vouchesaueth to graunt vnto vs, were not only cõmunicated vnto the Iewes, but also sealed with very spirituall Sacramentes. Of which matter Augustine disputeth largely against Faustus the Manichee.

7 But if the readers had rather to haue testimonies alledged vnto them out of the lawe and the Prophetes, whereby they may perceiue that the spirituall couenant was common also to the fathers, as we heare by Christ and the Apostles: I will also follow that desire, and so much the more willingly, bycause by that meane the aduersaries shalbe more surely conuinced, so that they shall haue afterward no way to dally. And I will beginne at that proofe, which although I knowe that the Anabaptistes pride will thinke very fonde and in a manner to be laughed at, yet shall much auaile with such readers as are willing to learne and haue their ſounde wit. And I take it as a principle confeſſed, that there is ſuch effectuall force of life in the worde of God, that whome ſo euer God voucheſaueth to be partakers therof, it quickeneth their ſoules. For this ſaying of Peter hath alway ben of force, that it is the incorruptible ſeede which abideth for euer, as he alſo gathereth out of the wordes of Eſaie. Nowe ſith God in the olde time bounde the Iewes vnto him with this holy bonde, it is no doubt that he did alſo ſeuer them into the hope of eternall life. For when I ſay they embraced the worde, which ſhoulde ioine them nier to God, I take it for the maner of communicating it: not that general maner, which is poured abrode throughout the heauen and earth and all the creatures of the worlde, which although it do quicken all thinges, euery one after the proportion of their nature, yet it doth not deliuer them from neceſſitie of corruption: but I ſpeake of this ſpeciall maner, whereby the ſoules of the godly are both lightened vnto the knowledge of God, and in a maner coupled to him. By this enlightening of the worde, ſith Adam, Abel, Noe, Abraham, and the other fathers cleaued vnto God, I ſay that it is not doubtefull that they had an entrie into the immortall kingdome of God. For it was a ſounde partaking of God, which can not be without the benefit of eternall life.

8 But if this ſeeme ſomewhat entangled: go to, let vs come to the very forme of the couenant, which ſhal not only ſatisfie ſobre wittes, but alſo ſhall ſufficiently conuince their ignorance that bende themſelues to ſpeake againſt it. For God did alway thus couenant with his ſeruantes: I will be to you a God, and ye ſhalbe to me a people. In which wordes the Prophetes themſelues are wont to expounde, that both life and ſaluation, and the whole ſumme of bleſſedneſſe is comprehended. For Dauid doth not without cauſe often pronounce, that bleſſed is the people, whoſe God is the lorde: bleſſed is the nation, which he hath choſen to be his inheritance: and that not for earthly felicities ſake, but bycauſe he deliuereth them from death, he preſerueth them for euer, and continually ſheweth them eternall mercie, whome he hath taken to his people: as it is in the other Prophetes, Thou art our God, we ſhall not die: The Lorde is our king, our lawemaker, he ſhall ſaue vs. Bleſſed art thou, O Iſraell, bycauſe thou art ſaued in the lorde God. But, not to labour ouermuch in a thing needeleſſe, this admonition is founde eche where in the Prophetes, that we ſhall wante nothing towarde all aboundance of good thinges, and aſſurance of ſaluation, ſo that the Lorde be our God. And rightfully: For if his face ſo ſone as it beginneth to ſhine, is a moſt preſent pledge of ſaluation, to what man ſhall he openly ſhew himſelfe for his God, but that he will alſo open to him his treaſure of ſaluation? For he is our God with this condition, to dwell in the middeſt of vs: as he teſtified by Moſes. But ſuch preſence can not be obteined, but that life muſt be alſo together had in poſſeſſion with it. And although there were no more expreſſed, yet had they a promiſe of ſpirituall life plaine enough in theſe wordes: I am your God. For he did not declare that he woulde be a God vnto their bodies alone, but principally to their ſoules. But ſoules vnleſſe they be ioyned to God by righteouſneſſe remaine eſtranged from him in death. But on the other ſide, let that ioyning be preſent, it ſhall bring euerlaſting ſaluation with it. Leu. 26. 12. Exo. 6. 7.

9 Beſide that, he did not onely teſtifie that he was to them their God, but he alſo promiſed that he woulde be ſo all way: to the ende that their hope not contented with preſent benefites, ſhoulde be extended to eternitie. And many ſayinges do ſhewe, that the ſpeaking in the future time meant ſo much, as where the faithfull not onely in preſent euels, but alſo for the time to come, doe confort them ſelues with this, that God will neuer faile them. Now as concerning the ſeconde part of the promiſe, he yet more plainely aſſured them of the bleſſing of God to be prolonged vnto them beyond the boundes of this life, in ſayeng: I will be the God of your ſeede after you. For if he minded to declare his good will towarde them being dead, in doing good to their poſteritie, much more woulde his fauour not faile towarde themſelues. For God is not like vnto menne, which do therefore carry their loue to their frendes children, bycauſe their power is interrupted by death, ſo that they can not emploie their frendely doinges vpon them to whome they did beare good will. But God, whoſe bountifulneſſe is not hindered by death, taketh not away from the very dead the frute of ths mercie, which for their ſakes he poureth out into a thouſand generations. Therefore the Lordes will was by a notable proofe to ſette forth vnto them the greatneſſe and flowing plentie of his goodneſſe which they ſhoulde feele after death, when he deſcribed it to be ſuch as ſhoulde flow ouer into all their poſteritie. And the truth of this promiſe the Lorde did then ſeale, and as it were brought forth the fulfilling of it, when he named himſelfe the God of Abraham, Iſaac and Iacob, long after their death. For, what? had it not been a fonde naming, if they had vtterly periſhed? For then had it ben all one, as if he had ſaid, I am the God of them that are not. Wherefore the Euangeliſtes reherſe, that with this one argument the Sadduces were ſo driuen to a ſtreight, that they coulde not denie that Moſes did teſtifie the reſurrection of the dead, for that Gen. 17 7. Exo. 20. 6. Exo. 3. 6. Mat. 22 23. Luc. 20. 32.

Deu.33.3 they had learned by Moſes, that all the Saintes were in his hande. Wherupō it was eaſy to gather, that they are not deſtroyed by death, whome he that is the iudge of life and death had receyued in to his ſauegard, cuſtodie, and protection.

10 Now (which is the principal point wherevpon this controuerſie hangeth) let vs looke, whether the faithful themſelues haue not ben ſo inſtructed of the Lord, that they perceyued that they ſhoulde haue a better life els where, & ſo neglecting this life, had an eie to the other. Firſt the ſtate of life that was enioyned them by God, was a cōtinuall exerciſe, whereby they might be put in minde, that they were the moſt miſerable of all men, if their happineſſe were only in this life. Gen.3.17. Adam, moſt vnhappy, euen with onely remembrance of the happineſſe that he had loſt, did with painefull labours hardely ſuſteine his nedineſſe, and that he ſhoulde not be preſſed with the curſe of God, in the onely labours of his handes, euen there receyued he extreme ſorrowe of that which remained for him to be his comfort. Of his two ſonnes, the one was taken away by the wicked ſlaughter of his Gen.4.8. brother: the other he had lefte aliue, whoſe ſight he worthily deteſted and abhorred. Abel cruelly murthered in the very floure of his age, became an example of the wretchedneſſe of men. Noe, while the Gen.6.22. whole worlde careleſly liued in pleaſure, ſpent a good part of his age with great werineſſe in bilding the Arke. This that he eſcaped death, came to paſſe by his greater troubles, than if he ſhoulde haue died a Gen.9.24. hundred deathes. For byſide that the Arke was to him as a graue for tenne monethes, there is nothing more vnpleaſant than to be holden ſo longe in manner drowned in dong of beaſtes. When he had paſſed ouer ſo great difficulties, he fell into newe matter of griefe, he ſawe him ſelfe ſcorned of his owne ſonne, and was compelled with his owne mouth to curſe him, whome by the great benefit of God he had receyued ſafe from the generall floode.

Gen.12.4. 11 Abraham in deede may be one alone to be compared with a hundred thouſand, if we conſider his faith, which is ſet forth vnto vs for the beſt rule of beleuing, of whoſe kinred we muſt be accompted, that we may be the children of God. But what more abſurditie is there, than Abraham to be the father of all the faithfull, and not to poſſeſſe ſo much as the ſmaleſt corner amōg them? but he can not be throwen downe out of the number, no not from the moſt honorable degree, but that the whole church muſt be deſtroyed. Now as touching the experiēces of his life: When he was firſt called by the commaundement of God, he was plucked away from his countrey, his parentes and his frendes, in whome men thinke to be the chiefe ſweete-

nesse of life: euen as if God of determined purpose meant to spoyle him of all the pleasures of life. So soone as he came into the lande where he was commaunded to dwell, he was driuen out from thense with famine. Thither he fled for succour, where to saue himselfe, he was compelled to deliuer out his wife to be abused, which we knowe not whether it were not more bitter to him thā many deathes. Whē he was returned into the lande of his owne dwelling, he was driuen out againe from thense with famine. What a felicitie is this, to dwell in that lande, wherin a man must so oft be hungry, yea die for famine if he runne not away? And therewithall he was brought to that necessitie with Abimelech, that he must needes redeeme his life with the losse of his wife, while many yeares long he wandred vncertainely hither and thither, he was compelled by the continuall brawlinges of his seruantes to put away his nephew, whome he loued as his owne sonne. Which departing without doubt he dyd no otherwise take, than if he had suffred the cutting of one of his limmes. A litle after, he heard that he was carried away captiue by his enemies. Whether so euer he went, he founde neighbours outrageously barbarous, which woulde not suffer him so much as to drinke water out of the welles that himselfe had digged with great labour. For he would not haue redeemed the vse of them at the hand of king Gerar, if he had not first ben forbidden. Nowe when he came to olde age, he saw the thing which is the most vnpleasant & bitter that that age hath, himselfe punished with hauing no children, till beside all hope he begate Ismaell, whose birth yet he payed dere for, when he was weried with the brawling of Sara, as if he in mainteining the stubbornnesse of his bondewoman, were himselfe the cause of the trouble of his household. At length Isaac was borne, but with this condition that his first begotten Ismaell must, as forsaken, be cruelly caste out of doores. When only Isaac was left, in whome the weryed age of the silly good man might rest, within a litle after he was commaunded to kill him. What can mans wit deuise more miserable, than the father to be made the butcher of his owne sonne? If Isaac had dyed of any sickenesse, who woulde not haue thought the olde man most miserable, that had a sonne geuen him in mockeage, for whome his griefe of want of children should be doubled? If he had ben slaine by some straunger, the vnhappinesse of the thing would haue much encreased his miserie. But this passeth all examples of miserie, to haue him slaine with his fathers owne hand. Finally, he was in all the whole course of his life so tossed and vexed, as if a man would in a table paint out an example of a miserable life, he coulde finde none more fit, than this of Abraham. Gen. 13 11.

And let noe man obiect that he was not altogether vnhappy, for that he at length prosperously escaped from so many and so great tempestes. For we can not say that he liueth a blessed life, which for a long space together painefully weareth out of infinite troubles, but him that without feeling of euils, quietly enioyeth present good thinges.

12 Isaac that was lesse troubled with euilles, yet scarce euer toke any tast of sweetenesse. He also felt the same vexations, that do not suffer a manne to be blessed in the earth. Famine chaced him out of
Gen. 26 35. the lande of Chanaan: he had his wife violently plucked away from his bosome: his neighbours oft troubled him, and by all meanes oppressed him, so that he was faine to striue for his water: at home in
Gen. 28 1. his owne house, he suffred much troublesomnesse by his childrens wiues, he was greeued with disagreementes of his sonnes, and coulde not remedie that so great a mischiefe, but by the banishment of him whome he had blessed. But as for Iacob, he is nothing els but a no-

Gen. 29 20. he was fled from his parentes and his natiue countrey, beside that it was a greuous thing to liue in banishment, he was nothing more kyndly or gently receiued of his vncle Laban. Thé it sufficed not that he had serued seuen yeare a hard and cruell seruice, but that also he must be by guile defrauded of his wife. For an other wiues sake he was driuen into new seruice, where he was all the day fried with heate of the sunne, and all the night lay waking and pained with frost and cold, as himselfe complained. While he by the space of twentie yeares suffred so hard a life, he was dayly vexed with newe iniuries of his
Gen. 31. 23. father in lawe. Neither was he quiet in his owne house, seyng it diuided and in a maner scattered abrode with the hatred, brawling and enuie of his wiues. When he was commaunded to returne into his countrey, he was compelled to watche an auantage to take his iourney, much like a shamefull running away: and yet coulde he not so escape the vniust dealing of his father in lawe, but was faine to suffer his reproches and rebukes in the middes of his iourney. Then fell he
Gen. 32 11. into a much more cruell destresse. For when he came nere to his brother, he had so many deathes before his eyes, as might be prepared by a cruell man and a bent enemie. So was he aboue measure tormented and as it were drawen in sonder with terrible feares, so long as he looked for his brothers cómyng: when he came ones in his sight, he
Gen. 35 16. fell down as halfe dead at his feete, vntil he foũd him more fauorable than he durst haue hoped. Beside that, at his first entrie into the lande, he loſt Rachel his derely beloued wife. Afterwarde he heard worde that the ſonne which he had by her, and whome therefore he loued aboue the reſte, was torne with wilde beaſtes: by whoſe death howe great griefe he conceyued, he himſelfe declared in this, that after long weping he obſtinately ſtopped vp all wayes whereby comfort might come to him, leauing himſelfe nothing, but to goe downe to his ſonne wayling into the graue. In the meane time howe great cauſes of griefe, wayting and werineſſe were the rauiſhment and deflouring of his daughter, and the boldeneſſe of his ſonnes in reuenging it, which not onely made him to be abhorred in ſight of all the inhabitantes of that countrey, but alſo procured him moſte preſent perill of vtter deſtruction? Then followed that horrible outragious offenſe of Ruben his firſt begotten ſonne, which was ſuch as their coulde not chaunce a more greuous. For whereas the defiling of a mans wife is reckned among the hyeſt ill fortunes: what is to be ſaide of it, when that wickedneſſe is committed by a mans owne ſonne? Within a litle while after, his houſe is ſpotted with an other vnnaturall adulterie: ſo that ſo many ſhames might well breake a hearte, that otherwiſe were moſt conſtant and vnable to be vanquiſhed with calamities. Nere before the ende of his life, while he ſought to prouide ſuccour for the famine of himſelfe and other, he has ſtriken with tidynges of a newe misfortune, vnderſtanding that an other of his ſonnes was kept in priſon, for recouering of whome he was compelled to leaue to the reſt Beniamin his onely dearling. Who can thinke, that in ſuch a heape of miſcheues he had any one moment geuen him ſafely to take breath in? And therefore he himſelfe the beſte witneſſe of himſelfe, affirmed to Pharao, that his dayes were ſhorte and euill vpon the earth. Nowe truely he that declareth that he hath paſſed his life by continuall miſeries, denieth that he felt that proſpetitie which the Lorde had promiſed him. Therefore either Iacob did vnkindely and vnthankefully weye the grace of God, or he truely profeſſed that he had ben miſerable vpon the earth. If his affirmation were true, then it followeth, that he had not his hope faſtened vpon earthly thinges.

13 If theſe holy fathers loked for (as vndoubtedly they did) a bleſſed life at the hande of God, truely they both thought and ſaw it to be an other maner of bleſſedneſſe, than the bleſſedneſſe of earthly life. Which thing the Apoſtle alſo doth ſhewe excellently well: Abraham (ſaith he) direct by faith in the lande of promiſe as in a ſtrange lande, dwelling in tentes with Iſaac and Iacob parteners with him of the ſame inheritaunce. For they loked for a citie ſet vpon a good foundation, the maker and bilder wherof is God. All theſe are dead in faith, not receyuing the thinges promiſed, but loking at them a farre of, and beleuing and confeſſing that they were geſtes and ſtrangers vpon the land. Whereby they declare that they ſought for a countrie. and if they had ben moued with deſire of that lande from whenſe they came, they had power to returne. But they ſought for a better, that is the heauenly countrie. Wherefore God is not aſhamed to be called their God, for aſmuche as he hath prepared them a citie. For they had bene duller than blockes, to followe promiſes ſo earneſtly, wherof there appered no hope in earth, vnleſſe they had loked for the fulfilling of them els where. But this he chiefely enforceth, and that not without good reaſon, that they called this life a iourney frō home, euen as Moſes reporteth. From if they were ſtrangers and foreners in the lande of Chanaan, where is the Lordes promiſe whereby they were made heires of it? He ſheweth plainely therefore, that the Lordes promiſe, cōcerning the poſſeſſiō therof, had a further reſpect. Wherefore they purchaced not one foote in the lande of Chanaan, but for burial, wherby they teſtified, that they did not hope that they ſhould receiue the frute of the promiſe till after death. And that is the cauſe why Iacob ſo much eſteemed to be buried there, that he compelled his ſonne Ioſeph to promiſe it him, and to ſweare to performe it: and why Ioſeph willed his bones, certaine ages after, whē they were long before fallen into powder, to be remoued thither.

Gen. 47 9.

Gen. 47 29. and 30.

Gen. 50 25.

14 Finally, it appeareth plainely, that in all the trauailes of this life they had alway ſet before them the bleſſednes of the life to come. For to what purpoſe ſhoulde Iacob haue ſo much deſired, and with ſo great daunger ſought the preeminence of the firſt begotten, which ſhould procure him nothing but baniſhment, and in a maner to be caſt of from beyng his childe: but no good at all, vnleſſe he had reſpect to a hyer bleſſing? And he declared, that he had this meaning by the wordes which he ſpake among his laſt breathinges: Lorde, I will loke for thy ſaluation. What ſaluation coulde he haue loked for, when he ſawe that he laie ready to geue vp the ghoſt, vnleſſe he had ſeene in death the beginning of a newe life? But what diſpute we of the holy ones and children of God, when euen he was not without a taſt of ſuch vnderſtanding, which otherwiſe was enemie to the truthe? For what meant Balaam when he ſaid: Let my ſoule die the death of the righteous, and let my laſte times be like vnto theires? but that he meante the ſame thing that Dauid afterwarde vttered, that the death of the Saintes is precious in the ſight of the Lorde, but the death of the wicked, is very euill? If the furtheſt bounde and ende were in death, there could in it be noted no difference betwene the righteous and vnrighteous, they differ one from the other by the diuersity of the estates, that after death shall befall to them both.

15 We are not yet come beyonde Moses: Which (as these men say) had no other office, but to perswade the carnal people to worship God by the fruitefullnesse of the ground & plenty of all thinges. And yet (vnlesse a man will flee the light that willingly offereth it selfe) there is already a plaine declaration of the spirituall couenant. But if we come downe to the Prophetes, there with most full brightnesse both the life euerlasting and the kingdome of Christ do vtter themselues. And first of all Dauid, which as he was before ỹ other in time, so accordinge to the order of Gods distribution, he shewed the heauenly misteries in shadowes more darkely than the rest, yet with what plainnesse and certainty directeth he all his sayings to that end? How he esteemed the earthly dwelling, this sentence testifieth: I am here a forener & stranger, as all my fathers were. Euery liuing man is vanity, euery one walketh about as a shadow. But now what is my exspectation, Lord? euen to thee is my hope. Truely he that confessing that in the earth there is nothinge sounde or stedfast, keepeth still a stedfastnes of hope in God, cõsidereth his felicity laied vp in an other place. To such consideration is he wont to call all the faithfull, so oft as he meaneth to comfort them truely. For in an other place, after he had spoken of the shortnesse, and the transitorie and vanishing image of mans life, he addeth: but the mercy of the Lord is for euer vpon them that feare him. Like whereunto is that which is in the hundred and second Psalme. At the beginning Lord thou didst lay the foundation of the earth, and the heauens are the workes of thy handes. They shal perish, but thou abidest: they shall waxe olde like a garment, and thou shalt change them as apparell, but thou remaine the selfe same, and thy yeares shall not faile: the sonnes of thy seruauntes shall dwell, and thy posterity shalbe stablished before thee. If the Godly ceasse not for the decay of heauen & earth to be stablished before the Lord, it followeth, that their saluation is ioyned with the eternity of God. But that hope can not stand at all, vnlesse it rest vpon the promise that is set forth in Esay: The heauens (sayth the Lord) shall vanish away like smoke, the earth shalbe worne out like a garment, & the inhabitantes of it shall perish like those thinges. But my saluation shalbe for euer, & my righteousnes shall not faile: where euerlastingnes is giuẽ to righteousnes & saluation, not in respect ỹ they remaine with God, but in respect that they are felt of men.

16 Neither may we otherwise take those thinges, that he commonly speaketh of the prosperous successe of the faithfull, but to apply thē to the open shewing of the heauenly glory. As these sayings:

Psa. 112 6. in eternall remembrance. Againe: The Lord shall redeeme the soules Psa. 34. 23. of his seruantes. For the Lord oftentimes leaueth his seruantes to the lust of the wicked, not only to be vexed, but also to be torne in peeces & destroied: he suffereth the good to lye languishing in darkenesse & filth, while the wicked do in a manner shine among the starres. And he doth not so chere them with ỹ brightnes of his cōtenance, that they enioy long cōtinuing gladnes. Wherfore euen he also hideth not, that if the faithfull fasten their eyes vpon the present state of thinges, they shalbe striken with a sore tēptation, as though there were no fauour or reward of innocency with God. So much doth wickednes for the most part prosper & florish, while the company of the Godly is oppressed with shame, pouerty, contempt & all kindes of crosses. It wan-
Psa. 73. 17. ted but litle (sayth he) that my foote slipped not, & my steppes fell not abroade, while the fortune of fooles grieueth me, and while I see the prosperity of ỹ wicked. At length after rehearsall of it he concludeth. I bent my thought, if I could vnderstand these thinges. But it is a torment to my spirit, till I enter into the sanctuary of the Lord, & vnderstand the last end of them.

17 Let vs therfore learne, yet by this confession of Dauid, that the holy fathers vnder the old testament were not ignorant, how seldom or neuer God doth in this worlde performe to his seruauntes those things that he promiseth them, & that therefore they did lift vp their mindes to Gods sanctuary, wherin they had ỹ laied vp in store, which appeareth not in ỹ shadow of this present life. That was ỹ last iudgement of God, which when they coulde not see with eyes, they were content to vnderstand by faith. Trusting vpon which affiance, whatsoeuer happened in the world, yet they douted not a time would once come, when the promises of God should be fulfilled. As these sayings do witnesse, I will behold the face of God in righteousnesse: I will be

They shall still beare frute, they shall be fat and greene in their olde age. When he had sayd a litle before: How deepe are thy thoughtes. O Lord, while the wicked do florish, they bud out like an herbe, that they may perish for euer. Where is that faire shew and beauty of the faithfull, but when the face of this worlde shall be turned inward by disclosing of the kingdom of God? When they turned their eyes to that eternity, they despised the hardnesse enduring but a moment of presēt miseries, & boldly burst foorth into these words: Thou shalt not suffer for euer the righteous to die, but thou shalt throw downe the wicked headlong into ỹ pit of destruction. Where as in this world the pit of eternall destruction that may swallow vp the wicked? Amōg whose felicities, this is also reckened in an other place, that they close vp the end of their life in a momēt, without long languishing. Where is that so great stedfastnesse of the holy ones, whom Dauid himselfe ech where complaineth, not only to be shaken with trouble, but also to be oppressed, and vtterly broken in peeces? Forsooth, he did set before his eyes, not what the altering course of the world beareth, which is vnstable & more vnstedfast than the ebbinge and flowing of tides, but what the Lord will do, when he shall one day sitte for the eternall settling of heauen and earth. As in an other place he excellently wel describeth it: The fooliſh do stay vpon their welthines, & are proude becauſe of their great riches. And yet no mā, though he florish in neuer so great dignity, can redeeme his brother from death, no man can pay to God the price of his ransome, but whereas they see that both the wise do die, and that the wicked also and fooles do perish & leaue their riches to strangers, yet they thinke that their houses shall abide for euer, and their dwellings to the ende of ages, and they aduaunce their names vpon the earth, but man shall not continue in honor: he shalbe like to the beastes that die. This imagination of theirs is extremest folly, which yet their posterity do greedily follow. They shall be placed like a flocke in Hell, and death shall haue rule ouer them. When the light ariseth, the vpright shall haue dominion ouer them, the beauty of them shall perish, Hell is their dwelling house. First this laughinge to scorne of the fooliſh, for that they rest on the slippery and rolling good things of the worlde, doth shew that the wise must seeke a farre other felicity. But there he more euidently discloseth the mistery of the resurrection, where after the destruction & extinguishment of them, he erecteth the kingdom of the Godly. For what rising of light (I pray you) shal we call that, but the reueeling of the new life which followeth the end of this presēt life.

How did they determine afflictions to end in a moment, that were in affliction in a manner their life long? where did they espie so long an enduring of Gods kindenesse, whereof they scarsely felt any litle tast? If they had sticked fast vpon the earth, they coulde haue founde no such thing, but because they looked vpon heauen, they acknowledged that it is but a moment of time, while the Lord exercise his holy ones by the crosse, but that his mercies, wherin they are gathered together, do last the worldes age. Againe, they did foresee the eternall and neuer endinge destruction of the vngodly, which were as

The Lorde shall keepe the feete of the holy, and the wicked shall be put to silence in darkenesse. Which do declare that they wel knew, that howsoeuer the holy were diuersly caried about, yet their last end is life and saluation: and that the prosperity of the wicked is a pleasaunt way, whereby they by litle and litle slide forward into the gulfe of death. Therefore they called the death of such, the destruction of
Ere. 28. 10. & 31 the vncircumcised, as of them from whom the hope of the resurrePs. 69. 26. ction was cut away. Wherefore Dauid could not deuise a more greeuous curse than this: Let them be blotted out of the booke of life, & not be written with the righteous.

19 But aboue all other, notable is that saying of Iob: I know that my redemer liueth, & in the last day I shal rise againe out of the earth, and in my flesh I shall see God my sauiour: This hope is layed vp in my bosome. Some that haue a minde to make a shew of their sharpe wit, do cauill that this is not to be vnderstanded of the last resurrection, but of the first day that Iob looked to haue God more gentle to
Iob. 19. 25. him, which although we graunt them in parte, yet shall we enforce them to confesse whether they will or no, that Iob coulde not haue come to that largenes of hope, if he had rested his thought vpon the earth. Therefore we must needes confesse, that he lifted vp his eyes to the immortality to come, which saw, that his redeemer would be present with him euen lying in his graue. For to them that thinke only of this present life, death is their vttermost desperation: which very Iob. 13. 15. death could not cut of Iobs hope. Yea though he kill me (said he) neuertheless I will still hope in him. And let no trifler here carpe against me and say, that these were the sayinges but of a few, whereby is not

proued that such doctrine was among the Iewes. For I will byandby answere him, that these few did not in these sayinges vtter any secret wisedom, whereunto only certaine excellent wittes were seuerally & priuately suffered to attaine, but that as they were by the holy Ghost appointed teachers of the people, so they openly published those misteries of God that were to be vniuersally learned, and ought to be the principles of the common religion among the people. Therfore whē we heare the publike oracles of the holy Ghost, wherin he spake of the spirituall life so clearly and plainly in the Church of the Iewes, it were a point of vntolerable stubbornnesse to send them away onely to the fleshly couenant, wherein is mention made of nothinge, but earth and earthly wealthinesse.

20 If I come downe to the later Prophetes, there we may freely walke as in our owne fielde. For if it were not hard for vs to get the vpper hande in Dauid, Iob, and Samuel, here it shall be much more easie. For God kept this distribution and order in disposing the couenant of his mercy, that how much the nearer it drew on in processe of time to ỹ ful performance thereof, with so much greater encreasementes of reuelation he did day by day more brightly shew it. Therfore at the beginninge when the first promise of saluation was made vnto Adam, there glistered out but as it were smale sparkles of it. After, hauinge more added vnto it, a greater largenesse of light began to be put forth: which from thense forth brake out more and more, and displaied her brightnesse farther abroade, till at length all the cloudes were driuen away, and Christ the sonne of righteousnesse fully lightned the whole world. We neede not therefore to feare that we faile of testimonies of the Prophetes, if we seeke them to proue our cause, but becausse I see that there will arise a huge deale of matter, whereupon I shoulde be constrained of necessity to tary longer then the proportion of my purpose may beare, for it woulde so grow to a worke of a great volume, and also becausse I haue already, by those thinges that I haue sayd before, made plaine the way, euen for a reader of meane capacity, so as he may go forward without stūblinge: therefore I will at this present abstaine from longe tediousnesse: which to do is no lesse necessary: but giuinge the readers warning before hande, that they remember to opē their owne way with that key that we haue first giuen them in their hande. That is, that so oft as the Prophetes speake of the blessednesse of the faithful people, whereof scarsely the least steppes are seene in this present life, they may resorte to this distinction: that the Prophetes, the better to expresse the goodnesse of God, did as in a shadow expresse it to the people by temporall benefites, as by certaine rough drawinge of the portraiture therof: but that the perfect image, that they haue painted therof, was such as might rauish mens mindes out of the earth, & out of the elements of this worlde, and of the age that shall perish, and of necessity raise it vp to the cõsidering of the felicity of the life that is to come and spirituall.

21 We will be content with one example. When the Israelites being caried away to Babylon, saw their scattering abroade to be like vnto death, they coulde hardly be remoued from this opinion that they thought that all was but fables that Ezechiel prophecied of their restitution: because they reckened it euen all one as if he had told them that rotten carcases shoulde be restored againe to life. The Lord to shew, that euen that same difficulty could not stop him from bringinge his benefite to effect, shewed to the Prophet in a vision a fielde full of drie bones, to the which in a moment with the onely power of his word he restored breath and liuelinesse. The vision in dede serued to correct the incredulity at that present time: but in the meane season he did put the Iewes in minde how farre the power of the Lord extended beyond the accompt of the people, which so easily quickened with his only becke, bones already rotten and scattered abroade: wherfore you shal cõpare that with an other saying of Esaie. The dead shall rise, my carcase, they shall rise againe. Awake ye and reioyse that dwell in the dust, because the deaw of the greene fielde is thy deaw, & thou shalt plucke downe the lande of the Giantes into ruine. Go my people, enter into thy tentes: shut thy dores vpon thee: hide thee a little while, till my displeasure passe ouer. For behold, the Lord shall go out of his place, to visite the iniquity of the dweller vpõ the earth against him, and the earth shall shewe forth her bloode, and shall no longer hide her slaine.

Exe. 37. 4.

Esa. 26. 19.

22 Albeit a man should do fondly, that would go about to drawe all to such a rule. For there be some places that without any couering do shew the immortality to come, that is prepared for the faithfull in the kingdome of God, of which sorte we haue recited some, and of like sorte are the most part of the rest, specially these two, the one in Esay. As a new heauen, & a new earth which I make to stande before me, so shall your seede stande, and there shalbe moneth of moneth, and Sabbat of Sabbat: all flesh shall come to worshippe before my face, saith the Lord. And they shall go out and see the deade carcases of the men that haue offended against me, that their worme shall not die, and their fier shall not be quenched. The other of Daniel. In that time shall rise vp Michael the great prince, that stãdeth for the sonnes

of his people, and there shall come a time of distresse, such as was not since nations first began to be, and then shall all thy people be saued that shall be founde wrytten in thy booke. And of those that slepe in the dust of the earth, there shall awake some to eternall life, and some to euerlasting shame.

23 Now as for prouing ỹ other two pointes that the fathers had Christ for pledge of their couenant, and that they reposed in him all their affiance of blessing, I will not trauaile therein at all, because they haue both lesse controuersie & more plainnesse. Let vs therfore boldly determine this, which by no engines of the deuil may be remoued, that the olde Testament or couenant which the Lord made with his people Israel, was not limited within the compasse of earthly things, but also conteined the promise of the spirituall and eternall life: the expectation wherof must nedes haue binimprinted in all their mindes that truely consented to the couenant. But let vs put farre away this mad and pernicious opinion, that either God did set forth in his promise to the Iewes nothing else, or that the Iewes sought nothing else but filling of their belly, delites of the flesh, florishing wealth, outward power, frutefullnesse of children, and whatsoeuer a naturall man estemeth. For at this day Christ promiseth no other kingdom of heauen to his, but where they shall rest with Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob. And Matt.8. 11.
Peter affirmed, that the Iewes of his time were heires of the grace of the Gospel, for that they were the children of the Prophets, comprehended in the couenant, which the Lord had in the olde time made with his people. And, that the same shoulde not be witnessed with wordes only, the Lord also approued it by deede. For in the very moment that he rose againe, he vouchsaued to haue many of ỹ holy men to rise againe in company with him, & made them to be seene in the City: so giuing an assured token, that whatsoeuer he did and suffered for ỹ purchasing of eternall saluation, pertaineth no lesse to the faithfull of the old testamẽt, than vnto vs. For as Peter testifieth, they were also endued with ỹ same spirit of faith, wherby we are regenerate into life. Now, when we heare that the same spirit which is in vs a certaine sparcle of immortality, wherupon it is also in an other place called the earnest of our inheritance, did likewise dwell in thẽ, how dare we take from thẽ ỹ inheritance of life? Wherby it is so much ỹ more maruell, that in the olde time the Sadduces fell to such grosseneſse of errour, that they denied both the resurrection & also the substance of soules, both which pointes they saw sealed with so cleare testimonies of Scripture. And no lesse to be marueled at, euen at this day, were the folly of all that nation in looking for the earthly kingdom of Christ, if the Scriptures had not long before declared, that they ſhould haue that puniſhment for refuſinge the Goſpell. For ſo it behoued, by the iuſt iudgement of God, to ſtrike thoſe mindes with blindenes, which in refuſing the light of heauen being offered them, did wilfully bring themſelues into darkeneſſe. Therfore they read and continually turne

The xi. Chapter.

Of the difference of the one Teſtament from the other.

WHat then? wilt thou ſay: ſhall there be no difference left betwene the olde Teſtament and the New? and to what purpoſe ſerue all thoſe places of Scripture, where they are compared one againſt the other, as things moſt contrary? I do willingly allowe thoſe differences that are rehearſed in the Scripture: but ſo that they nothinge hinder the vnity already ſtabliſhed, as it ſhalbe plaine to ſee when we ſhall haue entreated of them in order. Thoſe differences are (as farre as euer I could marke or can remember) chiefely foure in number, to the which if you liſt to adioyne the 5 I am not againſt it. I ſay and truſt to proue that they are all ſuch as rather belonge to the manner of miniſtration, than to the ſubſtance of them. And by this meane they ſhall nothing hinder, but that the promiſes of both the old and new teſtament may remayne all one and all one foundation of the ſame promiſes, Chriſt. Now the firſt difference is, that although, euen, in the old time alſo, the Lordes will was to direct the mindes of his people, and to haue them raiſed vp to the heauenly inheritance: yet, that they might be the better nouriſhed in hope thereof, he gaue it to be ſeene or rather to be taſted of, vnder earthly benefites? But now hauing reueled the grace of the life to come, by the Goſpell, he more clearly and plainely directeth our mindes the ſtreight way to the meditation thereof, leauing the inferiour maner of exerciſing which he vſed with the Iſraelites. They that marke not this purpoſe of God, do not thinke that the olde people climbed any hier than to ỹ good things promiſed to ỹ body. They ſo often heare the lande of Chanaan named, as the excellent, or rather only reward for the kepers of Gods law. They heare that God threatneth nothing more ſeuerely to the tranſgreſſors of the ſame law, than

that

that they ſhalbe driuen out of the poſſeſſion of the ſame land,& ſcattered abroade into ſtrange regions. They ſee that in a manner to this effect come all the bleſſings & curſes that are pronounced by Moſes. Hereby they do vndoutedly determine, that the Iewes not for their owne ſakes,but for others,were ſeuered frō other nations:that is,that the Church of Chriſt might haue an image,in whoſe outward forme ſhe might ſee examples of ſpirituall things.But ſith the Scripture doth ſometimes ſhew, that God himſelfe directed all the earthly benefites that he did for them to this end, that ſo he might leade them by the hand to the hope of heauēly benefites.It was too much vnskilfulnes, I will not ſay blockiſhneſſe,not to conſider this order of diſpoſition. The iſſue or point of our controuerſie with this ſorte of men is this, that they teach that the poſſeſſiō of the land of Chanaan was to the Iſraelites their chiefe and laſt bleſſednes, & that to vs after the reueling of Chriſt,it doth but figuratiuely ſignifie ỹ heauenly inheritance. On the other ſide we affirme, that they did in the earthly poſſeſſion which they enioyed, as in a lookinge glaſſe behold the inheritance to come,which they beleued to be prepared for them in heauen.

2 That ſhall better appeare by the ſimilitude that Paul vſed to the Galatians.He compareth the nation of the Iewes to an heire,within age,which beinge not yet able to to gouerne himſelfe, followeth the guiding of the tutor or ſchoolemaiſter, to whoſe cuſtody he is committed. And whereas he applieth that ſimilitude to the ceremonies, that nothinge hindereth but that it may alſo very fitly ſerue to this purpoſe.The ſame inheritance was appointed for them,that was appointed for vs:but ſuch as yet for want of age, they were not of capacity to enter vpon and vſe. The ſame Church was among them, but whereof the age was yet but childiſh. Therefore the Lord kept them vnder this ſchooling,that he gaue them not the ſpirituall promiſes ſo naked and openly,but as it were ſhadowed w̄ earthly promiſes. Therfore,where he called Abraham, Iſaac, and Iacob, and their poſterity vnto hope of immortality,he promiſed them the land of Chanaan to be their inheritance:not to determine their hopes vpon it,but that in beholding of it, they ſhoulde exerciſe and confirme themſelues in the hope of that true inheritance that did not yet appeare. And that they might not be deceiued,there was giuen them a hier promiſe to teſtify, that that lande was not the hieſt benefite of God. So Abraham was not ſuffred to lie ſlouthfull in the promiſe receiued of the lande, but his minde was with a greater promiſe raiſed vp vnto the Lord.For Abraham heard this ſayd vnto him: I am thy protector,& thy reward exceeding great. Here we ſee, that Abraham hath the ende of his reward set forth in the Lord, that he should not accompt vpon a transitory and slippery reward in the elementes of this worlde, but rather thinke it to be such as can not wither away. Afterward he adioyneth the promise of the land to no other intent, but that it should be a token of the good will of God, & a figure of the heauēly inheritance. And that the holy men had this meaning, their owne sayinges do declare. So Dauid riseth vpward from temporall blessings, to that same highest & last blessing, My heart (saith he) & my flesh faint for desire of thee. God is my portion for euer. Againe, The Lord is ỹ part of my inheritance, and of my cup: thou art he that sauest mine heritage for me. Againe. I haue cried vnto thee, O Lorde, I haue sayd, Thou art my hope, my portion in the land of the liuing. Truely they that dare so speake, do without dout professe that with their hope they climbe aboue the world, and all the good thinges here present. But the Prophetes do oft describe this blessednesse of ỹ world to come, vnder the figure that they had receiued of the Lord. And so are these sayings to be vnderstanded. That ỹ Godly shal possesse the lande by inheritāce, and the wicked shalbe destroied out of it. That Hierusalē shal abound with all kinde of richesse, and Sion ouerflow with plenty of all things. All which we see, can not properly be spokē of the land of our wayfaringe, or the earthly Ierusalem, but of the true contry of the faithfull, and that heauenly citie wherein the Lord hath cōmaunded blessing and life for euer.

Psal. 16. 5.
Psa. 142. 6.
Iob. 18. 17.
Psa. 133. 3.

3 This is the reason why it is read that the holy mē in time of the olde testament, did esteme the mortal life & the blessings therof more than is now meete to do. For although they knew wel ỹ they shoulde not rest in it, as in the end of their race, yet whē they called to mind, what markes of his grace ỹ Iord had pointed therin, to exercise them according to ỹ small rate of their tendernes, they felt a greater sweetnes of it, than if they had considered it by it selfe. But as the Lorde in testifying his good will toward the faithfull, by present good things, did as in shadowe expresse the spirituall felicity, by such figures and signes: so on the other side he did in corporall paines shew examples of his iudgement against the reprobate. Therfore, as the benefites of God were to be seene in earthly things, so were also his punishments. While the vnskilfull do not weye this comparison or agreement, as I may call it betwene the punishmentes and the rewardes, they maruell at so much alteration in God, that in olde time was so sodainly ready to take vengeāce on euery offence of man with sterne & horrible punishmentes, & now as if he had layed away the affection of his old angrines, he punisheth both much more gentlie & seldomer, yea and for the ſame cauſe they do almoſt imagine ſeuerall gods of ỹ old & new teſtament: which the Manichees did in dede. But we ſhal eaſily be deliuered from ſuch doutes, if we lay our mindes to conſider this orderly diſpoſition of God that I haue ſpoken of, whoſe will was for the time to ſignifie & ſet forth in figure both the grace of the eternall felicity to come, by temporall benefites, and the greuouſnes of the ſpirituall death, by corporall paines. Whereby he deliuered his Teſtamẽt to the Iſraelites, as yet after a certaine maner folded vp.

4 An other difference of the olde and newe Teſtament is ſayd to be in the figures: for that the olde teſtament did ſhew onely an image in abſence of the trueth, and a ſhadow in ſteede of the body. But the new teſtament giueth the trueth preſent, and the ſounde body it ſelfe. And this difference is mentioned commonly whereſoeuer the newe teſtament is in compariſon ſet againſt the olde: but it is more largely entreated of in the epiſtle to the Hebrues than any where elſe. There the Apoſtle diſputeth againſt them, which thought that the obſeruation of Moſes law might not be taken away, but that they ſhould alſo draw with them the ruine of all religion. To confute this errour, he vſeth that which had bin foreſpoken by the Prophete concerning the prieſthoode of Chriſt. For whereas there is giuen him an eternall prieſthoode, it is certaine, that that prieſthoode is taken away, wherin new ſucceſſours were daily put in, one after an other. But he proueth that the inſtitution of this new prieſthoode is to be preferred, becauſe it is ſtabliſhed with an oth. He after addeth further, that in the ſame change of the prieſthoode, is alſo contained the change of the Teſtament. And that it was neceſſary ſo to be, he proueth by this reaſon: for that the weakeneſſe of the law was ſuch that it coulde helpe nothing, to perfection. Then he proceedeth in declaring what was that weakenes, euen this, that it had certaine outward righteouſnes of the fleſh, which could not make the obſeruers of them perfect, according to conſcience: that by ſacrifices of beaſtes, it could neither wipe away ſinnes, nor purchaſe true holines. He concludeth therfore that there was in it a ſhadow of good thinges to come, but not the liuely image of the thinges themſelues: & that therfore it had no other office, but to be as an introduction into a better hope, which is deliuered in the Goſpell. Here is to be ſeene, in what point the couenant of the law is compared with the couenant of the Goſpell: and the miniſtery of Chriſt with the miniſtery of Moſes. For if the compariſon concerned the ſubſtance of the promiſes, then were there great difference betweene the two teſtamentes: but ſith the point of our caſe leadeth vs an other way, we muſt tende to this ende, to finde out the trueth. Let vs then set forth here the couenant which he hath stablished to be eternall, and neuer to perish. The accomplishment therof, wherby it attaineth to be stablished & continuing in force, is Christ. While such establishment was in expectation, the Lord did by Moses apoint ceremonies, to be as it were solemne signes of the confirmation. Now this came there in question, whether the ceremonies that were ordained in ỹ law ought to giue place to Christ or no. Although these ceremonies were in dede only accidents, or verily additions and things adioyned, or (as the people call them) acceffary thinges to the couenant, yet becawse they were instrumentes or meanes of the administration therof, they beare the name of the couenant it selfe, as the like is wont to be attributed to other Sacramentes. Therefore in summe, the olde Testament is in this place called the solemne forme of confirming the couenant, contained in Ceremonies and Sacrifices. The Apostle sayth, that becawse in it is nothinge perfect, vnlesse we passe further, therefore it behoued that they should be discontinued and abrogate, that place might be giuen to Christ the assurer and mediatour of a better testament, by whom eternall sanctification is once purchaced to the elect, and the transgressions blotted out that remained vnder the law. Or, if you like it better, thus: That the olde testament of the Lord was that, which was deliuered, wrapped vp in the shadowish and effectuall obseruation of ceremonies: and that therefore it was but for a time, becawse it did but (as it were) hang in suspẽse vntill it might stay vpon a more stedfast and substantiall confirmatiõ: and that then onely it was made newe and eternall; after that it was consecrate and stablished by the blood of Christ. Whereupon Christ calleth the cup that he gaue at his supper to his Disciples, The cup of the new testament in his blood: to signifie, that then the testament of God attaineth his trueth: by which it becommeth new & eternal, when it is sealed with his blood.

Mat. 26 20.

5 Hereby appeareth in what sense the Apostle sayd: that in the schoolinge of the law, the Iewes were brought vnto Christ, before that he was shewed in the flesh. And he confesseth, that they were the children and heires of God, but yet such, as for their yong age were to be kept vnder the custody of a schoolemaister. For it behoued, that ere the lonne of righteousnesse was yet risen, their should neither be so great brightnesse of reuelation, nor so great deepe sight of vnderstandinge. Therefore God so gaue them in measure the light of his word, that they saw it as yet farre of and darkely. Therefore Paule expresseth this sclenderneſſe of vnderstandinge by the tearme of yong age, which the Lordes will was to haue to be exercised with the ele-

mentes of this world & with outward obſeruations, as rules of inſtruction for children vntill Chriſt ſhould ſhine abroad, by whom it behoued that the knowledge of the faithfull people ſhould grow to full age. This diſtinction Chriſt himſelfe meant of, when he ſaid, that the law and the Prophetes were vntill Iohn, and that from thenſefoorth the kingdom of God is preached. What did the law & the Prophetes open to men of their time? euen this, they gaue a taſt of that wiſdom which in time to come ſhould be plainly diſcloſed: and they ſhewed it before as it were twinclingly ſhining a far of. But whē it came to paſſe ỳ Chriſt might be pointed to with the finger, thē was the kingdom of God ſet opē. For in him are laied abroade the treaſures of all wiſdom and vnderſtanding, whereby we attaine, euen in a manner, into the ſecret cloſets of heauen. Mat. 11. 13. Col. 1. 9

6 And it maketh not againſt vs, that there can ſcarſely any one be found in the Chriſtian Church, that in excellency of faith may be cōpared with Abraham, or that the Prophetes excelled in ſuch force of ſpirite, that euen at this day they lighten the whole world withall. For our queſtion is not here, what grace the Lord hath beſtowed vpon a fewe, but what ordinarie diſpoſition he vſed in teaching his people: ſuch as is declared in the Prophetes themſelues, which were endued with peculiar knowledge aboue the reſt. For euen their preachinge is darke and encloſed in figures, as of thinges a farre of. Moreouer how maruellous knowledge ſoeuer appeared in them aboue other, yet forasmuch as they were driuen of neceſſity to ſubmit them to the common childiſh inſtructiō of the people, they themſelues alſo were reckned in the number of children. Finally, there neuer chaunged any ſuch cleare ſight to any at that time, but that it did in ſome parte ſauour of the darkeneſſe of the time. Whereupon Chriſt ſayd, Many kings and Prophetes haue deſired to ſee the thinges that ye ſee, and haue not ſeene them: and to heare the things that ye heare, and haue not heard them. Therefore bleſſed are your eyes, becauſe they ſee, & your eares becauſe they heare. And truely it was meete that the preſence of Chriſt ſhould haue this excellency of prerogatiue, that from it ſhould ariſe the cleare reuealing of the heauenly miſteries. And for this purpoſe alſo maketh that, which euē we now alleaged out of the firſt epiſtle of Peter: that it was opened to them, that their trauaile was profitable, principally for our age. Mat. 13. 17. Luc. 10. 24. 1. Pet. 1. 12.

7 Now I come to the third difference, which is taken out of Ieremie, whoſe wordes are theſe. Behold the dayes ſhall come, ſayth the Lord, and I will make a new couenant with the houſe of Iſraell, & the houſe of Iuda, not according to the couenant that I made with your Ier. 31. 31.

Fathers, in the day when I tooke them by the hande, to leade thē out of the lande of Ægypt, the couenant that they made voide although I ruled ouer them. But this shal be the couenant that I will make with the house of Israell. I will put my lawe in their bowelles, and I will wryte it in their heartes, and I will be mercifull to their iniquity. And no man shall teach his neighbour, and no man his brother. For they shall all know me, from the least vnto the most. Of which wordes the Apostle tooke occasion to make this comparison betwene the law & the Gospell, that he called the law a literall, and the Gospell a spirituall doctrine: the law, he said, was fashioned out in Tables of stone, the Gospell written in heartes: that the law was the preaching of death, the Gospell the preaching of life: the law the preaching of damnatiō, the Gospell the preachinge of righteousnesse: that the lawe is made voide, that the Gospell abideth. Sith the Apostles purpose was but to declare the meaninge of the Prophet, it shall be sufficient that we weye the wordes of one of thē, to attaine the meaning of them both. Albeit, there is some vnlikenes betwene them. For the Apostle speaketh more odiously of the law than the Prophet doth: and that not in simple respect of the law, but becausе there were certaine naughty men, hauing a wrong zeale to the law, which did with peruerse loue of the ceremonies, obscure the brightnesse of the Gospell He disputeth of the nature of the law, accordinge to their errour and foolish affection. Therefore it shall be good to note that peculiarly in Paul. But both of them, becausе they do by comparison set the olde and the new testament, the one against the other: do consider nothing in the law, but that which properly belongeth vnto it. As for example. The law doth commonly in euery place containe promises of mercy, but becausе they are borowed from elsewhere, therefore they are not reckened as part of the law, whē the mere nature of the law is spoken of. The onely thing they ascribe vnto it, to commaunde thinges that are right, and to forbid wicked doings: to promise reward to the followers of righteousnesse, and to threaten punishment to the transgressours: but in the meane time neither to change nor amende the peruersenes of heart, that is naturally in all men.

1. Cor. 2 6.

8 Now let vs expounde the Apostles comparison, one peece after an other. The old testament is literal, becausе it was published without the effectuall workinge of the spirite: The new is spirituall, which the Lord hath spiritually grauen in the heartes of men. Therfore the second diuersity is as it were a declaration of the first. The old is deadly, becausе it can do nothinge but wrappe all mankinde within the curse. The new is the instrument of life, becausе it deliuereth from curse, & restoreth reſtoreth into fauour with God. The olde is the miniſtery of damnation, becauſe it condemneth all Adams children of vnrighteouſneſſe. The new is the miniſtery of righteouſneſſe, becauſe it reuealeth the mercy of God, by which we are made righteous. The laſt diuerſity is to be referred to the ceremonies. Becauſe the old teſtament had an image of thinges abſent, it behoued that it ſhould in time decay & vaniſh away: but the Goſpell, becauſe it giueth the true body in deede, keepeth ſtill a firme & perpetuall ſtedfaſtnes. Ieremie in deede calleth euen the morall lawes, a weake and fraile couenant: but that is for an other reaſon, becauſe by the ſodaine falling away of the vnthankefull people, it was byandby broken, but foraſmuch as ſuch breakinge of it was the fault of the people, it can not properly be layd vpon the teſtament. But the ceremonies, foraſmuch as by their owne weakeneſſe were diſſolued by the cõming of Chriſt, had the cauſe of their weakeneſſe within themſelues. Now, that difference of the letter and ſpirite is not ſo to be takẽ, as though the Lord had giuen his lawes to the Iewes without any frute at all, hauing none of thẽ conuerted vnto him: But it is ſpoken by way of compariſon, to aduaunce the aboundance of grace, wherewith the ſame lawmaker as it were putting on a new perſonage, did honorably ſet forth the preaching of the Goſpell. For if we recken vp the multitude of theſe whom the Lord out of all peoples hath by the preaching of the Goſpel regenerate with his ſpirite, and gathered into the communion of his Church, we ſhall ſay, that there were very fewe, or in a manner none in the olde time in Iſraell, that with affection of minde and entirely from their heart embraced the couenant of the Lord: who yet were very many, if they be reckened in their owne number without compariſon.

9 Out of the third differẽce riſeth ỹ fourth. For the Scripture calleth the old teſtament, the teſtamẽt of bondage, for that it ingendreth feare in mens mindes: but the new teſtament, the teſtament of liberty, becauſe it raiſeth them vp to confidence & aſſurednes. So ſaith Paule in the eight to the Romaines. Ye haue not receiued the ſpirit of bondage againe to feare, but ỹ ſpirit of adoption, by which we crie Abba, father. Hereunto ſerueth that in the epiſtle to the Hebrues, that the faithfull are not now come to the bodily mount, and to kindled fire, & whirlewinde, darkenes and tempeſt, where nothing can be heard or ſeene but that ſtriketh mens mindes with terrour, in ſomuch that Moſes himſelfe quaked for feare, when the terrible voice ſounded, which they all beſought, that they might not heare: But that we are come to the Mount Sion, and the Citie of the liuinge God, the heauenly Hieruſalem. But that which Paule ſhortely toucheth in the

sentēce that we haue alleaged out of the epistle to the Romaines, he setteth out more largely in the Epistle to the Galatians, when he maketh an allegory of ỹ two sonnes of Abraham, after this manner, that Agar the bondwoman is a figure of the mount Sinai, where the people of Israel receiued the law: Sara the freewoman is a figure of the heauenly Hierusalem, from whense proceedeth the Gospell. That, as the seede of Agar is borne bonde, which may neuer come to ỹ inheritance, and the seede of Sara is borne free, to whom the inheritance is due: so by the law we are made subiect to bondage, by the Gospell only we are regenerate into freedom. But the summe commeth to this effect, that the old testament did stricke into consciences feare & tremblinge: but by the benefite of the new testament it commeth to passe, that they are made ioyfull. The olde did hold consciences bound vnto the yoke of bondage, by the liberality of the new they are discharged of bondage, and brought into freedom. But if out of the people of Israel they obiect against vs the holy fathers, who sith it is euident, that they were endued with the same spirit that we are, it followeth that they were also partakers both of the selfe same freedom & ioy: We answere, that neither of both came of the law. But that when they felt themselues by the law to be both oppressed with estate of bondage, and wearied with vnquietnes of conscience, they fled to the succour of the Gospell, & that therfore it was a peculiar frute of the new testament, that beside the common law of the old testament they were exempted frō these euils. Moreouer, we wil deny that they were so endued with the spirit of freedom and assurednes, that they did not in some parte feele both feare and bondage by the law. For howsoeuer they enioied that prerogatiue which they had obtained by grace of the Gospell, yet were they subiect to the same bondes and burdēs of obseruation, that the commō people were. Sith therfore they were compelled to the carefulll keepinge of those ceremonies, which were the signes of a schooling much like vnto bondage, and the handwrytinges whereby they confessed themselues gilty of sinne, did not discharge them from being bonde: it may rightfully be said, that in comparison of vs they were vnder the testament of bondage and feare, while we haue respect to that common order of distribution that the Lord then vsed with the people of Israel.

Gala. 4. 21.

10 The three last comparisons that we haue recited, are of the law and the Gospel. Wherfore in them by the name of the Old testament is meant the lawe, and by the name of the New testament is meant the Gospel. The first stretched further, for it comprehendeth vnder it the promises also that were published before the lawe, but whereas Auguſtine denieth that they ought to be reckened vnder the name of the olde teſtament, therein he thought very well, and meant euen the ſame thing that we do nowe teach, for he hadde regarde to thoſe ſayinges of Hieremie and Paule, where the olde teſtament is ſeuered from the worde of mercie and grace. And this alſo he very aptely adioyneth in the ſame place, that the children of promiſe regenerat of God, which by faith working through loue, haue obeyed the commaundements, do from the beginning of the worlde belong to the new Teſtamẽt, and that in hope not of fleſhly, earthly and temporall, but ſpirituall, heauenly, and eternall good thinges, principally beleeuing in the Mediatour, by whome they doubted not that the ſpirit was not miniſtred vnto them, both to do good, and to haue pardon ſo oft as they ſinned. For the ſame thing it is that I minded to affirme, that all the Saincte whome the Scripture reherſeth to haue been from the beginning of the worlde choſen by God, were partakers of the ſelfe ſame bleſſing with vs vnto eternall ſaluation. This difference therefore is betweene our diuiſion and Auguſtines: that oures (according to that ſaying of Chriſt: The lawe and the Prophets were vnto Iohn: from thenſeforth the kingdome of God is preached) doth make diſtinction betweene the cleereneſſe of the Goſpell, and the darker diſtribution of the worde that went before: and Auguſtine doth onely ſeuer the weakneſſe of the lawe from the ſtrength of the Goſpell. And here alſo is to be noted cõcerning the holy fathers, that they ſo liued vnder the olde teſtament, that they ſtayed not there, but alway aſpired to the newe, yea and imbraced the aſſured partaking thereof. For the Apoſtle condemneth them of blindeneſſe and accurſedneſſe, which being cõtented with preſent ſhadowes, did not ſtretch vp their minde vnto Chriſt. For (to ſpeake nothing of the reſt) what greater blindeneſſe can be imagined, than to hope for the purging of ſinne by the killing of a beaſt, than to ſeeke for the cleanſing of the ſoule in outwarde ſprinkeling of water? than to ſeeke to appeaſe God with colde ceremonies, as though he were much delited therewith? For to all theſe abſurdities do they fall, that ſticke faſt in the obſeruations of the lawe without reſpect of Chriſt.

Augustine

Lib. 1. ad Boni. ca. 4.

Mat. 11. 13.

11 The fifth difference that we may adde, lieth in this: that vntill the comming of Chriſt the Lord had choſen out one nation, within which he woulde keepe ſeuerall the couenant of his grace. When the hieſt did diſtribute the nations, when he diuided the ſonnes of Adam (ſaith Moſes) his people fell to his poſſeſſion: Iacob the corde of his inheritance. In an other place he thus ſpeaketh to the people: Beholde the heauen and earth and all that is in it, are the Lord thy

Deu. 32. 8.

Deu. 10. 14.

Gods. He cleaued onely to thy fathers, he loued them, to chose their seede after them euen your selues out of all nations. Therefore he voutchesaued to graunt the knowledge of his name to that people onely, as if they onely of all men belonged vnto him: he layed his couenant as it were in their bosome: to them he openly shewed the presence of his Godhead: them he honored with all prerogatiues. But (to omit the rest of his benefites, and speake that which onely here is to our purpose) he bound them to him by the communicating of his worde, that he might be called and compted their God. In the meane season he suffered other nations to walke in vanitie, as though they had not any entercourse or any thing to do with him: neither did he to helpe their destruction, geue them that which was onely the remedie, namely the preaching of his worde. Therefore Israell was then the Lordes sonne that was his dering, other were straungers: Israell was knowen to him and receyued into his charge and protection, other were left to their owne darkenesse: Israell was sanctified by God, other were prophane: Israel was honored with the presence of God, other were excluded from comming nie vnto him. But when the fullnesse of time was come, appointed for the restoring of all men, and that same reconciler of God and men was deliuered in deede, the particion was plucked downe, which had so long holden the mercy of God enclosed within the boundes of Israell, & peace was preached to them that were farre of, euen as to them that were neere adioyned, that being together reconcilied to God, they might growe into one people. Wherefore, nowe there is no respect of Greke or Iewe, circumcision or vncircumcision, but Christ is all in all, to whome the nations are geuen for his inheritaunce, and the endes of the earth for his peculiar possession, that vniuersally without difference he might haue dominion from sea to sea, and from the riuers to the vttermost endes of the worlde.

12 Therfore the calling of the Gentiles is a notable token, whereby is clearely shewed the excellencie of the newe Testament aboue the olde. It had in deede bin before testified by many, & most plaine oracles of the Prophetes, but so as the performance thereof was still differred vnto the kingdome of Messias. And Christ him selfe did not procede vnto it at the first beginning of his preaching, but differred it so long vntil that all the partes of our redemption being performed, and the time of his abacement ended, he receyued of his father a name that is aboue all names, before whome all knees shoulde bowe. For which cause when this conuenience of time was not yet fulfilled, he said to the woman of Chanaan, that he was not sent but to the lost

sheepe of the house of Israell. And he suffred not his Apostles at the first sending, to passe these boundes. Go not ye, (saith he) into the way of the Gentiles, nor entte into the Cities of the Samaritanes, but rather go ye to the lost sheepe of the house of Israell. But howesoeuer it was before vttered by so many testimonies, yet when the Apostles were first to beginne it, it seemed so newe and strange a thing vnto them, that they were afraide of it, as of some monster. Truely very fearefully and not without sticking at it, they first did set vpon it. And no maruell, for it seemed against reason, that the Lorde which by so many ages had chosen out Israel from all other nations, should nowe vndo that choise, as it were, sodenly changing his purpose. It was in deede spoken of afore by prophecies: but they coulde not geue so great heede to the prophecies, as to be nothing moued with the newnesse of the thing that they sawe. And these examples which the Lorde had shewed of the calling of the Gentiles that shoulde one day come to passe, were not sufficient to moue them. For biside this that he hade called veey fewe, he did after a certaine maner engrasse them into the householde of Abraham, to adde them vnto his people as percell of them: but by this generall calling the Gentiles, were not onely made egall with the Iewes, but also it appeared that they came into the place of the Iewes, that were become deade. And yet all those strangers whome God hath before that time brought into the bodie of the Church, were neuer made egall with the Iewes. And therefore not without a cause doth Paule so extoll this mysterie hidden from ages and generations, and which he also saith to be maruellous to the very Angles. Col. 1. 16.

13 In these fower or fiue pointes, I thinke, I haue well & faithfully set forth the whole difference of the olde and newe Testament, so much as sufficeth to ỹ simple ordre of teaching. But becaus many report this varietie in gouerning the Church, this diuers manner in teaching, so great alteration of vsages and ceremonies, to be a great absurditie: they are also to be answered before that we passe forth to other thinges. And that may be done shortly, bycause the obiections are not so strong that they nede a curious confutation. It hangeth not together (say they) that God which doth alway stedfastly agree with him selfe, shoulde suffer so great an alteration, as afterwarde to disalow the same thing, which he had before both commaunded and commended. I answere, that God ought not therfore to be compted mutable, for that he applied diuerse formes to diuerse ages, as he knew to be expediēt for euery one. If the husbandman apoint to his household one sorte of businesse in winter, & an other in sommer, shall we therfore accuſe him of inconſtancie,or thinke that he ſwarueth from the right rule of husbandrie which agreeth with the continuall ordre of nature? Likewiſe if a father of a houſeholde do inſtruct, rule and ordre his children of one ſorte in childhoode, of an other in youth, and of an other in mans ſtate,we can not therefore ſay that he is fickle & forſaketh his owne purpoſe.Why therfore do we charge God with reproch of inconſtancie, for that he hath ſeuered the diuerſitie of times with fit and agreable markes? The laſt ſimilitude ought fully to ſatisfie vs. Paule maketh the Iewes like vnto children,& Chriſtians to yongmen.What diſordre is there in this gouernement of God that he helde them in their childiſh leſſons,which accordinge to the capacity of their age.were fit for them, and inſtructed vs with ſtronger and as it were more manly diſcipline? Therefore herein appeareth the conſtancie of God, that he taught one ſelfe ſame doctrine in all ages, and continueth in requiring the ſame worſhippe of his name, which he commaunded from the beginning. But wheras he chaunged the outwarde forme and manner thereof,in that he ſhewed not him ſelfe ſubiect to change: but ſo fayre he tempered him ſelfe to the capacitie of man,which is diuerſe and chaungeable.

14 But whenſe (ſay they) commeth this diuerſitie, but bycauſe God willed it to be ſuch? Coulde he not as well from the beginning as ſins the comming of Chriſt,reuele the eternall life in plaine wordes without any figures,inſtruct thoſe that are his with a few ſacramentes and eaſy to perceaue,geue his holy ſpirite,and poure abroad his grace throughout the whole worlde? This is euen like as if they ſhoulde quarell with God for that he hath created the worlde ſo late, ſith he might haue created if from the beginning: or for that his will was to haue enterchaunged courſes betwene winter and ſommer, betwene day and night.But as for vs, euen as al Godly men ought to thinke,let vs not doubte that whatſoeuer God hath done, is wiſely and righteouſly done,although oftentimes we know not the cauſe why it ought ſo to haue been done.For that were to take preſumptuouſly to much vpon vs, not to geue God leaue to haue the cauſes of his owne purpoſe ſecret to himſelfe from vs. But it is meruellous (ſay they) that he now refuſeth and abhorreth the ſacrificing of beaſtes, and all that furniture of the Leuiticall prieſthode,wherewith in the olde time he was delited. As though theſe outward and trāſitorie thinges did delite God, or any way moue affection in him. We haue already ſaid that he did none of theſe for his owne cauſe,but diſpoſed them all for the ſaluation of men. If a Phiſicion do heale a yong man after one very good meane from his diſeaſe,and afterward do vſe an other maner of healing with the same man being olde: shall we therefore say, that he hath refused the manner of healing which before pleased him, but rather continuing still in the same, he hath consideration of age? So behoued it, that Christ being absent, shoulde be expressed in figure by one sort of signes, and by an other sort be before shewed that he was to come: and it is mete that now being already deliuered, he be represented by other signes. But as concerning Gods callyng, nowe at the comming of Christ more largely spread abrode among all peoples than it was before, and the graces of the holy ghost more plenteously poured out, who, I pray you, can denie it to be right, that that God haue in his owne hande and will the disposing of his owne graces, to geue light to what nations it pleaseth him? to raise vp the preaching of his worde in what places it pleaseth him? to geue what doctrine and howe great profiting and successe of doctrine it pleaseth him? and in what ages he will, to take away the knowledge of his name out of the worlde for their vnthankefulnesse? and againe when he will to restore it for his owne mercie? We see therefore, that the cauillations are to much vnmeete, wherwith wicked men do in this point disquiet the mindes of the simple, to make them call either the righteousnesse of God, or the faith of the Scripture into doubte.

The xij. Chapter.

That it behoued, that Christ, to performe the office of the Mediatour, shoulde be made man.

NOwe, it much behoued vs that he shoulde be both God and man, which shoulde be our Mediatour. If a man aske of the necessitie, it was not in deede a simple or absolute necessitie, as they commonly call it, but it proceded from the heauenly decree, wherevpon hanged all the saluation of men. But the most merciful father apointed that which should be best for vs. For wheras our owne iniquities had, as it were, cast a cloude betwene him and vs, and vtterly excluded vs from the kingdome of heauen, no man coulde be the interpreter for restoring of our peace, but he that could atteine vnto God. But who coulde haue atteined vnto him? coulde any of the sonnes of Adam? But all they did with their father shunne the sight of God for feare. Coulde any of the Angels? but they also had neede of a head, by whose knitting together they might perfectly and vnseuerably cleaue vnto God. What then? It was past all hope, vnlesse the very maiestie of God would descend vnto vs, for we coulde not ascēde vnto it. So it behoued that the sonne of God shoulde become for vs Immanuell, that is, God with vs: and that in this sort, that by mutuall ioyning, his godhed and the nature of man might growe into one together. Otherwise neither coulde the neereneſſe be neere enough, nor the alliance ſtrong enough for vs to hope by, that God dwelleth with vs. So great vas the diſagreement betwene our filthineſſe, and the moſt pure cleanneſſe of God. Although man had ſtand vndefiled without any ſpot, yet was his eſtate to baſe to atteine to God without a Mediator. What coulde he then do being plonged downe into death and hell with deadly fall, defiled with ſo many ſpottes, ſtinking with his owne corruption, and ouerwhelmed with all accurſedneſſe?

1 Tim. 2.3. Therefore not without cauſe, Paule meaning to ſet forth Chriſt for the Mediator, doth expreſſely recite that he is Man. One Mediator (ſaith he) of God and man, the man Ieſus Chriſt. He might haue ſaid, God: or at the leaſt he might haue left the name of Man as well as of God. But bycauſe the holy Ghoſt ſpeaking by his mouth, knewe our weakeneſſe: therefore to prouide for it in time, he vſed a moſt fit remedy, ſetting among vs the ſonne of God familiarly as one of vs. Therfore leaſt any man ſhoulde trouble himſelf to know where the Mediatour is to be ſought, or which way to comme vnto him, in naming Man, he putteth vs in minde that he is nere vnto vs, yea ſo nere that he toucheth vs, for aſmuch as he is our owne fleſh. Truely he meaneth there euen the ſame thing that in an other place is ſet out with moe wordes: that we haue not a biſhop that can not haue Hebr. 4. 15. compaſſion of our infirmities, for aſmuch as he was in all thinges tempted as we are, onely ſinne excepted.

2 That ſhall alſo appere more plainely, if we conſider how it was no meane thing that the Mediatour had to do: that is, ſo to reſtore vs into the fauour of God, as to make vs of the children of men, the children of God: of the heires of hell, the heires of the kingdome of heauen. Who could do that, vnleſſe the ſonne of God were made alſo the ſonne of manne, and ſo take oures vpon him to conuey his vnto vs, and to make that oures by grace, which was his by nature? Therefore by ths earneſt we truſt, that we are the children of God, bycauſe the naturall ſonne of God hath ſhapen for himſelfe a body of our body, fleſh of our fleſh, bones of our bones, that he might be all one with vs. He diſdained not to take that vpon him which was propre vnto vs, to make againe that to belong to vs which he had propre to himſelfe, and that ſo in common together with vs, be might be both the ſonne of God and the ſonne of man. Herevpon commeth that holy brotherhode which he commendeth with his owne mouth when he

Ihō. 10. 17. ſaith: I go vp to my father and your father, my God and your God. By this meane is the inheritance of the kingedome of heauen aſſured

vnto vs: for that the onely ſonne of God, to whome it wholly did proprely belong, hath adopted vs into his brethren: bycauſe if we be brethren, then are we partakers of the inheritaunce. Moreouer it was for the ſame cauſe very profitable, that he which ſhoulde be our redeemer, ſhoulde be both very God and very manne. It was his office to ſwallowe vp death: who coulde do that but life it ſelfe? It was his office to ouercome ſinne: who coulde do that but righteouſneſſe it ſelfe? It was his office to vanquiſh the powers of the worlde and of the aire: who coulde do that but a power aboue both worlde and aire: Nowe in whoſe poſſeſſion is life, or righteouſneſſe, or the empire and power of heauen, but in Gods alone? Therefore the moſt merciful God, in the perſone of his onely begotten ſonne, made himſelfe our redemer, when his will was to haue vs redemed. Rom. 8. 17.

3 An other principall point of our reconciliation with God was this that man which had loſt by his diſobedience, ſhoulde for remedy ſet obedience againſt it, ſhoulde ſatisfie the iudgement of God, and paye the penalue of ſinne. Therefore there came forth the true man, our Lorde, he put on the perſone of Adam, and toke vpon him his name to entre into his ſtede in obeyeng his father, to yeld our fleſh the price of the ſatisfaction to the iuſt iudgement of God, and in the ſame fleſh ſuffer the paine that we had deſerued. For aſmuch as therefore neither being onely God he coulde fele death, nor being onely man he coulde ouercome death, he coupled the nature of man with the nature of God, that he might yelde the one ſubiect to death to ſatisfie for ſinnes, and by ỹ power of the other he might wraſtle with death, and get victorie for vs. They therfore that ſpoile Chriſt either of his godhed or of his manhode, do in deede either diminiſh his maieſty and glory, or obſcure his goodnes: but on the other ſide they do no leſſe wrong vnto men whoſe faith they do therby weaken and ouerthrow, which can not ſtād but reſting vpon ths foundatiō. Beſide that, it was to be hoped, that the Redemer ſhoulde be the ſonne of Abraham and Dauid, which God had promiſed in the lawe and the Prophetes. Wherby the godly mindes do gather this other frute, that being by the very courſe of his pedigree brought to Dauid and Abraham, they do the more certainly know that this is the ſame Chriſt that was ſpoken of by ſo many oracles. But this which I euen nowe declared, is principally to be holden in minde, that the common nature betwene him and vs is a pledge of our felowſhip with the ſonne of God: that he clothed with our fleſh vanquiſhed death and ſinne together, that the victorie ſo might be oures and the triumph oures: that he offred vp for ſacrifice the fleſh that he receyued of vs, that hauing made satisfaction he might wipe away our giltinesse, and appease the iust wrath of his father.

4 He that shalbe diligently hedefull in considering these thinges as he ought, wil easily neglect these wandring speculations that rauish vnto them light spirites and desirous of noueltie: of which sort is, that Christ should haue been man, although there had been no neede of remedie to redeeme mankinde. I graunt that in the first degree of creation, and in the state of nature vncorrupted, he was set as head ouer Angels and men. For which cause Paule calleth him the first be-
Col. 1. 15. gotte of all creatures. But sith all the Scripture crieth out, that he was clothed with flesh, that he might be the Redeemer: it is to much rash presumptiō to imagine any other cause or ende. To what ende Christ was promised from the beginning, it is well enough knowen: euen to restore the world fallen in ruine, and to succour men being lost. Therefore vnder the lawe, the image of him was set forth in sacrifices, to make the faithfull to hope that God woulde be mercifull to them, when after satisfaction made for sinne, he shoulde be reconciled. But whereas in all ages, euen when the lawe was not yet published, the Mediatour was neuer promised without bloud: we gather that he was apointed by the eternall counsell of God to purge the filthinesse of men, for that the sheding of bloud is a token of expiation. The Propheres so preached of him, that they promised that he shoulde be the reconciler of God and men. That one specially notable testimonie of Esa. 53. 45. Esaie shal suffice vs for all, where he foretelleth, that he shalbe stricken with the hande of God for the sinnes of the people, that the chastisement of peace shoulde be vpon him: and that he shoulde be a priest that shoulde offer vp himselfe for sacrifice: that of his woundes should come health to other: and that, bycause all haue strayed and been scattered abrode like sheepe, therefore it pleased God to punish him, that he might beare the iniquities of all. Sith we heare that Christ is properly apointed by God to helpe wretched sinners, who so euer passeth beyond these boūdes, he doth to much follow fooliish curiositie. Nowe when himselfe was ones come, he affirmed this to be the cause of his comming, to appease God, and gather vs vp from death into Iohn. 1. 9. life. The same thing did the Apostles testifie of him. So Iohn before that he teacheth that the Worde wrs made flesh, declareth of the falling away of man. But he himselfe is to be hearde before all, when he

The whole nede not a Physician. I shoulde neuer make an ende, if I shoulde reherse all. The Apostles do all with one consent call vs to this fountaine: And truely if he had not come to reconcile God, the honor of the priesthode should haue come to nought. For asmuch as the priest apointed meane betwene God and man to make intercession: and he should not be our righteousnesse, bycause he was made a sacrifice for vs, that God should not impute sinnes vnto vs. Finally, he sheulde be spoiled of all the honorable titles, wherewith the Scripture doth set him out. And also that saying of Paule shoulde proue vaine, that that which was impossible to the law, God hath sent his owne sonne, that in likenes of the flesh of sinne he shoulde satisfie for vs. Neither will this stand that he teacheth in an other place, that in this glasse apeared the goodnesse of God and his infinite goodnesse towarde men, when Christ was geuen to be the Redeemer. Finally, the Scripture euery where assigneth no other ende, why the sonne of God woulde take vpon him our flesh, and also receiued this commaundement of his father, but to be made a sacrifice to appease his father towarde vs. So it is written, and so it behoued that Christ should suffer, and repentance be preached in his name. Therefore my father loueth me, bycause I geue my life for the sheepe, this commaundement he gaue me. As Moses lifted vp the Serpēt in the desert, so must the sonne of man be lifted vp. In an other place. Father, saue me from this houre. But I am therfore come euen to this houre. Father glorifie thy sonne. Where he plainely speaketh of the ende why he toke flesh, that he might be a sacrifice and satisfaction to do away sinne. After the same sorte doth Zacharie pronounce, that he came according to the promise geuen to the fathers, to geue light to them that sate in the shadow of death. Let vs remember that all these thinges are spoken of the sonne of God: in whome Paule in an other place testifieth, that all the treasures of knowledge and wisedome are hidden, and byside whome he glorifieth that he knoweth nothing.

5 If any man take exception & say, that none of all these thinges proue the cōtrarie, but that the same Christ that redemed men being damned, might also in putting on their flesh testifie his loue towarde them, being preserued & safe. The aunswere is short, that for asmuch as the holy Ghost pronounceth, that by the eternall decree of God these two thinges were ioyned together, that Christ should be our redeemer, and also partaker of all one nature with vs, therefore it is not lawefull for vs to ſearch any further. For who ſo euer is tickled with deſire to knowe any more, he being not contented with the vnchangeable ordinance of God, doth ſhewe alſo that he is not contented with the ſame Chriſt that was geuen vs to be the price of our redemption But Paule not onely reherſeth to what ende he was ſente, but alſo climbing to the hye miſterie of the predeſtination, he very fitly repreſſeth all wantonneſſe and itching deſire of mans wit. The father Ephe 4. 5. choſe vs in Chriſt before the creation of the worlde, to make vs his ſonnes by adoption, according to the purpoſe of his will: and he accepted vs in his beloued ſonne, in whom we haue redemption by his bloude. Truely here is not the fall of Adam ſet before as though it were formoſt in time, but is ſhewed what God determined before all ages, when his wil was to helpe the miſerie of mandkinde. If the aduerſarie obiecte againe, that this purpoſe of God did hang vpon the fall of man which he did foreſee: it is enough and more for me, to ſay, that they with wicked boldneſſe breake forth to faine them a new Chriſt, who ſo euer ſuffer themſelues to ſearche for more, or hope to know more of Chriſt thã God hath foreapointed them by his ſecret decree. And for good cauſe did Paule, after he had ſo diſcourſed of Ephe. 3. 16. the proper office of Chriſt, wiſh to the Epheſians the ſpirite of vnderſtanding, to comprehend what is the length, heygth, bredth, and depth, euen the loue of Chriſt that ſurmounteth all knowledge: euen as if of purpoſe he would ſet barres about our mindes, that when mẽtiõ is made of Chriſt, they ſhould not, be it neuer ſo litle, ſwarue from the grace of reconciliation. Wherefore, ſithe this is a faithfull ſaying

1 Tim. 1. 15. (as Paule teſtifieth) that Chriſt is come to ſaue ſinners, I do gladly reſt in the ſame. And wheras in an other place the ſame Apoſtle teacheth, that the grace which is nowe diſcloſed by the Goſpell, was geuen vs in Chriſt before the times of the worlde: I determine that I ought conſtantly to abide therein to the ende. Againſt this modeſtie Oſiander carpeth vniuſtly which hath againe in this time vnhappily ſtirred this queſtion before lightly moued by a fewe. He accuſeth them of preſumption that ſay, that the ſonne of God ſhould not haue appered in the fleſh, if Adam had not fallen, bycauſe this inuention is confuted by no teſtimonie of Scripture. As though Paule did not bridle froward curioſitie, when after he had ſpoken of redemption purchaced Tim. 3. 9 by Chriſt, he by and by commaundeth to auoide fooliſh queſtions. The madneſſe of ſome did burſt out ſo farre, that while they diſordrely coueted to ſeeme witty, they moued this queſtion, whether the Sonne of God might haue taken vpon him the nature of an Aſſe. This monſtruouſnes which all the godly do worthily abhorre as deteſtateſtable, let Oſiander confute with this pretenſe that it is neuer expreſly confuted in the Scripture. As though when Paule accompteth nothing precious or worthy to be knowen, but Chriſt crucified, he doth therefore admit an Aſſe to be the author of ſaluation. Therefore he that in an other place reporteth, that Chriſt by the eternall counſell of his father was ordeined to be a head to gather all thinges together: will neuer the more acknowledge an other that hath no office of redeming apointed him. Ephe. 4. 22.

6 But as for the principle that he braggeth of, it is very trifling. He would haue it, that man was created after the image of God, bycauſe he was faſhioned after the paterne of Chriſt to come, that he might reſemble him, whome the father had already decreed to clothe with our fleſh. Wherevpon he gathereth, that if Adam had neuer fallen frō his firſt and vncorrupted originall ſtate, yet Chriſt ſhould haue bene man. How trifling this is & wreſted, all men that haue ſounde iudgement, do eaſily perceiue of themſelues. In the meane time firſt he thinketh that he hath ſeene what was the image of God, that forſoth the glorie of God did not onely ſhine in thoſe excellent giftes wherewith he was garniſhed, but alſo that God himſelfe eſſentially dwelt in him. But as for me, although I graunt that Adam did beare the image of God, in ſo much as he was ioyned to God, (which is the true & hyeſt perfection of dignitie) yet I ſay, that the likeneſſe of God is no where els to be ſought, but in thoſe markes of excellencie wherewith he had garniſhed Adam aboue other liuing creatures. And that Chriſt was then the image of God, all men doe graunt with one conſent, and therefore that what ſo euer excellencie was grauen in Adam, it proceded from this, that by the onely begotten ſonne he approched to the glorie of his creator. Therefore man was created after the image of God, in whome the creators will was to haue his glorie ſeene as in a looking glaſſe. To this degree of honour was he aduaunced by the benefite of the onely begotten ſonne: But I ſay further, that the ſame ſonne was a common head as well to Angels as to men, ſo that the ſame dignitie that was beſtowed vpon man, did alſo belong vnto Angels. For when we heare them called the children of God, it were inconuenient to denie, that there is ſomething in them wherein they reſemble their father. Nowe if his will was to haue his glorie to be repreſented as well in Angels as in menne, and to be ſeene in both natures, Oſiander doth fondely trifle in ſayinge, that the Angels were then ſet behinde menne, bycauſe they did not beare the image of Chriſt. For they coulde not continually enioy the preſent beholding of God, vnleſſe they were like him. And Paul teacheth, that men are Gene. 1. 27. Gala 3. 10.

no otherwise renewed after the image of God, but if they be coupled with Angels, that they may cleaue together vnder one head. Finally, if we beleue Christ, this shalbe our last felicitie, to be made of like forme to the Angels, when we shalbe receyued vp into heauen. But if Osiander will conclude, that the originall paterne of the image of God was in Christ as he is man, by the same reason a manne may say, that Christ must needes haue been partaker of the nature of Angels, bycause the image of God perteineth also to them.

7 Therefore, Osiander hath no cause to feare, that God shoulde be found a lier, vnlesse it had ben first stedfastly and vnchangeably decreed in his minde, to haue his sonne incarnate: bycause if the integritie of Adam had not fallen, he shoulde with the Angels haue ben like vnto God, and yet it shoulde not therefore haue ben necessarie, that the sonne of God shoulde be made either man or Angel. And in vaine he feareth that absurditie, least vnlesse the vnchangeable counsell of God had been before the creation of man that Christ shoulde be borne, not as the redemer but as the first man, he shoulde haue lost his prerogatiue: for asmuch as nowe he shoulde be borne man onely by an accident cause, that is to restore man kinde being lost, and so it might be gathered therevpon, that Christ was created after the image of Adam. For why shoulde he so muche abhorre that which the Scripture so openly teacheth, that he was made like vnto vs in all thinges, except sinne? Wherevpon Luke doubteth not to recken him the sonne of Adam in his Genealogie. And I woulde faine know why Paule calleth Christ the second Adam, but bycause the estate of man was appointed for him, that he might raise vp the posteritie of Adam out of their ruine. For if he were in order before that creation, he shoulde haue been called the first Adam. Osiander boldly affirmeth, that bycause Christ was alredy before knowen man in the minde of God, men were formed after the same paterne. But Paule in naming him the second Adam, setteth meane betwene the first beginning of man and the restitution which we obteine by Christ, the fall of man wherby grew the necessity to haue nature restored to her first degree. Wherupō it foloweth, that this sanie was the cause why the sonne of God was borne to become man. In the meane time, Osiander reasoneth ill and vnsauorily, that Adam, so long as he had stande without falling, shoulde haue bin the image of himselfe and not of Christ. I aunswere by the contrarie, bycause though the sonne of God had neuer put on flesh, neuertheless both in the body and in the soule of man shoulde haue shined the image of God, in the bright beames whereof it alway appered, that Christ is verily the head, and hath the ſoueraigne ſupremicie in all. And ſo is that fooliſh ſuttletie aſſoyled, which Oſiander bloweth abroade, that the Angels ſhoulde haue lacked this head, vnleſſe it had bene purpoſed by God to clothe his ſonne with fleſh, yea though there had bine no fault of Adam. For he doth to raſhly ſnatche holde of that which no manne in his right wit will graunt, that Chriſt hath no ſupremicie ouer Angels, that they ſhoulde haue him for their Prince, but in ſo much as he is man. But it is eaſily gathered by the wordes of Paule, that in as much as he is the eternall worde of God, he is the firſt begotten of all creatures: not that he is create, or ought to be reckened among creatures: but bycauſe the ſtate of the worlde in integritie, ſuch as it was at the beginning garniſhed with excellent beautie, had no other originall: and then, that in as much as he was made man, he was the firſt begotten of the dead. For the Apoſtle in one ſhorte clauſe ſetteth forth both theſe pointes to be conſidered: that all thinges were create by the ſonne, that he might beare rule ouer Angels: and that he was made man, that he might beginne to be the redemer. Of like ignoraunce is it that he ſaith, that men ſhoulde not haue had Chriſt to their king, if he had not bene man. As though the kingdome of God coulde not ſtand, if the eternall ſonne of God, although not clothed with the fleſh of man, gathering together both Angels and men into the felowſhip of his heauenly glorie and life, ſhoulde himſelfe beare the ſoueraintie. But in this falſe principle he is alway deceyued, or rather deceyueth himſelfe, that the Church ſhoulde haue bene without a head, vnleſſe Chriſt had appeared in the fleſh. As though, euen as the Angels enioyed him their heade, he coulde not likewiſe by his diuine power rule ouer men, and by the ſecret force of his ſpirite quicken and nouriſh them like his owne body, till being gathered vp into heauen, they might enioy all one life with the Angels. Theſe trifles that I haue hetherto confuted, Oſiander accompteth for moſt ſtrong oracles: euen ſo as being dronke with the ſweeteneſſe of his owne ſpeculations, he vſeth to blowe out fonde Bacchus cries of matters of nothing. But this one that he bringeth after, he ſaith is much more ſtrong, that is the prophecie of Adam, which, ſeyng his wife ſaid, this nowe is a bone of my bones, and fleſh of my fleſh. But howe proueth he that to be a prophecie? Bycauſe in Matthew Chriſt geueth the ſame ſaying to God. As though that what ſo euer God hath ſpoken by men, conteyneth ſome prophecie. Let Oſiander ſeeke prophecies in euery commaundement of the lawe, which, it is certaine to haue come from God the author of them. Beſide that, Chriſt ſhould haue bene groſſe and earthly, if he had reſted vpon the literall ſenſe. Bycauſe he ſpeaketh not of the miſticall vnion wherevnto he hath voucheſaued to receiue his church, but only of faithfulneſſe betwene man and wife: for this cauſe he teacheth, that God prouounced that man and wife ſhalbe one fleſh, that no man ſhoulde attempt to breake that inſoluble knot by diuorce. If Oſiander loth this ſimplicitie, let him blame Chriſt, for that he led not his diſciples further to a miſterie, in more ſuttely expounding the ſaying of his father. Neither yet doth Paule mainteine his errour, which after he had ſaid that we are fleſh of the fleſh of Chriſt, by and by addeth, that this is a great miſterie; for his purpoſe was not to tell in what meaning Adam ſpake it, but vnder the figure and ſimilitude of mariage, to ſet forth the holy coupling together, that maketh vs one with Chriſt. And ſo doe the wordes ſound. Bycauſe when he geueth warning that he ſpeaketh this of Chriſt and his church, he doth as it were by way of correction, ſeuere the ſpirituall ioyning of Chriſt and his church from the lawe of mariage. Wherefore this fickle reaſon eaſily vaniſheth away. And I thinke I neede no more to ſhake vp any more of that ſort of chaffe, bycauſe the vanitie of them all his ſone found out by this ſhort confutation. But this ſobrietie ſhall aboundantly ſuffice to feede ſoundly the children of God: that when the fulneſſe of times was come, the ſonne of God was ſent, made of woman, made vnder the lawe, to redeeme them that were vnder the lawe.

Eph. 3. 30.

The xiij. Chapter.

That Chriſt toke vpon him the true ſubſtance of the fleſh of man.

NOwe, vnleſſe I be deceiued, it were ſuperfluous to entreate againe of the godhead of Chriſt, which hath already in an other place ben proued with plaine and ſtrong teſtimonies. It remaineth therefore to be ſeene, howe he being clothed with our fleſh, hath fulfilled the office of Mediatour. The trueth of his humaine nature hath in the olde time ben impugned both by the Manichees and the Marcionites: of whome, the Marcionites fained a ghoſt in ſtede of the body of Chriſt, and the Manichees dreamed that he had a heauenly fleſh. But both many and ſtrong teſtimonies of the Scripture do ſtand againſt them both. For the bleſſing is promiſed neither in a heauenly ſeede, nor in the coũterfaite ſhape of man, but in the ſeede of Abraham and Iacob. Neither is the eternal throne promiſed to a man made of aire, but to the ſonne of Dauid & to the frute of his wombe. Therefore being deliuered in the fleſh, he is called the ſonne of Dauid and Abraham: not bycauſe he is onely borne

of the wombe of the Virgine, and create in the aire, but becauſe (as Paule expoundeth it) he is according to the fleſh made of the ſeede of Dauid: as in an other place the Apoſtle teacheth, that he deſcended of the Iewes. For which cauſe the Lord himſelfe not contented with the bare name of man, doth oftentimes call himſelfe the ſonne of man, meaning to expreſſe more plainly that he was man truely iſſued of the ſeede of mankinde. Sith the holy Ghoſt hath ſo oft by ſo many meanes with ſo great diligence and ſimplicitie declared a thing not obſcure of it ſelfe, who woulde haue thought any men to be ſo ſhameleſſe as to preſume yet to ſpread miſtes to darken it? And yet we haue other teſtimonies at hand, if we liſted to heape vp more of them. As is that ſaying of Paule: that God ſent his ſonne made of woman. And innumerable other places, whereby appeareth that he was ſubiect to hungre, thirſt, colde, & other infirmities of our nature. But out of many theſe are chiefly to be choſen, that may moſt auaile to edifie our mindes in true confidence. As, where it is ſaid, that he gaue not ſo great honour to the Angels, as to take their nature vpon him: but toke our nature, that in fleſh & bloud he might, by death, deſtroy him that had the power of death. Againe, that by benefite of that communicating we are reckened his brethren. Againe, that he ought to haue bine made like vnto his brethren, that he might be made a mercifull and faithfull interceſſour: that we haue not a Biſhop that can not be compatient of our infirmities. And ſuch like. And for the ſame purpoſe ſerueth that which we touched a litle before, that it behoued that the ſinnes of the worlde ſhoulde be cleanſed in our fleſh: Which Paule plainely affirmeth. And truely, what ſo euer the father hath geuen to Chriſt, it doth therefore belong to vs, becauſe he is the head, from which the whole body being knit together, groweth into one. Yea, and otherwiſe that will not agree together, which is ſaid: that the Spirite was geuen him without meaſure, that all we ſhoulde drawe of the fulneſſe thereof. For aſmuch as there is no greater abſurditie than to ſay, that God is enriched in his eſſence by any accidentall giſte. And for this cauſe Chriſt ſaith in an other place: I do ſanctifie my ſelfe for them.

2 As for the places that they bring forth to confirme their errour, they do to vnaptly wreſt them, and they nothing preuaile by their triſling ſutteltes, when they goe about to wipe away thoſe thinges that I haue alleged for our part. Marcion imagineth that Chriſt did put on a fantaſtical body in ſtede of a true body: becauſe in ſome places it is ſaid, that he was made after the likeneſſe of man, and that he was founde in ſhape as a manne. But ſo he nothing weyeth what is

Phil. 2. 7.

Paules purpoſe in that place. For his meaning is not to teach what manner of body Chriſt toke vpon him, but that whereas he might haue ſhewed forth his godhead, he made none other ſhewe of himſelfe, but as of an abiect and vnregarded man. For, to exhorte vs by his example to ſubmiſſion, he ſheweth, that for aſmuch as he was God, he might haue by and by ſet forth his glory to be ſeene to the worlde: but yet that he gaue ouer ſome of his owne right, and of his owne accord abaced himſelfe, bycauſe he did put on the image of a ſeruant and contended with that humilitie, ſuffred his godhed to be hidden with the veile of the fleſh. He doth not here teach what Chriſt was, but how he behaued himſelfe. And alſo by the whole proceſſe of the texte it is eaſily gathered, that Chriſt was abaced in the true nature of manne. For what meaneth this, that in ſhape he was founde as man, but that for a time the glorie of his godhead did not ſhine forth, but only the ſhape of man appeared in baſe and abiect eſtate? For other-
1.Pet.3. 18. wiſe that place of Peter coulde not ſtande togethe r, that he was dead in the fleſh, but quickened in the ſpirite, if the ſonne of God had not bene weake in the nature of man: which Paule expreſſeth more plainely in ſayeng, that he ſuffred by reaſon of the weakeneſſe of the fleſh.
2.Cor. 13.4. 1.Cor. 15.47. And hereunto ſerueth the exaltation: bycauſe it is expreſſely ſaid, that Chriſt atteined a new glorie after that he abaced himſelfe, which coulde not well agree to be ſpoken of any, but of a man hauing fleſh and ſoule. Manichees framed Chriſt a body of aire, bycauſe Chriſt is called the ſecond Adam, heauenly of heauen. But neither in that place doth the Apoſtle bring in a heauenly eſſence of the body, but a ſpirituall force which being poured abrode by Chriſt, doth quicken vs. Nowe, as we haue already ſeene, Peter and Paule doe ſeuer the ſame from his fleſhe. But rather that doctrine which is receiued among the true teachers, concerning the fleſh of Chriſt, is very well proued by that place. For if Chriſt had not all one nature of body with vs, it were a very vaine argument, that Paule with ſuch vehe-
1.Cor. 15.16. mencie followeth: that if Chriſt be riſen againe, we ſhall alſo riſe againe: and if we do not riſe, then that Chriſt alſo is not riſen. By what cauillations ſo euer either the olde Manichees or their new Diſciples goe about to eſcape, they ſhall not winde them ſelues away. It is a fowle ſhifte, that they fondely ſay, that Chriſt is called the ſonne of manne, in ſo much as he is promiſed of menne. For it is plaine, that after the Hebrewe phraſe, very man in deede is called the Sonne of manne. And Chriſt without doubte kepte the phraſe of his owne tongue. Alſo it ought to make no queſtion, what ought to be vnderſtanded by the children of Adam. And (not to go farre of) the place of the eight Pſalme, which the Apoſtles apply to Chriſt, ſhalbe ſufficient enough: What is man that thou art mindefull of him, or the ſonne of man, that thou viſiteſt him? In this figure is expreſſed the true manhoode of Chriſt. For though he were not immediatly begotten of a mortall father, yet his race came frō Adam. For elſe that place could not ſtande which we haue already alleaged that Chriſt is made partaker of fleſh and blood, that he might gather to him yonge children to the ſeruice of God. In which words it is plainely determined, that Chriſt is made fellow & partaker of all one nature with vs. In which meaninge alſo he ſayth, that both the author of holineſſe & they that are made holy, are all of one. For it is proued by the proceſſe of the text, that the ſame is referred to the fellowſhip of nature: becauſe he byandby addeth, Therfore he is not aſhamed to call them brethren. For if he had ſaid before, that the faithfull are of God in ſo great dignity, what cauſe ſhould there be to be aſhamed? But becauſe Chriſt of his infinite grace doth ioyne himſelfe to the baſe & vnnoble therefore it is ſayd, that he is not aſhamed. But in vaine they obiect, that by this meane the wicked ſhall become the brethren of Chriſt: becauſe we know that the children of God are not borne of fleſh and blood, but of the holy Ghoſt by faith. Therefore onely fleſh maketh not a brotherly ioyninge. But although the Apoſtle giue this honor to ỹ faithfull only, to be of one with Chriſt, yet it followeth not, but that the wicked may be borne of the ſame originall. As when we ſay that Chriſt was made man, to make vs the ſonnes of God: this ſaying extendeth not to all men, becauſe faith is the meane which ſpiritually graffeth vs into the body of Chriſt. Alſo they fooliſhly moue a brawle about the name of Firſt begottē. They ſay that Chriſt ſhould haue bin borne of Adam ſtreight at the beginning, that he might be the firſt begotten amonge brethren. For the title of Firſt begotten, is not referred to age, but to the degree of honor, and excellence of power. And more colour hath that which they bable, that Chriſt tooke to him man and not Angels, becauſe he receiued mankinde into fauour. For, to ſet out more largely the honor which God vouchſaued to giue vs, he cōpared the Angels with vs, which were in this behalfe ſet behinde vs. And if ỹ teſtimony of Moſes be well weyed, where he ſayth that the ſeede of the woman ſhall breake the ſerpentes heade, it ſhall vtterly ende the controuerſie. For only Chriſt is not there ſpoken of, but all mankinde. Becauſe the victory was to be gotten by Chriſt for vs, he generally pronounceth that the poſterity of the woman ſhould get the vpper hand of ỹ Deuil. Wherupon followeth, that Chriſt iſſued of mankinde, becauſe it was Gods purpoſe there to raiſe vp Eue, whom he ſpake vnto with good hope, that ſhe ſhoulde not faint with ſorow.

3 They do no leſſe wickedly than fooliſhly entangle with allegories theſe teſtimonies where Chriſt is called the ſeede of Abraham, and the frute of the wombe of Dauid. For if the name of Seede had bin ſpoken in an allegory, truely Paul would not haue left it vntolde, where he plainly & without figure affirmeth, that there are not many ſonnes of Abraham redemers, but one Chriſt. Of like ſorte is it that they alleage: that he is no otherwiſe called the ſonne of Dauid, but becauſe he was promiſed and at length in his due time deliuered. For after that Paule had once named him the ſonne of God: in that he byandby addeth, According to the fleſh, he truely meaneth of nature. And ſo in the 9 chapter callinge him the bleſſed God, he ſayth ſeuerally beſide, that accordinge to the fleſh he deſcended of the Iewes. Nowe if he were not truely begotten of the ſeede of Dauid, to what purpoſe ſhalbe this ſayinge, that he is the frute of his wombe? What meaneth this promiſe? Out of thy loynes ſhal he deſcende, that ſhall abide in thy ſeate. Now in the Genealogie of Chriſt, as it is rehearſed of Matthew, they do Sophiſtically mocke. For though he do not rehearſe the parētes of Marie but of Ioſeph, yet becauſe he ſpeaketh of a thing ſufficiently knowē abrode among the people, he reckneth it enough to ſhew that Ioſeph came of the ſeede of Dauid, when it was well knowen that Mary was of the ſame ſtocke. But Luke more preſſeth them in teaching that ſaluation brought by Chriſt, is cōmon to all mankinde: becauſe Chriſt the author of ſaluation proceeded frō Adam the common parent of all. I graunt in dede, that by the Genealogie it can none otherwiſe be gathered that Chriſt was the ſonne of Dauid, but in ſo much as he was begotten of the Virgine. But the newe Marcionites to colour their errour do to proudly, in this that to proue that Chriſt tooke his body of nothing, they affirme that women are ſeedeles, and ſo they ouerthrow the principles of nature. But becauſe that is no queſtion of diuinity, & the reaſons that they bringe are ſo fickle, that they may very eaſily be confuted: therefore I will not toutch thoſe thinges that belong to Philoſophie and Phiſike, and will hold me contented to wipe away thoſe thinges that they alleage out of Scripture: that is, that Aaron and Ioiadah tooke wiues of the tribe of Iehudah, & ſo the difference of tribes had then bin confounded, if woman hadde engendringe ſeede in her. But it is well enough knowen ỹ as touching ciuile order, the kindreds are reckened by the ſede of the man, & yet the excellency of the kinde of man aboue woman proueth not the contrary, but that in generatiō the ſeede of woman man muſt meete. And this ſolution extendeth to all the Genealogies. Oftentimes when the Scripture reckeneth vp a Genealogie, it nameth the mẽ only: ſhal we therfore ſay, that the women are nothing? But very children do know, that women are comprehended vnder the name of men. And after this ſorte it is ſaid, that women bring forth to their husbandes, becauſe the name of the houſehold alway remaineth with the males. Now as this is graunted to the excellency of the male kinde, that the children are compted noble or vnnoble, according to the eſtate of their fathers: ſo alſo in the ſtate of bondage the iſſue followeth the wombe, according to the iudgement of the Ciuile lawyers. Whereby we may gather, that the iſſue is engendred of the ſeede of the woman. And it hath of long time bin receiued in common vſe of al nations, that the mothers are called Genetrices, that is engẽdrers. Wherwith Gods law alſoagreeth, which elſe ſhould wrõgfully forbid ỹ mariage of the vncle with his ſiſters daughter, becauſe there were no conſanguinity betwene them: and alſo it were lawfull for a man to marry his ſiſter by the mothers ſide, ſo that ſhe were begotten of an other father. But as I graunt that there is a paſſiue power aſcribed to women, ſo do I anſwere that the ſame thing is indifferently ſpoken of them that is of men. And Chriſt himſelfe is not ſayd to be made by the woman, but of the woman. Gal. 4. 4. But ſome of their compañy ſhaking of all ſhame do too leudly aske, whether we wil ſay that Chriſt was engendred of the menſtruall ſeede of the Virgine, for I will likewiſe aske of them, whether he did not congele in the bloud of his mother, which they ſhalbe conſtrained to confeſſe. Therfore it is fitly gathered of Matthewes words, that becauſe Chriſt was begotten of Marie, he was engendred of her ſeede: as a like engendringe is meant when it is ſayd, ỹ Booz was begotten of Rahab. Mat. 1. 5. Neither doth Matthew here deſcribe the Virgine as a conduit pipe through which Chriſt paſſed: but he ſeuereth this maruellous maner of generation from the common maner, for that by her Chriſt was begotten of the ſeede of Dauid. For euen in the ſame ſorte, that Iſaac was begotten of Abraham, Salomon of Dauid, and Ioſeph of Iacob, likewiſe it is ſayd that Chriſt was begotten of his mother. For the Euangeliſt ſo frameth the order of his ſpeach, and willinge to proue that Chriſt came of Dauid, is contented with this one reaſon, that he was begotten of Marie. Wherby it followeth, that he tooke it for a matter cõfeſſed, that Marie was of kinne to Ioſeph.

4 The abſurdities wherewith they woulde charge vs, are ſtuffed full of childiſh cauillations. They thinke it a ſhame and diſhonor to Chriſt, if he ſhould haue takẽ his original of men: becauſe ſo he could not be exempt from the vniuerſall law that encloſeth all the offſpring of Adam without exception, vnder ſinne. But the compariſon that we read in Paule doth eaſily aſſoyle this dout: that as by one man came ſinne, and by ſinne death, ſo by the righteouſneſſe of one man grace hath abounded. Wherewith alſo agreeth an other compariſon of his: the firſt Adam of earth, earthly and naturall, the ſeconde of heauen, heauenly. Therfore in an other place, the ſame Apoſtle, where he teacheth that Chriſt was ſent in the likenes of ſinfull fleſh to ſatisfie the law, doth ſo expreſſely ſeuere him from the common eſtate of men, that he be very man without fault and corruption. But very childiſhly they trifle in reaſoning thus: If Chriſt be free from all ſpot, and was by the ſecrete workinge of the holy Ghoſt begotten of the ſeede of Marie, then is not the womans ſeede, but onely the mans ſeede vncleane. For we do not make Chriſt free frō all ſpot, for this cauſe ẏ he is only engendred of his mother without copulation of man, but becauſe he is ſanctified by the holy Ghoſt, that the generation might be pure and vncorrupted, ſuch as ſhould haue bin before the fal of Adam. And this alway remained ſtedfaſtly determined with vs, that ſo oft as the ſcripture putteth vs in minde of the cleanneſſe of Chriſt, it is meant of his true nature of manhoode: becauſe it were ſuperfluous to ſay that God is cleane. Alſo the ſanctification that he ſpeaketh of in the ſeuenteene of Iohn, could haue no place in the nature of God. Neither are there fained two ſeedes of Adam, although there came no infection to Chriſt: becauſe the generation of mā is not vncleane or vicious of it ſelfe, but accidentall by his falling. Therfore it is no maruell, if Chriſt, by whom the eſtate of innocency was to be reſtored, were exempt from common corruption. And wheras alſo they thruſt this vpon vs for an abſurdity, ẏ if the Word of God did put on fleſh, then was it encloſed in a narrow priſon of an earthly body: this is but mere waywardnes: becauſe although the infinite eſſēce of the Word did growe together into one perſon with the nature of man: yet do we faine no encloſinge of it. For the Sonne of God deſcended maruelouſly from heauen, ſo as yet he left not heauen, it was his will to be maruelouſly borne in the Virgins wombe, to be conuerſant in earth, & hang vpon the croſſe, yet that he alway filled the world euen as at the beginning.

The xiiii. Chapter.

Howw the twoo natures of the Mediatour do make one perſon.

Now

NOw where it is sayd, that the Word was made flesh: that is not so to be vnderstanded, as though it were either turned into flesh, or confusely mingeled with flesh, but because he chose him a temple of the Virgins wombe to dwell in: he that was the Sonne of God, became also the sonne of man, not by confusion of substance, but by vnity of person. For we so affirme the godheade ioyned and vnited to the manhoode, that either of them haue their whole property remaining, and yet of them both is made one Christ. If any thing in all worldly thinges may be founde like to so great a mysterie, the similitude of man is most fitte, whom we see to consist of two substances, whereof yet neither is so mingeled with other, but that either keepeth the property of his owne nature. For neither is the soule the body, nor the body the soule. Wherfore both that thing may be seuerally spoken of the soule, which can no way agree with the body: and likewise of the body that thing may be sayd, which can by no meane agree with the soule: and that may be said of the whole man, which can be but vnfitly taken neither of the soule nor of the body seuerally. Finally, the properties of the soule are somtime attributed to the body, and the properties of the body somtime to the soule: and yet he that consisteth of them is but one man and not many. But such formes of speach do signifie both that there is one person in man compounded of two natures knit together, and that there are two diuerse natures which do make the same person. And so do the Scriptures speake of Christ: Sometime they giue vnto him those thinges that ought singularly to be referred to his manhoode, & somtime those things that do peculiarly belong to his godhead, & somtime those things that do comprehend both natures, & do agree with neither of them seuerally. And this conioyning of the two natures ỹ are in Christ, they do with such religiousnes expresse, that sometime they do put them in common together: which figure is among the old authors called, Communicating of properties. Ioh.1. 14.

2 These things were but weake, vnles many phrases of Scripture, and such as be echwhere ready to finde, did proue that nothing hereof hath bin deuised by man. That same thinge which Christ spake of himselfe, saying: Before that Abraham was, I am: was farre disagreeing from his manhoode. Neither am I ignorant with what cauillation the erroneous spirites do depraue this place: for they say that he was before all ages, because he was already foreknowen the Redemer, as well in the counsell of the father, as in the mindes of the godly. But where as he openly distinguisheth the day of his manifestation from his eternall essence, & of purpose pronounceth vnto himselfe an au- Ioh.8. 58.

And yet he doth not ſeuerally aſcribe theſe things to his nature of mã only, but taketh thẽ vpon himſelfe, as if they did agree with the perſon of the mediatour. But the communicatinge of properties is in this

1. Ioh. 1. 1. that the Word of life was felt. Truely God neither hath bloud, nor ſuffereth, nor can be touched with handes. But becauſe he which was both very God & man, Chriſt being crucified, did ſhed his bloud for vs: thoſe thinges that were done in his nature of man, are vnproperly, and yet not without reaſon giuen to his godhead. A like example is,
1. Ioh. 3. 16. where Iohn teacheth that God gaue his ſoule for vs: therefore there Ioh. 3. 13. alſo the property of the manhode is cõmunicate with the other nature. 3 But moſt plainly of all do theſe places ſet forth the true ſubſtãce of Chriſt, which do comprehend both natures together: of which ſort there are very many in the goſpell of him. For that which is there red is ſingularly belonging neither to his godhead nor to his manhoode, but both together: ẏ he hath receiued of his father power to forgiue

ſaluation

ſaluation, to be made iudge ouer the quicke & the dead, to be honored euen as the father is: Finally, that he is called the light of the world, the good ſhepherd, the only dore, the true Vine. For ſuch prerogatiues had ỹ ſonne of God, whē he was ſhewed in the fleſh: which although he enioyed with his father before the worlde was made, yet he had thē not in the ſame maner or the ſame reſpect, & which could not be giuē to ſuch a man as was nothing but man. In the ſame meaninge ought we to take that which is in Paule: that Chriſt after the iudgement ended, ſhall yeelde vp the kingdom to God & the father: Euen the kingdom of the ſonne of God, which had no begining, nor ſhall haue any endinge: but euen as he lay hid vnder the baſeneſſe of the fleſh, and abaced himſelfe, takinge vpon him the forme of a ſeruaunt, and layinge aſide the porte of maieſty, he ſhewed himſelfe obediēt to his father: & hauing performed all ſuch ſubiection, at lēgth is crowned with honor & glory, & auaunced to the higheſt dominion, that all knees ſhall bow before him: ſo ſhall he then yeelde vp to his father both that name & crowne of glory, & whatſoeuer he hath receiued of his father, that God may be all in all. For to what purpoſe is power & dominion giuen him, but that the father ſhould gouerne vs by his hande? In which ſenſe it is alſo ſayd, that he ſitteth at ỹ right hand of the father. But this is but for a time, til we may enioy the preſent beholding of the godhead. And here the errour of ỹ old fathers can not be excuſed, which while they tooke no heede to the perſon of the Mediatour, haue obſcured ỹ natural meaning of almoſt all the doctrine that is read in the goſpell of Iohn, & haue entangled themſelues iin many ſnares. Let this therefore be vnto vs the key of right vnderſtanding, that ſuch things as belong to the office of the Mediatour, are not ſpokē ſimply of the nature of God, nor of the nature of man. Therfore, Chriſt ſhal reigne til he come forth to iudge ỹ world, inſomuch as he ioyneth vs to his father, according to the ſmale meaſure of our weakeneſſe. But when we beinge made partakers of the heauenly glory, ſhall ſee God ſuch as he is, thē he hauing performed the office of Mediatour, ſhall ceaſſe to be the embaſſadour of his father, & ſhalbe cōtented with that glory which he enioyed before the makinge of the worlde. And the name of Lord doth in no other reſpect peculiarly agree with the perſon of Chriſt, but in this, that it ſignifieth ỹ meane degree betwene God & vs. For which purpoſe maketh ỹ ſaying of Paul: One God, of whom are all things, & one Lord, by whom are all things, euen he to whom the dominiō for a time is cōmitted by the father, vntil his diuine maieſty be to be ſeene face to face. Frō whom ſo far is it of that any thing ſhall decay, by yelding vp

the dominion to his father, that he ſhall become ſo much the more glorious. For then ſhall God alſo ceſſe to be ỹ head of Chriſt becauſe Chriſtes godheade ſhall then ſhine of it ſelfe, whereas yet it is couered with a certaine veile.

4 And this obſeruation ſhall do no ſmall ſeruice to aſſoile many doutes, if the readers do fitly apply it. For it is maruelous how much the vnskilfull, yea ſome not vtterly vnlearned, are combred with ſuch formes of ſpeach, which they ſee ſpoken by Chriſt, which do well agree neither with his godheade nor with his manhoode: becauſe they conſider not that they do agree with his perſon wherin he is ſhewed both God and man, and with the office of Mediatour. And it is alway eaſie to ſee, how well all things hang together, if they haue a ſober expoſitour, to examine ſo great miſteries with ſuch deuout reuerence as they ought to be. But there is nothing that theſe furious and phrentike ſpirites trouble not. They catch hold of thoſe things that are ſpoken of his manhoode, to take away his Godhead: and likewiſe of thoſe things that are ſpoken of his godhead to take away his manhoode: and of thoſe thinges that are ſo ioyntly ſpoken of both natures, that they ſeuerally agree with neither, to take away both. But what is that elſe but to ſay, that Chriſt is not man, becauſe he is God: and that he is not God, becauſe he is man: and that he is neither man nor God, becauſe he is both man and God? We therefore do determine that Chriſt, as he is both God and man, conſiſting of both natures, vnited, though not confounded, is our Lord and the true ſonne of God, euen according to this manhoode, though not by reaſon of his manhoode. For the errour of Neſtorius is to be driuen far away from vs, which when he went about rather to draw in ſunder, than to diſtinguiſh the nature, did by ỹ meane imagine a double Chriſt. Whereas we ſee that the Scripture crieth out with loude voice againſt it, where both the name of the ſonne of God is giuen to him that was borne of the Virgine, & the Virgine her ſelfe is called the mother of our Lorde. We muſt alſo beware of the madneſſe of Eutiches, leaſt while we go about to ſhew the vnity of the perſon, we deſtroy either nature. For we haue already alleaged ſo many teſtimonies, & there are euery where ſo many other to be alleaged, where his Godhead is diſtinguiſhed from his manhoode, as may ſtop the mouthes euen of the moſt contentious, And a litle hereafter I will adioine ſome teſtimonies, to confute better that fained deuiſe, but at this preſent, one place ſhal cõtent vs. Chriſt would not haue called his body a Temple, vnleſſe the Godhead did diſtinctly dwel therin. Wherfore as Neſtorius was worthily condemned in the ſynode at Epheſus, ſo alſo was Eutiches afterward ward condemned in the ſynodes of Conſtantinople and Chalcedon: foraſmuch as it is no more lawfull to confounde the two natures in Chriſt, than it is to draw them in ſunder.

5 But in our age alſo there hath riſen vp no les peſtilent a mõſter, Machaell Seruettus which did thruſt in place of the ſonne of God, a fained thing made of the eſſence of God, of ſpirit, fleſh & three elementes vncreate. And firſt he denieth that Chriſt is by any other way the ſonne of God, but in this that he was begotten of ỹ holy ghoſt in the wombe of the Virgine. But to this ende tendeth his ſuttlety, that the diſtinctiõ of ỹ two natures being once ouerthrowẽ, Chriſt might be thought to be a certaine thing mingled of God & man, & yet neither God nor man. For in his whole proceſſe he trauaileth toward this point, that before Chriſt was opẽly ſhewed in the fleſh, there were only certaine ſhadowiſh figures in God, wherof the trueth or effect then at length was in beinge, when that word which was ordained to that honor, began truely to be the ſonne of God. And we in dede do confeſſe that the Mediatour which is borne of the Virgin, is properly the ſonne of God. For Chriſt in that he is man, could not be the miror of the ineſtimable fauour of God, vnleſſe this dignity were giuen him to be, and be called the onely begotten ſonne of God. But in the meane ſeaſon the definitiõ of the Church ſtandeth ſtedfaſtly grounded, that he is compted the ſonne of God, becauſe he being the Word begotten of the father before all worlds, did by hypoſtatical vnion take vpõ him the nature of man. Now the hypoſtaticall vniõ is called with the olde fathers, that which maketh one perſon of two natures, which phraſe of ſpeach was deuiſed to ouerthrow the doting errour of Neſtorius, becauſe he fained that the ſonne of God did ſo dwell in fleſh, that yet he the ſame was not man. Seruettus ſclaundereth vs, that we make two ſonnes of God when we ſay that the eternall Word was already the ſonne of God before that it was clothed with fleſh, as if we did ſay any thing elſe but that he was manifeſted in the fleſh. Neither doth it follow, that if hé were God before that he was man, he began to be a new God. And no more abſurdity it is to ſay, that the ſonne of God appeared in the fleſh, which yet had this alway from eternall begetting to be the Sonne, which the Angels words to Mary do ſecretly ſhew, That holy thing ỹ ſhall be borne of thee, ſhall be called ỹ ſonne of God: as if he ſhould haue ſayd, that the name of the Sonne which was obſcure in time of the law, ſhould now become famous and euery where knowen abroade. Wherewith agreeth that ſaying of Paul, Ro. 8.15 that now by Chriſt we are the children of God, freely & with boldneſſe to crie Abba, Father. But were not the holy fathers in the olde time alſo accompted amonge the children of God? Yea: and bearing them bold vpon that intereſt, they called vpon God by name of their Father. But becauſe ſince ỹ only begotten ſonne of God was brought forth into the world, the heauenly fatherhode is become more plainly knowen: therefore Paul aſſigneth this, as it were, a priuilege to the kingdom of Chriſt. But yet this is ſtadfaſtly to be holdē, that God neuer was father either to Angels or men, but in reſpect of the only begotten ſonne: and that men ſpecially, whom their owne wickedneſſe maketh hateful to God, are his children by free adoption becauſe he is the ſonne of God by nature. And there is no cauſe why Seruettus ſhould cauill, that this hangeth vpon filiatiō or becomming a ſonne, which God had determined with himſelf: becauſe our purpoſe is not heare to ſpeake of the figures howe the expiation was ſhewed in the bloud of beaſtes: but becauſe they could not in dede be the childrē of God, vnleſſe their adoption were grounded vpon ỹ head, it is without reaſon to take that from the head which is common to all the members. I go yet further: Whereas the Scripture calleth the Angels the ſonnes of God, whoſe ſo great dignity did not hang vpon the redēption to come: yet muſt it needes be, that the ſonne is in order before them, which maketh the father to be their father. I will repeate it againe ſhortly, & adde the ſame of mankinde. Sith from at their firſt beginning both Angels and men were created, with this condition, that God ſhould be common father to them both, if that ſaying of Paule be true, that Chriſt was alway the head & the firſt begottē of all creatures, to haue the firſt degree in all: I thinke I do rightly gather that he was alſo the ſonne of God before the creation of the world.

Pſa. 82. 7.

Colo. 1. 15.

6 But if his Filiation (if I may ſo terme it) began ſince he was manifeſted in the fleſh, it ſhall follow, that he was alſo ſonne in reſpect of his nature of man. Seruettus and other ſuch frentike men would haue it, that Chriſt which appeared in ỹ fleſh, is the ſonne of God, becauſe out of the fleſh he coulde not be called by that name. Now let them anſwere me whether he be the ſonne according to both natures, and in reſpect of both. So in deede they prate, but Paule teacheth farre otherwiſe. We graunt in deede, that Chriſt is in the fleſh of man called the Sonne, but not as the faithfull are, that is by adoption only and grace, but the true and naturall, and therefore only ſonne, that by this marke he may be diſcerned from all other. For God voutſaueth to giue the name of his ſonnes to vs, that are regenerate into a new life: but the name of the true and only begotten ſonne, he giueth to Chriſt only. How can he be the only ſonne in ſo great a number of brethrē, but becauſe he poſſeſſeth that by nature, which we haue receiued by

gift? And ỹ honor we extende to the whole person of the Mediatour, that he be truely & properly the Sonne of God, which was also borne of the Virgine, & offered himselfe for sacrifice to his father vpon the crosse: but yet in respect of his Godheade, as Paule teacheth, when he sayth, he was seuered out to preach the Gospell of God, which he had before promised of his sonne, which was begotten of the seede of Dauid according to his flesh, and declared the sonne of God in power. But why, whē he nameth him distinctly the sonne of Dauid according to the flesh, should he seuerally say, that he was declared the Sonne of God, vnlesse he meant to shew that this did hang vpō some other thinge, than vpon the very flesh? For in the same sense in an other place he sayth, that he suffered by the weakenesse of the flesh, and rose againe by the power of the spirite, euen so in this place he maketh a difference of both natures. Truly they must needes graunt, that as he hath that of his mother for which he is called the Sonne of Dauid, so he hath that of his Father for which he is called the Sonne of God: and the same is an other thing and seuerall from the nature of man. The Scripture giueth him two names, callinge him here & there sometimes the Sonne of God, and somtimes the Sonne of Man. Of the second there can be no cōtention moued: but according to the common vse of the Hebrue tongue he is called the Sonne of mā, because he is of the offspring of Adā. By the contraty I affirme, that he is called the Sonne of God in respect of the Godhead & eternall essence: because it is no lesse meete that it be referred to the nature of God, that he is called the Sonne of God, than to the nature of man, that he is called the Sonne of Man. Againe, in ỹ same place that I alleaged, Paul doth meane that he which was according to the flesh begotten of the seede of Dauid, was no otherwise declared the Sonne of God in power, thā he teacheth in an other place, that Christ which accordinge to the flesh descended of the Iewes, is God blessed for euer. Now if in both places the distinctiō of the double nature be touched, by what right wil they say, that he which according to ỹ flesh is the Sonne of Man, is not also the Sonne of God, in respect of the nature of God.

Rom. 1.2. 2. Cor. 13.4. Ro. 9.5.

7 They do in dede disorderly enforce for the maintenāce of their errour, the place where it is sayd, ỹ God spared not his owne Sonne: & where the Angell commaunded, that the very same he that should be borne of ỹ Virgine, should be called the Sonne of the highest. But, least they should glory in so fickle an obiection, let them wey with vs a litle, how strongly they reason. For if it be rightly concluded, that from his conception he beganne to be the Sonne of God, because he

Rom. 8. 32. Lu. 1. 32

that is conceiued is called the Sonne of God, then shall it follow, that
1. Ioh. 1. 1. he began to be the word at his manifesting in the flesh, because Iohn sayth, that he bringeth them tidinges of the Word of life, which his handes haue handeled. Likewise that, which is reade in the Prophet:
Mic. 5. 2 Thou Bethleem in the lande of Iuda, art a litle one in thousandes of Iuda: Out of thee shall be borne to me a guide to rule my people Israel, and his comming forth from the beginning, from the daies of eternity. How will they be compelled to expounde this, if they will be content to follow such manner of reasoning? For I haue protested, that we do not agre with Nestorius, which imagined a double Christ: whereas by our doctrine, Christ hath made vs the sonnes of God with him, by right of brotherly conioyninge, because he is the only begotten sonne of God in the flesh which he tooke of vs. And Augustine doth wisely admonish vs, that this is a bright glasse, wherein to behold the marueilous and singular fauour of God, that he attained honor in respect that he is man which he coulde not deserue. Therfore Christ was adorned with this excellency euen according to the flesh frō the wombe of his mother, to be the Sonne of God. Yet is there not in the vnity of person to be fained such a mixture, as may take away that which is proper to the Godheade. For it is no more absurdity, that the eternall word of God and Christ, by reason of the two natures vnited into one person, be diuerse wayes called the Sonne of God, than that he be accordinge to diuerse respectes, called sometime the Sonne of God, and sometime the sonne of Man. And no more doth that other cauillation of Seruettus accomber vs: that before that Christ appeared in the flesh, he is no where called the Sonne of God, but vnder a figure, because although the describing of him, thē was somewhat darke: yet where as it is already clerely proued that he was no otherwise eternall God, but because he was the word begotten of the eternall father, and that this name doth no otherwise belonge to the person of the Mediatour which he hath taken vpon him, but because he is God openly shewed in the flesh: and that God the Father hath not bin called Father from the beginning, Ep. 3. 15 if there had not then bin a mutuall relation to the Sonne, by whome all kinred or fatherhood is reckened in heauen and in earth: hereby it is easie to gather, that euen in the time of the law and the Prophets, he was the Sonne of God, before that this name was commōly knowen in the Church. But if they striue onely about the onely word, Salomon discoursing of the infinite highnesse of God, affirmeth as well his Sonne as himselfe to be incomprehensible. Tell his name if rant, that with the contentious this testimony will not be of sufficient force: neither do I much grounde vpon it, sauing that it sheweth that they do maliciously cauill, that deny Christ to be the Sonne of God, but in this respect that he was made man. Beside that, all the oldest wryters with one mouth and consent haue openly testified the same: so that their shamelesnesse is no lesse worthy to be scorned than to be abhorred, which dare obiect Ireneus & Tertulliá against vs, both which do confesse that the Sonne of God was inuisible, which afterward appeared visible.
Pro. 30. 4. thou canst (sayth he) or the name of his sonne. Yet I am not ignorant

8 But although Seruettus hath heaped vp horrible monstruous deuises, which paraduenture the other woulde not allow: yet if ye presse them hard, ye shall perceiue that all they that do not acknowledge Christ to be the sonne of God but in the flesh, do graunt it only in this respect, that he was conceiued in the wombe of the Virgin by the holy Ghost, like as the Maniches in olde time did foolishly affirme, that man hath his soule (as it were) by deriuation from God, because they reade that God breathed into Adam the breath of life. For they take so fast hold of ỹ name of Sonne, that they leaue no difference betwene the natures, but babble disorderly, that Christ being man, is the Sonne of God, because according to his nature of man, he is begotten of God. So the eternall begetting of Wisdom, that Salomon speaketh of, is destroied, and there is no accompt made of the Godheade in the Mediatour, or a fantasied Ghost is thrust in place of the Manhoode. It were in deede profitable to confute the grosser deceites of Seruettus, wherewith he hath bewitched himselfe and some other, to the ende that the Godly readers admonished by this example, may hold themselues within the compasse of sobernes and modesty: sauing that I thinke it should be superfluous, because I haue already done it in a booke by it selfe. The summe of them commeth to this effect, that the Sonne of God, was a forme in minde from the beginning, and euen then he was before appointed to be man that should be the essentiall image of God. And he doth acknowledge no other Word of God, but in outward shew. This he expoundeth to be the begetting of him, that there was begotten in God from the beginning a will to begette a Sonne, which also in act extended to the nature it selfe. In the meane time he confoundeth the Spirite with the Word, for that God distributed the inuisible Word and the Spirite into flesh and soule. Finally the figuration of Christ, hath with them the place of begetting, but he saith, that he which then was but a shadowish sonne in forme, was at length begotten by the word, to which he assigneth the office of seede. Whereby it shall follow that Ecc. 24. 14.

hoges and dogs are as well the children of God, becauſe they were create of the originall ſeede of the word of God. For although he compound Chriſt of three vncreate elements to make him begotten of the eſſence of God, yet he faineth that he is ſo the firſt begotten among creatures, that the ſame eſſentiall godheade is in ſtones, according to their degree. And leaſt he ſhould ſeeme to ſtrippe Chriſt out of his godhead, he affirmeth that his fleſh is conſubſtantial with God, and that the Word was made man by turninge the fleſh into God. So while he can not conceiue Chriſt to be the Sonne of God, vnleſſe his fleſh came from the eſſence of God, and were turned into godhead, he bringeth the eternall perſon of the Word to nothinge, and taketh from vs the ſonne of Dauid, that was promiſed to be the Redeemer. He oft repeateth this, that the Sonne was begotten of God by knowledge and predeſtination, and that at length he was made man of that matter which at the beginning ſhined with God in the three elementes, which afterward appeared in the firſt light of the worlde, in the cloude and in the piller of fire. Now how ſhamefully he ſometime diſagreeth with himſelfe, it were too tedious to rehearſe. By this ſhorte recitall the readers that haue their ſounde witte may gather, that with the circumſtances of this vncleane dogge the hope of ſaluation is vtterly extinguiſhed. For if the fleſh were the godheade it ſelfe, it ſhoulde ceaſſe to be the temple thereof. And none can be our redemer, but he that begotten of the ſeede of Abraham and Dauid, is accordinge to the fleſh, truely made man. And he wrongefully ſtandeth vpon the wordes of Iohn, that the Word was made fleſh. for as they reſiſt the errour of Neſtorius, ſo they nothing further this wicked inuention, whereof Eutiches was author, foraſmuch as the only purpoſe of the Euangeliſt was to defend the vnity of perſons in the two natures.

The. xv. Chapter.

That we may know, to what end Chriſt was ſent of his Father, and what he brought vs: three things are principally to be conſidered in him, his Prophetical office, his Kingdom, and his Prieſthoode.

Enchir. ad Laurent. ca. 5.

AVguſtine ſaith rightly, that although the Heretikes do bragge of the name of Chriſt, yet they haue not all one foundation with the godly, but that it remaineth onely proper to the Church. For if theſe thinges be diligently conſidered, that belong to Chriſt. Chriſt ſhall be founde among them onely in name, and not in very deede. So at this day the Papiſtes, although the name of the Sonne of God redemer of the worlde, ſounde in their mouth:

mouth: yet becauſe being contented with vaine pretenſe of the name, they ſpoile him of his power and dignity: this ſayinge of Paule may be well ſpoken of them, that they haue not the head. Therefore, that faith may finde ſounde matter of ſaluation in Chriſt, and ſo reſt in him, this principle is to be ſtabliſhed, that the office which is committed to him by his Father, conſiſteth of three partes. For he is giuen both a Prophet, a King, and a Prieſt. Albeit, it were but ſmall profite to know thoſe names, without knowledge of the ende and vſe of them. For they are alſo named amonge the Papiſtes, but coldly and to no great profite, where it is not knowen what eche of theſe titles cõtaineth in it. We haue ſaid before, how, though God ſending Prophets by continual courſe one after an other did neuer leaue his people deſtitute of profitable doctrine, and ſuch as was ſufficient to ſaluation: that yet the mindes of the godly hadde alway this perſuaſion, that full light of vnderſtandinge was to be hoped for onely at the comminge of Meſſias: yea and the opinion thereof was come, euen to the Samaritans, who yet neuer knew the true religion, as appeareth by the ſayinge of the woman: When Meſſias commeth, he ſhall teach vs all thinges. And the Iewes had not raſhly gathered this vpon preſumptions in their mindes: But as they were taught by aſſured oracles, ſo they beleued. Notable amonge the other is that ſaying of Eſay: Behold, I haue made him a witneſſe to peoples, I haue giuen him to be a guide and Schoolemaiſter to peoples: euen as in an other place he had called him ỹ Angell or interpreter of the great counſel. After this maner the Apoſtle commending the perfection of the doctrine of the goſpell, after that he had ſayd, that God in the old time ſpake to the Fathers by the Prophetes diuerſly, and vnder manifolde figures, addeth that laſt of all he ſpake vnto vs by his beloued Sonne. But becauſe it was the common office of the Prophetes to keepe the Church in ſuſpenſe, and to vphold it vntill the comming of the Mediatour, therfore we reade that in their ſcattering abroade, the faithfull cõplained that they were depriued of that ordinary benefite, ſaying: We ſee not our tokens: there is not a Prophet amonge vs: there is no more any that hath knowledge. But when Chriſt was now not farre of, there was a time appoynted to Daniell to ſeale vp the viſion and the Prophet, not onely that the Prophecie, which is there ſpoken of, ſhoulde be ſtabliſhed in aſſured credit, but alſo that the faithfull ſhoulde learne with contented minde to want the Prophetes for a time, becauſe the fulneſſe and cloſing vp of all reuelations was at hand.

belongeth to these three offices. For we know that in the time of the law, as well the Prophetes as Priestes and Kings were anointed with holy oyle. For which cause the renoumed name of Messias was geuen to the promised Mediatour. But though in deede I confesse (as I haue also declared in an other place,) that he was called Messias by peculiar consideration and respect of his kingdome: yet the annoyntinges in respect of the office of Prophet & of priest, haue their place, and are not to be neglected of vs. Of the first of these two is expresse Esa. 5. 1 mention made in Esay, in these words: The spirit of the Lord Iehoua vpon me. Therfore the Lord hath anointed me, that I should preach to the meeke, should bring health to the contrite in heart, should declare deliuerance to captiues, shoulde publish the yeare of good will. &c. We see that he was anoynted with the Spirit, to be the publisher and witnesse of the grace of the Father. And that not after the common manner: for he is seuered from other teachers, that had the like office. And here againe is to be noted, that he tooke not the anointing for himselfe alone, that he might execute the office of teaching, but for his whole body, that in his continuall preachinge of the Gospell, the vertue of the Spirite shoulde ioine withall. But in the meane time this remaineth certaine, that by this perfectiō of doctrine which he hath brought, an ende is made of all prophecies: so that they do diminish his authority, that beinge not content with the Gospell, do patch any foraine thinge vnto it. For that voice which thundered
Mat. 3. 17. from heauen, saying: This is my beloued Sonne, heare him: hath auaunced him by singular priuilege aboue the degrees of all other. Then, this oyntment is poured abroade from the head vnto all the Ioel. 2. 28. members: as it was forespoken by Ioel: Your children shall prophecie, and your daughters shall see visions. &c. But where Paule sayth, that
1. Cor 1 30. he was giuen vs vnto wisdom: and in an other place, that in him are
Col. 2. 3 hidden all the treasures of knowledge and vnderstandinge: this hath somewhat an other meaninge: that is, that out of him there is nothinge profitable to knowe, and that they which by faith perceaue what he is, haue comprehended the whole infiniteneſſe of heauenly good thinges. For which cause he wryteth in an other place: I haue
1. Cor 2 2. compted it precious to know nothing, but Iesus Christ, and him crucified: which is most true, becaufe it is not lawfull to passe beyonde the simplicity of the Gospell. And hereunto tendeth the dignity of a Prophetes office in Christ, that we might know that in the summe of the doctrine, which he hath taught, are contained all pointes of perfect wisdom.

3 Now come I to his kingdome, of which were vayne to speake,

if

if the readers were not first warned, that the nature thereof is spirituall. For thereby is gathered, both to what purpose it serueth, and what it auaileth vs, and the whole force and eternitie therof, and also the eternitie which in Daniel the Angell doth attribute to the person of Christ: and againe the Angell in Luke doth worthily applie to the saluation of the people. But that is also double or of two sortes, for the one belongeth to the whole bodie of the Church, the other is propre to euery membre. To the first is to be referred that which is said in the Psalme: I haue ones sworne by my holinesse to Dauid, I will not lie, his seede shall abide for euer, his seate shall be as the Sunne in my sight, it shall be stablished as the Moone for euer, and a faithfull witnesse in heauen. Neither is it doubtfull, but that God doth there promise, that he wil be by the hande of his sonne an eternall gouerner and defender of his Church. For the true performance of this prophecie can be founde no where els but in Christ: for asmuch as immediatly after the death of Salomon, the greater parte of the dignitie of the kingdome fell away, and was to the dishonour of the house of Dauid conueyed ouer to a priuate man, and afterwarde by litle and litle was diminished, till at length it came to vtter decaie with heauy and shamefull destruction. And the same meaning hath that exclamation of Esaie: Who shall shewe forth his generation? For he so pronounceth that Christ shall remaine aliue after death, that he ioyneth him with his membres. Therefore, so oft as we heare that Christ is armed with eternall power, let vs remembre that the euerlasting continuance of the Church is vpholden by this support, to remaine still safe amõg the troublesome tossinges, wherewith it is continually vexed, and among the greuous and terrible motions that threaten innumerable destructions. So when Dauid scorneth the boldnesse of his enemies, that go about to breake the yoke of God and of Christ, and saith, that the kinges and peoples raged in vaine, bycause he that dwelleth in heauen is strong enough to breake their violent assaultes: he assureth the Godly of the continuall preseruatiõ of the Church, and encourageth them to hope well so oft as it happeneth to be oppressed. So in an other place, when he saith in the person of God: sit on my right hande, till I make thine enemies thy foote stoole: he warneth vs, that how many and strong enemies so euer do conspire to besiege the Church, yet they haue not strẽgth enough to preuaile against that vnchangeable decree of God, whereby he hath apointed his sonne an eternall kinge: wherevpon it followeth, that it is impossible that the Deuell with all the preparation of the worlde, may be able at any time to destroy the Church, which is grouded vpon the eternall seate of Christ. Now for so much as concerneth the speciall vse of euery one, the very same eternal cõtinuance ought to raise vs vp to hope of immortality. For we see, that whatsoeuer is earthly and of the worlde, endureth but for a time, yea and is very fraile. Therefore Christ, to lift vp our hope vnto heauen, pronounceth that his kingdome is not of this worlde. Finally, when any of vs heareth, that the kingdome of Christ is spirituall, let him be raised vp with this saying, and let him pearce to the hope of a better life: and whereas he is nowe defended by the hande of Christ, let him looke for the full frute of this grace in the worlde to come.

Psal. 110

Ioh. 18. 36.

4 That, as we haue saide, the force and profite of the kingedome of Christ can not otherwise be perceiued by vs, but when we knowe it to be spirituall, appeareth sufficiently though it were but by this, that while we must liue in warfare vnder the crosse, during the whole course of our life, our estate is harde and miserable: what then should it profit vs to be gathered together vnder the dominion of a heauenly king, vnlesse we were certaine to enioy the frute thereof out of the state of this earthly life? And therefore it is to be knowen, that whatsoeuer felicitie is promised vs in Christ, it consisteth not in outwarde commodities, that we shoulde leade a merry and quiet life, florish in wealth, be assured from all harmes, and flowe full of those delitefull thinges that the flesh is wont to desire, but that it wholy belongeth to the heauenly life. But as in the worlde the prosperous and desired state of the people is partely mainteined by plentie of good thinges and peace at home, and partly by strong forceable defenses, whereby it may be safe against outwarde violence: so Christ also doth enriche his with all thinges necessarie to eternall saluation of soules, and fortifieth them with strength, by which they may stande inuincible against all assaultes of spirituall enemies. Whereby we gather, that he reigneth more for vs than for himselfe, and that both within & without: that being furnished, so farre as God knoweth to be expediẽt for vs, with the giftes of the spirite, whereof we are naturally empty, we may by these first frutes perceiue that we are truely ioyned to God vnto perfect blessednesse. And then, that bearing vs bolde vpon the power of the same spirit, we may not doubt that we shall alway haue the victorie against the Deuill, the worlde, and euery kinde of hurtefull thing. To this purpose tẽdeth the aunswere of Christ to the Pharises, that because the kingdome of God is within vs, it shal not come with obseruation. For it is likely that because he professed that he was the same king, vnder whome the soueraigne blessing of God was to be hoped for, they in scorne required him to shew forth his signes.

Luc. 17. 20.

But he, bycause they (who otherwise are to much bent to the earth) should not foolishly rest vpon worldly pompes, biddeth thē to enter into their owne consciēces, bycause the kingdome of God is righteousnesse, peace and ioy in the holy Ghost. Hereby we are briefely taught, what the kingdome of Christ auaileth vs. For, bycause it is not earthly or fleshly, subiect to corruption, but spirituall: he lifteth vs vp euen to eternall life, that we may patiently passe ouer this life in miseries, hunger, colde, contempt, reproches, and other greues, contented with this one thing, that our king will neuer leaue vs destitute, but succour vs in our necessities, till hauing ended our warre, we be called to triumph. For such is his maner of reigning, to communicate with vs all that he hath receiued of his father. Nowe whereas he armeth and furnisheth vs with power, and garnisheth vs with beautie and magnificence, enricheth vs with wealth: hereby is ministred vnto vs most plentifull matter to glorie vpon, and also bolde courage to fight without feare against the Deuill, sinne and death. Finally, that clothed with his righteousnesse, we may valiantly ouercome all the reproches of the worlde, and as he liberally filleth vs with his giftes, so we againe for our parte, may bring forth frute to his glorie. Ro. 14. 17.

5 Therefore his kingly anointing is set forth vnto vs, not done with oyle or ointmētes made with spices, but he is called the anointed of God, because vpon him hath rested the spirit of wisdome, vnderstanding, counsell, strength and feare of God. This is the oyle of gladnesse, wherewith the Psalme reporteth that he was annointed aboue his fellowes, because if there were not such excellencie in him, we should be all needy and hungry. For, as it is already said, he is not priuatly enriched for him selfe, but to poure his plenty vpō vs being hungry and drie. For as it is said, that the father gaue the spirite to his sonne, not by measure, so there is expressed a reason why, that all we should receiue of his fulnesse, and grace for grace. Out of which fountaine floweth that liberall geuing, whereof Paule maketh mention, whereby grace is diuersly distributed to the faithfull, according to the measure of the gift of Christ. Hereby is that which I said, sufficiently confirmed, that the kingdome of Christ consisteth in the spirit, not in earthly delites or pompes, and therefore we must forsake the worlde that we may be partakers of it. A visible signe of this holy anointing was shewed in the baptisme of Christ, when the holy Ghost rested vpon him in the likenesse of a doue. That the holy Ghost and his gifts are meante by the worde Anointing, ought to seeme neither nouelties nor absurditie. For we are none other way quickened, specially for so much as concerneth the heauenly life: there is no droppe of liuely Ioh. 3. 34. Ioh. 1. 16. Eph. 4. 7 Iohn. 1. 32. Luc. 3. 22.

force in vs, but that which the holy Ghoſt poureth into vs, which hath choſen his ſeate in Chriſt, that from thenſe the heauenly richeſſe might largely flowe out vnto vs, whereof we are ſo needy. And whereas both the faithfull ſtande inuincible by the ſtrength of their king, and alſo his ſpirituall richeſſe plenteouſly flowe out vnto them, they are not vnworthily called Chriſtians. But this eternitie whereof we haue ſpoken, is nothing derogate by that ſaying of Paule: Then he ſhall yelde vp the kingdome to God and the Father. Againe: The ſonne him ſelfe ſhall be made ſubiecte, that God may be all in all thinges: for his meaning is nothing els, but that in that ſame perfect glorie, the adminiſtration of the kingedome ſhall not be ſuch as it is now. For the father hath geuen all power to the ſonne, that by the ſonnes hande he may gouerne, cheriſh and ſuſteine vs, defende vs vnder his ſauegarde, and helpe vs. So while for a litle time we are wauering abroad from God, Chriſt is the meane betweene God and vs, by litle and litle to bring vs to perfect comioyning with God. And truely, whereas he ſitteth on the right hande of the father, that is as much in effect, as if he were called the fathers deputee, vnder whome is the whole power of his dominion, bycauſe it is Gods will to rule and defende his Church by a meane (as I may ſo call it) in the perſon of his Sonne. As alſo Paule doth expounde it in the firſt chapiter to the Epheſians, that he was ſet at the right hande of the father, to be the heade of the Church, which is his body. And to no other meaning tendeth that which he teacheth in an other place, that there is geuen him a name aboue all names, that in the name of Ieſus all knees ſhould bow, and all tongues confeſſe that it is to the glorie of God the Father. For euen in the ſame wordes alſo he ſetteth out in the kingdome of Chriſt an ordre neceſſarie for our preſente weakeneſſe. So Paule gathereth rightly, that God ſhall then be by him ſelfe the onely head of the Church, bycauſe Chriſtes office in defending of the Church, ſhall be fulfilled. For the ſame reaſon the Scripture commonly calleth him Lorde, bycauſe his Father did ſet him ouer vs to this ende, to exerciſe his owne Lordely power by him. For though there be many lordeſhippes in the worlde, yet is there to vs but one God the father, of whome are all thinges and we in him, and one Lord Chriſt, by whome are all thinges and we by him, ſaith Paule. Wherevpon is rightly gathered that he is the ſelfe ſame God, which by the mouth of Eſaie affirmed him ſelfe to be the kinge and the lawemaker of the Church. For though he do euery where call all the power that he hath, the benefit and gifte of the Father, yet he meaneth nothing els, but that he reigneth by power of

God:

God: bycause he hath therfore put on ỹ personage of the Mediator, that descendinge from the bosome & incomprehensible glory of the father, he might approch nie vnto vs. And so much more rightfull it is, that we be with all consent prepared to obey, and that with great chereſulnesse we direct our obediences to his commaundement. For as he ioyneth the offices of king and pastor toward them that willingely yeelde themselues obedient: so on the other side we heare that he beareth an yron scepter, to breake and broose all the obstinate like potters vessels: we heare also that he shalbe the iudge of nations, to couer the earth with deade corpses, and to ouerthrowe the heigth that standeth against him. Of which thing there are some examples seene at this day: but the full proufe thereof shalbe at the last iudgement, which may also properly be accompted the last act of his kingdome. Psal. 2. 9. Psa. 110 6.

6 Concerning his Priesthood, thus it is briefly to be holden, that the ende and vse of it is, that he shoulde be a Mediator pure from all spotte, that shoulde by his holinesse reconcile vs to God. But bycause the iuste curse possesseth the entrie, and God according to his office of iudge is bente against ys, it is necessarie that some expiation be vsed, that he being a priest may procure fauour for vs, to appease the wrath of God. Wherefore, that Christ might fulfill this office, it behoued that he shoulde come forth with a sacrifice. For in the lawe it was not lawefull for the priest to entre into the sanctuarie without bloud, that the faithfull might know, that though there were a priest become meane for vs to make intercession, yet God coulde not be made fauourable to vs before that our sinnes were purged. Vpō which point the Apostle discourseth largely in the epistle to the Hebrues, from the seuenth chapiter almost to the ende of the tenth. But the summe of all commeth to this effect, that the honour of priesthoode can be applied to none but to Christ, which by the sacrifice of his death hath wiped away our giltinesse, & satisfied for our sinnes. But how weighty a matter it is, we are enfourmed by that solemne othe of God, which was spoken without repentance: Thou art a priest for euer, according to the ordre of Melchisedech. For without doubt his will was to establish that principall pointe, which he knewe to be the chiefe iointe wherevpon our saluation hanged. For, as it is said, there is no way open for vs or for our prayers to God, vnlesse our filthinesse being purged, the priestes do sanctifie vs and obteine grace for vs, from which the vncleanesse of our wicked doinges and sinnes doth debarre vs. So do we see, that we must beginne at the death of Christ, that the efficacie and profite of his Priesthoode may come vnto vs. Psa. 110 4.

Of this it followeth that he is an eternall intercessor, by whose mediation we obteine fauour, whervpon againe ariseth not only affiance to pray, but also quietnesse to godly consciences, while they safely leane vpon the fatherly tenderneſſe of God, and are certainly perswaded that it pleaseth him whatsoeuer is dedicated to him by the Mediator. But whereas in the time of the lawe, God commaunded sacrifices of beastes to be offered to him: there was an other and a new ordre in Christ, that one should be both the sacrificed host, & ỹ Priest: because there neither could be found any other meete satisfactiō for sinnes, nor any was worthy so great honour to offer vp to God his onely begotten sonne. Now Christ beareth the person of a priest, not onely by eternall meane of reconciliation to make the Father fauourable & mercifull vnto vs, but also to bring vs into the felowship of so great an honour. For we that are defiled in our selues, yet being made Reue. 1. 6. Priestes in him do offer vp our selues, & all ours to God, & do freely enter into ỹ heauēly sanctuarie, that al the sacrifice of prayer & praise that come from vs, may be acceptable & sweete smelling in the sight of God. And thus farre doth that saying of Christ extende: For their
Ioh. 17. 15. sakes I sanctifie my selfe: because, hauing his holinesse poured vpon vs, in as much as he hath offered vs with himselfe to his father, we that otherwise do stinke before him, do please him as pure & cleane, yea and holy. Herevnto serueth the anointing of the sanctuarie, Dani. 9. 24. whereof mention is made in Daniell. For the comparison of contrarietie is to be noted betweene this anointing, and that shadowish anointing that then was in vse: as if the Angell should haue said, that the shadowes being driuen away, there should be a cleere priesthod in the person of Christ. And so much more detestable is their inuention, which not contented with the sacrifice of Christ, haue presumed to thrust in them selues to kill him: which is daily enterprised among the Papistes, where the Masse is reckened a sacrificing of Christ.

The xvj. Chapter.

Howw Christ hath fulfilled the office of Redeemer, to purchace saluation for vs, VVherein is intreated of his Death, and Resurrection, and his Ascending into Heauen.

ALL that we haue hetherto saide of Christ, is to be directed to this marke, that being damned, dead, and lost in our selues, we may seeke for righteousnesse, deliuerance, life and saluation in him: as we be taught by that notable saying of Peter,
Act. 4. 12. that there is none other name vnder heauen geuen to men wherein they must be saued. Neither was the name of Iesus geuen him vn-

aduiſedly, or at chaúſable aduẽture, or by the will of men, but brought from heauen by the Angell the publiſher of Gods decree, and with a reaſon alſo aſſigned: becauſe he was ſent to ſaue the people from their ſinnes. In which wordes that is to be noted, which we haue touched in an other place, that the office of redeemer was appointed him, that he ſhoulde be our Sauiour: but in the meane time our redemption ſhould be but vnperfect, vnleſſe he ſhoulde by continuall procedinges conuey vs forwarde to the vttermoſt marke of ſaluation. Therefore, ſo ſone as we ſwarue neuer ſo litle from him, our ſaluation by litle and litle vaniſheth away, which wholy reſteth in him: ſo that all they wilfully ſpoile them ſelues of all grace, that reſte not in him. And that admonition of Bernarde is worthy to be rehearſed, that the name of Ieſus is not only light, but alſo meate, yea and oile alſo, without which all the meate of the ſoule is drie, and that it is alſo ſalte without the ſeaſonning whereof all that is ſet before vs is vnſauorie. Finally, that it is hony in the mouth, melodie in the eare, and ioyfulneſſe in the hearte, and alſo medicine, and that whatſoeuer is ſpoken in diſputation is vnſauory, but where this name ſoundeth. But here it behoueth to weye diligently, how ſaluation is purchaſed by him for vs: that we may not onely be perſwaded that he is the author of it, but alſo embracing ſuch things as are ſufficient to the ſtedfaſt vpholdinge of our faith, we may refuſe all ſuch thinges as might drawe vs away hether or thether. For ſith no man can deſcende into him ſelfe, and earneſtly conſider what he is, but feeling God angry and bent againſt him, he hath neede carefully to ſeeke a meane and way to appeaſe him, which demaundeth ſatisfaction: there is no common aſſuredneſſe required, becauſe the wrath and curſe of God lieth alwaie vpon ſinners, til they be looſe from their giltineſſe: who, as he is a righteous iudge. ſuffereth not his lawe to be broken without puniſhment, but is ready armed to reuenge it.

Matt. 1. 21. Luk. 1. 31.

2 But before we goe any further, it is to be ſeene by the way, how it agreeth together, that God which preuented vs with his mercie, was our enemie vntil he was reconciled to vs by Chriſt. For how, could he haue geuen vs in his only begotten Sonne a ſingular pledge of his loue, vnleſſe he had already before that embraced vs with his free fauour? Bycauſe therefore here ariſeth ſome ſeeming of contrarietie, I will firſt vndo this knot. The holy Ghoſt commonly ſpeaketh after this maner in the Scriptures, that God was enemie to men, till they were reſtored into fauour by the death of Chriſt: that they were accurſed till their iniquitie was purged by his ſacrifice: that they were ſeuered from God, till they were receyued into a conioyning by his body. Such maner of phraſes are applied to our capacitie, that we may the better vnderſtand how miſerable and wretched our eſtate is being out of Chriſt. For if it were not ſpoken in expreſſe wordes, that the wrath and vengeance of God, and euerlaſting death did reſt vpon vs, we woulde leſſe acknowledge how miſerable we ſhoulde be without Gods mercie, and woulde leſſe regarde the benefit of deliuerance. As for example. If a man heare this ſpoken to him: If God, at ſuch time as thou waſt yet a ſinner, had hated thee, and caſt thee away as thou hadſt deſerued, thou ſhouldeſt haue ſuffered horrible deſtruction: but becauſe he hath willingly and of his owne free kindeneſſe kept thee in fauour, & not ſuffred thee to be eſtrãged frõ him, he hath ſo deliuered thee from that perill: truely he will be moued with, and in ſome parte feele how much he oweth to the mercie of God. But if he heare on the other ſide that which the Scripture teacheth, that he was by ſinne eſtraunged from God, the heir of wrath, ſubiect to the curſe of eternall death, excluded from all hope of ſaluation, a ſtranger from all bleſſing of God, the bondeſlaue of Satan, captiue vnder the yoke of ſinne. Finally, ordeined vnto and already entangled with horrible deſtruction, that in this caſe Chriſt became an interceſſor to entreat for him, that Chriſt toke vpon him and ſuffered the puniſhment which by the iuſt iudgement of God did hang ouer all ſinners, that he hath purged with his bloude thoſe euils that made them hatefull to God, that by this expiation is ſufficient ſatisfaction and ſacrifice made to God the father: that by this interceſſor his wrath was appeaſed: that within this foundation reſteth the peace betwene God and men: that vpon this bonde is conteined his good will towarde them: ſhall not he be ſo much the more moued with theſe, as it is more liuely repreſented, out of how great miſerie he hath bene deliuered? In a ſumme: becauſe our minde can neither deſirouſly enough take holde of life in the mercy of God, nor receiue it with ſuch thãkefulneſſe as we ought, but when it is before ſtriken and throwne downe with the feare of the wrath of God and dreade of eternall death, we are ſo taught by holy Scripture, that without Chriſt we may ſee God in maner wrathfully bent againſt vs, and his hande armed to our deſtruction: and that we may embrace his goodwill and fatherly kindneſſe no otherwhere, but in Chriſt.

3 And although this be ſpoken according to the weakeneſſe of our capacitie, yet is it not falſely ſaide. For God which is the higheſt righteouſneſſe, can not loue wickedneſſe which he ſeeth in vs all. Therefore we all haue in vs that, which is worthy of the hatred of God. Therefore in reſpect of our corrupted nature, and then of euill

life added vnto it, truely we are all in displeasure of God, gilty in his sight, and borne to damnation of hell. But because the Lord will not lose that which is his in vs, he findeth yet somewhat that he of his goodnesse may loue. For howsoeuer we be sinners by our owne fault, yet we remaine his creatures. Howesoeuer we haue purchaced death to our selues, yet he made vs vnto life. So is he moued by meere and free louing of vs, to receiue vs into fauour. But sith there is a perpetuall and vnappeasable disagreement betweene righteousnesse and iniquitie, so long as we remaine sinners, he can not receiue vs wholy. Therfore, that taking away all matter of disagreement, he might wholy reconcile vs vnto him, he doth by expiation set forth in the death of Christ, take away whatsoeuer euill is in vs, that we, which before weare vncleane and vnpure, may now appeare rightuous and holy in his sight. Therefore God the Father doth with his loue preuent and go before our reconciliation in Christ: yea, bycause he first loued vs, therefore he afterwarde doth reconcile vs vnto himselfe. But bycause, vntill Christ with his death come to succour vs, there remaineth wickednesse in vs, which deserueth Gods indignation, and is accursed and damned in his sight, therefore we are not fully and firmely ioyned to God, vntill Christ do ioyne vs. Therefore if we will assure our selues to haue God made well pleased and fauourable vnto vs, we must fasten our eyes and mindes vpon Christ onely: as in deede we obteine by him onely, that our sinnes be not imputed to vs, the imputing whereof, draweth with it the wrath of God. 1. Iohn. 4. 19.

4 And for this reason Paule saith, that the same loue, wherewith God embraced vs before the creation of the worlde, was stayed and grounded vpon Christ. These thinges are plaine and agreable with the Scripture, and do make those places of Scripture to accorde very well together, where it is saide: that God declared his loue towarde vs in this, that he gaue his onely begotten sonne to death: and yet that he was our enemie till he was made fauourable againe to vs by the death of Christ. But that they may be more strongly proued to them that require the testament of the olde Church, I will allege one place of Augustine, where he teacheth the very same that we do. The loue of God (saith he) is incomprehensible and vnchangeable. For he beganne not to loue vs, since the time that we weare reconciled to him by the bloude of his sonne. But before the making of the worlde he loued vs, euen before that we weare any thing at all, that we might also be his children with his only begotten Sonne. Therefore wheras we are reconciled by the death of Christ, it is not so to be taken as though the Sonne did therefore reconcile vs vnto him, that he might Iohn. 3. 16. Rom. 5. 10. Tract. in Euag. Iohn. 2. 10.

nowe beginne to loue vs whome he hated before: but we are reconciled to him that already loued vs, to whome we were enemies by reason of sinne. And whether this be true or no that I say, let the Apostle beare witnesse. He doth commende (saith he) his loue towarde vs, because when we were yet sinners, Christ died for vs. He therefore had a loue to vs, euen thē when we were enemies to him & wrought wickednesse. Therfore after a maruellous and diuine maner he loued vs, euen then when he hated vs. For he hated vs in that we were such as he had not made vs, and because our wickednesse had on euery side wasted away his worke, he knew how in euery one of vs, both to hate that which we our selues had made, and to loue that which he had made. These be the wordes of Augustine.

Rom. 5. 8.

5 Nowe where it is demaunded, howe Christ hath done away our sinnes, and taken away the strife betwene vs and God, and purchased such righteousnes as might make him fauourable and wel willing towarde vs: it may be generally answered, that he hath brought it to passe by the whole course of his obedience. Which is proued by ỹ testimony of Paul. As by one mans offense many were made sinners, so by one mās obediēce we are made righteous. And in an other place he extendeth the cause of the pardō that deliuereth vs from the curse of the lawe, to the whole life of Christ, saying: When the fulnesse of time was come, God sente his sonne made of a woman, subiect to the lawe, to redeeme them that were vnder the lawe: And so affirmed that in his very baptisme was fulfilled one parte of righteousnes, that he obediently did the commaundement of his father. Finally, from the time that he toke vpon him the person of a seruaunt, he beganne to paye the raunsome to redeeme vs. But the Scripture to set out the maner of our saluation more certainely, doth ascribe this as peculiar and proprely belonging to the death of Christ. He him selfe pronounced that he gaue his life to be a redemption for many. Paule teacheth that he died for our sinnes. Iohn the Baptist cried out that Christ came to take away the sinnes of the worlde, bycause he was the Lambe of God. In an other place Paule saith, that we are iustified freely by the redemption that is in Christ, bycause he is set forth the reconciler in his owne bloude. Againe, that we are iustified in his bloude, and reconciled by his death. Againe. He that knewe not sinne, was made sinne for vs, that we might be the righteousnesse of God in him. I will not recite all the testimonies, because the numbre woulde be infinite, and many of them must be hereafter alleged in their order. Therefore in the summe of beleefe, which they call the Apostles creede, it is very ordrely passed immediatly from the birth of Christ to his death and resurrection, wherein consisteth the summe of perfect saluation. And yet is not the reste of his obedience excluded, which he perfourmed in his life: as Paule comprehendeth it wholy from the beginning to the ende in saying, that he abaced him selfe, taking vpon him the forme of a seruant, and was obedient to his father to death, euen the death of the crosse. Phil.2.7 And truely euen in the same death his willing submissiō hath the first degree, because the sacrifice, vnlesse it had bene willingly offred, had nothing profited towarde righteousnesse. Therefore, where the Lorde testified, that he gaue his soule for his sheepe, he expressly addeth this, no man taketh it away from my selfe. Ioh.10. 15. According to the which meaning, Esaie saith, that he helde his peace like a lambe before the sherer. Esa. 53. 7. And the historie of the Gospell rehearseth, that he went forth and met the souldiers, and before Pilate he left defending of him selfe, and stode still to yelde him selfe to iudgement to be pronounced vpon him. Iohn 18 4. Mat. 27 2. But that not without some strife: for both he had taken our infirmities vpon him, and it behoued that his obedience to his father, shoulde be this way tried. And this was no sclender shew of his incomparable loue towarde vs, to wrastle with horrible feare, and in the middest of these cruell tormentes, to cast away all care of himselfe, that he might prouide for vs. And this is to be beleued, that there could no sacrifice be wel offered to God any otherwise, but by this that Christ forsaking all his owne affection, did submitte and wholy yelde him selfe to his fathers will. For proofe whereof, the Apostle doth fitly allege that testimonie of the Psalme: In the booke of the lawe it is written of me, that I may do thy will, O God. I will, and thy lawe is in the middest of my heart. Then I saide: Loe, I come. Heb.10 5. Psal.40. 9. But becausse trembling consciences finde no reste but in sacrifice and washing whereby sinnes are cleansed: therefore for good cause we are directed thither, and in the death of Christ is appointed for vs the matter of life. Nowe forasmuch as by our owne giltinesse, curse was due vnto vs, before the heauenly iudgement seate of God, therefore first of all is recited how he was condemned before Ponce Pilate president of Iurie: that we shoulde know that the punishment whereunto we were subiect, was iustely laide vpon vs. We coulde not escape the dreadfull iudgement of God: Christ, to deliuer vs from it, suffred himselfe to be condemned before a mortall man, yea a wicked & heathen man. For the name of the president is expressed not onely to procure credit to the historie, but that we shoulde learne that which Esaie teacheth, that that chastisement of our peace was vpon him, and that by his stripes we were healed. Esa. 53. 9. For to take away our damnation, euery kinde of death ſufficed not for him to ſuffer, but to ſatisfie our redemption, one ſpeciall kinde of death was to be choſen, wherein both drawing away our damnation to him ſelfe, and taking our giltineſſe vpon himſelfe, he might deliuer vs from them both. If he had bene murthered by theues, or had bene ragingly ſlaine in a commotion of the common people: in ſuch a death there ſhoulde haue bene no apparance of ſatisfaction. But when he was brought to be arrained before the iudgement ſeate, when he was accuſed and preſſed with witneſſes againſt him, and was by the mouth of the iudge condemned to die: by theſe tokens we vnderſtand, that he did beare the perſon of a gilty man and of an euill doer. And here are two thinges to be noted, which both were afore ſpoken by the prophecies of the Prophetes, and do bring a ſingular comfort and confirmation of faith. For when we heare that Chriſt was ſent from the iudges ſeate to death, and was hanged among theues, we haue the fulfilling of that prophecie which is alledged by the Euangeliſt. He was accompted among the wicked.

Eſa. 53. 12. Mar. 15. 28. And why ſo? euen to take vpon him the ſtede of a ſinner, not of a man righteous or innocent, bycauſe he ſuffred death not for cauſe of innocencie, but for ſinne. On the other ſide when we heare that he was acquited by the ſame mouth whereby he was condemned, for Pilate was compelled openly more than ones to beare vitneſſe of his innocencie: let that come in our minde which is in the other Prophet: that he repayed that which he had not taken away. And ſo we ſhall beholde the perſon of a ſinner and euill doer repreſented in Chriſt: and by the open apparance of his innocencie it ſhall become plaine to ſee, that he was charged rather with others offence than his owne. He ſuffred therefore vnder Ponce Pilate, and ſo by the ſolemne ſentence of the Preſident, was reckened in the number of wicked doers: but yet not ſo, but that he was by the ſame iudge at the ſame time pronounced righteous, when he affirmed that he founde no cauſe of condemnation in him. This is our acquital, that the giltineſſe which made vs ſubiect to puniſhment, is remoued vpon the head of the ſonne of God. For this ſetting of the one againſt the other, we ought principally to holde faſt, leaſt we tremble and be careſull all our life long, as though the iuſte vengeance of God did hang ouer vs, which the ſonne of God hath taken vpon himſelfe.

Pſa. 99. 5. Ioh. 18. 38.

6 Byſide that, the very maner of his death is not without a ſingular myſterie. The Croſſe was accurſed, not onely by opinion of men, but alſo by decree of the lawe of God. Therefore when Chriſt was lifted vp to the Croſſe, he made himſelfe ſubiect to the curſe. And ſo it behoued to be done, that when the curſe was remoued from vs

to

to him, we might be deliuered from all curſe that for our ſinnes was prepared for vs, or rather did already reſt vpon vs. Which thing was alſo by ſhadowe expreſſed in the lawe. For the ſacrifices and ſatisfactorie oblations that were offred for ſinnes, were called Aſhemoth: Which worde proprely ſignifieth ſinne it ſelfe. By which figuratine chaunge of name, the holy Ghoſt ment to ſhewe, that they were like vnto cleanſing playſters to drawe out to them ſelues, and beare the curſe due to ſinnes. But that ſame which was figuratiuely repreſented in the ſacrifices of Moſes, is in deede deliuered in Chriſt the originall paterne of all the figures. Wherefore he, to performe a perfect expiation, gaue his owne ſoule to be an aſham, that is a ſatisfactorie oblation as the Prophet calleth it, vpon the which our filth and puniſhment might be caſt, and ſo ceſſe to be imputed to vs. Eſa. 53. 5. and 21.

The Apoſtle teſtifieth the ſame thing more plainly where he teacheth, that he which knewe no ſinne, was by his father made ſinne for vs, that we might be made the righteouſneſſe of God in him. 2. Cor. 5. 21.

For the ſonne of God being moſt cleane from all fault, did yet put vpon him the reproch and ſhame of our iniquities, and on the other ſide couered vs with his cleanneſſe. It ſeemeth that he meante the ſame, when he ſpeaketh of ſinne, that ſinne was condemned in his fleſh. Rom. 8. 3.

For the father deſtroyed the force of ſinne, when the curſe thereof was remoued and layed vpon the fleſh of Chriſt. It is therefore declared by this ſaying, that Chriſt was in his death offred vp to his father for a ſatisfactorie ſacrifice, that the whole ſatisfaction for ſinne being ended by his ſacrifice, we might ceſſe to dread the wrath of God. Nowe is it plaine, what that ſaying of the Prophet meaneth, that the iniquities of vs all were layed vpon him, that is, that he entending to wipe away the fulthineſſe of our iniquities, was himſelfe as it were by way of enterchanged imputation, couered with them. Eſa. 53. 6.

Of this, the croſſe whereunto he was faſtened was a token, as the Apoſtle teſtifieth. Chriſt (ſaith he) redeemed vs from the curſe of the lawe, when he was made a curſe for vs. For it is written: Accurſed is euery one that hangeth on the tree: that the bleſſing of Abraham might in Chriſt come to the Gentiles. Gala. 3. 13. Deu. 27 26.

And the ſame had Peter reſpect vnto, where he teacheth that Chriſt did beare our ſinnes vpon the tree. 1. Pet. 2. 24.

Bycauſe by the very token of the curſe we do more plainely learne that the burden wherewith we were oppreſſed was layed vpon him. And yet it is not ſo to be vnderſtanded, that he toke vpon him ſuch a curſe, wherewith himſelfe was ouerloden, but rather that in taking it vpon him, he did treade downe, breake and deſtroy the whole force of it. And ſo faith conceiueth acquitall in the condemnation of Christ, and blessing in his being accursed. Wherefore Paule doth not without a cause honorably reporte the triumph that Christ obteined to him selfe on the crosse, as if the crosse which was full of shame, had bene turned into a Chariot of triumph. For

Col. 2. 19. he saith, that the hande writing which was against vs, was fastened to the crosse, and the Princely powers were spoyled and led openly. And no maruell: bycause (as the other Apostle testifieth) Christ
Heb. 9. 17. offred vp himselfe by the eternall spirite. And thereupon proceded that turning of the nature of thinges. But that these thinges may take steadfast roote, and be throughly settled in our hearres, lette vs alway thinke vpon his sacrifice and washing. For we coulde not certainely beleue that Christ was the raunsome, redemption, and satisfaction, vnlesse he had bene a sacrificed hoste. And therefore there is so often mention made of bloud, where the Scripture sheweth the maner of our redeming. Albeit the bloude of Christ that was shed, serued not onely for sacrifice, but also in steede of washing, to cleanse away our filthinesse.

7 It followeth in the Crede, that he was dead and buried. Where againe it is to be seene, howe he did euery where put him selfe in our stede, to paie the price of our redemption. Death held vs bounde vnder his yoke, Christ in our stede did yelde him selfe into the power
Heb. 2. 9. of death, to deliuer vs from it. This the Apostle meaneth where he writeth, that he tasted of death for all men. For he by dying brought to passe that we shoulde not die, or (which is all one) by his death he did redeme life for vs. But in this he differed from vs, that he gaue him selfe to death as it were to be deuoured, not that he shoulde be swallowed vp with the gulfes of it, but rather that he shoulde swallowe vp it, of which we shoulde haue bene presently swallowed: that he gaue himselfe to death to be subdued, not that he shoulde be oppressed with the power thereof, but rather that he shoulde ouerthrow death which approched nere vs, yea and had already beaten
Heb. 2. 14. vs downe and triumphed vpon vs. Finally, that by death he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is the Deuill: and might deliuer them that by feare of death were all their life long subiect to bondage. This is the first fruite that his death did bring vs. An other is, that by enterpartening of him selfe with vs, he mortifieth our earthly membres, that they shoulde no more hereafter vse their owne workes: and killeth our olde manne, that it shoulde no more liue and beare frute. And to the same purpose perteineth his buriall, that we being partakers thereof, shoulde also be Gal. 2. buried to sinne. For when the Apostle teacheth that we are graffed

into the likeneſſe of the death of Chriſt, and buried with him to the death of ſinne, that by his croſſe the worlde was crucified to vs, and we to the worlde, that we are dead together with him, he doth not onely exhorte vs to expreſſe the example of Chriſtes death, but he declareth that there is ſuch effectualneſſe in it, as ought to appere in all Chriſtians, vnleſſe they will make his death vnprofitable and fruteleſſe. Therefore in the death and buriall of Chriſt, there is offred vs a double benefit to be enioyed, that is deliuerance from death, wherevnto we were become bonde, and the mortifying of our fleſh. 19. and 9.14. Col.3.3

8 But it is not meete to ouerpaſſe his going downe to the helles, wherein is no ſmall importaunce to the effect of redemption. For although it appeareth by the writinges of the olde fathers, that that parte which is read in the Crede was not in olde time ſo much vſed in the Churches: yet in entreating of the ſumme of our doctrine, it is neceſſarie that it haue a place allowed it, as a thing that conteineth a very profitable and not to be deſpiſed myſtery of a right weighty matter. And there are alſo ſome of the olde writers that do not leaue it out. Whereby we may geſſe, that it was after a certaine time added, and did not preſently but by litle and litle growe in vſe in the Churches. But this certainely is out of queſtion, that it proceded of the common iudgement of all the godly: For as much as there is none of the Fathers that doth not in his writinges make mention of Chriſtes going downe to the helles, although after diuerſe maner of expoſition. But by whome, or at what time it was firſt added, maketh litle to the purpoſe. But rather in the Creede this is to be taken heede vnto, that we therein certainely haue a full and in all pointes perfect ſumme of our faith, whereinto nothing may be thruſt, but that which is taken out of the moſt pure worde of God. Nowe if any will not for preciſe curioſitie admit it into the Crede, yet ſhall it ſtreight way be made to appere plainely, that it is of ſo great importance to the ſumme of our redemption, that if it be lefte out, there is loſt a great parte of the frute of the death of Chriſt. There are againe ſome that thinke, that there is no newe thing ſpoken in this article, but that in other wordes the ſame thing is repeted which was ſpoken before of his buriall: for aſmuch as the worde Inferum, hell, is in the Scripture oftentimes vſed for the graue. I graunt that to be true which they allege of the ſignification of the worde, that Hell is oftentimes taken for the graue: but there are againſt their opinion two reaſons, by which I am eaſily perſuaded to diſſent from them. For what an idleneſſe were it, when a thing not harde to vnderstand, hath ones bene set out in plaine and easy wordes, afterwarde with darker implication of wordes, rather to pointe towarde it than to declare it. For when two maners of speaking that expresse one thing be ioyned together, it behoueth that the later be an exposition of the former. But what an exposition were this, if a man shoulde say thus: Whereas it is saide that Christ was buried, thereby is meante that he went downe to hell? Againe, it is not likely that such a superfluous vaine repetition coulde haue crepte into this abridgement, wherein the chiefe pointes of our faith are summarily noted in as fewe wordes as was possible. And I doubte not that so many as shall haue somewhat diligently weyed the matter it selfe, will easily agree with me.

9 Some expounde it otherwise, and say, that Christ went downe to the soules of the fathers that died in the time of the law, to carry them tidinges, that the redemption was performed, and to deliuer them out of the prison wherein they were kept enclosed: and to the prose herof they do wrongfully draw testimonies out of the Psalme, that he brake the brasen gates and yron barres. Againe out of Zacharie, that he redemed them that were bounde, out of the pit wherin was no water. But whereas the Psalme speaketh of their deliueraces that in farre countries are caste captiue into bondes, and Zacharie compareth the Babylonicall ouerthrow, wherein the people was oppressed, to a drie pit or bottomlesse deapth, and therewithall teacheth that the saluation of the whole Church is as it were a comming out of the deepe helles. I wote not howe it is come to passe, that they which came after, thought that there was a certaine place vnder the earth whereunto they haue fained the name of Limbus. But this fable, although they were great authours, and at this day many do earnestly defende it for a truth: is yet nothing els but a fable. For, to enclose the soule of dead men as in a prison, is very childish. And what neede was it that Christes soule shoulde go downe thether to set them at liberte? I do in deede willingly confesse, that Christ shined to thē by the power of his spirit, that they might know that the grace which they had onely tasted of by hope, was then deliuered to the worlde. And to this purpose may the place of Peter be probably applied, where he sayeth; that Christ came and preached to the spirites that were in a dongeon or prison, as it is cōmonly translated. For the very processe of the text leadeth vs to this, that ỹ faithfull which were dead before that time, were partakers of ỹ same grace that we were: becausse he doth therby amplifie the force of Christs death, for that it pearced euen to the dead, when the godly soules enioyed

the preſent ſight of that viſitation which they had carefully looked for: on the other ſide it did more plainly appere to the reprobate that they were excluded from all ſaluation. But wheras Peter in his ſaying maketh no diſtinction betwene them, that is not ſo to be taken, as though he mingeled together the godly and vngodly without difference: but only he meant to teach that generally they both had one common feling of the death of Chriſt.

10 But concerning Chriſts goinge downe to the hels, beſide the conſideration of the Crede, we muſt ſeeke for a more certaine expoſition, and we aſſuredly haue ſuch a one out of the word of God, as is not only holy & godly, but alſo full of ſingular comfort. Chriſts death had bin to no effect, if he had ſuffered onely a corporall death: but it behoued alſo that he ſhould feele the rigour of Gods vengeãce: that he might both appeaſe his wrath and ſatiſfie his iuſt iudgement. For which cauſe alſo it behoued that he ſhoulde as it were hand to hand wraſtle with the armies of the hels & the horrour of eternall death. We haue euen now alleaged out of ỹ Prophet, that the chaſtiſement of our peace was layd vpon him: that he was ſtriken of his father for our ſinnes, and brouſed for our infirmities. Whereby is meant, that he was put in the ſteede of wicked doers, as ſurety & pledge, yea and as the very gilty perſon himſelfe, to abide & ſuffer all the puniſhments that ſhould haue bin layd vpon them: this one thing excepted, that he could not be holden ſtill of the ſorrowes of death. Therefore it is no maruell if it be ſaid that he went downe to the hels, ſith he ſuffered that death wherewith God in his wrath ſtriketh wicked doers. And their exception is very fond, yea and to be ſcorned, which ſay, that by this expoſition the order is peruerted, becauſe it were an abſurdity to ſet that after his buriall which went before it. For after the ſetting forth of thoſe thinges that Chriſt ſuffered in the ſight of men, in very good order followeth that inuiſible and incomprehenſible iudgement which he ſuffered in the ſight of God: that we ſhoulde know that not only the body of Chriſt was giuen to be the price of our redemption, but that there was an other greater and more excellent price payed in this, that in his ſoule he ſuffred the terrible tormentes of a damned and forſaken man.

Eſa. 53. 5.

Act. 2. 24.

11 Accordinge to this meaninge doth Peter ſay, that Chriſt roſe againe hauing looſed ỹ ſorrowes of death, of which it was impoſſible that he ſhould be holden, or ouercome. He doth not name it ſimply death: but he expreſſeth that the ſonne of God was wrapped in the ſorrowes of death, which proceede from the curſe & wrath of God, which is the originall of death. For how ſmale a matter had it bin,

Act. 2. 24.

careleſſely and as it were, in ſporte to come foorth to ſuffer death? But this was a true proufe of his infinite mercy, not to ſhun ẏ death which he ſo ſore trembled at. And it is no dout that the ſame is the Apoſtles meaning to teach, in the Epiſtle to the Hebrues, where he wryteth: that Chriſt was heard of his owne Feare: ſome tranſlate it Reuerence or piety, but how vnfitly, both the matter it ſelfe, and the very manner of ſpeakinge proueth. Chriſt therefore prayinge with teares and mighty crie, is hearde of his owne feare: not to be free from death, but not to be ſwallowed vp of death as a ſinner: becauſe in that place he had but our perſon vpon him. And truely there can be imagined no more dreadfull bottomleſſe depth, than for a man to fele himſelfe forſaken and eſtraunged from God, and not to be heard when he calleth vpon him, euen as if God himſelfe had conſpired to his deſtruction. Euen thither we ſee that Chriſt was throwen downe, ſo farre that by enforcemẽt of diſtreſſe he was compelled to crie out: My God, My God, why haſt thou forſaken me? For whereas ſome would haue it taken, that he ſo ſpake rather according to the opiniõ of other, thã as he felt in himſelfe: ẏ is in no caſe probable, foraſmuch as it is euident, that this ſaying proceeded out of the very anguiſh of the bottome of his heart. Yet do we not meane thereby, that God was at any time his enemy or angry with him. For how could he be angry with his beloued ſonne, vpon whom his minde reſted? Or how could Chriſt by his interceſſiõ appeaſe his fathers wrath toward other, hauinge him hatefully bent agaynſt himſelfe? But this is our meaning: that he ſuffered the greeuouſneſſe of Gods rigour, for that he being ſtriken and tormented with the hande of God, did fele all the tokens of God when he is angry and puniſheth. Wherupon Hylary argueth thus, that by this goinge downe we haue obtained this, that death is ſlayne. And in other places he agreeth with our iudgement, as where he ſayth. The croſſe, death, and hels are our life. Againe in an other place. The ſonne of God is in the hels, but man is caried vp to heauen. But why do I alleage the teſtimony of a priuate man, when the Apoſtle affirmeth the ſame, rehearſing this for a frute of his victory, that they were deliuered which were by feare of death all their life long ſubiect to bondage? It behoued therfore, that he ſhall ouercome that feare, that naturally doth continually torment and oppreſſe all mortall men: which coulde not be done but by fightinge with it. Moreouer, that his feare was no common feare or conceiued vpon a ſclender cauſe, ſhall byandby more plainely appeare. So by fighting hande to hande with the power of the Deuill, with the horrour of death, with the paynes of the hels it came to paſſe, that he both had the the victory of them, and triumphed ouer them, that we now in death shoulde no more feare those thinges, which our Prince hath swallowed vp.

12 Here some leud men, although vnlearned, yet rather moued by malice than by ignoraunce, crie out that I do a hainous wronge to Christ, because it was against conueniency of reason, that he shoulde be fearefull for the saluation of his soule. And then they more hardly enforce this cauillation with sayinge, that I ascribe to the sonne of God desperation, which is cõtrary to faith. First they do but maliciously moue controuersie of Christs feare and tremblinge, which the Euangelistes do so plainely reporte. For a litle before that the time of his death approched, he was troubled in spirite and passioneth with heauinesse, and at his very meeting with it, he began more vehemẽtly to tremble for feare. If they say that he did but counterfait, that is too foule a shift. We must therfore as Ambrose truly teacheth, boldly confesse the sorowfulnesse of Christ, vnlesse we be ashamed of his crosse. And truely if his soule had not bin partaker of payne, he had bin only a redeemer for bodies. But it behoued that he should wrastle, to raise vp them that lay throwen downe. And his heauenly glory is so nothinge appaired thereby, that euen herein gloriously shineth his goodnesse which is neuer sufficiently praysed, that he refused not to take our weakenesses vpon him. From whense is also that comforte of our anguishes and sorrowes, which the Apostle setteth before vs: that this Mediatour did feele our infirmities, that he might be the more earnestly bent to succour vs in misery. They say: He.4.15 that that thinge which is euill of it selfe, is vnworthily ascribed to Christ. As though they were wiser than the spirite of God, which ioyneth these two thinges together, that Christ was in all thinges tempted as we are, and yet that he was without sinne. Therefore there is no cause that the weakenes of Christ should make vs afrayd, whereunto he was not by violence or necessitye compelled, but by meere loue of vs and by mercy was led to submit himselfe. And what soeuer he of his owne will suffered for vs, diminisheth nothinge of his power. But in this one poynte are these backebiters deceiued, that they do not perceiue in Christ an infirmity cleane and free from all fault and spot, because he kept himselfe within the boundes of obedience. For wheras there can be found no moderation in our corrupt nature, where all our affectiõs do with troublesome violence excede all measure, they do wrong to measure ỹ forme of God by that standard. But when man was in his vncorrupted state, then there was a moderation hauinge force in all his affections, to restrayne excesse.

Whereby, it might well be that he was like vnto vs in ſorrow, dread, and fearefulnes, and yet that by this marke he differed from vs. Being ſo confuted, they leape to an other cauillation, that though Chriſt feared death, yet he feared not the curſe and wrath of God frō which he knew himſelfe to be ſafe. But let the godly readers weye how honorable this is for Chriſt, that he was more tender and more fearefull than the moſt part of the very raſcall ſort of men. Theues and other euill doers do obſtinatly haſt to death, many do with haute courage deſpiſe it: ſome other do mildly ſuffer it. But what conſtancy or ſtout courage were it, for the ſonne of God to be aſtoniſhed and in a maner ſtriken dead with feare of it? For euen that ẅ among the cōmon ſorte might be accompted miraculous, is reported of him, that for vehemency of griefe, very droppes of bloud did fall from his face. Neither did he this to make a ſhew to the eyes of other, but whē in a ſecret corner whither he was gone out of company, he groned vnto his father. And this putteth it out of all dout, that it was nedefull that he ſhould haue Angels to come downe from heauen to relieue him with an vnwonted maner of comforting. How ſhamefull a tendernes, as I ſayd, ſhould this haue bin, to be ſo farre tormented for feare of common death, as to melt in bloudy ſweate, and not to be able to be
Mat.26 comforted but by ſight of Angels? What? doth not that praier thriſe
39. repeated, (Father, if it be poſſible, let this cuppe depart from me) proceeding from an incredible bitterneſſe of heart, ſhew that Chriſt had a more cruell and harder battell than with common death? Whereby appeareth that thoſe triflers againſt whom I now diſpute, do boldly babble vpon things that they know not, becauſe they neuer earneſtly conſidered what it is, or of how great importance it is that we be redeemed from the iudgement of God. But this is our wiſdom, well to vnderſtande howe deere our ſaluation did coſt the ſonne of God. Now if a man ſhould aske me, if Chriſt went then downe to hel, whē he prayed to eſcape that death: I anſwere, that thē was the beginning of it: whereby may be gathered, how grieuous and terrible tormentes he ſuffered, when he knew himſelfe to ſtande to be arained for our cauſe before the iudgement ſeate of God. But although for a momēt of time, the diuine power of the ſpirite did hide it ſelfe, to giue place to the weakeneſſe of the fleſh: yet muſt we know, that the tentation by feeling of ſorrow and feare was ſuch as was not againſt faith. And Act.2. ſo was that fulfilled which is in the Sermon of Peter, that he coulde
24. not be holden of the ſorrowes of death, becauſe whē he felt himſelfe as it were forſaken of God, yet he did nothing at all ſwarue from the truſt of his goodneſſe. Which is proued by that his notable callinge

vpon

vpon God, when for extremity of peine he cried out, My God, my God, why haſt thou forſaken me? For though he was aboue meaſure greued, yet he ceſſeth not to cal him his God, of whom he crieth out that he was forſaken. Moreouer hereby is confuted as well the errour of Apollinaris, as theirs that were called Monothelites. Apollinaris fained that Chriſt had an eternall ſpirite in ſteade of a ſoule, ſo that he was onely but halfe a man. As though he could cleanſe our ſinnes any other way, but by obeying his father. But where is the affection or will of obedience but in the ſoule? which ſoule of his we knowe was troubled for this purpoſe to driue away feare, and bringe peace and quietneſſe to our ſoule. Againe, for confuſion of the Monothelites, we ſee how now he willed not that thing according to his nature of manhoode, which he willed according to his nature of godhead. I omit to ſpeake how he did ſubdue the aforeſaid feare with a contrary affection. For herein is a plaine ſhew of contrariety. Father deliuer me from this hour. But euen herefore I came euen into this hour. Father glorifie thy name. In which perplexity yet was there no ſuch outrage in him as is ſeene in vs, euen then when we moſt of all endeuour to ſubdue our ſelues.

Mat. 27 47.

Ioh. 12. 27.

13 Now followeth his reſurrection from the dead, without which all that we haue hitherto, were but vnperfect. For ſith there appeareth in the croſſe, death, & buriall of Chriſt nothing but weakeneſſe: faith muſt paſſe beyond all thoſe things, that it may be furniſhed with full ſtrength. Therefore although we haue in his death a full accompliſhment of ſaluation, becauſe by it both we are reconciled to God, and his iuſt iudgement is ſatisfied, & the curſe taken away, and the penalty fully payed: yet we are ſayd to be regenerate into a liuinge hope, not by his death, but by his riſinge againe. For as he in riſinge againe roſe vp the vanquiſher of death, ſo the victory of our faith conſiſteth in the very reſurrection: but how this is, is better expreſſed in ỹ words of Paule. For he ſayth, that Chriſt died for our ſinnes, and was raiſed vp againe for our iuſtification: as if he ſhould haue ſayd: that by his death ſinne was taken away, and by his riſing againe righteouſnes was renewed and reſtored. For how coulde he by dyinge deliuer vs from death if he himſelfe hadde lyen ſtill ouercome by death? How coulde he haue gotten victory for vs, if himſelfe hadde bin vanquiſhed in fight? wherefore we do ſo parte the matter of our ſaluation betwene the death and reſurrection of Chriſt, that by his death we ſay ſinne was taken away and death deſtroied, and by his reſurrection righteouſneſſe was repaired, and life raiſed vp againe: but ſo that by meane of his reſurrection, his death doth ſhew foorth her force and effect vnto vs. Therefore Paule affirmeth, that in his very resurrection he was declared the sonne of God, because then at last he vttered his heauenly power, which is both a cleare glasse of his godheade, and a stedfast stay of our faith. As also in an other place he teacheth, that 2.Cor. 13.4. Christ suffered after the weakenesse of the flesh, & rose againe by the power of the spirit. And in ỹ same meaning in an other place, where

Phi. 3. 10. he entreateth of perfection, he sayth: that I may know him and the power of his resurrectiō. Yet byandby after he adioyneth the fellowship with death. Wherewith most aptly agreeth that saying of Pe-
1.Pet. 1. 21. ter: that God raised him vp from the deade and gaue him glory, that our faith and hope might be in God: not that our faith being vpholden by his death should wauer, but that the power of God which kepeth vs vnder faith, doth principally shew it selfe in the resurrection. Therfore let vs remember, that so oft as mention is made of his death onely, there is also comprehended that which properly belongeth to his resurrection: and like figure of comprehension is there in the word Resurrectiō, as oft as it is vsed seuerally without speaking of his death, so that it draweth with it that which peculiarly pertayneth to his death. But forasmuch as by rising againe he obtained the crowne of conquest, so that there should be both resurrection and life: there-
1.Cor. 15.17. fore Paule doth for good cause affirme that faith is destroyed, and the Gospell is become vaine & deceitful, if the resurrection of Christ be not fastened in our heartes. Therefore in an other place, after he had gloried in the death of Christ agaynst all the terrours of damna-
Rom. 8. 34. tion, to amplifie the same, he sayth further: Yea the same He which dyed, is risen vp againe and nowe standeth a Mediatour for vs in the presence of God. Furthermore as we haue before declared, that vpon the partakinge of his crosse hangeth the mortification of our flesh. so is it to be vnderstanded, that by his resurrection we obtaine an other commodity which aunswereth that mortification. For (sayth the A-Ro. 6.4. postle) we are therefore grafted into the likenesse of his death, that being partakers of his resurrection, we may walke in newnesse of life.
Col. 3.5 Therefore in an other place: as he gathereth an argument of this that we are dead together with Christ, to proue that we ought to mortifie our members vpon earth: likewise also, because we are risen vp
Col. 3.1 with Christ, he gathereth therupon that we ought to seeke for those thinges that are aboue, and not those that are vpon the earth. By which wordes we are not onely exhorted to be raised vp after the example of Christ, to folow a newnesse of life. But we are taught that it is wrought by his power that we are regenerate into righteousnes. We obtaine also a third frute of his resurection, that we are, as by an

earneſt deliuered vs, aſſured of our owne reſurrection, of which we knowe that his reſurrection is a moſt certaine argument. Whereof he diſputeth more at large in the fifteene chapter of his firſt Epiſtle to the Corinthians. But by the way this is to be noted, that it is ſayd, that he roſe againe from the dead: in which ſayinge is expreſſed the trueth both of his death and of his reſurrection: as if it had bin ſayd, that he did both dye the ſame death that other menne naturally do die, and receiued immortality in the ſame fleſh which he had put on mortall.

14 To his reſurrection is not vnfitly adioyned his aſcending into heauen. For although Chriſt beganne more fully to ſet forth his glorie and power by riſinge againe, for that he had now layd away that baſe and vnnoble eſtate of mortal life, and the ſhame of the croſſe: yet by his aſcendinge vp into heauen onely, he truely beganne his kingdome. Which the Apoſtle ſheweth where he teacheth, that Chriſt aſcended to fulfill all thinges. Where in ſeeming of repugnãcy he ſheweth that there is a goodly agreement: becauſe he ſo departed frõ vs, that yet his preſence might be more profitable to vs, which had bin penned in a baſe lodginge of ỹ fleſh, while he was conuerſant in earth. And therfore Iohn, after that he had rehearſed that notable calling, If any thirſt, let him come to me, &c. Byandby ſayth, that the holy Ghoſt was not yet giuen to the faithfull, becauſe Ieſus was not yet glorified. Which the Lord himſelf alſo did teſtifie to the Diſciples, ſayinge: It is expedient for you that I go away. For if I do not go away, the holy Ghoſt ſhall not come. But he giueth them a comfort for his corporall abſence, that he will not leaue them as parentleſſe, but will come againe to them after a certaine manner, in deede inuiſible, but yet more to be deſired, becauſe they were thẽ taught by more aſſured experience, that the authoritie which he enioyeth, and the power which he vſeth, is ſufficient for the faithfull, not onely to make them liue bleſſedly, but alſo to die happily. And truely we ſee howe much greater abundance of his ſpirite he then poured out, how much more royally he then aduaunced his kingdome, howe much greater power he then ſhewed, both in helpinge his, and in ouerthrowinge his enemies. Being therfore taken vp into heauen, he toke away the preſence of his body out of our ſight: not to ceſſe to be preſent with the faithfull that yet wandred in the earth, but with more preſent power to gouerne both heauen and earth. But rather the ſame that he had promiſed, that he would be with vs to the end of the worlde, he performed by this his aſcendinge, by which as his bodie was lifted vppe aboue all heauens, ſo his power and effectuall workinge was poured and ſpred abroade beyonde all the boundes of heauen and earth. But this I had rather to declare in Auguſtines wordes than mine owne. Chriſt (ſayth he) was to go by death to the right hande of the father, from whenſe he is to come to iudge the quicke & the dead: & that likewiſe in bodily preſence according to the ſounde doctrine and rule of faith. For in ſpirituall preſence with them, he was to come after his aſcenſion. And in an other place more largely and plainely: Accordinge to an vnſpeakeable & vnuiſible grace is that fulfilled which he had ſpoken: behold I am with you all the days, euen to the end of the world. But accordinge to the fleſh which the Word tooke vpon him, according to that that he was borne of the Virgin, according to that that he was taken of the Iewes, that he was faſtened on the tree, that he was taken downe from the croſſe, that he was wrapped in linen clothes, that he was layd in the graue, that he was openly ſhewed in his riſing againe: this was fulfilled, Ye ſhall not alway haue me with you. Why ſo? becauſe he was conuerſant according to the preſence of his body forty dayes with his diſciples, and they being in his company, ſeeing him, not followinge him, he aſcended into heauen and is not here, for he ſitteth there, at the right hande of his Father: and is here, for he is not gone away in preſence of maieſtie. Therefore according to the preſence of his maieſtie, we alway haue Chriſt: according to the preſence of his fleſh, it was truely ſaid to his Diſciples: but me ye ſhall not alway haue. For the Church had him a fewe dayes according to the preſence of his fleſh, but now ſhe holdeth him by faith, but ſeeth him not with eyes.

Tract. in Euã. Iohan. 109.

Mat. 28 20.

Act. 1. 3 & 9.

Mar. 16. Heb. 1. 3

15 Wherfore, it byandby followeth, that he is ſitten downe at the right hande of his father: which is ſpoken by way of ſimilitude, taken of princes that haue their ſitters by, to whom they commit their office to rule & gouerne in their ſtede. So it is ſaid, that Chriſt, in whom the father will be exalted and reigne by his hand: was receaued to ſit at his right hande: as if it had bene ſaid, that he was inueſted in the dominion of heauen and earth, ſolemnly entred vpon the poſſeſſion of the gouernment committed vnto him, and that he not onely entred vpon it, but alſo continueth in it till he come downe to iudgement. For ſo doth the Apoſtle expounde it, when he ſaith thus: The father hath ſet him at his right hand, aboue all principalitie & power, and ſtrength and dominion, and euery name that is named not onely in this worlde, but in the worlde to come. &c. He hath put all thinges vnder his feete, and hath geuen him to be head of the Church aboue all thinges. Nowe you ſee to what purpoſe belongeth that ſitting, that is, that all creatures both heauenly and earthly may with admiration looke looke vpon his maieſtie, be gouerned with his hande, beholde his countenance, and be ſubiect to his power. And the Apoſtles meane nothing els, when they ſo oft rehearſe it, but to teach, that all thinges are left to his will. Therefore they thinke not rightly, which thinke that bleſſednesse is onely meant by it. And it forceth not, that in the Actes, Stephen teſtifieth that he ſaw him ſtāding, becauſe we ſpeake not heare of the geſture of his body, but of the maieſty of his dominion: ſo that to Sit is nothing elſe, but to be chiefe iudge in the heauenly iudgement ſeat. Heb.1.7 Act.7. 56.

Ephe. 1. 10. Phi. 2. 9 1. Cor. 15. 27 Ephe. 4. 15. Act. 2. 30. & 3. 21.

16 Hereupon doth fayth gather manifolde frute: For it learneth, that the Lord by his aſcending into heauen, hath opened the entrie of the heauenly kingdom, which before had bin ſtopped vp by Adā. For when he entred into it in our fleſh as in our name, therupon followeth that which the Apoſtle ſayth, that we do already in him after a certaine manner ſit in heauen. For that we do not with bare hope looke for heauen, but already in our heade we poſſeſſe it. Moreouer faith perceiueth that he ſitteth with his father to our great benefite. For he is entred into a ſanctuary not made with hands, and there appeareth before the face of the Father a continuall aduocate & interceſſor for vs: he ſo turneth the fathers eyes to his righteouſnes, that he turneth them away from our ſinnes: He ſo reconcileth his minde vnto vs, that by his interceſſion he prepareth vs a way and paſſage to his throne, filling it withgrace & mercifulnes, which otherwiſe would haue bin full of horrour to wretched ſinners. Thirdly, faith conceiueth his power, wherein conſiſteth our ſtrength, might, welth, & glorying againſt the hels. For aſcending into heauē he led captiuity captiue, & ſpoiling his enemies he enriched his people, and daily filleth them with heapes of ſpirituall richeſſe. He ſitteth therefore on hie, that from thenſe pouringe out his power vnto vs, he may quicken vs to a ſpirituall life, ſanctifie with his ſpirit, and garniſh his church with the diuerſe giftes of his grace, preſerue it ſafe againſt all hurtes by his protectiō, reſtraine with the ſtrength of his hand the raging enemies of his croſſe and of our ſaluation: finally, hold all power both in heauen and in earth, till he haue ouerthrowen all his enemies which are alſo our enemies, & made perfect the building vp of his Church. And this is the true ſtate of his kingdome: this is the power that his father hath giuen him, till he make an end of the laſt act, when he commeth to iudge the quicke and the dead. Heb.7. 25 & 9. 11. Rom. 8. 34. Ephe.4. 6. Pſ.110.1

17 Chriſt doth in dede here ſhew to thē that be his, plaine proues of his power preſent among them: but becauſe vnder the baſenes of fleſh his kingdom doth in a manner lie hidden in earth, therefore for good cause is faith called to thinke vpon that visible presence, which Act. 1. 11. he will openly shew at the last day. For he shall in visible forme come downe from heauen, euen such as he was seene to go vp: and he shall Mat. 24. 30. appeare to all men with vnspeakeable maiesty of his kingdome, with bright glistering of immortality, with infinite power of godhead, with a gard of Angels. From thense therefore we are bidden to looke for him to come our redemer at that day, whē he shal seuere the Lambes from the Goates, the chosen from the forsaken: & there shalbe none of all either the quicke or the dead, that shall escape his iudgement.

For frō the furthest corners of the world shall be heard the sound of
Mat. 25 31. the trōpet, wherewith all shall be called to his iudgement seate, both
1. The. 4 16. they that shalbe founde aliue at that day, and they whom death hath before takē out of the company of the quicke. Some there be that in this place expound the wordes of the quicke and the dead otherwise:
and we see that some of the olde wryters did sticke in dout vpon the construction of this article. But as the aforesayd meaning is plaine & easie to perceiue: so doth it better agree with the Crede ẅ is euident that it was wrytten according to the capacity of the common people.
Heb. 9. 17. And herewith nothing disagreeth that which the Apostle affirmeth, that it is appointed to all men once to die. For although they which shall remaine in mortall life at the last iudgement. shall not die after a naturall manner and order: yet that change which they shal suffer, because it shalbe like a death, is not vnproperly called death. It is in 1. Cor. 15. 51. deede certaine, that not all shall slepe, but all shalbe chaunged. What meaneth that? In one moment their mortall life shall perish and be swallowed vp and be vtterly transformed into a newe nature. This perishinge of the flesh no man can deny to be a death: and yet in the meane time it remaineth true, that the quicke & the dead shalbe summoned to the iudgement: becaus the dead that are in Christ shal first 1. The. 4 16. rise, and then they that shall remaine and be liuinge, shall with them be sodenly taken vp into the ayre to meete the Lord. And truely it is Act. 10. 42. likely that this article was taken out of the sermon of Peter, which Luke reciteth, and out of the solemne protestation of Paule to Ti-
2. Tim. 4 1. mothe.

18 Hereupon ariseth a singular comfort, when we heare that he is iudge, which hath alredy appointed vs parteners with him in iudging:
so far is it of, that he will go vp into the iudgement seate to condemne vs. For how shoulde the most mercifull prince destroy his owne people? how should the head scatter abroade his owne members? howe Rom. 5. 33. shoulde the patrone condemne his owne clientes? For if the Apostle dare crie out, that while Christ is intercessour for vs, there can none

come

come forth that can condemne vs: it is much more true, that Christ himselfe beinge our intercessour, will not condemne them whom he hath receiued into his charge and tuition. It is truely no small assurednes, that we shalbe brought before no other iudgement seate, but of our owne redeemer, from whom our saluation is to be looked for: moreouer that he which now by the Gospel promiseth eternall blessednesse, shall then by sittinge in iudgement performe his promise. Therefore to this end the father hath honored the sonne, in giuinge him all iudgement, that so he hath prouided for the consciences of them that be his, trembling for feare of the iudgemēt. Hitherto I haue followed the order of the Apostles Crede, because whereas it shortly in fewe wordes contayneth the chiefe articles of our redemption, it may serue vs for a table, wherein we do distinctly and seuerally see those thinges that are in Christ worthy to be taken heede vnto. I call it the Apostles Creede, not carefully regarding who were the author of it. It is truely by great consent of the olde wryters ascribed to the Apostles, either because they thought that it was by common trauaile wrytten and set out by the Apostles, or for that they iudged that this abridgement being faithfully gathered out of the doctrine, deliuered by the handes of the Apostles, was worthy to be confirmed with such a title. And I take it for no dout, that whense so euer it proceeded at the first, it hath euen from the first beginning of the church, and from the very time of the Apostles, be vsed as a publike confession, and receiued by consent of all men. And it is likely that it was not priuately wrytten by any one man, forasmuch as it is euident that euen from the farthest age it hath alway continued of sacred authority and credit amonge all the godly. But that thinge which is onely to be cared for, we haue wholly out of controuersie, that the whole History of our faith is shortly and wel in distinct order rehearsed in it, and that there is nothinge contayned in it that is not sealed with sounde testimonies of the Scripture. Which beinge vnderstanded, it is to no purpose either curiously to dout, or to striue with any manne, who were the autor of it: vnlesse perhappe it be not enough for some man to be assured of the trueth of the holy Ghost, but if he do also vnderstand either by whose mouth it was spoken, or by whose hand it was wrytten.

Ioh. 5. 22.

19 But forasmuch as we do see, that the whole summe of our saluation, and all the partes thereof, are comprehended in Christ, we must beware, that we do not draw away from him any parte thereof be it neuer so litle. If we seeke for saluation, we are taught by the very name of Iesus, that it is in him. If we seeke for any other giftes of

Finally, ſith the treaſures of all ſortes of good things are in him, let vs draw thenſe and from no where elſe, euen till we be full withall. For they which, being not content with him alone, are caried hither and thither into diuerſe hopes, although they haue principall regard to him, yet eué in this they are out of the right way, that they turne any parte of their knowledge to any other where. Albeit ſuch diſtruſt can not creepe in, where the aboundance of his good giftes hath once bin well knowen.

THis queſtion is alſo to be aſſoyled for an addition. For there are ſome ſuttle men after a wronge manner, which although they confeſſe that we obtaine ſaluation by Chriſt, yet can not abide to heare the name of deſeruing, by which they thinke the grace of God to be obſcured: and ſo they will haue Chriſt to be only the inſtrumẽt or miniſter, not the author, guide, or Prince of life, let me be answered, whereby that same Man deserued to be taken vp by the Word that is coeternall with the father into one person, and so to be the only begotten sonne of God. Let therfore appeare in our head the very fountaine of grace, from whom accordinge to the measure of euery one, it floweth abroade into all his mébers By that grace euery one from the beginning of his faith is made a Christian, by which that same man from his beginninge was made Christ. Againe in an other place: there is no plainer example of predestination than the Mediatour himselfe. For he that made of the seede of Dauid a man righteous that neuer shoulde be vnrighteous, without any deseruinge of his will goinge before, euen the same he doth of vnrighteous make them righteous that are the members of that heade: and so forth as there followeth. Therfore when we speake of Christs deseruinge, we do not say that in him is the beginning of deseruinge, but we climbe vp to the ordinance of God, which is the first cause thereof: because God of his owne meere good will appoynted him Mediatour, to purchase saluation for vs. And so is the deseruinge of Christ vnfitly set against the mercy of God. For it is a common rule, that things orderly one vnder an other do not disagree. And therfore it may well stand together, that mans iustification is free by the meere mercy of God, and that there also the deseruinge of Christ come betwene which is contained vnder the mercy of God. But against our workes are aptly set, as directly contrary, both the free fauour of God, & the obedience of Christ, either of them in their degree. For Christ could not deserue any thinge but by the good pleasure of God, and but because he was appointed to this purpose, with his sacrifice to appease the wrath of God, and with his obedience to put away our offences. Finally in a summe: because the deseruinge of Christ hangeth vpon the only grace of God, which apointed vs this meane of saluation, therefore as well the same deseruinge, as that grace, is fitly set against all the workes of men.

2 This distinction is gathered out of many places of the Scripture. God so loued the world, that he gaue his onely begotten sonne, that whosoeuer beleueth him, shall not perish. We se how the loue of God holdeth the first place, as the soueraigne cause or original, & the followeth faith in Christ, as the second or nerer cause. If any man take exception and say, that Christ is but the formall cause, he doth more diminish his power than the wordes may beare. For if we obtayne righteousnesse by fayth that resteth vpon him, then is the matter of our saluation to be sought in him, which is in many places plainely proued. Not that we first loued him, but he first loued vs, and sent his ſonne to be the appeaſing for our ſinnes. In theſe wordes is clerely ſhewed, that God to the ende that nothing ſhould withſtand his loue toward vs, appointed vs a meane to be reconciled in Chriſt. And this word Appeaſinge, is of great weight: becauſe God after a certaine vnſpeakeable manner, euen the ſame time that he loued vs, was alſo angry with vs, vntill he was reconciled in Chriſt. And to this purpoſe

Eph. 1. 6 firſt chapter to the Epheſians, where Paule, after that he had taught that we were choſen in Chriſt, addeth therwithall, ỹ we haue obtayned fauour in him. Howe did God beginne to embrace with his fauour them whom he loued before the makinge of the world, but becauſe he vttered his loue when he was reconciled by the bloud of Chriſt? For ſith God is the fountayne of all righteouſneſſe, it muſt needes be, that man ſo longe as he is a ſinner, haue God his enemy and his iudge. Wherefore the beginning of his loue is righteouſnes,
2. Cor. 5 ſuch as is deſcribed by Paule: He made him that had done no ſinne,
21. to be ſinne for vs, that we might be the righteouſneſſe of God in him. For he meaneth, that we haue obtayned free righteouſneſſe by ỹ ſacrifice of Chriſt, that we ſhould pleaſe God, which by nature are the childrē of wrath, & by ſinne eſtranged from him. But this diſtinctiō is alſo meant ſo oft as the grace of Chriſt is ioyned to ỹ loue of God. Wherupon followeth, that he giueth vs of his owne that which he hath purchaced: For otherwiſe it would not agree with him, that this praiſe is giuen him ſeuerally from his father, that it is his grace and procedeth from him.

3 But it is truely and perfectly gathered by many places of the Scripture, that Chriſt by his obedience hath purchaced vs fauour with his father. For this I take for a thinge confeſſed, that if Chriſt hath ſatisfied for our ſinnes, if he hath ſuffered the puniſhment due vnto vs, if by his obedience he hath appeaſed God, finally, if he being righteous, hath ſuffred for the vnrighteous, then is ſaluation purchaſed for vs by his righteouſneſſe: which is as much in effect as to
Ro. 5. 11 deſerue it. But, as Paule witneſſeth, we are reconciled and haue receiued reconciliation by his death. But reconciliation hath no place, but where there went offence before. Therefore the meaninge is: that God, to whom we were hatefull by reaſon of ſinne, is by ỹ death of his ſonne appeaſed, ſo that he might be fauorable vnto vs. And the compariſon of contraries that followeth a litle after, is diligently to be noted as by the tranſgreſſiõ of one man, many were made ſinners; Ro.5.19

that

ſo alſo by the obedience of one, many are made righteous. For the meaning is thus: As by the ſinne of Adam we were eſtranged from God & ordained to deſtruction, ſo by the obedience of Chriſt we are receiued into fauour as righteous. And the future time of the verbe doth not exclude preſent righteouſnes, as appeareth by the proceſſe of the text: For he had ſaid before, that the free gift was of many ſinnes vnto iuſtification.

4 But when we ſay, that grace is purchaſed vs by the deſeruing of Chriſt, we meane this, that we are cleanſed by his bloud, and that his death was a ſatisfaction for our ſinnes. His bloud cleanſeth vs from ſinne. This bloud is it that is ſhed for remiſſion of ſinne. If this be the effect of his bloud ſhed, ỹ ſinnes be not imputed vnto vs: it foloweth, that with that price the iudgement of God is ſatisfied. To which purpoſe ſerueth that ſaying of Iohn the Baptiſt: Behold ỹ lambe of God, that taketh away the ſinne of the world. For he ſetteth in compariſon Chriſt againſt all the ſacrifices of the law, to teach that in him only was fulfilled ỹ which thoſe figures ſhewed. And we know, what Moſes eche where ſayth: Iniquity ſhalbe cleanſed, ſinne ſhalbe put away and forgiuen. Finally we are very well taught in the old figures, what is the force and effect of the death of Chriſt. And this point the Apoſtle ſetteth out in the Epiſtle to the Hebrues, very fitly takinge this principle, that remiſſiõ is not wrought without ſheding of bloud. Wherupon he gathereth, that Chriſt for the aboliſhing of ſinne, appeared once for all by his ſacrifice. Againe: that he was offered vp to take away ỹ ſinnes of many. And he had ſayd before, that not by the bloud of goates or of calues, but by his owne bloude he once entred into the holy place, finding eternall redemption. Now when he thus reaſoneth: If the bloud of a calfe do ſanctifie, accordinge to the cleannes of the fleſh, that much more cõſciences are cleanſed by the bloud of Chriſt from deade workes: it eaſily appeareth that the grace of Chriſt is too much diminiſhed, vnles we graunt vnto his ſacrifice the power of cleanſing, appeaſinge and ſatisfyinge. As a litle after he addeth: This is the mediatour of the new teſtament, that they which are called, may receiue ỹ promiſe of eternall inheritance by meane of death for ỹ redẽption of ſinnes going before, which remained vnder the law. But ſpecially it is conuenient to wey the relation which Paul deſcribeth, that he became curſe for vs. &c. For it were ſuperfluous, Ga.3.13

For if Christ had not satisfied for our sinnes, it could not haue bin said, that he appeased God by taking vpon him the payne whereunto we were subiect. Wherewith agreeth that which foloweth in the same place: For the sinne of my people I haue

5 And the Apostles do plainly pronoūce, that he payed the price

Being iustified by his grace, through the redemption which is in Christ, whom God hath set to be the propitiatory by faith which is in his blood. Paule cōmendeth the grace of God in this point, because he hath giuen the price of redēption in the death of Christ: & then he biddeth vs to flee vnto his bloud, that hauinge obtayned righteousnesse, we may stande boldly before the iudgement of God. And to the same effect is that

1. Cor. 6 20. sinnes: for which reason Paule sayth, that we are preciously bought. Also that other saying of his would not stand together: There is one mediatour that gaue himselfe to be a redemptiō, vnles the paine had bin cast vpon him which we had deserued: Therfore the same Apostle defineth, that the redemption in the bloud of Christ is the forgiuenes

Col. 2. 14. with also agreeth the other place, that the hand wryting which was against vs, was cancelled vpon the crosse. For therein is meant the payment or recompense that acquiteth vs from giltinesse, There is also
Ga. 2. 21 great weight in these wordes of Paule: If we be iustified by the works of the law, thē Christ died for nothing. For hereby we gather, that we must fetche from Christ that which the lawe woulde giue, if any man can fulfill it: or (which is all one) that we obtayne by the grace of Christ that, which God promised to our workes in the lawe from which we coulde not be iuſtified in the lawe of Moſes. For if the keping of the lawe be righteouſneſſe, who can denie that Chriſt deſerued fauour for vs, when taking that burden vpon him, he to reconciled vs to God, as if we our ſelues had kept the law? To the ſame purpoſe ſerueth that which he afterwarde writeth to the Galatians: God ſent his Sonne ſubiect to the lawe, that he might redeeme thoſe that were vnder the lawe. For to what ende ſerued that ſubmiſſion of his, but that he purchaced to vs righteouſneſſe, taking vpon him to make good that which we were not able to pay? Hereof commeth that imputation of righteouſneſſe without workes, whereof Paule ſpeaketh, bycauſe the righteouſneſſe is reckened to vs which was founde in Chriſt onely. And truely for no other cauſe is the fleſh of Chriſt called our meate, but becauſe we finde in him the ſubſtance of life. And that power proceedeth from nothing els, but becauſe the Sonne of God was crucified, to be the price of our righteouſneſſe. As Paule ſaith, that he gaue vp himſelfe a ſacrifice of ſweete ſauour. And in an other place: He died for our ſinnes, he roſe againe for our iuſtification. Herevpon is gathered, that not onely ſaluation is geuen vs by Chriſt, but alſo that for his ſake his father is nowe fauourable vnto vs. For there is no doubte that that is perfectly fulfilled in him, which God vnder a figure pronounceth by Eſaie, ſaying: I will do it for mine owne ſake, and for Dauid my ſeruantes ſake. Whereof the Apoſtle is a right good witneſſe, where he ſaith: Your ſinnes are forgeuen you for his names ſake. For though the name of Chriſt be not expreſſed, yet Iohn after his accuſtomed maner ſignifieth him by this pronoune He. In which ſenſe alſo the Lorde pronounceth: As I liue becauſe of my father, ſo ſhal ye alſo liue bycauſe of me. Wherewith agreeth that which Paule ſaith, It is geue you becauſe of Chriſt, not onely to beleue in him, but alſo to ſuffer for him.

6 But to demaunde, whether Chriſt deſerued for himſelfe, (as Lombarde, and the other ſchoolemen do) is no leſſe fooliſh curioſitie, than it is a raſh determination when they affirme it. For what needed the ſonne of God to come downe to purchace any newe thing for him ſelfe? And the Lord declaring his owne counſell, doth put it wholy out of doubte. For it is not ſaid, that the father prouided for the commoditie of his ſonne in his deſeruinges, but that he deliuered him to death, and ſpared him not, becauſe he loued the worlde. And the Propheres manners of ſpeaking are to be noted, as, A childe is borne to vs. Againe: Reioyce thou daughter of Sion: behold thy king commeth to thee. Alſo that confirmation of loue ſhoulde be very colde which Paule ſetteth out, that Chriſt ſuffered death for his enemies. For thereupon we gather, that he had no respect of himselfe: and that same he plainely affirmeth in saying: I sanctifie my selfe for them. For he that geueth away the frute of his holinesse vnto other, doth thereby testifie that he purchaseth nothing for himselfe. And truely this is most worthily to be noted, that Christ, to geue him selfe wholy to saue vs, did after a certaine maner forget him selfe. But to this purpose they doe wrongfully drawe this testimonie of Paule: Therefore the father hath exalted him, and geuen him a name, &c. For by what deseruinges coulde man obteine to be iudge of the worlde, and the heade of the Angels, and to enioy the soueraigne dominion of God, and that in him shoulde rest that same maiestie, the thousandth parte wherof all the powers of men and Angels can not reach vnto? But the solution thereof is easy and plaine, that Paule doth not there entreate of the cause of exalting of Christ, but onely to shewe the effect ensuyng thereof, that it might be for an example to vs. And no other thing is meante by that which is spoken in an other place, that it behoued that Christ shoulde suffer, and so enter into the glorie of his Father.

THE THIRD BOOKE OF THE INSTITVTION OF CHRISTIAN RELIGION, WHICH intreateth of the maner how to receiue the grace of Christ, and what profites do grow vnto vs, and what effectes ensue thereof.

The first Chapter.

That those thinges which are spoken of Christ, do profite vs by secret worcking of the holy Ghost.

NOwe it is to be seene how those good thinges do come vnto vs, which the Father hath geuen to his only begotten Sonne, not for his owne priuate vse, but to enriche them that were without them and needed them. And first this is to be learned, that so long as Christ is out of vs, and we be seuered from him, whatsoeuer he suffered or did for the saluation of mankinde, is vnprofitable and nothing auaileth for

vs. Therefore that he may enterparten with vs those thinges that he hath receiued of his Father, it behoueth that he become ours, and dwell in vs. And for that cause he is called our heade, and the first begotten among many brethren: and on the other side it is saide, that we are graffed into him, and did put on him. For (as I haue before saide) all that euer he possesseth belongeth nothing to vs, vntill we grow together into one with him. But although it be true that we obteine this by faith: yet forasmuch as we see that not all without difference do embrace this enterpartening of Christ, which is offered by the Gospell, therefore very reason teacheth vs to climbe vp hier, and to enquire of the secret effectual working of the Spirit, by which it is brought to passe, that we enioy Christ and all his good thinges. I haue before entreated of the eternall godheade and essence of the Spirite, at this present let vs be content with this one speciall article, that Christ so came in water and bloude that the Spirite should testifie of him, least the saluation that he hath purchaced, should slippe away from vs. For as there are alleged three witnesses in heauen, the Father, the Worde and the Spirite, so are there also three in earth, Water, Bloude and the Spirite. And not without cause is the testimonie of the Spirite twise repeted, which we feele to be engrauen in our heartes in steede of a seale: whereby commeth to passe, that it sealeth the washing and sacrifice of Christ. After which meaning Peter also saith, that the faithfull are chosen in sanctification of the spirite vnto obedience and sprinkeling of the bloude of Christ. By which words he telleth vs, that to the entent the sheding of that holy bloud shoulde not become voide, our soules are cleansed with it by the secrete watering of the holy Spirite. According whereunto Paule also speaking of cleansing and iustification, sayeth that we are made partakers of them both in the name of Iesus Christ and in the Spirite of our God. Finally this is the summe, that the holy Spirite is the bonde wherewith Christ effectually bindeth vs vnto him. For proofe whereof also do serue all that we haue taught in the last booke before this, concerning his anointing.

Ephe. 4. 15. Rom. 8. 29. Rom. 11. 17. Gal. 3. 16. 1. Ioh. 5 7. 1. Pet. 1

2 But that this, being a matter specially worthy to be knowen, may be made more certainely euident, we must holde this in minde, that Christ came furnished with the holy Spirite after a certaine peculiar maner, to the ende that he might seuer vs from the worlde, and gather vs together into the hope of an eternall inheritance. For this cause he is called the Spirite of sanctification, because he doth not onely quicken and nourish vs with that generall power which appeareth as well in mankinde as in all other liuinge creatures, but also is in vs the roote and seede of heauenly life. Therefore the Prophets do principally commende the kingdome of Christ by this title of prerogatiue, that then should florish more plentifull aboundance of the Spirite. And notable aboue all the rest is that place of Ioel; In that day I will poure of my Spirite vpon all flesh. For though the Prophet there seeme to restraine the giftes of the Spirite to the office of prophecying, yet vnder a figure he meaneth, that God by the enlightning of his Spirite will make those his scholers which before were vnskilfull and voide of all heauenly doctrine. Now forasmuch as God the Father doth for his Sonnes sake geue vs his holy Spirite, and yet hath left with him the whole fulnesse therof, to the ende that he shoulde be a minister and distributer of his liberalitie: he is sometime called the Spirite of the Father, and sometime the Spirite of the Sonne. Ye are not (saieth Paule) in the flesh, but in the Spirite, for the Spirite of God dwelleth in you. But if any haue not the spirite of Christ, he is not his, And herevpon he putteth vs in hope of full renuing, for that he which raised vp Christ from the deade, shall quicken our mortall bodies because of his Spirite dwelling in vs. For it is no absurditie, that to the Father be ascribed the praise of his owne giftes, whereof he is the author: and yet that the same be ascribed to Christ, with whome the giftes of the Spirite are lefte, that he may geue them to those that be his. Therefore he calleth all them that thirst, to come to him to drinke. And Paule teacheth that the Spirite is distributed to euery one, according to the measure of the gifte of Christ. And it is to be knowen, that he is called the Spirite of Christ, not only in respect that the eternall Worde of God is with the same Spirite ioyned with the Father, but also according to his person of Mediator, because if he had not had that power, he had come to vs in vaine. After which meaning he is called the second Adam geuen from heauen, to be a quickning Spirite: whereby Paule compareth the singular life that the sonne of God breatheth into them that be his that they may be all one with him, with the naturall life that is also common to the reprobate. Likewise where he wisheth to the faithfull the fauour of Christ and the loue of God, he ioyneth withall the common partaking of the Spirite, without which no man can tast neither of the fatherly fauour of God, nor of the bountifulnesse of Christ. As also he saith in an other place: The loue of God is poured out into our heartes by the holy Spirite that is geuen vs.

3 And here it shalbe profitable to note, with what titles the Scripture setteth out the holy Spirite, where it entreateth of beginning and whole restoring of our saluation. First he is called the Spirite of adop-

adoption, because he is a witnesse vnto vs of the free goodwill of God, wherewith God the Father hath embraced vs in his beloued onely begotten Sonne, that he might be a father vnto vs, and doth encourage vs to praie bouldely, yea and doth minister vs wordes to crie with out feare Abba, Father: by the same reason he is called the earnest pledge, and seale of our inheritance, because he so geueth life from heauen to vs wandring in the worlde, and being like to dead men, that we may be assured that our soule is in safegarde vnder the faithful keping of God: for which cause he is also called life, by reason for righteousnesse. And forasmuch as by his secret watering he maketh vs frutefull to bring forth the buddes of righteousnesse, he is oftentimes called water, as in Esaie: All ye that thirst come to the waters. Againe: I will poure out my spirite vpon the thirstie, and floodes vpon the drie lande: wherewith agreeth that saying of Christ, which I did euen now allege: If any thirst, let him come to me. Albeit sometime he is so called, by reason of his power to purge and cleanse, as in Ezechiell where the Lord promiseth cleane waters wherewith he will wash his people from filthinesse. And forasmuch as he restoreth and norisheth into liuely quicknes, them vpon whome he hath poured the liquore of his grace, he is therefore called by the name of oile and anointement. Againe bycause in continually seething out and burning vp the vices of our lust, he setteth our heartes on fire with the loue of God and zeale of godlines, he is also for this effect worthily called fire. Finally he is described vnto vs as a fountaine, from whense do flowe vnto vs all heauenly richesse, or the hande of God, wherewith he vseth his power: bycause by the breath of his power he so breatheth diuine life into vs, that we are not now stirred by our selues, but ruled by his stirring and mouing: so that if there be any good thinges in vs, they be the frutes of his grace: but our owne giftes without him, be darkenesse of minde and peruersnesse of harte. This point is set out plainely enough, that till our mindes be bente vpon the holy Ghost, Christ lyeth in a maner idle, by cause we coldely espie him without vs, yea & farre away from vs. But we know that he profiteth none other but them whose heade he is, and the first begotten among brethren, and them which haue put on Him. This conioining onely maketh that, as concerning vs, he is come not vnprofitably with the name of Sauiour. And for proofe hereof serueth that holy mariage whereby we are made flesh of his flesh, and bones of his bones, yea and all one with him. But by the Spirite onely he maketh him selfe one with vs: by the grace and power of the same Spirite we are made his membres, so that he conteineth vs vnder him, and we againe posſeſſe him.

4 But forasmuch as faith is his principall worke, to it are for the moſt parte referred all thoſe thinges, that we commonly finde ſpoken to expreſſe his force and working: becauſe he bringeth vs into the light of the Goſpell by nothing but by faith: as Iohn Baptiſte teacheth, that this prerogatiue is geuē to them the beleue in Chriſt, that they be the children of God which are borne not of fleſh and bloude, but of God: where ſetting God againſt fleſh and bloude, he affirmeth it to be a ſupernaturall gifte that they receiue Chriſt by faith, who otherwiſe ſhoulde remaine ſubiect to their owne infidelitie. Like where vnto is that aunſwere of Chriſt: Fleſh and bloude hath not reueled it to thee, but my Father which is in heauen. Theſe thinges I do nowe but ſhortly touche, bycauſe I haue already intreated of them at large. And like alſo is that ſaying of Paule, that the Epheſians were ſealed vp with the holy Spirite of promiſe. For Paule ſheweth that he is an inwarde teacher, by whoſe working the promiſe of ſaluation pearceth into our mindes, which otherwiſe ſhoulde but beate the aire or our eares. Likewiſe when he ſaith, that the Theſſalonians were choſen of God in the ſanctification of the ſpirite and beleuing of the truth: by which ioyning of them together, he briefely admoniſheth that faith it ſelfe proceedeth from nothing els but from the holy ſpirit: which thing Iohn ſetteth out more plainely, ſaying: We knowe that there abideth in vs of the ſpirite which he hath geuen vs. Againe, By this we knowe that we dwell in him, and he in vs, becauſe he hath geuen vs of his ſpirite. Therefore Chriſt promiſed to his Diſciples the Spirite of truth which the worlde can not receiue, that they might be able to receiue the heauenly wiſedome. And he aſſigneth to the ſame ſpirite this propre office, to put them in minde of thoſe thinges that he had taught them by mouth. Becauſe in vaine ſhoulde the light ſhewe it ſelfe to the blinde, vnleſſe the ſame ſpirite of vnderſtanding ſhoulde open the eyes of their minde: ſo as a man may rightly call the holy ſpirite, the keye by which the treaſures of the heauenly kingdome are opened vnto vs: & may call his enlightning, the eyeſight of our minde to ſee. Therefore doth Saint Paule ſo much commend the miniſterie of the ſpirite: bycauſe teachers ſhoude crie without profiting, vnleſſe Chriſt himſelfe the inwarde maiſter ſhoulde drawe them with his ſpirite that are geuen him by his Father. Therefore as we haue ſaide, that perfect ſaluation is founde in the perſon of Chriſt: ſo that we may be made partakers thereof, he doth baptize vs in the holy ſpirite and fire, lightning vs into the faith of his Goſpell, and ſo newe begetting

Of faith, wherein both is set the definition of it, and the properties that it hath, are declared.

BVT all these thinges shalbe easie to vnderstand, when there is shewed a plaine definitiō of faith, that the readers may know the force and nature thereof. But first it is conuenient to call to minde againe these thinges that haue bene already spoken, that sith God doth appoint vs by his lawe what we ought to do, if we fall in any point therof, the same terrible iudgement of eternall death that he pronounceth doth rest vpon vs. Againe, that forasmuch as it is not onely hearde but altogether aboue our strength and beyonde all our power to fulfill the lawe, if we onely beholde our selues, and weye what estate is worthy for our deseruinges, there is no good hope left, but we lie cast away from God vnder eternall destruction. Thirdly this hath been declared, that there is but one meane of deliuerance to draw vs out of so wretched calamitie: wherein appeareth Christ the Redeemer, by whose hande it pleased the heauenly father, hauing mercie vpon vs of his infinite goodnesse and clemencie, to succour vs, so that we with sounde faith embrace this mercie, and with constant hope rest vpon it. But nowe it is conuenient for vs to weye this, what maner of faith this ought to be, by which all they that are adopted by God to be his children, do enter vpon the possessiō of the heauenly kingdome, forasmuch as it is certaine that not euery opiniō nor yet euery perswasion is sufficient to bring to passe so great a thing. And with so much the more care and study must we looke about for, and search out the natural propretie of faith, by how much the more hurtfull at this day is the errour of many in this behalfe. For a great part of the world, hearing the name of faith, conceiueth no hier thing, but a certaine common assent to the historie of the Gospel, Yea when they dispute of faith in the scholes, in barely callinge God the obiect of faith, they do nothing but (as we haue saide in an other place) by vaine speculation rather draw wretched soules out of the right way, than direct them to the true marke. For whereas God dwelleth in a light that none can atteine to, it behoueth of necessitie that Christ become meane betwene vs & it. For which cause he calleth him selfe the light of the world: & in an other place, The way: the Truth, & the Life, because no man commeth to the father (which is the fountaine of life) but by him: because he only knoweth the Father, & by him the

And Paule testifieth, that the glorie of God is in his person visible vnto vs:or (which is all one in effect) that the enlightning of the knowledge of Gods glorie shineth in his face. It is true in deede that faith hath respect onely to the one God, but this also is to be added, that it acknowledge him whome he hath sent,euen Iesus Christ. Because God himselfe should haue lyen secret and hidden farre from vs, vnlesse the brightneſſe of Christ did cast his beames vpon vs. For this entent the father left all that he had with his onely begotten sonne, euen by the communicating of good thinges with him to expresse the true image of his glorie. For as it is saide, that we must be drawene by the spirite, that we may be stirred to seeke Christ, so againe we ought to be admonished, that the inuisible father is no where els to be sought but in this
Libr.11. de ciui. Dei. ca. 2. image. Of which matter Augustine speaketh excellently well, which intreating of the marke that faith should shoote at, saith that we must know whether we must goe and which way: and then byandby after he gathereth that the safest way against al erroures is he that is both God and man. For it is God to whome we go, and man by whome we go: and both these are founde no where but in Christ. Neither doth Paule when he speaketh of faith in God, meane to ouerthrow
1.Pet.1. 21. that which he so ofte repeteth of faith that hath her whole stay vpon Christ. And Peter doth most fitly ioyne them both together, saying that by him we beleue in God.

2 Therefore this euill,euen as innumerable other,is to be imputed to the Schoolemen, which haue hidden Christ as it were with a veile drawene before him,to the beholding of whome vnlesse we be directly bent, we shall alway wander in many vncertaine mazes. But beside this that with their darke definition they do deface and in a maner bring to naught the whole force of faith, they haue forged a deuise of vnexpressed faith, with which name they garnishing their most grosse ignorance do with great hurte deceyue the silly people, yea (to say truely and plainely as the thing is in deede) this deuise doth not onely burie but vtterly destroy the true faith. Is this to beleue,to vnderstand nothing,so that thou obediently submit thy sense to the Church? Faith standeth not in ignorance but in knowledge, and that not onely of God, but of the will of God. For neither do we obteine saluation by this that we either are ready to embrace for true whatsoeuer the Church appointeth, or that we do commit to it all the office of searching and knowing: but when we acknowledge God to be a merciful father to vs by the recõciliatiõ made by Christ, and that Christ is geuen vs vnto righteousnesse, sanctification, and life. By this knowledge, I say, not by submitting of our sense, we atteine an entrie into the kingdome of heauen. For when the Apostle saith, that with the hearte we beleue to righteousnesse, and with the mouth confessiõ is made to saluatiõ, he sheweth that it is not enough, if a man vnexpressedly beleue that which he vnderstãdeth not, nor seeketh to learne: but be requireth an expressed acknowledging of Gods goodnesse, in which consisteth our righteousnesse. Rom. 10 10.

3 In deede I denie not (such is the ignorance wherewith we are compassed) that there nowe be and hereafter shalbe many thinges wrapped and hidden from vs, till hauing put of the burden of our flesh we come neerer to the presence of God: in which very thinges that be hidden from vs, nothing is more profitable than to suspend our iudgement, but to stay our minde in determined purpose to kepe vnitie with the Church. But vnder this colour to intitle ignoraunce tempered with humilitie by the name of faith, is a great absurditie. For faith lieth in knowledge of God and of Christ not in reuerence of the Church. And we see what a maze they haue framed with this their hidden implication, that any thing whatsoeuer it be without any choise, so that it be thrust in vnder title of the Church, is greadily receiued of the ignorant as it were an oracle, yea somtime also most monstrous erroures. Which vnaduised lightnesse of beliefe, whereas it is a most certaine downefal to ruine, is yet excused by them, for that it beleueth nothing determinatly, but with this condition adioyned, If the faith of the Church be such. So do they faine, that truth is holden in errour, light in blindnesse, true knowledge in ignoraunce. But because we will not tarry long in confuting them, we do onely warne the readers to compare their doctrine with ours. For the very pleanesse of the truth it selfe will of it selfe minister a confutation ready enough. For this is not the question among them, whether faith be yet wrapped with many remnauntes of ignorance, but they definitiuely say that they beleue aright, which stande amased in their ignorance, yea & do flatter them selues therein, so that they do agree to the authoritie and iudgement of the Church, concerning thinges vnknowene. As though the Scripture did not euery where teach, that with faith is ioyned knowledge. Iohn 17 3.

4 But we do graunt, that so long as we wander from home in this worlde, our faith is not fully expressed, not only because many things are yet hidde from vs, but because being compassed with many mistes of errours, we atteine not all thinges. For the highest wisedome of the most perfect is this, to profite more and proceede on further forward with gentill willingnesse to learne. Therfore Paule exhorteth the faithfull, if vpon any thing they differ one from an other, to abide for reuelation.' And truely experience teacheth, that till we be vnclothed of our flesh, we atteine to know lesse than were to be wisshed, and daily in reading we light vpon many darke places which do conuince vs of ignorance. And with this bridle God holdeth vs in modesty, assigning to euery one a measure of faith, that euen the very best teacher may be ready to learne. And notable examples of this vnexpressed faith, we may marke in the Disciples of Christ, before that they had obteined to be fully enlightned. We se, how they hardely tasted the very first introductions, how they did sticke euen in the smallest pointes, how they hanging at the mouth of their maister did not yet much proceede, yea when at the womens information they ranne to the graue, the Resurrection of their maister was like a dreame vnto them. Sith Christ did before beare witnesse of their faith, we may not say that they were vtterly without faith: but rather, if they had not ben perswaded that Christ should rise againe, all care of him woulde haue perished in them. For it was not superstition that did drawe the women to embalme with spices the corpes of a dead man of whome there was no hope of life: but although they beleued his wordes whome they knew to be a speaker of trueth, yet the grosnesse that still possessed their mindes so wrapped their faith in darkenesse, that they were in a maner amased at it. Wherevpon it is saide, that they then at the last beleued when they had by triall of the thing it selfe proued the trueth of the wordes of Christ: not that they then beganne to beleue, but bycause the seede of hidden faith which was as it were dead in their hartes, then receiuing liuelinesse, did springe vp. There was therefore a true faith in them, but an vnexpressed faith, because they reuerently embraced Christ for their onely teacher, and then being taught of him, they determined that he was the author of their saluation: Finally, they beleued that he came from heauen, by the grace of his father to gather his Disciples to heauen. And we neede not to seke any more familiar proofe hereof than this, that in all thinges alway vnbelefe is mingled with faith.

Phili. 3. 15.

5 We may also call it an vnexpressed faith, which yet in deede is nothing but a preparation of faith. The Euangelistes do rehearse that that many beleued, which onely being rauished to admiration with miracles, proceded no further but that Christ was the Messias which had bene promised, albeit they tasted not so much as any slender learning of the Gospell. Such obedience which brought them in subiectiō willingly to submit them selues to Christ, beareth the name of faith where it was in dede but the beginning of faith. So the courtier that beleued Christes promise, cōcerning ỹ healing of his sonne, when he came home, as the Euangelist testifieth, beleued againe: by- Iohn. 4.

Christ, and then submitted him selfe to his authoritie to receiue his doctrine. Albeit it is to be knowen, that he was so tractable and ready to learne, that yet in the first place the worde of beleuing signifieth a particular belefe: and in the second place maketh him of the numbre of the Disciples, that professed to be the scholers of Christ. Alike example doth Iohn set forth in the Samaritanes, which so beleued Iohn. 4.
the womans reporte, that they ranne earnestly to Christ, which yet when they had hearde him, saide thus: Now we beleue not bycause of thy report, but we haue hearde him, and we know that he is the Sauiour of the worlde. Hereby appeareth that they which are not yet instructed in the first introductions, so that they be disposed to obedience, are called faithfull, in deede not proprely, but in this respect, that God of his tender kindenesse voucheſaueth to graunt so great honour to that godly affection, but this willingnesse to learne, with a desire to proceede further, differeth farre from that grosse ignorance, wherin they lie dull that are content with the vnexpressed faith, such as the Papistes haue imagined. For if Paule seuerely 2. Tim.
condemneth them which alway learning, yet neuer come to the 3.7.
knowledge of trueth, how much more greuous reproche do they deserue, that of purpose studie to know nothing?

6 This therefore is the true knowledge of Christ, if we receiue him such as he is offered of his Father, that is to say, clothed with his Gospell. For as he is appointed to be the marke of our faith, so we can not go the right way to him, but by the Gospell going before to guide vs. And truely there are opened to vs the treasures of grace, which being shut vp, Christ shoulde litle profite vs. So Paule ioyneth faith an vnseparable companion to doctrine, where he saith: Ye haue not so learned Christ, for ye haue bene taught what is the trueth in Ephe. 4.

fesse that there hath bene so much taught by Moses & the Prophets, as suffised to the edification of faith, but because there hath bene deliuered in the Gospell a fuller opening of faith, therefore it is wor-

Rom.10 thily called of Paule, the doctrine of faith. For which cause also he
4. saith in an other place, that by the comming of faith the law is taken away, meaning by this word faith, the new and vnaccustomed maner of teaching, wherby Christ since he appeared our scholemaster, hath more plainely set forth the mercy of his father, and more certainely testified of our saluation. Albeit it shalbe the more easie and more conuenient ordre, if we descend by degrees from the generaltie to the specialtie. First we must be put in minde that there is a generall relation of faith to the worde, and that faith can no more be seuered from the worde, than the sunnebeames from the sunne from whom Esa. 55. they procede. Therefore in Esaie God crieth out: Heare me and your

Psa. 95. saith: This day if ye shall heare his voice. And to heare is common-

Moreouer, God doth not without cause in Esaie set this marke of differéce betwene the children of the Church and straungers, that he will instruct them all, that they may be taught of him. For if it were a benefit vniuersall to all, why shoulde he direct his wordes to a fewe? Wherewith agreeth this that the Euangelistes do commonly vse the wordes Faithfull, and Disciples, as seuerall
Act. 6. wordes expressing one thing, and specially Luke very oft in the Actes
1. and. 9. and. 26. and. 11. 26. and and. 13. and. 14. of the Apostles. Yea and he stretcheth that name euen to a woman in the ninth chapiter of the Actes. Wherefore if faith do swerue neuer so litle from this marke, to which it ought to be directly leuelled, it kepeth not her own nature, but becometh an vncertaine lightnesse of beliefe and wandring errour of minde. The same Worde is the foundation wherewith faith is vpholden and susteined, from which if it swarue, it falleth downe. Therefore take away the Worde, and then there shall remaine no faith. We do not here dispute whether the ministerie of man be necessarie to sowe the word of God that faith may be conceiued therby, which question we wil els where intreate of: but we say that the worde it selfe, howesoeuer it be conueied to vs, is like a mirrour when faith may beholde God. Whether God doth therein vse the seruice of man, or worke it by his owne only power, yet he doth alway shew him selfe by his worde to those,
Ro.1.c. whome his will is to drawe vnto him: wherevpon Paule defineth faith to be an obedience that is geuen to the Gospell. Rom.1. And in Phili.2. an other place he praiseth the obedience of faith in the Philippians,
17. For this is not the onely purpose in the vnderstanding of faith, that we knowe that there is a God, but this also, yea this chiefely, that we vndervnderstand what will he beareth towarde vs. For it not so much behoueth vs to knowe what he is in himselfe, but what a one he will be to vs. Nowe therefore we are come to this point, that faith is a knowledge of the will of God, perceyued by his worde. And the foundation hereof is a foreconceiued persuasion of the truthe of God. Of the assuredneſſe whereof so long as thy minde shall dispute with it selfe, the worde shall be but of doubtfull and weake credit; yea rather no credit at all. But also it sufficeth not to beleue that God is a true speaker, which can neither deceiue nor lie, vnleſſe thou further holde this for vndoubtedly determined, that what soeuer procedeth from him, is the sacred and inuiolable truthe.

7 But because not at euery worde of God mans hearte is raised vp to faith, we must yet further search what this faith in the worde hath proprely respect vnto. It was the saying of God to Adam: Thou shalt die the death. It was the saying of God to Cain: The bloude of thy brother crieth to me out of the earth. Yet these are such sayinges as of them selues can do nothing but shake faith, so much leſſe are they able to stablish faith. We deny not in the meane season that it is the office of faith to agree to the truthe of God, howe ofte soeuer, what soeuer, and in what sorte soeuer it speaketh: but nowe our queſtion is onely, what faith findeth in the worde of the Lorde to leane and reſt vpon. When our conscience beholdeth onely indignation and vengeance, howe can it but tremble and quake for feare? And howe shoulde it but flee God, of whome it is afraide? But faith ought to seeke God, and not to flee from him. It is plaine therefore, that we haue not yet a full definition of faith, bycause it is not to be accompted for faith to knowe the will of God, of what sorte so euer it be. But what if in the place of will, whereof many times the meſſage is sorrowefull and the declaration dreadfull, we put kindeneſſe or mercie? Truely so we shall come nerer to the nature of faith. For we are then allured to seeke God, after that we haue learned that saluation is laied vp in store with him for vs. Which thing is confirmed vnto vs, when he declareth that he hath care and loue of vs. Therefore there needeth a promiſe of grace, whereby he may teſtifie that he is our mercifull father, for that otherwiſe we can not approch vnto him, and vpon that alone the hearte of man may safely reſt. For this reason commonly in the Pſalmes these two things Mercie and Truth do cleaue together, because neither shoulde it any thing profite vs to know that God is true, vnleſſe he did mercifully allure vs vnto him: neither were it in our power to embrace his mercie, vnleſſe he did with his one mouth offer it. I haue reported thy truth and thy ſaluation, I haue not hidden thy goodneſſe and thy truth. Thy goodneſſe and thy trueth keepe me. In an other place: Thy mercie to the heauens, thy trueth euen to the cloudes. Againe. All the wayes of the Lord are mercie and trueth, to them that keepe his couenant. Againe. His mercie is multiplied vpon vs, and the truth of the Lorde abideth for euer. Againe. I will ſinge to thy name vpon thy mercie and trueth. I omit that which is in the Prophetes to the ſame meaning, that God is mercifull and faithfull in his promiſes. For we ſhall raſhely determine that God is mercifull vnto vs, vnleſſe him ſelfe do teſtifie of him ſelfe and preuent vs with his calling, leaſte his will ſhoulde be doubtefull and vnknowen. But we haue already ſeene, that Chriſt is the onely pledge of his loue, without whome on euery ſide appeare the tokens of hatred and wrath. Nowe foraſmuch as the knowledge of Gods goodneſſe ſhall not much preuaile, vnleſſe he make vs to reſt in it, therefore ſuch an vnderſtanding is to be baniſhed as is mingled with doubting, and doth not ſoundly agree in it ſelfe, but as it were, diſputeth with it ſelfe. But mans wit, as it is blinde and darkened, is farre from atteining and climbing vp to perceiue the very will of God: and alſo the hearte of man, as it wauereth with perpetuall doubting, is farre from reſting aſſured in that perſuaſion. Therfore it behoueth both that our wit be lightned, and our hearte ſtrengthened by ſome other meane, that the worde of God may be of full credit with vs. Nowe we ſhall haue a perfect definition of faith, if we ſay, that it is a ſtedfaſt and aſſured knowledge of Gods kindneſſe toward vs, which being grounded vpon the trueth of the free promiſe in Chriſt, is both reueled to our mindes, and ſealed in our heartes by the holy Ghoſt.

Pſal. 36. 6. Pſa. 107. Pſa. 138

8 But before I procede any further, it ſhalbe neceſſarie, that I make ſome preambles to diſſolue certaine doubtes that otherwiſe might make ſome ſtoppe to the readers. And firſt I muſt confute that diſtinction that flieth about in the ſcholes, betwene faith formed and vnformed. For they imagine that ſuch as are touched with no feare of God, with no feeling of godlineſſe, do beleue all that is neceſſarie to ſaluation. As though the holy Ghoſt in lightening our heartes vnto faith, were not a witneſſe to vs of our adoption. And yet preſumptuouſly, when all the Scripture crieth out againſt it, they geue the name of faith to ſuch perſwaſion voide of the feare of God. We neede to ſtriue no further with their definition, but ſimply to rehearſe the nature of faith, ſuch as it is declared by the worde of God. Whereby ſhall plainely appeare howe vnſkilfully and fooliſhly they rather make a noiſe than ſpeake of it. I haue alreadie touched parte,

parte, the reſt I will adde hereafter as place ſhall ſerue. At this preſent I ſay, that there can not be imagined a greater abſurditie, than this inuention of theires. They wil haue faith to be an aſſent, whereby euery deſpiſer of God may receiue that which is vttered out of the Scripture. But firſt they ſhoulde haue ſeene whether euery man of his owne power do bring faith to him ſelfe, or whether the holy Ghoſt be by it a witneſſe of adoption. Therefore they do childiſhly plaie the fooles, in demaunding, whether faith, which qualitie addeth doth fourme, be the ſame faith or an other and a newe faithe. Whereby appeareth certainly, that in ſo babling they neuer thought of the ſingular gifte of the holy Ghoſt. For the beginning of beleuing doth already conteine in it the reconciliation, whereby man approcheth to God. But if they did weye that ſaying of Paule: With the hearte is beleued to righteouſneſſe, they woulde ceſſe to faine that ſame colde qualitie. If we hadde but this one reaſon, it ſhoulde be ſufficient to ende this contention: that the very ſame aſſent (as I haue already touched, and will againe more largely repete) is rather of the hearte than of the braine, rather of affection than of vnderſtanding. For which cauſe it is called the obedience of faith, which is ſuch as the Lorde preferreth no kinde of obedience aboue it: and that worthily, foraſmuch as nothing is more precious to him than his truthe, which as Iohn the Baptiſt witneſſeth, the beleuers doe as it were ſubſcribe and ſeale vnto. Sithe the matter is not doubtefull we doe in one worde determinately ſaie, that they ſpeake fondely when they ſaie that faithe is fourmed by adding of godly affection vnto aſſent: whereas aſſent it ſelfe, at leaſt ſuch aſſent as is declared in the Scriptures, conſiſteth of godly affection. But yet there is an other plainer argument that offereth it ſelfe to be alleged. For whereas faith embraceth Chriſt as he is offered vs of the Father: and Chriſt is offered not onely for righteouſneſſe, forgeueneſſe of ſinnes and peace, but alſo for ſanctification, and a fountaine of liuing water: without doubte no man can euer truely knowe him, vnleſſe he doe therewithall receiue the ſanctification of the Spirite. Or, if any man deſire to haue it more plainely ſpoken, Faithe conſiſteth in the knowledge of Chriſt. And Chriſt can not be knowene, but with ſanctification of his Spirite: therefore it followeth, that faith can by no meane be ſeuered from godly affection.

9 Whereas they are wonte to laie this againſt vs, that Paule ſaieth: If a man haue all faith, ſo that he remoue mountaines: if he haue not charitie, he is nothing: whereby they woulde deforme faith, in ſpoyling it of charitie: they conſider not what the Apoſtle in that place meaneth by faith. For when in the chapiter next before it, he had ſpoken of the diuerſe giftes of the holy Ghoſt, among the which he had reckened the diuerſe kindes of languages, power and prophecie, and had exhorted the Corinthians to follow the beſt of theſe giftes, that is to ſay, ſuch giftes whereby more profit and cõmoditie might come to the whole body of the Church: he ſtreightway ſaide further, that he woulde ſhewe them yet a more excellent way. That all ſuch giftes, how excellent ſoeuer they be of them ſelues, yet are nothing to be eſteemed, vnleſſe they ſerue charitie. For they were geuen to the edifying of the Church, and vnleſſe they be applied therevnto, they loſe their grace. For proofe of this he particularly reherſeth them, repeting the ſelfe ſame giftes that he had ſpoken of before, but in other names. And he vſeth the wordes Powers and Faith, for all one thing, that is for the power to do miracles. Sith therefore this, whether ye call it power or faith, is a particular gifte of God, which euery vngodly man may both haue and abuſe, as the gifte of tongues, as prophecie and other giftes of grace: it is no maruell if it be ſeuered from charitie. But all the errour of theſe men ſtandeth in this, that where this worde Faith, hath diuerſe ſignifications, they not conſidering the diuerſitie of the thing ſignified, diſpute as though it were taken for one thinge in all places alike. The place of Iames which they allege for maintainance of the ſame errour, ſhall be els where diſcuſſed. But although for teachinges ſake, when we meane to ſhewe what manner of knowledge of God there is in the wicked, we graunt that there are diuerſe ſortes of faithe: yet we acknowledge and ſpeake of but one faithe of the godly, as the Scripture teacheth. Many in deede doe beleue that there is a God, they thinke that the Hiſtorie of the Goſpell and other partes of the Scripture are true (as commonly we are wonte to iudge of ſuch thinges, as either are reported being done long ago, or ſuch as we our ſelues haue bene preſente at and ſeene.) There be alſo ſome that goe further, for bothe they beleeue the worde of God to be a moſte aſſured oracle, and they do not altogether deſpiſe his commaundementes, and they ſomewhat after a ſorte are moued with his threateninges and promiſes. It is in deede teſtified that ſuch haue faith: but that is ſpoken out by abuſe, bycauſe they do not with open vngodlineſſe fight againſt the worde of God, or refuſe or deſpiſe it: but rather pretende a certaine ſhew of obedience.

10 But this image or ſhadowe of faith, as it is of no value, ſo

is it

is it not worthy of the name of faith. From the sound trueth whereof how farre it differeth, although it shall be hereafter more largely entreated, yet there is no cause to the contrary, why it shoulde not now be touched by the way. It is sayd that Simon Magus beleued, which yet within a litle after bewraied his owne vnbeliefe. And whereas it is said that he beleued, we do not vnderstand it as some do, that he fayned a beliefe when he had none in his heart: but we rather thinke that being ouercome with the maiesty of the Gospell, he had a certaine faith such as it was, and so acknowledged Christ to be the author of life and saluation, that he willingly professed himselfe to be one of his. After the same manner it is said in the Gospel of Luke, that they beleue for a time, in whom the seede of the word is choked vp before it bring foorth frute, or before it take any roote at all, it byandby withereth away and perisheth: we dout not that such delited with a certaine tast of the word do greedily receiue it, and beginne to feele the diuine force of it: so farre that with deceitful counterfaiting of fayth, they beguile not onely other mens eyes, but also their owne mindes. For they perswade themselues, that that reuerence which they shew to the word of God, is most true godlinesse, because they thinke that there is no vngodlynesse but manifest and confessed reproch or contempt of his word. But what manner of assent soeuer that be, it pearceth not to the very hart to remaine there stablished: & though sometime it semeth to haue take rootes, yet those are not liuely rootes. The heart of man hath so many secret corners of vanity, is full of so many hiding holes of lying, is couered with so guilefull hypocrisie, that it oft deceiueth himselfe. But let them that glorie in such shadowes of faith vnderstande, that therein they are no better than the Deuill. But that first sorte of men are farre worse than the Deuill, which do senseleslely heare and vnderstande those thinges for knowledge whereof the Deuils do tremble. And the other are in this point egall with the Deuill, that the feelinge such as it is wherewith they are touched, turneth onely to terrour and discouragement.

Iac. 2. 19.

11 I knowe that some thinke it hard, that we assigne fayth to the reprobate, whereas Paule affirmeth faith to be the frute of election. Which dout yet is easily dissolued: for though none receiue the light of faith, nor do truely feele the effectual working of the Gospel, but they that are foreordained to saluation: yet experience sheweth that the reprobate are sometime moued with the same feelinge that the elect are, so that in their owne iudgement they nothing differ frō the elect. Wherefore it is no absurdity, that the Apostle ascribeth to

2. Thes. 1. 4.

Heb.6. them the taſt of the heauenly giftes, that Chriſt aſcribeth to them a faith for a time: not that they ſoundely perceaue the ſpirituall force of grace and aſſured light of faith: but becauſe the Lord, the more to cõdemne them and make them inexcuſable, conueyeth himſelfe into their mindes ſo farre foorth, as his goodneſſe may be taſted without the ſpirite of adoption. If any obiect, that then there remayneth nothing more to the faithfull whereby to proue certainely their adoption: I anſwere that though there be a great likeneſſe and affinity betwene the elect of God, and them that are endued with a falling faith for a time, yet there liueth in the elect only that affiance which Paul ſpeaketh of, that they crie with full mouth, Abba, Father. Therefore as God doth regenerate onely the elect with incorruptible ſeede for euer, ſo that the ſeede of life planted in their hearts neuer periſheth: ſo ſoundly doth he ſeale in them the grace of his adoptiõ, that it may be ſtable & ſure. But this withſtandeth not but that that other inferiour working of the Spirite may haue his courſe, euen in the reprobate. In the meane ſeaſon the faithful are taught, carefully & humbly to examine themſelues, leaſt in ſteade of aſſuredneſs of faith, do creepe in careleſſe confidẽce of the fleſh. Beſide that, the reprobate do neuer conceiue but a confuſed feelinge of grace, ſo that they rather take holde of the ſhadow than of the ſounde body, becauſe the holy Spirite doth properly ſeale the remiſſion of ſinnes in the elect onely, ſo that they apply it by ſpeciall faith to their vſe. But yet it is truely ſaid, that the reprobate beleue God to be mercifull vnto them, becauſe they receiue the gift of reconciliation, although confuſedly and not plainely enough: not that they are partakers of the ſelfe ſame fayth or regeneration with the children of God, but becauſe they ſeeme to haue as well as they, the ſame beginning of faith, vnder a cloke of Hypocriſie. And I denie not, that God doth ſo farre giue light vnto theyr mindes, that they acknowledge his grace, but he maketh that ſame feelinge ſo different from the peculiar teſtimonie which he giueth to his elect, that they neuer come to the ſounde effect and fruition thereof. For he doth not therefore ſhewe himſelfe mercifull vnto them, for that he hauinge truely deliuered them from death, doth receiue them to his ſauegarde, but onely he diſcloſeth to them a preſent mercye. But he vouchſaueth to graunt to the onely elect the liuely roote of fayth, ſo that they continue to the ende. So is that obiection aunſwered, if God do truely ſhewe his grace, that the ſame remayneth perpetually ſtabliſhed, for that there is no cauſe to the contrarie, but that God may enlighten ſome with a preſent feelinge of his grace, which afterwarde vaniſheth sheth away.

12 Also though faith be a knowledge of Gods kindenes toward vs, and an assured persuasion of the trueth thereof: yet it is no marvell that the feelinge of Gods loue in temporall thinges doth vanish away: which although it haue an affinity with faith, yet doth it much differ from faith. I graunt, the will of God is vnchaungeable, and the trueth thereof doth alway stedfastly agree with it selfe, but I deny that the reprobate do proceede so farre as to attaine vnto that secrete reuelation, which the Scripture sayth to belonge to the elect onely. Therefore I deny that they do either conceiue the will of God as it is vnchaungeable, or do stedfastly embrace the trueth thereof, because they abide in a feeling that vanisheth away: Like as a tree that is not planted deepe enough to take liuely rootes, in processe of time waxeth drie, although for a fewe yeares it bringeth foorth not onely blossomes and leaues, but also frute. Finally, as by the fall of the first man, the Image of God might haue beene blotted out of his minde, and soule, so it is no maruell, if God do shine vpon the reprobate with certaine beames of his grace, which afterward he suffereth to be quenched. And there is no cause to the contrary, but that he may lightly ouer wash some, and throughly soke other some with the knowledge of his Gospell. This is in the meane time to be holden for trueth, that how small and weake soeuer faith be in the elect, yet because it is to them a sure pleadge of the Spirite of God, and a seale of their adoption, the printe thereof can neuer be blotted out of their heartes: as for the reprobate, that they are ouerspred with such a light as afterwarde commeth to nought. And yet the Spirite is not deceitefull, because he geueth not life to the seede that he casteth in their heartes, to make it abide alwayes incorruptible, as he doth in the elect. I go yet further, for whereas it is euident by the teachinge of the Scripture and by dayely experience, that the reprobate are sometime touched with the feelinge of Gods grace, it must needes be that there is raised in their heartes a certaine desire of mutuall loue. So for a time there liued in Saul a godly affection to loue God, by whom he knew himselfe to be fatherly handeled, and therefore was delited with a certaine sweetenesse of his goodnesse. But as the persuasion of the fatherly loue of God is not fast rooted in the reprobate, so do they not soundely loue him agayne as his children, but are led with a certayne affection like hired seruauntes. For to Christ onely was that Spirite of loue giuen, to this ende, that he shoulde poure it into his members. And truely that saying of Paule extendeth no further, but to the elect only: The Ro. 5. 5.

loue of God is poured abroade into our heartes by the holy Spirite that is giuen vs, euen the same loue that engendreth the same confidence of calling vpon him, which I haue before touched. As on the contrary side we see God to be maruelously angry with his children, whom yet he ceſſeth not to loue: not that in himſelfe he hateth thē, but becauſe his will is to make them afrayd with the feelinge of his wrath, but to the entent to abate their pride of fleſh, to ſhake of their drouſineſſe, and to moue them to repentance. And therefore all at one time they conceiue him to be both angry with them or with their ſinnes, and alſo mercifull vnto them: becauſe they not faynedly do pray to appeaſe his wrath, to whom yet they flee with quiete aſſured truſt. Hereby it appeareth that it is not true that ſome do counterfaite a ſhewe of faith, which yet do lacke the true faith, but while they are caried with a ſodayne violent motion of Zeale, they deceiue themſelues with falſe opinion, And it is no dout that ſluggiſhneſſe ſo poſſeſſeth them, that they do not well examine their heart as they ought to haue done. It is likely that they were ſuch to Iohn.2 24. whom (as Iohn witneſſeth) Chriſt did not commit himſelfe when yet they beleued in him: becauſe he knew them all, and knew what was in man. If many did not fal from the common faith (I cal it common, becauſe the faith that laſteth but a time hath a great likeneſſe and Ioh.8.3 affinity with the liuely and continuinge faith) Chriſt would not haue ſayd to his Diſciples: If ye abide in my worde, then are ye truely my Diſciples, and ye ſhall know the trueth, and the trueth ſhall make you free. For he ſpeaketh to them that had embraced his doctrine, & exhorteth them to the encreaſe of faith, that they ſhould not by their owne ſluggiſhneſſe quenche the light that is giuen them. Therefore faith. For oftentimes faith signifieth the sounde doctrine of religion. as in the place that we now alleaged, and in the same Epistle where Paule will haue Deacons to holde fast the mistery of faith in a pure conscience. Againe, where he publisheth the falling away of certaine from the faith. But on the other side he sayth that Timothee was nourished vp with the wordes of faith. Againe, where he sayth that prophane vanities and oppositions, falsely named sciences, are the cause that many departe from the faith: whom in an other place he calleth reprobate touchinge faith. As againe he chargeth Titus, saying, Warne them that they be sounde in the faith. By soundenesse he meaneth nothing else but pureneſſe of doctrine, which is easily corrupted and brought out of kinde by the lightnesse of men. Euen because in Christ, whom faith possesseth, are hidden all the treasures of wisedom and knowledge: therefore faith is worthily extended to signifie the whole summe of heauenly doctrine, from which it can not be seuered. Contrarywise somtime it is restrayned to signifie some particular obiect, as when Matthew sayth, that Christ saw the faith of them that did let downe the man sicke of the palsey through the tiles and Christ himselfe crieth out that he founde not in Israell so great faith as the Centurion brought. But it is likely that the Centurion was earnestly bent to the healing of his daughter, the care whereof occupied all his minde: yet because being contented with the onely assent and answere of Christ, he required not Christs bodily presence, therfore in respect of this circumstance his faith was so much commended. And a litle here before we haue shewed, that Paul taketh faith for the gift of working miracles, which gift they haue that neither are regenerate by the Spirit of God, nor do hartily worship him. Also in an other place he setteth faith for ỹ doctrine wherby we are instructed in faith. For where he wryteth that faith shall be abolished, it is out of question that that is meant by the ministery of the Church, which at this time is profitable for our weakenesse. In these formes of speach standeth a proportionall relation. But when the name of faith is vnproperly remoued, to signifie a false profession, or a lyinge title of faith, that should seeme to be as harde a figuratiue abuse as when the feare of God is sette for a corrupt and wrongfull manner of worshippinge, as when it is oftentimes sayd in the holy History, that the foraine nations which hadde bin transplanted into Samaria and the places borderinge there about, feared the fayned Gods and the God of Israell: which is as much, as to mingle heauen and earth together. But now our question is, What is that faith which maketh the children of God different from the vnbeleuers, by which we call vpon

God by the name of our Father, by which we paſſe from death to life, and by which Chriſt the eternall ſaluation and life dwelleth in vs. The force and nature thereof I thinke I haue ſhortly and plainely declared.

14 Now let vs againe go through all the partes of it, euen frō the beginning which being diligently examined, (as I thinke) there ſhall remaine nothing doutfull. When in defining faith we call it a knowledge, we meane not therby a cōprehending, ſuch as men vſe to haue of thoſe thinges that are ſubiect to mans vnderſtandinge. For it is ſo far aboue it, that mās wit muſt go beyond & ſurmoūt it ſelfe to come vnto it, yea and when it is come vnto it, yet doth it not attayne that which it feeleth, but while it is perſuaded of that which it conceiueth not, it vnderſtandeth more by the very aſſuredneſſe of perſuaſion, than if it did with mans owne capacity throughly perceiue any thing familiar to man. Therefore Paule ſayth very well, where he calleth it to comprehende what is the length, bredth, depth, & heighth, and to know the loue of Chriſt that farre ſurmounteth knowledge. For his meaninge was to ſignifie, that the thinge which our minde conceiueth by faith, is euery way infinite, and that this kinde of knowledge is farre hyer than all vnderſtandinge. But yet becauſe the Lord hath diſcloſed to his Saintes the ſecrete of his will which was hidden from ages and generations, therefore by good reaſon faith is in Scripture ſometime called an acknowledginge: and Iohn calleth it a certaine knowledge, where he teſtifieth, that the faithfull do certaynely know that they are the children of God. And vndoutedly they know it aſſuredly: but rather by being confirmed by perſuaſion of Gods trueth, than by beinge informed by naturall demonſtration. And this, alſo the wordes of Paule do declare ſayinge, that while we dwell in the body, we are wandering abrode from the lord, becauſe we walke by faith and not by ſight: whereby he ſheweth that thoſe thinges which we vnderſtande by faith, are yet abſent from vs and are hidden from our ſight. And hereupon we determine, that the knowledge of faith ſtandeth rather in certainty than in comprehending.

2. Cor. 5. 6.

15 We further call it, a ſure and ſtedfaſt knowledge, to expreſſe thereby a more ſound conſtancy of perſuaſion. For as faith is not cōtented with a doutful and rowling opinion, ſo is it alſo not contented with a darke and entangled vnderſtanding: but requireth a full & fixed aſſuredneſſe, ſuch as men are wont to haue of things founde by experience and proued. For vnbeliefe ſticketh ſo faſt and is ſo deepe rooted in our heartes, and we are ſo bent vnto it, that this which all men confeſſe cõfesse with their mouth to be true, ỹ God is faithful, no mã is without great contention persuaded in his heart. Specially when he cõmeth to the prouse, then the wauering of all men disclooseth the faule that before was hidden. And not without cause the Scripture with so notable titles of cõmendation maintaineth the authority of the word of God, but endeuoureth to giue remedy for the aforesayd disease, that God may obtaine to be fully beleued of vs in his promises. The wordes of the Lord (sayth Dauid) are pure wordes, as the Siluer tried in a fornace of earth, fined seuen times. Againe, The word of the Lord fined is a shielde to all that trust in him. And Salomon confirminge the same, and in a manner in the same wordes, sayth: Euery word of God is pure. But sith ỹ whole 119. Psalme entreateth only in a manner vpon the same, it were superfluous to alleage any moe places. Truely so oft as God doth so cõmend his word vnto vs, he doth therin by the way reproche vs with our vnbeleuingnesse: becausse that commendation tendeth to no other end, but to roote vp all peruerse doutings out of our hearts. There be also many which so cõceiue the mercy of God, that they take litle comfort therof. For they be euen therewithall pinched with a miserable carefulnesse, while they dout whether he will be mercifull to them or no, becausse they enclose within to narrow boundes the very same mercifulnesse, of which they thinke themselues, most assuredly perswaded. For thus they thinke with themselues, that his mercy is in deede great and plentifull poured out vpon many, offring it selfe and ready for all men: but that it is not certaine whether it will extende vnto them or no, or rather whether they shall attaine vnto it or no. This thought when it stayeth in the midde race, is but a halfe. Therefore it doth not so confirme the spirit with assured quietnes, as it doth trouble it with vnquiete doutfulnesse. But there is a far other feeling of full assuredneesse, which in the Scriptures is alway assigned to faith, euen such a one as plainely setting before vs the goodnes of God, doth clearely put it out of dout. And that can not be, but that we must needes truely feele and proue in our selues the sweteneesse thereof. And therefore the Apostle out of faith deriueth assured confidence, and out of it againe boldnesse. For thus he sayth, that by Christ we haue boldnesse, and an entrance with confidence, which is through faith in him. By which words truely he sheweth, that it is no right fayth, but when we are bolde with quiet mindes to shew our selues in the presence of God. Which boldnesse procedeth not but of assured confidence of Gods good will and our saluation. Which is so true, that many times this word Faith, is vsed for Confidence.

Pro. 30. 5.

Ephe. 3. 12.

16 But hereupon hangeth the chiefe ſtay of our faith, that we do not thinke the promiſes of mercy which the Lord offreth to be true only in other beſide vs, & not at all in our ſelues: but rather that in inwardly embracinge them, we make them our owne. From henſe
Ro. 5.1. proceedeth that confidence which the ſame Paule in an other place calleth peace, vnles ſome had rather ſay, that peace is deriued of it. It is an aſſurednes that maketh the cõſcience quiete & chereful before God, without which the conſciẽce muſt of neceſſity be vexed, & in a maner torne in peeces with troubleſome trembling, vnleſſe perhaps it do forget God and it ſelfe, and ſo ſlomber a litle while. And I may truely ſay, For a litle while, for it doth not longe enioy that miſerable forgetfulnes, but is with oftẽ recourſe of the remembrance of Gods iudgement ſharply tormented. Briefely, there is none truely faithfull, but he that being perſuaded with a ſounde aſſuredneſſe that God is his mercifull and louing father, doth promiſe himſelfe all thinges vpon truſt of Gods goodneſſe: and none but he that truſting vpon the promiſes of Gods good will toward him, conceiueth an vndouted
He. 3.13 lookinge for of ſaluation: as the Apoſtle ſheweth in theſe wordes: if we keepe ſure to the ende our confidence and gloryinge of hope. For hereby he meaneth that none hopeth well in the Lorde, but he that with confidence glorieth that he is heire of the kingedome of heauen. There is none (I ſay) faithfull, but he that leaning vpon the aſſuredneſſe of his owne ſaluation, doth confidently triumphe vpon the Deuill and death, as we are taught by that notable concludinge
Rom. 8. 38. ſentence of Paule: I am perſuaded (ſaith he) that neither death, nor life, nor Angels, nor principalties, nor powers, nor thinges preſent, nor things to come, ſhalbe able to ſeparate vs from the loue of God, wherewith he embraceth vs in Chriſt Ieſu. And in like manner, the ſame Apoſtle thinketh, that the eyes of our minde are by no other meane well lightened, vnleſſe we ſee what is the hope of the eternal Ephe 1. 18. inheritance to which we are called. And ech where his common maner of teaching is ſuch, that he declareth that no otherwiſe we do not well comprehend the goodneſſe of God, vnleſſe we gather of it the frute of great aſſuredneſſe.

17 But (ſome man will ſay.) the faithfull do finde by experience a farre other thing within themſelues, which in recording the grace of God toward them, are not onely tempted with vnquieteneſſe, which oftentimes chaunceth vnto them, but alſo are ſometime ſhaken with moſt grieuous terrours: ſo great is the vehemency of temptations to throw downe their mindes: which thing ſeemeth not ſufficiently wel to agree with that aſſuredneſſe of faith. Therefore this dout muſt be answered, if we will haue our aforesayd doctrine to stand. But truely, when we teache that fayth ought to be certaine and assured, we do not imagine such a certainetie as is touched with no doutinge, nor such an assuredneſſe as is assayled with no carefulneſſe: but rather we say, that the faithfull haue a perpetuall strife with their owne distrustfullneſſe. So farre be we from settlinge their consciences in such a peaseable quieteneſſe, as may be interrupted with no troubles at all. Yet on the other side we say, that in what sorte soeuer they be afflicted, they do neuer fall and departe from that assured confidence which they haue conceiued of the mercy of God. The Scripture setteth forth no example of faith more plaine, or more notable than in Dauid, specially if a man beholde the whole continuall course of his life. But yet howe he was not alway of quiete minde, himselfe declareth by innumerable complaintes, of which at this time it shall be sufficient to choose out a fewe. When he reprocheth his owne soule with troublesome motions, what is it elſe but that he is angry with his owne vnbeleuingneſſe? Why trembleſt thou my soule (sayth he) and why art thou disquieted within me? trust in God. And truely that same discouragement was a playne token of destruction, euen as if he thought himselfe to be forsaken of God. And in an other place we reade a larger cõfession therof, where he saith: I sayd in my ouerthrow, I am cast out from the sight of thy eies. Also in an other place he disputeth with himselfe in carefull and miserable perplexity, yea & quareleth of the very nature of God, sayinge: Hath God forgotten to haue mercy? will he cast of for euer? And yet harder is that which followeth: But I haue sayd, To die is mine: charges are of the right hande of the hieſt. For, as in despeare he condemneth himselfe to destruction, and not only confeſſeth himselfe to be tossed with douting, but as if he were vanquished in battell, he leaueth nothing to himself, becauſe God hath forsaken him, and hath turned to destroy him, the same hande that was wont to be his helper. Wherefore not without cause he exhorteth his soule to returne to her quieteneſſe, becauſe he had found by experience, that he was tossed amõg troblesome waues. And yet (which is maruellous) in all these assaultes, faith vpholdeth the heartes of the godly, and is truely like vnto a Date tree to endeuour and rise vpward against all burdens, howe great soeuer they be: as Dauid when he might seeme to be vtterly ouerwhelmed, yet in rebuking himselfe, ceſſeth not to rise vp to God. And truely he that striuinge with his owne weakeneſſe, resorteth to faith in his troubles, is already in a manner conquerour. Which may be gathered by this sentence and other like: Waite for the Lord, be strong, he shal strengthen thy heart:waite for the Lord.He reprocheth himselfe of feare-fulnes, & in repeating the same twise,cõfesseth himselfe to be somtimes subiect to many troublesome motions. And in the meane time he doth not onely become displeased with himselfe in these faultes, but earnestly endeuoureth to amendement. Truely if we will more nerely by good examination compare him with Achaz,there shalbe Esa.7.3 founde great difference.Esay was sent to bring remedy to the carefull griefe of the wicked king and hipocrite,and spake vnto him in these wordes:Be in sauegard and be quiete:feare not, &c. But what did Achaz? As it was before sayd,that his heart was moued as the trees of the woode are shaken with winde,though he hearde the promise,yet he cessed not to quake for feare. This therefore is the propre reward & punishment of vnbeliefe,so to tremble for feare,that in temptatiõ he turneth himselfe away from God,that doth not open to himselfe the gate by faith. Contrariwise the faithfull whom the weighty burden of temptations maketh to stoupe,and in a maner oppresseth,do constantly rise vp,although not without trouble and hardinesse. And becausse they know their owne weakenesse, they pray with the Prophet: Take not the word of trueth away from my mouth continual-

Psa.119 43. ly.By which words we are taught,that somtime they become dumme as though their faith were vtterly ouerthrowen, yet they faint not, nor turne their backes,but proceede in their battel,& with praier do encourage their slouthfulnesse, leaste by fauoringe themselues they should grow to vnsensible dulnesse.

18 For the vnderstanding therof,it is needefull to returne to that diuision of the flesh and the spirite, whereof we made mention in an other place, which doth in this behalfe most clearely appeare. The godly heart therefore feeleth a diuision in it selfe, which is partely delited with sweteneesse by acknowledging of the goodnesse of God, and partly grieued with bitternesse by feelinge of his owne miserie, partly resteth vpon the promise of the Gospell,and partly trembleth by reason of the testimony of his owne wickednesse:partly reioyseth with conceiuing of life,and partly quaketh for feare of death. Which variation commeth by imperfection of faith, forasmuch as we neuer be in so good case in the course of this present life, as beinge healed from all disease of distrustfulnesse to be altogether filled & possessed with faith. Hereupon proceede those battels, when the distrustfulnes that abideth in the remnants of the flesh,riseth vp to assaile the faith that is inwardly conceiued.But if in a faithfull minde assurednes be mixed with doutfulnesse, come we not then alway to this point, that faith standeth not in a certaine and cleare knoweledge,but in a

darke & doutfully entangled knowledge of Gods will toward vs? No, not so. For though we be diuersely drawen with sundry thoughtes, yet are we not therfore byandby seuered from faith: though we be vexed with tossing vp and downe of distrustfulnesse, yet are we not therfore drowned in the bottomlesse depth therof: and though we be shaken, yet be we not thrust downe out of our place. For this is alway the ende of this battell, that faith doth at length with wrastling ouercome those hard troubles wherewith when she is so besieged, she seemeth to be in danger.

19 Let this be the summe of all. So soone as any drop of faith, be it neuer so small, is poured into our heartes, we byandby beginne to beholde the face of God milde and pleasaunt, and louing toward vs: yet the same we see from a farre of, & farre distant from vs, but with so sure sight, that we know we are not deceiued. Frō thense forward, howe much we profit (as we ought continually to profit) as it were by proceeding further, we come vnto so much the nerer, & therfore certainer beholding of him, & by very continuance he is made more familiar vnto vs. So we see, that the minde enlightened with the knowledge of God, is first holden wrapped in much ignorance, which by litle and litle is wiped away. Yet the same minde is not so hindered by being ignorant of some things, or by darkely seing that which she seeth, but that she enioyeth a clere knowledge of Gods wil toward her, which is the first and principall point in faith. For as if a man being shut vp in prison, haue beames of the sunne shininge in, sidelonge at a narrowe window, or as it were but halfe glummeringe, he wanteth in deede the free beholdinge of the sunne, yet he seeth with his eyes an vndoubted brightnesse thereof, and receiueth the vse of it: so we being bounde with the fetters of an earthly body, howsoeuer we be on eche side shadowed with much darkenes, yet we are sufficiently enlightened vnto perfect assuredneſse, by the light of God, extending his beames of light vpō vs, though it be but a litle, to shew forth his mercy.

20 Both these pointes the Apostle very well teacheth in diuerse places. For when he sayth, that we know vnperfectly, and prophecie vnperfectly, and see by a darke speakinge as by a glasse, he sheweth how slender a litle portion of the true godly wisedom is giuen vs in this present life. For though those words do not expressely shew that our faith is vnperfect so longe as we grone vnder this burden of the flesh, but that it happeneth vnto vs by our owne imperfection that we haue neede to be continually exercised in learning: yet he secretly declareth that that thinge which is infinite, can not be comprehended 1. Cor. 13. 9.

by our ſmall capacity, and narow compaſſe. And this Paule reporteth of the whole church, but vnto euery one of vs, his owne dulneſſe is a hinderance and ſtay that he can not come ſo nere as were to be wiſhed. But how ſure and vndeceiueable a taſt of it ſelfe, euen a ſmall droppe of faith doth make vs feele, the ſame Apoſtle ſheweth in an other place, where he affirmeth, that by the Goſpell we behold the glory of God with vncouered face, hauing no veile betwene vs and it, ſo effectually that we be transformed into the ſame image. In ſuch entanglementes of ignorance there muſt needes be wrapped together both much doutinge and fearefull trembling, ſpecially foraſmuch as our heart, by a certaine naturall inſtinct of it ſelfe, is enclined to vnbeleuingneſſe. Beſide that, there be tentations which both infinite in number, and diuerſe in kinde, do oftentimes with great ſodaine violence aſſaile vs. But ſpecially our owne conſcience oppreſſed with heauy burden of ſinnes lying vpon it, doth ſomtime lament and grone with it ſelfe, and ſometime accuſeth it ſelfe: ſometime ſecretely murmureth, and ſometime is openly troubled. Whether therfore aduerſities do ſhewe an apparance of the wrath of God, or the conſcience doth finde in it ſelfe any proufe or matter of his wrath, from thenſe vnbeliefe doth take weapons and engines to vanquiſhe faith withall: which are alway directed to this ende, that we thinking God to be our aduerſarie and hatefully bent againſt vs, ſhoulde both not hope for any helpe at his hande, & alſo be afraid of him as of our deadly enemy.

2. Cor. 3 18.

21 To beare theſe aſſaultes, faith doth arme & fortifie her ſelfe with the word of God. And when ſuch a tentation aſſaileth, that God is our enemy, becauſe he is ſharpe againſt vs: faith on the other ſide anſwereth, that euen when he puniſheth he is alſo mercifull becauſe his chaſtiſement commeth rather of loue than of wrath. When faith is ſtriken with this thought that God is a reuenger of iniquities, againſt that ſtroke he ſetteth his pardon ready for all offenſes, ſo oft as the ſinner reſorteth to the mercifulneſſe of the Lorde. So a godly minde howſoeuer it be in maruelous wiſe toſſed and vexed, yet at length riſeth vp aboue all daungers, & neuer ſuffereth the confidence of Gods mercy to be plucked away from it: But rather whatſoeuer contentiõs do trouble and wery it, in the ende they turne to the aſſuredneſſe of this confidence. And hereof this is a proufe: that the holy ones, when they thinke thẽſelues moſt of all preſſed with the vengeance of God, yet euen then do make their complaintes to the ſame God: and when it ſeemeth that they ſhall not be heard at all, euen then neuertheleſſe they call vpon him. For to what purpoſe were it, to make their moane to him from whom they hoped for no comfort? truely they would neuer finde in their heartes to call vpon him, vnlesse they beleued that there were some helpe at his hande prepared for them. So the Disciples, in whom Christ blameth their smalnesse of faith, complained in deede that they perished, but yet they called to him for help. And when he rebuketh them for their small faith, yet he doth not reiect them from the number of his, nor maketh them of the number of the vnbeleuers, but stirreth them to shake of that fault. Therefore we affirme againe that which we haue aboue spoken, that the roote of faith is neuer plucked out of a godly heart, but sticketh so fast in the bottome, that howsoeuer it be shaken and seeme to bende this way or that way, the light therof is so neuer quenched or choked vp, but that it lieth at least hidden vnder some embers: and by this token is plainely shewed, that the worde which is an vncorruptible seede, bringeth forth frute like to it selfe, the spring whereof doth neuer wither & vtterly perish. For whereas this is the extremest matter of despeire to the holy ones, to feele according to the cõsidertaion of present thinges, the hande of God bent to their destruction: yet Iob affirmeth that his hope shal proceede so farre, that though God do kill him, yet he will not therfore cesse to trust in him. This is the trueth therefore: Vnbeliefe reigneth not within the heartes of the godly, but outwardly assaileth them: neither doth she deadly wounde them with her wepons, but only troubleth them, or so hurteth thẽ, that yet the woũd is curable. For faith, as Paul teacheth, serueth vs for a shield that beinge holden vp against weapons, doth so receiue the force of them, that it either vtterly driueth thẽ backe, or at least so breaketh their violẽce, that they can not pearce them to danger of life. Therfore when faith is shaken, it is like as if a stronge souldiour with the violent stroke of a dart be compelled to remoue his foote, and geue grounde a litle: and when faith it selfe is wounded, that is like as if his buckler by some stroke be in some parte broken, but yet so that it is not striken through. For alway the godly minde will attaine to rise thus hie as to say with Dauid, If I walke in the middest of the shadow of death, I will feare none euill, becausse thou art with me. It is in deede terrible to walke in the darkenes of death, and it can not be but that the faithful, how much strength soeuer they haue, must be afraid of it. Yet becausse this thought surmounteth it, that they haue God present with them, and prouiding for their safety, that feare is ouercome with assuredness. For (as Augustine sayth) how great engines soeuer the deuil raiseth vp against vs, so long as he possesseth not the place of the heart, where faith dwelleth, he is cast out of the dores.

Mat. 8. 25.

Iob. 13. 15.

Ephe. 6. 18.

Psa. 23. 4.

And so if we may iudge by the succesſe, the faithfull not only escape safe from euery battell, so that byandby receiuing fresh courage they are ready to come againe into the field: but also that is fulfilled which
1. Ioh. 5. 4. Iohn saith in his canonical Epistle: This is the victory that ouercommeth the world, euen your faith. For he affirmeth that it shal not only winne the victory in one or few battels, or against some one assault, but also that it shall get the ouerhande of the whole world, although it be a thousand times assailed.

22 There is an other kinde of feare and trembling, but such a one as by it the assurednesse of faith is so nothing at all diminished, that thereby it is the more soundly stablished. That is, when the faithfull either in thinking that the examples of Gods vengeance against the wicked are shewed for lessons for them to learne by, do carefully beware that they happen not to prouoke Gods wrath against themselues with the same offenses: or recordinge with themselues their owne misery, do learne to hang altogether vpon the Lord without whom they see themselues to be more fickle and sooner vanishinge than any blast of winde. For when the Apostle, in settinge foorth the scourges
1. Cor. 10. 11. wherewith the Lord in olde time had punished the people of Israell, putteth the Corinthians in feare that they entangle not themselues with like euils: he doth not thereby abate their affiance, but only shaketh away the dulnes of the flesh by which faith is wont more to be
Rom. 11. 22. oppressed than strengthned. And when he taketh occasion of ỹ Iewes fall to exhort him that stãdeth, to take heede that he fall not, he doth not thereby bid vs to wauer, as though we were not fully assured of our stedfastnesse, but only he taketh away arrogant presumption and rash trusting to much in our owne strẽgth, that after the thrusting out of the Iewes, the Gentiles being receiued into their place, should not to much outragiously triumphe against thẽ. Albeit he speaketh there not only to the faithfull, but also in the same saying comprehendeth the Hypocrites that gloried onely in outward shew. For neither doth he admonish euery man particularly, but makinge a comparison betwene the Iewes & the Gentiles, after ỹ he had shewed that the Iewes in this that they were reiected, did suffer iust punishment for their vnbeliefe and vnthankefulnesse, he also exhorted the Gentiles that they should not, by being proud and extolling themselues, loose the grace of adoption lately conueyed into them. But as in that generall reiecting of the Iewes, there remained yet some that were not fallen from the couenant of adoption, so out of the Gentiles there might arise some, which without true faith, should be puffed vp onely with foolish confidence of the flesh, and so abuse Gods louing kindenesse to their

owne destruction. But although you take this as spoken to the elect & faithfull, yet thereupon shall folow no inconuenience. For it is one thinge to holde downe the rash presumption which out of the remnantes of the flesh creepeth sometime euen into the holy ones, that with vaine confidence it waxe not outragiously wanton: and an other thing to strike the cõscience with feare, that it rest not with full assuredneſſe in the mercy of God.

23 Thẽ, when he teacheth, that with feare & trembling we should worke our owne saluation, he requireth nothinge elſe, but that we should accustome vs with much abacing of our selues, reuerently to looke vp vnto the mightineſſe of God. For truely nothing doth so much awake vs to cast all our confidence & assurance of minde vpon the Lord as doth the distrust of our selues and carefulnes conceiued by knowledge in cõscience of our own wretchednes. And according to this meaning is that saying in the Prophet to be taken: In the multitude of thy goodneſſe I will entre into thy temple: I will worship in feare. Where he comely cõioyneth the boldnes of faith that leaneth vpon Gods mercy with a reuerent feare, wich we must needes feele so oft as comming into the sight of Gods maiesty, we perceiue by the glorious brightneſſe thereof, how great is our owne filthineſſe. And Salomon sayth truely, where he pronounceth the man blessed, that continually maketh his owne heart afraid, for by hardninge thereof men fall hedlong into euill. But such feare he meaneth as may make vs more heedefull, not such wherby we should be troubled & vtterly fall: euen such a feare as when the minde confounded in it selfe, doth recouer it selfe againe in God: when despeiring it selfe, it reuiueth by trust in him. Therfore there is no cause to the contrary, but that the faithfull may at one time both be in feare, and also enioy most assured cõfort, in respect that sometime they turne their eyes to behold their owne vanity, & sometime they cast the thought of their minde vpon the trueth of God. But how (will some man say) shall feare and faith dwell both in one minde? euen thus, as contrarily vnsensible dulneſſe, and carefulneſſe. For wheras the wicked trauaile to procure to themselues a want of griefe, that no feare of God might trouble them, yet, the iudgement of God so presseth them, that they can not attaine that which they desire. So there is nothing to withstande, but that God may exercise them that be his to humility, that in fighting valiantly, they may restraine themselues vnder the bridle of modesty And by the processe of the text it appeareth, that this was the entẽt of the Apostle, where he assigneth the cause of feare, and trembling to be the good pleasure of God, whereby he giueth to them that be

Phil. 2. 12.

Psa. 5. 8

Pro. 28. 14.

his both to will well, and valiantly to go through with it. According Ose.3 5 to this meaning ought we to take that sayinge of the Prophet: The children of Israel shall feare God and his goodnesse: because not only, godlines engẽdreth the reuerence of God, but the very sweetenesse and pleasant taist of grace, filleth man beinge discouraged in himselfe with feare & admiration, to make him hang vpon God, and humbly yeelde himselfe subiect to his power.

24 Yet we do not hereby make roome to that most pestilent Philosophie, which many halfepapistes at this day beginne to coyne in corners. For, because they can not defende that grosse doutfulnesse which hath bin taught in Schooles, they flie to an other deuise, to make a confidẽce mingled with distrustfulnes. They confesse, that so oft as we looke vnto Christ, we finde in him full matter to hope well: but because we are alwayes vnworthy of those good things that are offred vs in Christ, they would haue vs to wauer & stagger in beholdinge of our owne vnworthinesse. Briefely, they place conscience so betwene hope & feare, that it altereth from the one to the other, by enterchangeable times & courses: and they so compare faith & hope together, that when the one springeth vp, the other is pressed downe, when the one ariseth, the other againe falleth. So when Satan seeth that those open engines wherewith before time he was wont to destroy the assuredneſse of faith, do now nothinge preuaile, he endeuoreth by crooked vnderminings to ouerthrow it. But what maner of confidence shall that be, which shall now and then yeelde to desperation? If (say they) thou consider Christ, there is assured saluation: but if thou returne to thy selfe, there is assured damnation. Therefore of necessity distrust and good hope must by enterchaungeable courses reigne in thy minde: As though we ought to imagine Christ standing a farre of, and not rather dwellinge within vs. For therefore we looke for saluation at his hande, not because he appeareth a farre of vnto vs, but because he hath graffed vs into his body, & so maketh vs partakers not onely of all his good thinges, but also of himselfe. Therefore I thus turne this their argument against themselues: If thou consider thy selfe, there is certaine damnation. But because Christ with al his good thinges is by way of communicatinge so giuen vnto thee that all his thinges are made thine, and thou art made a member of him, yea & all one with him: his righteousnesse drowneth thy sinnes, his saluation taketh away thy damnation: he by his worthinesse commeth betwene thee and God, that thy vnworthinesse come not in the sight of God. Briefely, this is the trueth: we ought neither to separate Christ from vs, nor vs from him, but with both handes to holde fast that fellowship whereby he hath coupled himselfe vnto vs. So the Apostle teacheth vs: The body in dede (saith he) is dead by reason of sinne: but the Spirite of Christ that dwelleth in you, is life for righteousnesse. Rom.8. 10. According to these mens trifeling deuise he shoulde haue saide, Christ in deede hath life with himselfe: but you, as you be sinners, remaine subiect to death & damnation. But he saith farre otherwise. For he teacheth that that damnation which we deserue of our selues, is swallowed vp by the saluation of Christ, and to proue it, he vseth the same reason that I haue alleged, because Christ is not without vs, but dwelleth within vs, and cleaueth vnto vs not onely with vndiuidable knot of fellowship, but with a certaine maruellous communion daily more and more groweth with vs into one body, till he be made altogether one with vs. And yet I denie not, as I haue said a litle before, that sometime there happen certaine inrerruptions of faith, as the weakenesse thereof is amonge violent sodeine motions bowed hether or thether. So in the thicke miste of tẽtations the light thereof is choked, but what so euer happeneth, it cesseth not from endeuour to seeke God.

25 And no otherwise doth Bernarde argue, when he purposely intreateth of this question in his fift Homelie in the Dedication of the temple. Oftentimes (I say) by the benefite of God studying vpõ the soule, me thinkes I finde in it two thinges as it were contrarie. If I beholde the soule it selfe, as it is in it selfe and of it selfe, I can say nothing more truely of it, than that it is vtterly brought to nought. What neede I now to recken vp particularly all the miseries of the soule, how it is loaden with sinnes, couered with darkenesse, entangled with deceitfull enticementes, itching with lustes, subiect to passions, filled with illusions, alway enclined to euill, bent to all kindes of vice, finally ful of shame and confusion? Now if all the very righteousnesses of it being looked vpõ by the light of trueth be found like a clothe stained with floures, then what shall the vnrighteousnesses thereof be accompted? If the light that is in vs be darkenesse, how great shall the very darkenesse be? What then? without doubte man is made like vnto vanitie: man is brought to naught: man is nothing. But how then is he vtterly nothing, whome God doth magnifie? How then is he nothing, towarde whome Gods hearte is set? Brethren, let vs take hearte againe. Though we be nothing in our owne heartes, peraduenture there may somewhat of vs lie hidden in the hearte of God. O father of mercies? O father of the miserable, how doest thou set thy hearte towarde vs? For thy hearte is where thy treasure is. But how be we thy treasure, if we be nothing? All nations are so before thee as if they were not, they ſhalbe reputed as nothing. Euen before thee, not within thee: ſo in the iudgement of thy truth, but not in the affection of thy pitie. Thou calleſt thoſe thinges that are not, as though they were. Therefore both they are not, becauſe thou calleſt thoſe thinges that are not, & alſo they are bycauſe thou calleſt them. For though they are not, in reſpect of them ſelues, yet with thee they are, according to that ſaying of Paule, not of the workes of righteouſneſſe, but of him that calleth. And then he ſaieth, that this coupling together of both cõſideracions is maruellous. Truely thoſe thinges that are knit together, doe not the one deſtroy the other. Which alſo in the concluſion he more plainely declareth in theſe wordes. Now if with both theſe conſiderations we diligently looke vpon our ſelues what we be, yea in the one conſideration how we be nothing, and in the other how much we be magnified, I thinke our glorying ſemeth to be tempered, but paraduenture it is more encreaſed. Truely it is perfectly ſtabliſhed, that we glorie not in our ſelues but in the Lorde. If we thinke thus: if he hath determined to ſaue vs, we ſhall byandby be deliuered: now in this we may take courage. But let vs climbe vp into a hier watche toure, and ſeeke for the citie of God, ſeeke for the temple, ſeeke for the houſe, ſeke for the ſpouſe. I haue not forgotten, but I ſay it with feare and reuerence, we I ſay be, but in the harte of God. We be, but by his allowing as worthy, not by our owne worthineſſe.

Rom. 9. 12.

26 Now, the feare of the Lorde, whereof commonly in euery place witneſſe is borne to all the holy ones, and which is in ſome places called the beginning of wiſedome, and in ſome places wiſedome it ſelfe, although it be but one, yet it procedeth from a double vnderſtanding. For God hath in himſelfe the reuerence both of a Father and of a Lorde. Therefore he that will truely worſhip him, will endeuor to ſhewe himſelfe both an obedient ſonne and a ſeruiſable ſeruant vnto him. The obedience that is geuen to him as to a father, the Lorde by his Prophet calleth honor: the ſeruice that is done to him as to a lorde, he calleth feare. The ſonne (ſaieth he) honoreth the father, and the ſeruant the lorde. If I be a father, where is my honor? If I be a lorde, where is my feare? But how ſoeuer he putteth difference betwene them, thou ſeeſt how he confoundeth them both together. Therefore let the feare of the lorde be vnto vs a reuerence, mingled with that ſame honor and feare. Neither is it any maruell, if one minde receiue both thoſe affections. For he that conſidereth with himſelfe what a father God is vnto vs, hath cauſe enough, although there were no helles at all, why he ſhoulde drede his diſplea-

ſure

ſure more greuouſely than any death. But alſo (ſuch is the wantonneſſe of our fleſh to runne to licentiouſneſſe of ſinning) to reſtraine the ſame by all meanes, we ought therewithall to take holde of this thought, that the Lorde vnder whoſe power we liue, abhorreth all iniquitie, whoſe vengeance they ſhall not eſcape, that in liuing wickedly doe prouoke his wrath againſt themſelues.

27 But that which Iohn ſaieth, that feare is not in charitie, but perfect charitie caſteth out feare, becauſe feare conteineth puniſhment, diſagreeeh not with this that we ſay. For the wicked feare not God in this reſpect that they drede to incurre his diſpleaſure, if they might do it without puniſhment: but becauſe they know him to be armed with power to reuenge: therefore they ſhake for feare at the hearing of his wrath. And alſo they ſo feare his wrath, becauſe they thinke that it hangeth ouer them, for that they looke euery moment when itſhall fall vpon their heades. As for the faithfull: they (as is aboue ſaid) both feare his diſpleaſure more than puniſhment, and are not troubled with feare of puniſhment as if it did hang ouer their neckes, but they are made the more ware not to procure it. So ſaith the Apoſtle, when he ſpeaketh to the faithfull: Be ye not deceiued: for this commeth the wrath of God vpon the children of vnbeleefe. He threateneth not that Gods wrath will come vpon them, but putteth them in minde to thinke vpon this, that the wrath of God is prepared for ſuch wicked doinges as he had recited, that they themſelues ſhoulde not be willing alſo to proue it. Albeit it ſeldome happeneth that the reprobate be awakened with only and bare threateninges, but rather being already groſſe and vnſenſibly dull with their owne hardneſſe, ſo oft as God thundreth from heauen they harden themſelues to obſtinacie, but when they are ones ſtriken with his hande, then whether they will or no, they be enforced to feare. This feare they commonly call a ſeruile feare: and in compariſon ſet it for contrarie to free natured and willing feare which becommeth children. Some other do ſuttelly thruſt in a middle kinde, becauſe that ſame ſeruile and conſtrained affection ſometime ſo ſubdueth mens mindes, that they come willingly to the feare of God.

28 Now we vnderſtand, that in the good will of God, whereunto faith is ſaide to haue reſpect, the poſſeſſion of ſaluation and eternall life is obteined. For if we can wante no good thing while God is fauorable vnto vs, it abundantly ſufficeth vs to the aſſuredneſſe of ſaluation, when he himſelfe doth aſſure vs of his loue. Let him ſhewe his face (ſaith the Prophet) and we ſhalbe ſafe. Wherupon the Scriptures determine this to be the ſumme of our ſaluation, that God putting away all enmities, hath receiued vs into fauour. Whereby they shew, that when God is reconciled vnto vs, there remaineth no perill, but that all thinges shall prosper well with vs. Therefore faith, hauing taken holde of the loue of God, hath promises of the present life and of the life to come, and perfect assuredness of all good thinges: but that same such as may be gathered out of the word of God. For faith doth not certainely promise to it selfe either the length or honor or wealth of this life, for asmuch as God willed none of these thinges to be apointed vnto vs, but is contented with this assuredness, that God will neuer faile how so euer many thinges faile vs that pertaine to the maintenance of this present life. But the chiefe assuredness of faith resteth in expectation of the life to come, which is set out of doubt by the worde of God. But what so euer miseries and calamities betide vnto them whome God loueth, they can not worke the contrarie, but that his good will is perfect felicitie. Therefore when we did meane to expresse the summe of blessedness, we named the fauor of God, out of which spring do flow vnto vs al kindes of good thinges. And this we may cõmonly note throughout the Scriptures, that when so euer mention is made not onely of eternall saluation, but also of any good thing in vs, we be alway called backe to the loue of God. For which cause Dauid saieth, that the goodnesse of God when it is felt in a godly hearte, is sweter and more to be desired than life it selfe. Finally, if all thinges els do flow vnto vs according to our owne wishing, and we be vncertaine of Gods loue or hatred, our felicitie shalbe accursed, and therefore miserable. But if the fauorable face of God do shine vnto vs, euen our very miseries shalbe blessed, because they are turned to helpes of our saluation. As Paule, when he heaped vp a rehearsall of all aduersities, yet he glorieth that he was not by them seuered from the loue of God: and in his prayers he alway beginneth at the fauour of God, from whence floweth all prosperitie. Likewise Dauid setteth the onely fauour of God against all the terrors that trouble vs. If (saith he) I shall walke in the middest of the shadowe of death, I will feare no euils, because thou art with me. And we alway feele that our mindes do wauer, vnlesse being cõtented with the fauour of God, they seeke their peace in it, and haue this inwardely fixed in them that is said in the Psalme, Blessed is the people whose God is the Lord, and the nation whome he hath chosen to him for his inheritance.

29 We make the fundation of faith to be the free promise of God, bycause faith proprely stayeth vpon it. For though faith doe beleue God to be true in all thinges, whether he commaunde or for-

forbidde, whether he promise or threaten, and also obediently receiueth his commaundementes, and beware th of thinges that he prohibeteth, and hath regard to his threateninges, yet properly it beginneth at the promise, and therein continueth, and therevpon endeth. For faith seeketh for life in God, which is not founde in commaundemētes or declarations of penalties, but in promise of mercie, and in no other promise, but such as is freely geuen. For the conditionall promise, by which we are sente to our owne workes, doth no otherwise promise life, but if we perceiue it to stande in our selues. Therfore if we will not haue our faith to tremble and wauer, we must stay it with that promise of saluation, which is willingly and liberally offred vs of the Lorde, rather in respect of our miserie, than of our worthinesse. Wherefore the Apostle beareth this witnesse of the Gospell, that it is the word of faith: which name he taketh both from the commaundementes and also from the promises of the lawe, because there is nothing that can stablish faith, but that liberall embassage, by which God reconcileth the worlde to himselfe. Therefore the same Apostle oftentimes maketh a relatiō of faith and the Gospell together, when he teacheth that the ministerie of the Gospell was committed to him vnto the obedience of faith. that the same is the power of God, to saluation to euery one that beleueth: that in it is reueled the righteousnes of God from faith to faith. And no maruell. For sith the Gospell is the ministerie of reconciliation, there is no other testimonie sure enough of Gods good will towarde vs, the knowledge wherof faith requireth. Therefore when we say that faith must rest vpon free promise, we do not denie but that the faithful do euery way embrace and receiue the word of God, but we apoint the promise of mercie to be the propre marke of faith. Euen as the faithfull ought in deede to acknowledge God to be the iudge and punisher of wicked doinges, and yet they properly haue regard vnto his mercifull kindenesse: for asmuch as he is described to them to be cōsidered such a one as is louing and mercifull, farre from wrath, of much goodnesse, gentle vnto all, pouring forth his mercie vpon all his workes.

30 Neither yet do I regarde the barkinges of Pighius, or such other dogges, when they finde faulte with this restraint, as though in diuiding faith, it did take holde but of one peece thereof. I graunt (as I haue already saide) that the generall obiect of faith (as they terme it) is the truthe of God, whether he threaten or put vs in hope of fauour. Wherefore the Apostle ascribeth this to faith, that Noe feared the destruction of the worlde, when it was not yet seene. If the feare of a punishment shortly to come, was the worke of faith, then ought not the threateninges to be excluded out of the definicion of faith. This is in deede true. But the cauillers do vniustly accuse vs, as though we denied that faith hath respect to all the partes of the worde of God. For our meaning is onely to shew those two thinges, first, that faith neuer stedfastly standeth vntill it come to the free promise: and than that we are no otherwise by it to be reconciled to God, but because it coupleth vs to Christ. Both those pointes are worthily to be noted. We seeke such a faith, which may make difference betwene the children of God and the reprobate, betwene the faithfull and the vnbeleuing. If a man do beleue that God both iustly commaundeth all that he commaundeth, and truely threatneth, shall he be therefore called faithfull? Nothing lesse. Therefore there can be no stedfast stay of faith, vnlesse it be grounded vpon the mercie of God. But now to what ende do we dispute of faith? Is it not that we may learne the way of saluation? But how doth faith bringe saluation but in respect that it graffeth vs into the body of Christ? Therefore there is no inconuenience, if in the definition we do enforce the principall effect therof, & do ioyne vnto the general name, in stede of a difference that marke that seuereth the faithfull frō the vnbeleuing. Finally, the malicious haue nothing to finde fault withall in this doctrine, but they must wrappe vp Paule with vs in the same blame, which calleth the Gospell properly the word of faith.

Rom.10 8.

31 But hereupon againe we gather that which we haue before declared, that faith doth no lesse neede the worde than the frute doth neede the liuely roote of the tree, because none other (as Dauid testifieth) can trust in the Lorde, but they that know his name. But this knowledge is not according to euery mans imagination, but so farre as God himselfe is witnesse of his owne goodnesse. Which the same Prophet confirmeth in an other place, saying: Thy saluation is according to thy worde. Againe. I haue trusted in thy worde, saue me, Where is to be noted the relation of faith to the worde, and then how saluation followeth. And yet in the meane time we do not exclude the power of God, with beholding whereof, vnlesse faith susteine it selfe, it can neuer geue vnto God his due honour. Paule seemeth to reherse a certaine sclender and cōmon thing of Abraham, that he beleued that God which had promised him the blessed sede, was able to performe it. Againe in an other place, speaking of him, selfe: I knowe whome I haue beleued, and I am sure that he his able to keepe that which I haue left with him vntill that day. But if a man weye with himselfe how many doutinges of the power of God do often-

Psa. 9. 11.

2.Tim.1 18.

oftentimes creepe into mans minde, he shall well perceiue that they which do highly esteeme it as it is worthy, haue not a litle profited in faith. We all will confesse that God is able to do whatsoeuer he will, but when euen the least tentatiō throweth vs downe with feare, and amaseth vs with horrour, thereby appeareth plainely, that we diminish the estimation of Gods power, when we preferre aboue it those thinges, that Satan threatneth against Gods promises. This is the reason why Esaie, meaning to print into the hartes of the people the assuredneſſe of saluation, doth so honorably entreate of the infinite power of God. It seemeth oft that so sone as he hath begonne to speake of the hope of pardon and reconciliation, he byandby tourneth to an other thing, and wandereth about in long and superfluous circumstances, rehersing how maruelously the Lorde gouerneth the frame of heauen and earth and the whole ordre of nature: yet is there nothing that serueth not fitly for the circumstāce of the matter that he speaketh of. For vnlesse the power of God whereby he is able to do all thinges be presently set before our eyes, our eares will hardely heare the worde, or will not esteeme it so much as it is worth. Beside that, here is declared his effectuall power, because godlinesse (as we haue already shewed in an other place) doth alway applie the power of God to vse and worke, specially it setteth before it selfe those workes of God, whereby he hath testified himselfe to be a father. Herevpon commeth that in the Scriptures is so often mention made of the redemption, whereby the Israelites might haue learned that God which was ones the author of saluation, will be an euerlasting preseruer thereof. And Dauid putteth vs in minde by his owne example, that those benefites which God hath particularly bestowed vpon euery man, do afterwarde auaile to the confirmation of his faith. Yea when God seemeth to haue forsaken vs, it behoueth vs to strerch our wittes further, that his auncient benefites may recomforte vs, as it is saide in an other Psalme: I haue bene mindefull of olde dayes, I haue studied vpon all thy workes. &c. Againe. I will remembre the workes of the Lorde, and his meruelles from the beginning. But because without the worde all quickely vanisheth away that we conceiue of the power of God and of his workes, therefore we do not without cause affirme that there is no faith, vnlesse God geue light vnto it with testimonie of his grace. But here a question might be moued, what is to be thought of Sara and Rebecca, both which being moued as it seemeth with zele of faith, passed beyonde the bondes of the worde. Sara, when she feruently desired the promised issue, gaue her bondemaide to her housbande. It can not be denied but that she many wayes sinned: but nowe I touch onely this faulte, that being carried awaye with her zele, she did not restraine herselfe within the boundes of Gods word, yet it is certaine that that Gen.26 desire proceeded of faith. Rebecca being certified by the oracle of God of the electiō of her sonne Iacob, procured his blessing by euill crafty meanes: she deceiued her housbande the witnesse and minister of the grace of God: she compelled her sonne to lie: she by diuerse guiles and deceites corrupted the trueth of God. Finally in making a scorne of his promise, she did as much as in her laie, destroie it. And yet this act, how much soeuer it was euill, and worthy of blame, was not without faith, for it was necessarie that she shoulde ouercome many offenses, that she might so earnestly endeuour to atteine that which without hope of earthly profite was full of great troubles and daungers. As we may not say that the holy Patriarche Isaac was altogether without faith, becausse he being by the same oracle of God admonished of the honour transferred to the yonger sonne, yet cessed not to be more fauourably bente to his first begotten sonne Esau.

Truely these examples do teach, that oftetimes erroures are mingled with faith: but yet so that faith if it be a true faith, hath alwaye the vpper hande. For as the particular errour of Rebecca did not make voide the effect of the blessing, so neither did it make voide her faith which generally reigned in her minde, and was the beginning and cause of that doinge. Neuertheless therein Rebecca vttered how ready mans minde is to fall so sone as he geueth him selfe neuer so litle libertie. But though mans defaut and weakenesse doth darken faith, yet it doth not quenche it: in the meane time it putteth vs in minde, how carefully we ought to hange vpon the mouth of God, and also confirmeth that which we haue taught, that faith vanisheth awaye, vnlesse it be vpholden by the worde: as the mindes both of Sara, and Isaac and Rebecca had become vaine in their crooked wanderinges out of the way, vnlesse they had bene by Gods secret bridle holden in obedience of the worde.

32 Againe, not without cause we include all the promises in Christ,
Rom. 1. 17. forasmuch as in the knowledge of him the Apostle includeth all the Gospell: and in an other place he teacheth, that all the promises of 2. Cor. 1 20. God are in him, yea and Amen. The reason whereof is ready to be shewed. For if God promise any thing, he therein sheweth his good will: so that there is no promise of his, that is not a testimonie of his loue. Neither maketh it any matter that the wicked when they haue great and continual benefites of Gods liberalitie heaped vpon them, do therby wrap themselues in so much the more greuous iudgemēt.

For

For sith they do neither thinke nor acknowledge that those thinges come vnto them from the hand of God, for if they acknowledge it, they do not with them selues consider his goodnesse, therfore they can not thereby be better taught of his mercie than brute beastes, which according to the measure of their estate, do receiue the same frute of Gods liberalitie, and yet they perceiue it not. Neither doth it any more make against vs, that many times in refusing the promises apointed for them, they do by that occasion procure to them selues the greater vengeance. For although the effectuall working of the promises do then onely appeare, when they haue founde faith with vs, yet the force and naturall propretie of them is neuer extinguished by our vnbeleefe or vnthankfulnesse. Therefore when the Lorde by his promises doth prouoke man not onely to receiue, but also to thinke vpon the frutes of his bountifulnesse, he doth therewithall declare vnto him his loue. Wherevpon we must returne to this pointe, that euery promise is a testifying of Gods loue towarde vs. But it is out of questiō, that no man is loued of God but in Christ, Mat. 3. 17.
he is the beloued Sonne, in whome the loue of the Father abideth and resteth, and then from him poureth it selfe abroade vnto vs: as Paule teacheth, that we haue obteined fauour in the beloued one. Ephe. 1. 7.
Therefore it must needes be deriued and come vnto vs by meane of him. For this cause the Apostle in an other place calleth him oure Ephe. 2. 14.
peace: in an other place he setteth him oute as a bonde, whereby God is with fatherly naturall kindenes bounde vnto vs. It followeth then that we must caste our eyes vpon him, so oft as any promise is offered vs. And that Paule teacheth no absurditie, that all Gods pro- Rom 8. 2. and.

haue taken vpon him the trauaile and expenses of so long a iourney, to worshippe. Yet we see, when Philippe examined him, how he bewrayed his ignorāce of the Mediator. And truely I graunt that their faith was partly vnexpressed, not onely concerning Christes person, but also concerning his power and the office committed vnto him of the Father. Yet in the meane time it is certaine, that they were instructed in such principles, as gaue then some tast of Christ, although but very small. Neither ought this to seeme strãge. For neither would the Eunuche haue come in hast to Ieruſalem from a farre country to worship an vnknowene God, neither did Cornelius whē he had once embraced the Iewish religion spende so much time, without being acquainted with the first groundes of true doctrine. As for Naaman, it had bene to fonde an absurditie for Elizeus when he taught him of small things, to haue saide nothing of the principall point. Therefore although there were among them a darke knowledge of Christ, yet it is not likely ý there was no knoweledge becauſe they did vse them selues in the sacrifices of the lawe, which must haue bene discerned by the very ende of them, that is Christ, from the false sacrifices of the Gentiles.

33 But this bare and outward declaration of the worde of God, ought to haue largely sufficed to make it be beleued, if our owne blindeneſſe and stubbourneſſe did not withstande it. But oure minde hath such an inclination to vanitie, that it can neuer cleaue fast vnto the trueth of God, and hath such a dulneſſe, that it is alwaie blinde and can not see the light thereof. Therefore there is nothing auailably done by the worde without the enlightning of the holy Ghost. Whereby also appeareth, that faith is farre aboue mans vnderstanding. Neither shall it be sufficient that the minde be lightned with the spirit of God, vnleſſe the hearte be also strengthened & stablished with his power. Wherein the Schoolemen do altogether erre, which in considering of faith, do onely take holde of a bare and simple assent by knowledge, leauing out the confidence and assuredneſſe of the hearte. Therefore faith is both waies a singular gift of God, both that the minde of man is clensed to tast the trueth of God, and that his hearte is stablished therein. For the holy Ghost not onely is the beginner of faith, but also by degrees encreaseth it, vntill by it he

Gal. 3. 2. dwelleth in vs. But how Paule saith that the holy Ghost is geuen by the hearing of faith, we may easily dissolue it. If there had bene but one onely gifte of the holy Ghost, then it had bene an absurditie for him to call the holy Ghost the effect of faith, which is the author and cause of faith. But when he maketh report of the giftes wherewith God garnisheth his Church, and by encreasinges of faith bringeth it to perfection, it is no meruell if he ascribe those thinges to faith

which maketh vs fitt to receiue them. This is reckened a moſt ſtrãge concluſion, when it is ſaid, that no man but he to whome it is geuen, can beleue in Chriſt. But that is partely bycauſe they do not conſider either how ſecret and hie the heauenly wiſedome is, or how great mans dulneſſe is in conceiuing the miſteries of God: and partely bycauſe they looke not vnto that aſſured and ſtedfaſt conſtantneſſe of hearte, that is to ſay, the chiefe parte of faith.

34 But if (as Paule preacheth) no man is witneſſe of the will of man, but the ſpirit of man that is within him, then how ſhoulde man be ſure of the will of God? And if the trueth of God be vncertaine among vs, in thoſe thinges that we preſently beholde with our eye, howe ſhoulde it be aſſured and ſteadfaſt among vs there where the Lord promiſeth ſuch thing as neither eye ſeeth, nor wit comprehendeth? But herein mans ſharpneſſe of vnderſtãding is ſo ouerthrowene and faileth, that the firſt degree of profiting in Gods ſchoole, is to forſake his owne wit. For by it as by a veile caſt before vs, we are hindred that we can not atteine the miſteries of God, which are not diſcloſed but to litle ones. For neither doth fleſh and bloude diſcloſe, nor naturall man perceiue thoſe thinges that are of the Spirite, but rather to him the learning of God is fooliſhneſſe, becauſe it is ſpiritually to be iudged. Therefore herein the helpe of the holy Ghoſt is neceſſarie, or rather herein his force only reigneth. There is no man that knoweth the minde of God, or hath bene his counſeller: but the holy Spirit ſearcheth out all thinges, euen the depe ſecretes of God, by whome it is brought to paſſe, that we knowe the minde of Chriſt. No man (ſaith he) can come to me, vnleſſe my father that ſent me, drawe him. Euery one therefore that hath hearde and learned of my father, commeth. Not that any man hath ſeene the father, but he that is ſent of God. Euen as therefore we can not come vnto Chriſt, but being drawene by the Spirite of God: ſo when we be drawene, we are lifted vp in wit and minde aboue our owne vnderſtanding. For the ſoule enlightned by him, taketh as it were a new ſharpneſſe of vnderſtanding, wherewith it may beholde heauenly miſteries, with brightneſſe whereof it was before daſeled in it ſelfe. And ſo mans vnderſtanding receiuing brightnes by the light of the holy Ghoſt, doth neuer till then truely beginne to taſt of thoſe thinges that belong to the kingdome of God, being before altogether vnſauourie and without iudgement of taſt to take aſſay of them. Therefore when Chriſt did notably ſet our vnto two of his Diſciples ỹ miſteries of his kingdome, yet he nothing preuailed, vntill he opened their ſenſes that they might vnderſtand the Scriptures. When the Apoſtles were ſo taught by his Godly mouth, yet the Spirit of trueth muſt be ſent vnto them, to poure into their mindes the ſame doctrine which they had hearde with their eares. The worde of God is like vnto the ſunne that ſhineth vnto all them to whome it is preached, but to no profit among blinde men. But we are all in this behalfe blinde by nature, therefore it can not pearce into our minde but by the inward maſter the holy Ghoſt, making by his enlightning an entrie for it.

35 In an other place, when we had to entreat of the corruption of nature, we haue more largely ſhewed how vnfit men are to beleue. Therfore I will not wery the readers with repeting the ſame againe. Let this be ſufficient that the ſpirit of faith, is called of Paule faith it ſelfe, which the ſpirit gêueth vs, but not which we haue naturally. Therefore he prayeth that God fulfill in the Theſſalonians all his good pleaſure, and the worke of faith in power. Wherin calling faith the worke, of God, and geuing it that title for a name of addition, and calling it by figure of appoſitiõ Gods good pleaſure, he denieth that it is of mans owne motion: and not contented therewith he addeth further, that it is a declaration of Gods power: writing to the Corinthians, where he ſaith, that faith hangeth not vpon the wiſedome of men, but is grounded vpõ the power of the holy Ghoſt. He ſpeaketh in deede of outwarde miracles: but becauſe the reprobate are blinde at the beholding of them, he comprehendeth alſo that inwarde ſeale, whereof he maketh mention in an other place. And God, the more glorioufly to ſet forth his liberalitie in ſo noble a gifte, vouchefaueth not to graunt it to all vniuerſally without difference, but by ſingular priuilege geueth it to whome he will. For proofe whereof we haue alleged teſtimonies before. Of which Auguſtine being a faithfull expoſitor, crieth out that it woulde pleaſe the Sauiour to teache him, and that the very beleuing it ſelfe, is of gift and not of deſeruing. No man (ſaith he) commeth to me, vnleſſe my father drawe him, and to whome it is geuen of my father. It is maruellous that two do heare, the one deſpiſeth, the other aſcendeth vp. Let him that deſpiſeth, impute it to himſelfe: let him that aſcende not, it arrogantly aſſigne to himſelfe. In an other place. Why is it geuen to one and not to an other? It greueth me not to ſay it, this is the depth of the croſſe. Out of I wote not what depth of the iudgements of God which we may not ſearche, procedeth all that we can. What I can, I ſee: whereby I can, I ſee not, ſauing that I ſee thus farre, that it is of God. But why him, and not him? That is muche to me. It is a bottomeleſſe depth, it is the depth of the croſſe. I may crie out with wonderinge, but not ſhewe it in diſputing. Finally the ſumme commeth to this,

that Christ when he enlightneth vs vnto faith by the power of his spirit, doth there withall graffe vs into his body, that we may be made partakers of all good thinges.

36 Nowe remaineth that that which the minde hathe receiued, may be further conueyed into the heart. For the word of God is not throughly receiued by faith, if it swimme in the toppe of the braine, but when it hath taken roote in the bottome of the heart that it may be an inuincible defense to beare and repulse all the engines of tẽtations. Nowe if it be true, that the true vnderstanding of the minde is the enlightning thereof, then in such confirmation of the hearte, his power much more euidẽtly appereth, euen by so much as the distrustfulnesse of the hearte is greater than the blindnesse of the wit: and as it is harder to haue the minde furnished with assuredneſſe, than the wit to be instructed with thinking. Therefore the Spirite performeth the office of a seale, to seale vp in our heartes those same promises, the assurance whereof it first emprinted in oure wits, and serueth for an earnest to confirme and stablish them. Sith ye beleued (saith the Apostle) ye are sealed vp with the holy Spirite of promise, which is the earnest of oure inheritance. See you not how he teacheth that by the spirit the heartes of the faithfull are grauen as with a seale? and how for the same reason he calleth him the Spirit of promise, bycause he ratifieth the Gospell vnto vs? Likewise to the Corinthians he saith: God which annointed vs, which hath also sealed vs, and geuen the earnest of his Spirit in oure heartes. And in an other place when he speaketh of confidence and boldnesse of hopinge well, he maketh the pledge of the Spirit the foundation thereof. Eph. 1. 13. 2. Cor. 1. 21. and 5. 5.

37 Neither yet haue I forgotten that which I saide before, the remembrance whereof experience continually reneweth, that is, that faith is tossed with diuerse doubtings, so that the mindes of the godly are seldome quiet, or at least do not alway enioy a peasable state: but with what soeuer engine they be shaken, either they rise vp out of the very gulfe of temptations, or do abide fast in their standing. Truely this assuredneſſe onely nourisheth and defendeth faith, when we holde fast that which is saide in the Psalme: The Lorde is oure protection, oure helpe in trouble, therefore we will not feare, when the earth shall tremble, and the mountaines shall leape into the heart of the sea. Also this most swete quietnesse is spoken of in an other place: I lay downe and slepte, and rose againe, bycause the Lorde hath susteined me. It is not meante thereby that Dauid was alway with one vndisturbed course framed to a merry cheerefulnesse: but in respect that he tasted the grace of God, according to his proportion of faith. Psal. 46. 3. Psal. 3. 6.

therefore he glorieth that he without feare despiseth all that euer might disquiet the peace of his minde. Therfore the Scripture meaning to exhort vs to faith, biddeth vs to be quiet. In Esaie it is saide: In hope and silence shall be your strength. In the Psalme: Holde thee still in the Lorde, and waite for him. Wherewith agreeth that saying of the Apostle to the Hebrues: Patience is needefull. &c.

Esa.30. 15. Psal.37. 7. Heb.10. 36.

38 Hereby we may iudge how pestilent is that doctrine of the Scholemen, that we can no otherwise determine of the grace of God towarde vs, than by morall coniecture as euery man thinketh himselfe worthy of it. Truely if we shall wey by oure workes how God is minded towarde vs, I graunt that we can atteine it with any coniecture, be it neuer so slender: but sith faith ought to haue relation to a simple and free promise, there is lefte no cause of doubting. For with what confidence (I beseche you) shall we be armed, if we say that God is fauourable vnto vs vpon this condition, so that the pureneſſe of oure life do deserue it? But bycause I haue appointed one place properly for the discussing hereof, therefore I will speake no more of them at this present, specially for asmuch as it is plaine enoughe, that there is nothing more contrary to faith, than either coniecture or any thing neere vnto doubting. And they do very ill wryth to this purpose that testimonie of the Preacher which they haue oft in their mouths: Noman knoweth whether he be worthy of hatred or loue. For (to speake nothing how this place is in the common translation corruptly turned) yet very children can not be ignorãt what Salomon meaneth by such wordes: that is, that if any man will iudge by the present state of thinges, whome God hateth, or whome God loueth, he laboreth in vaine, & troubleth himselfe to no profitte for his paines: sith all thinges happen alike, both to the righteous and the wicked, to him that offreth sacrifices and him that offreth none. Whereupon followeth, that God doth not alway witneſſe his loue to them to whome he maketh all things happen prosperously, nor doth alwaies vtter the hatred to them whome he punisheth. And that he doth to condemne the vanitie of mans witte, sith it is so dull in thinges most needefull to be knowen. As he hadde written a little before, that it can not be discerned what the soule of a man differeth from ỹ soule of a beast, becauſe it seemeth to dy in like manner. If any manne will gather thereof, that the opinion that we holde of the immortalitie of soules, standeth vpon cõiecture: may he not worthily be compted a madde manne? Are they then in their right wittes which gather that there is no certaintie of Gods grace, bycauſe we can conceiue none by the carnall beholding of present things?

Eccl.9. 2. Eccl.3. 9.

39 But they alleage that it is a point of rash presumption, to take vpon vs an vndoubted knoweledge of Gods will. I would in deede graunt it vnto them, if we did take so much vpon vs, that we woulde make the incomprehensible secrete purpose of God subiect to the slenderneſſe of oure witte. But when we simply say with Paule, 1.Cor.2
that we haue receiued not the spirit of this world, but the Spirit that 12.
is of God, by whose teaching we may know those thinges that are geuen vs of God, what can they barke against it, but they must slanderously speake against the Spirit of God? But if it be a horrible robberie of God to accuse the reuelatiō that commeth from him, either to be lying, or vnassured or doubtefull, what do we offend in affirming that it is assured? But they say, that this also is not without greate presumptuousneſſe, that we dare so glorie of the Spirite of Christ. Who would thinke that their dulneſſe were so greate that would be compted maisters of the world, that they so fowly stumble in the first principles of religion? Surely I would not thinke it credible, vnleſſe their owne writinges that are abroade did testifie it. Paule pronoun- Rom.8.

his? Biside that, we do wrong to the holy Ghost, which do separate from him faith that is his peculiar worke. Sithe these are the first lessons of godlie religion, it is a token of miserable blindenesse, to haue Christians noted of arrogancie, that dare glorie of the presence of the holy Ghost, without which glorieng Christianitie it selfe doth not stand. But they declare by their example how truely Christ saide, Ioh.14. 17. that his Spirit is vnknowen to the worlde, and is onely knowen of them with whome he abideth.

40 And bycause they will not go about to ouerthrowe the stedfastnesse of faith with digging onely of one mine, they assayle it also otherwise. For they say, that although according to our present state of righteousnes, we may gather a iudgment of the grace of God, yet the knowledge of perseuerance to the ende abideth in suspense. A goodly confidence of saluation forsooth is left vnto vs, if we iudge by morall coniecture, that for a present moment we be in fauoure, and Rom.8. 38. what shall become of vs to morrow we can not tell. The Apostle teacheth farre otherwise: I am surely perswaded (saith he) that neither Angels, nor powers, nor principalities, neither death, nor life, neither present thinges nor thinges to come, shall seuer vs from the loue wherewith the Lorde embraceth vs in Christ. They seeke to escape with a trifling solution, pratinge that the Apostle had that by speciall reuelation. But they are holde to hard to slippe away so. For there he entreateth of those good thinges that commonely come by faith to the faithfull, not those that he himselfe specially feleth. But the same
1.Cor. 10.12. Paul in an other place putteth vs in feare with mentiō of our weakenesse and vnstedfastnes: Let him that standeth (saith he) beware that he fall not. It is true, but not such a feare wherby we shoulde be ouerthrowen, but whereby we may learne to humble our selues vnder
1.Pet.5. 6. the mighty hand of God, as Peter expoundeth it. Then how against ordre and truth is it to limite the assurednes of faith to a moment of time, whose propretie is to passe beyond the spaces of this life, and extend further to immortalitie to come? Sith therefore the faithfull do impute it to the grace of God, that being lightned with his spirit they do by faith enioy the beholding of ỹ heauenly life: so far is such glorying from presumptuousnesse, that if any man be ashamed to confesse it, he doth therein more bewray his extreme vnthankefulnesse, in vnkindely hiding Gods goodnes, than he doth declare his modestie or submission.

41 Because it semed ỹ the nature of faith could not otherwise better or more plainly be declared than by the substance of the promise vpon which it resteth as vpon her propre foundation, so that if the promise be taken away, faith by and by falleth downe or rather vanisheth away: therefore we toke our definition from thense, which yet

varieth not from that definition, or rather descripti on of the Apostle, that he applieth to his discourse, where he sayth that fayth is a substance of thinges to be hoped for, & a certainty of things that are not seene. For by this worde Hypostasis substance (for that terme he vseth) he meaneth as it were, an vpholding stay, whereupon the godly minde leaneth & resteth. As if he should say ỳ faith is a certaine & assured possession of those things that are promised vs of God, vnlesse a man had rather to take Hypostasis for affiance, which I mislike not, albeit I follow that which is more commonly receiued. Againe, to signifie that euen to the last day when the bookes shalbe opened, they are hier than those thinges that may be perceiued with our senses, or seene with our eyes, or handeled with our handes, and that the same are no otherwise possessed by vs, but if we go beyonde the capacity of our owne wit, and bende our vnderstanding aboue all thinges that are in the world, yea and climbe aboue our selues, he hath therefore added that this assurednes of possessiō, is of things that lie in hope, & therefore are not seene. For plaine appearance (as Paule wryteth) is not hope, neither hope we for those thinges that we see. And when he calleth it a certainety or prouse (or as Augustine hath oft translated it) a coniunction of thinges not present: for in Greeke it is Elenchos, he sayth asmuch as if he did say, that it is an euident shewing of thinges not appearinge, a seeinge of thinges not seene, a plainnesse of darke things, a presence of thinges absent, an open shewing of hidden things. For the mysteries of God, such as they be that pertaine to our saluation, can not be seene in themselues and in their owne nature as they call it: but we behold them only in his word, of whose trueth we ought to be so fully perswaded, that we ought to hold all that he speaketh as it were already done and fulfilled. But how can the minde lift vp it selfe to receiue such a tast of Gods goodnesse, but that it must needes be therewith wholly kindled to loue God againe? For that flowing plenty of sweetenes which God hath layed vp in store for them that feare him, can not be truely knowen, but that it must therewithall vehemently moue affection: and whose affection it once moueth, it vtterly rauisheth and carieth him beyonde himselfe. Therefore it is no maruell, if into a peruerse & crooked heart neuer entreth this affection, by which being conueyed vp into the very heauen, we are suffred to come to the most secretely hidden treasures of God, and the most sacred priuie places of his kingdom, which may not be defiled with the entrance of an vncleane heart. For that which the Schoolemen teach, that charity is before faith and hope, is a meere madnes. For it is faith onely that first engendreth charity in vs. Howe much

For first of all it is necessary to beleue ỹ thou canst not haue forgiuenes of sinnes, but by ỹ pardon of God: then ỹ thou canst haue no good worke at all, vnles he also giue it: last of all ỹ thou canst by no works deserue eternal life, vnles it also be giuen freely. A litle after he addeth ỹ these things suffice not, but that there is a certaine beginning of faith, because in beleuing ỹ sinnes can not be forgiuen but of God, we ought also to beleue ỹ they are not forgiuẽ vs, til also we be perswaded by ỹ testimony of the holy Ghost, ỹ saluation is layd vp in store for vs: because God forgiueth sinnes, he himselfe giueth merites, & he himselfe also giueth rewards, that we may not stay stil in this beginning. But these & other things shalbe to be entreated of in places fit for them. Now let it only suffice to know what faith is.

2. Cor. 1 12.

42 Now whersoeuer this liuely faith shalbe, it can not be possible but that it hath with it ỹ hope of eternall saluation, as an vndiuidable cõpanion: or rather that it engendreth or bringeth it foorth out of it selfe, which hope being taken away, how eloquently, gloriously soeuer we talke of faith, yet we are conuicted to haue no faith at all, for if faith (as is aboue said) be an assured persuasion of Gods trueth, that it can not lye vnto vs nor deceiue vs, nor become voide, then they that haue conceiued this assurednesse, truely do therwithal looke for a time to come that God shall performe his promises, which in their persuasion can not be but true: so that briefely, hope is nothing else, but a looking for those thinges which faith hath beleued to be truely promised of God. So faith beleueth that God is true, hope loketh for the performãce of his trueth in conuenient time. Faith beleueth that he is our Father, hope looketh for him to shew himselfe such a one towarde vs. Faith beleueth that eternall life is giuen vs, hope looketh that it be one day reuealed. Faith is the foundation whereupon hope resteth, hope nourisheth & sustaineth faith. For as no man can looke for any thing at Gods hand, but he that hath first beleued his promises: so againe the weakenesse of our faith must with pacient hope and expectation be susteined and cherished, that it fall not as fainting for wearinesse. For which reason Paul doth well place our saluation in hope. For hope, while it in silence looketh for the Lord, restrayneth faith that it fall not headlonge with too much hast: hope strengthneth faith, that it wauer not in Gods promises, nor beginne to dout of the trueth of them: hope refresheth faith that it waxe not weary: Hope stretcheth faith to the vttermost bounde, that it faint not in the midde course nor in the very beginning. Finally, hope by continually renuinge and restoringe, it maketh it now and then to rise vp fresher than it selfe to continuance. But howe many wayes the helpes of hope are necessary to the strengthning of faith, shall better appeare, if we consider with how many sortes of temptations they are assailed and shaken, that haue embraced the word of God. First the Lord in differring his promises doth oftentimes hold our mindes longer in suspense than we woulde wish: here it is the office of hope to performe, that which the Prophet commaundeth, that though his promises do tary, yet we should waite still for them. Sometime he suffereth vs not only to faint, but also seemeth to be highly displeased: here it is much more necessary to haue hope to helpe vs, that according to the saying of an other Prophet, we may still looke for the Lord that hath hidden his face from Iacob. There rise vp all scorners (as Peter sayth) that aske: where is his promise or his comming? forasmuch as since the fathers slept, all thinges so continue from the beginninge of the creation. Yea the flesh and the world do whisper the same thing in our eares. Here must faith staied with sufferāce of hope be holden fast fixed in beholdinge of eternity that it may accompt a thousand yeares like as one day.

43 For this comoyning and alliance the Scripture somtimes confoundeth the names of Faith and Hope. For when Peter teacheth that we are by the power of God preserued through faith, vnto the discloshing of saluation, he giueth that vnto faith which did more fitly agree with hope, and not without cause, forasmuch as we haue already taught, that hope is nothing else but the nourishment and strength of faith. Sometimes they are ioyned together: as in the same epistle. That your faith and hope should be in God. But Paule to the Philippians out of faith deriueth expectation, because in paciently hoping, we holde our desires in suspense, til Gods conuenient oportunity be opened. All which matter we may better vnderstande by the tenth chapter to the Hebrues, which I haue already alleaged. Paule in an other place, although he speake vnproperly, yet meaneth the same thing in these wordes: We looke in the spirit through faith for hope of righteousnesse, euen because we embracing the testimonie of the Gospell concerninge his free loue, do looke for the time when God shal openly shew that which is now hidden vnder hope. And now it is plaine how fooleshly Peter Lomberd laieth two foundations of hope that is the grace of God, & the deseruinge of workes. Hope can haue no other marke to be directed vnto, but faith: and we haue already declared that faith hath one only marke the mercy of God, to which it ought to looke (as I may so speake) with both eyes. But it is good to

But as for vs, when we ſee that we are commaunded by the oracles of God to conceiue a hope of ſaluation, let vs gladly preſume ſo much vpon his trueth, as truſting vpon his only mercy, caſting away the confidence of works, to be bold to hope well. He will not deceiue that ſaid: Be it vnto you according to your faith.

Matt. 9. 29.

The iij. Chapter.

That vve are regenerate by faith. VVherein is entreated of Repentance.

ALbeit we haue already partely taught howe faith poſſeſſeth Chriſt, and howe by it we enioy his benefites: neuertheleſſe this were yet darke, vnleſſe we did alſo make declaration of the effectes that we feele therby. Not without cauſe it is ſaid, that the ſum of the Goſpell ſtandeth in repentance and in forgiueneſſe of ſinnes. Therefore leauinge out theſe two pointes, whatſoeuer we ſhall ſay of faith, ſhalbe but a hungry & vnperfect, yea and in manner vnprofitable diſputation of faith. Now foraſmuch as Chriſt doth giue both vnto vs, and we obtaine both by faith, that is to ſay, both newneſſe of life and free reconciliation, reaſon and order of teaching requireth, that in this place I begin to ſpeake of both. Our next paſſage from faith ſhalbe to Repentance, becauſe when this article is well perceiued, it ſhall the better appeare how man is iuſtified by only faith and mere pardon, & yet how reall holineſſe of life (as I may ſo call it) is not ſeuered from free imputation of righteouſneſſe. Now it ought to be out of queſtion, that Repentance doth not onely immediatly follow faith, but alſo ſpring out of it. For whereas pardon and forgiuenes is therfore offered by the preachinge of the Goſpell, that the ſinner beinge deliuered from the tyranny of Satan, from the yoke of ſinne, and from miſerable bondage of vices, may paſſe into the kingdom of God, truely no man can embrace the grace of the Goſpell, but he muſt returne from the errours of his former life into the right way, and apply all his ſtudy to the meditation of repentance. As for them that thinke that repentance doth rather go before faith than flow or spring foorth of it, as a frute out of a tree, they neuer knewe the force therof, and are moued with too weake an argument to thinke so.

2 Christ (say they) and Iohn in their preachinges do first exhorte the people to repentance, & then they afterward say that the kingdom of heauen is at hande. Such commaundement to preach, the Apostles receiued, such order Paule followed, as Luke reporteth. But while they superstitiously sticke vpon the ioyninge together of sillables, they marke not in what meaning the wordes hang together. For when the Lorde Christ and Iohn do preach in this manner: Repent ye, for the kingdome of heauen is come neare at hande: do they not fetche the cause of repentance from very grace and promise of saluation? Therefore their wordes are asmuch in effect as if they had said: because the kingdome of heauen is come nere at hand, therefore repent ye. For Matthew, when he hath shewed that Iohn so preached, faith that in him was fulfilled the prophecie of Esay, concerning the voice crying in the wilderneſſe, Prepare the way of the Lorde, make streight the pathes of our God. But in the Prophet that voice is commaunded to beginne at comfort and glad tidinges. Yet when we referre the beginninge of repentance to faith, we do not dreame a certaine meane space of time, wherein it bringeth it out: but we meane to shewe that a man can not earnestly apply himselfe to repentance, vnlesse he know himselfe to be of God. But no man is truely perswaded that he is of God, but he that hath first receiued his grace. But these thinges shalbe more plainely discussed in the processe following. Paraduenture this deceiued them, that many are first by terroures of conscience tamed, or framed to obedience, before that they haue throughly digested, yea before they haue tasted the knowledge of grace. And this is the feare at the beginning, which some accompt among vertues, because they see that it is nere to true and iust obedience. But our question is not here how diuersely Christ draweth vs vnto him, or prepareth vs to the endeuour of godlinesse: only this I say, that there can be no vprightnesse founde where reigneth not that Spirite which Christ receiued to communicate the same to his members. Then according to that saying of the Psalme: With thee is mercifulnesse, that thou mayest be feared. No man shall euer reuerently feare God, but he that trusteth that God is mercifull vnto him: no man will willingly prepare himselfe to the keeping of the law, but he that is perswaded that his seruices please him: which tenderneſſe in pardoninge and bearinge with faultes, is a signe of fatherly fauour. Which is also shewed by that exhortation of Osee, Come, let vs returne to the Lord, becauſe he hath plucked vs, and he will heale vs: he hath ſtriken vs, and he will cure vs, becauſe the hope of pardon is vſed as a pricke to make them not to lie dull in their ſinnes. But their dotinge errour is without all colour of reaſon, which to beginne at repentance do appoint certaine dayes to their newe conuertes, during the which they muſt exerciſe themſelues in penance: & when thoſe dayes are once paſt, they admit them to the communiō of the grace of the Goſpel. I ſpeake of many of the Anabaptiſtes, ſpecially thoſe that marueloufly reioyce to be compted ſpirituall, & their cōpanions the Ieſuites, & ſuch other dregges. Such frutes forſooth that ſpirit of giddineſſe bringeth foorth, to determine repentance within compaſſe of a few daies, which a Chriſtian man ought to extende in continuance throughout his whole life.

3 But certaine learned men, euen long before theſe times, meaning to ſpeake ſimply and ſincerely of repentance, according to the trueth of Scripture, haue ſaid that it conſiſteth of two partes, mortification, & viuification. Mortification they expounde to be a ſorrow of the ſoule & feare conceiued of the acknowledging of ſinne, and of the feelinge of the iudgement of God. For when a man is once brought into true knowledge of ſinne, then he truely beginneth to hate & abhorre ſinne: then he heartily miſliketh himſelfe, confeſſeth himſelfe to be miſerable and loſt, & wiſheth himſelfe to be an other man. Further, when he is touched with ſome feling of the iudgemēt of God (for the one immediatly foloweth vpon the other) then he lieth ſtriken and ouerthrowen, then he trembleth, humbled and caſt downe, thē he is diſcouraged & deſpeireth. This is the firſt part of repentance, which they haue commonly called Contritiō. Viuification they expounde to be the comfort that groweth of faith, when a man ouerthrowen with conſcience of ſinne, & ſtriken with feare of God, looking afterward vnto the goodnes of God, vnto the mercy, fauour & ſaluation that is through Chriſt, raiſeth vp himſelfe, taketh breath againe, recouereth courage, and returneth as it were from death to life. And theſe words, if they haue a right expoſitiō, do aptly enough expreſſe the nature of repentance. But where they take Viuification for the cherefulnes, which the minde receiueth being brought into quietneſſe from trouble & feare, therin I agree not with them: forasmuch it rather ſignifieth a deſire to liue holily and godly which groweth of regeneration, as if it were ſaid, that man dieth to himſelfe, to beginne to liue to God.

4 Some other, becauſe they ſaw this word diuerſly takē in Scripture, haue made two ſortes of Repentance: and becauſe they would make

make them differently knowen by some marke, they haue called the one Repentãce of the Law, by which the sinner wounded with the searing iron of sinne, & worne away with feare of the wrath of God, sticketh fast in that trouble and can not winde himselfe out of it. The other Repentance they çall of the Gospell, by which the sinner is in deede grieuously vexed with himselfe, but he riseth vp higher & taketh holde of Christ, the salue of his sore, the comfort of his feare, the heauen of his miserie. Of the repentance of ỹ law they put those examples: Cain, Saul, and Iudas. Whose repentance when the Scripture rehearseth vnto vs, it meaneth that they acknowledginge the grieuousnesse of their sinne, were afraid of the wrath of God, but in thinking vpon God only as a reuenger and iudge, they fainted in that feeling. Therefore their repentance was nothinge else but a certaine entrie of hel, whereinto they being entred in this present life began already to suffer punishmẽt, from the face of the wrath of Gods maiesty. The repentance of the Gospell, we see in all them, that beinge galled with the spurre of sinne in themselues, but recomforted and refreshed with confidence of the mercy of God, are turned vnto the lorde. Ezechias was striken with feare, when he receiued the message of death: but he praied weping, & looking vnto the goodnesse of God, he tooke againe good confidẽce vnto him. The Niniuites were troubled with the horrible threatninge of destruction. But they clothed themselues in sakecloth and ashes and praied, hopinge that the Lord might be turned to them, & turned from the furor of his wrath. Dauid confessed that he had too much sinned in numbringe the people: but he said further, Lord take away the wickednes of thy seruant. He acknowledged his offense of adultery, when Nathan rebuked him, & did cast himselfe downe before the Lord, but therewithall he also looked for pardon. Such was the repentance of them that at the preaching of Peter were pricked in their heart: but trusting vpon ỹ goodnes of God, they said furthermore: Ye men & brethren, what shall we do? And such was the repentance of Peter himselfe, which wept in deede bitterly, but he cessed not to hope well.

5 Although all these things be true, yet the very name of repentance (so farre as I can learne by the Scriptures) is otherwise to be taken. For where they cõprehend faith vnder repentãce, it disagreeth with that which Paule sayth in the Actes, that he testified to the Iewes & Gentiles repentance vnto God & faith in Iesus Christ. Where he reckeneth repentance and faith as two diuerse thinges. What then? Can true repentance stande without faith? No. But though they can not be seuered, yet they must be distinguished. As faith is not without hope, and yet faith and hope are diuerſe thinges: ſo repentance and faith, although they hang together with one perpetuall bond, yet they rather would be conioyned than confounded. And truely I am not ignorant, that vnder the name of repentance is comprehended the whole turning vnto God, whereof faith is not the leaſt parte: but in what meaninge it is ſo comprehended, ſhall moſt eaſily appeare when the force and nature therof ſhalbe declared. The name of repentance in Hebrue is deriued of conuertinge or returninge, in Greke of chaunging of the minde or purpoſe, & the thing it ſelfe doth not ill agree with either deriuations, whereof the ſumme is, that we departing from our ſelues ſhould turne vnto God, & puttinge of our old minde, ſhould put on a new. Wherefore in my iudgement, repentance may thus not amiſſe be defined: that it is a true turninge of our life vnto God, proceeding from a pure & earneſt feare of God, which conſiſteth in the mortifying of the fleſh and of the olde man, and in the quickening of the ſpirite. In this ſenſe are to be taken all the preachings wherin either the Prophets in olde time, or the Apoſtles afterward exhorted the men of their time to repentance. For this onely thinge they trauailed to perſwade, that confounded with their owne ſinnes, and pricked with feare of the Lordes iudgement, they ſhoulde fall downe and be humbled before him, againſt whom they had of-

6 But before we go any further, it ſhalbe profitable that we do more plainly ſet out at large the definitiõ that we haue made. Wherin there be chiefely three pointes to be conſidered. Firſt when we cal it a turning of life vnto God, we require a transforming, not onely in outward workes, but alſo in the ſoule it ſelfe, which when it hath put of her oldneſſe, then beginneth to bring foorth the frutes of workes

the Lorde, teacheth that it be done with all their heart, and with all their soule (which maner of speakinge we see often repeated of the Prophets) and naming it the circumcising of the heart, he shaketh away all inward affections. But there is no place whereby a man may better perceiue what is the naturall propriety of repentance thā the fourth Chapter of Ieremie. If thou returne to me, O Israel, (saith the Lord) returne to me, plowe vp your arable lande and sow not vpon thornes. Be circumcised to the Lord, and take away the vncircumcised skinnes of your heartes. See how he pronounceth that they shall nothing preuaile in taking vpō thē the following of righteousnes, vnlesse wickednes be first plucked out of the bottome of their heartes. And to moue them throughly, he warneth them that they haue to do with God, with whom there is nothing gotten by dalying, because he hateth a double heart. Therfore Esay laugheth to scorne ỹ fooliſh endeuours of hipocrites, which did in deede busily go about an outward repentance in ceremonies, but in the meane time they had no care to loose the bundles of wickednes wherwith they held poore men fast tied. Where also he very well sheweth in what dueties vnfained repentance properly standeth. Ier.4.3 Esa.65. 2.6.

7 The second point was, that we taught that repentance proceedeth of an earnest feare of God. For, before that the mind of a sinner be enclined to repentance, it must be stirred vp with thinkinge vpon the iudgement of God. But when this thought is once throughly settled, that God will one day go vp into his iudgement seate, to require an accompt of all sayings & doings: it will not suffer the sily mā to rest, nor to take breath one minute of time, but cōtinually stirreth him vp to thinke vpon a new trade of life, whereby he may safely appeare at that iudgement. Therefore oftentimes the Scripture, when it exhorteth to repentance, maketh mention of the iudgement: as in Ieremie: least paraduenture my wrath go out as fire, & there be none to quench it, because of the naughtines of your works. In Paules sermon to the Athenians: And whereas hitherto God hath borne with the times of this ignorance, now he giueth warninge to men, that all mē euery where may repent them, because he hath apointed the day wherein he will iudge the world in equity. And in many other places. Sometime it declareth by the punishmentes already extended, that God is a iudge, that sinners should thinke with thēselues, that worse thinges hang ouer them if they do not repent in time. You haue an example therof in the 29. of Exodus. But because the turning beginneth at the abhorring and hatred of sinne, therfore the Apostle maketh sorowfulnesse, such as is according to God, the cause of repen- Ier.4.3. Act. 17. 30. 2. Cor. 7 10.

tance. And he calleth ſorrowfulnes according to God, when we are not only afraid of puniſhment, but do hate and abhorre ſinne it ſelfe, foraſmuch as we vnderſtand that it diſpleaſeth God. And no maruel. For vnleſſe we be ſharply pricked, the ſlouthfulnes of our fleſh could not be corrected, yea prickinges would not ſuffice for the dulnes & ſlouthfulnes therof, vnleſſe God in ſtretching out his roddes ſhould pearce more depely. This is alſo an obſtinacy which muſt be beaten downe as it were with beetles. Therfore the peruerſeneſſe of our nature enforceth God to the ſeuerity that he vſeth in threateninge, becauſe he ſhoulde in vaine call vs alluringly with faire ſpeach while we lie a ſleepe. I recite not the teſtimonies that cõmonly offer thẽſelues to be founde. The feare of God is in an other manner alſo the beginninge of repentance. For though mans life were abſolutely furniſhed with all pointes of vertues, if it be not applied to the worſhipping of God, it may in deede be praiſed of the world, but in heauen it ſhalbe meere abhomination, foraſmuch as the chiefe parte of our righteouſneſſe is to giue God his due right and honor, wherof he is wickedly robbed, when we bend not our ſelues to yeelde vs ſubiect to his gouernment.

8 Thirdly, it remaineth that we declare what is meant by this that we ſay, that Repentance conſiſteth in two partes, that is to ſay, mortifying of the fleſh, and quickening of the ſpirit. The Prophetes do plainely expreſſe it, although ſomewhat ſimply and groſly, accor-
Pſa. 34. 15. Eſa. 1. 16. ding to the capacity of the carnall people, when they ſay: Ceſſe from euill and do goodnes. Againe. Be waſhed, be cleane, take away the euill of your workes from mine eyes: Ceſſe to do peruerſly, learne to do well, ſeeke iudgement, help the oppreſſed, &c. For when they call men away frõ wickednes, they require the death of the whole fleſh, which is ſtuffed full of wickednes and peruerſenes. It is in deede an vneaſie & hard thing to put of our ſelues, & to depart from our natural diſpoſitiõ. Neither can it be thought that the fleſh is throughly deade, vnleſſe all that we haue of our ſelues be aboliſhed. But foraſ-
Rom. 8. 4. much as all the affection of the fleſh is enemy againſt God, the firſt entree to the obeying of his law, is the forſaking of our owne nature. Afterward they expreſſe the renuing by the frutes that folow therof, as righteouſnes, iudgement & mercy. For it were not enough to do thoſe dueties rightly, vnleſſe the minde it ſelfe & the heart haue firſt put on the affection of righteouſnes, iudgement and mercy. That is done when the ſpirit of God hath ſo ſoked in new thoughtes & affections, our ſoules firſt waſhed with his holines, that they may rightly be compted new. And truely as we are naturally turned away from God,

God, so vnlesse the forsaking of our selues do go before, we can neuer go toward that which is right. Therfore we are so oft commaunded to put of the old man, to forsake the world & flesh, to bid our lustes farewel, and to be renued in the spirite of our minde. Moreouer the very name of mortification doth put vs in minde how hard it is to forget our former nature: because we thereby gather that we are not otherwise framed to the feare of God, nor do learne the principles of godlinesse, but when we are violently slaine with the worde of the Spirit, and so brought to nought: euen as though God should pronoūce, that to haue vs to be accompted among his childrē, there needeth a death of all our commune nature.

9 Both these things do happē vnto vs by the partaking of Christ. For if we do truely communicate of his death, by the power thereof Ro. 6. 6. our olde man is crucified, & the body of sinne dieth, that the corruption of our former nature may liue no more. If we be partakers of his resurrection, by it we are raised vp into a newnesse of life, that may agree with the righteousnes of God. In one word I expounde repentance to be regeneration, which hath no other marke whereunto it is directed, but that the image of God which was by Adams offence fowly defaced and in a maner vtterly blotted out, may be renued in vs. So the Apostle teacheth, when he sayth: but we representing the glory of God with vncouered face are transformed into the same image, out of glory into glory, as by ỹ spirit of the Lord. Againe. Be ye renued in the spirite of your minde and put on the newe man, which is created according to God in righteousnes and holinesse of trueth. Againe in an other place: putting on the new man, which is renued after the knowledge and image of him that created him. Therfore by this regeneratiō we be by the benefit of Christ restored into the righteousnes of God, from which we were fallē by Adam. After which manner it pleaseth the Lord wholly to restore all those whom he adopteth into the inheritance of life. And this restoring is fulfilled not in one moment, or one day, or one yere, but by continuall, yea & sometimes slow proceedinges God taketh away the corruptions of the flesh in his elect, cleanseth them from filthines, and consecrateth them for temples to himselfe, renuinge all their senses to true purenes, that they may exercise themselues all their life in repentance, and knowe that this warre hath no ende but in death. And so much the greater is the lewdnes of that filthy railer & apostata Staphilus, which foolishly saith that I confounde the state of this present life with the heauenly glory, when I expounde by Paule the image of God to be holines and true righteousnes. As though when any thing is defined, we ſhoulde not ſeeke the whole fulnes & perfection of it. And yet we deny not place for encreaſces: but I ſay that how neere any man approcheth to the likenes of God, ſo much the image of God ſhineth in him. That the faithfull may attaine herunto, God aſſigneth them the race of repentance wherein to runne all their life long.

10 The children of God therefore are ſo deliuered by regeneration from the bondage of ſinne, not that hauinge now obtained the full poſſeſſion of liberty, they ſhould feele no more trouble by their fleſh, but that they ſhould haue remaining a cõtinual matter of ſtrife, wherwith they may be exerciſed, and not only be exerciſed, but alſo may better learne their owne weakeneſſe. And in this point all wryters of ſounde iudgement agree together, that there remayneth in man regenerate a feedinge of euill, from whenſe continually ſpringe deſires that allure & ſtirre him to ſinne. They confeſſe alſo that the holy ones are ſtill ſo holden entangled with that diſeaſe of luſtinge, that they can not withſtand but that ſomtime they are tickled & ſtirred either to luſt or to couetouſnes, or to ambition or to other vices. Neither is it nedefull to labour much in ſearching what the old wryters haue thought herein, foraſmuch as only Auguſtine may be ſufficient for it, which hath faithfully and with great diligence gathered al their iudgementes. Therefore let the readers gather out of him, ſuch certainety as they ſhall deſire to learne of the opinion of antiquity. But there may ſeeme to be this differẽce betwene him and vs, that he when he graunteth that the faithfull ſo long as they dwell in a mortall body are ſo holden bound with luſtes, that they can not but luſt, yet dareth not call that diſeaſe ſinne: but being content to expreſſe it by the name of weakeneſſe, he teacheth that then onely it becommeth ſinne, when either worke or conſent is added to cõceite or receiuing, that is, when will yeeldeth to the firſt deſire: but we accompt the very ſame for ſinne, that man is tickled with any deſire at all againſt the law of God: Yea we affirme that the very corruption that engendreth ſuch deſires in vs, is ſinne. We teach therefore that there is alway ſinne in the holy ones, vntill they be vnclothed of the mortall body, becauſe there remaineth in their fleſh that peruerſenes of luſting that fighteth againſt vprightnes. And yet he doth not alway forbeare to vſe the name of Sinne, as when he ſayth: This Paule calleth by the name of ſinne, from whenſe ſpring all ſinnes vnto a fleſhly cõcupiſcence. This aſmuch as pertaineth to the holy ones, looſeth the kingdom in earth, and periſheth in heauen. By which wordes he confeſſeth, that the faithfull are gilty of ſinne, in ſo much as they are ſubiect to the luſtes of the fleſh.

Libr. ad Bonif. 4 Li. 1 & 2 contra Iulianum.

Ser. 6. de verbis Apoſt.

11 But this that it is sayd, ý God purgeth his church frō all sinne, that he promiseth that grace of deliuerāce by Baptisme, & fulfilleth it in his elect, we referre rather to the giltines of sinne, than to the very matter of sinne. God truely performeth this by regenerating thē that be his, that in them that kingdome of sinne is abolished (for the holy Ghost ministreth them strength, whereby they get the vpper hand & are cōquerours in the battel) but it ceaseth only to reigne & not so to dwell in them. Therfore we so say, that the old man is crucified, & the law of sinne abolished in the children of God, that yet there remaine some leauings, not to haue dominiō in them, but to humble them by knowledge in conscience of their owne weakenesse. And we confesse that the same are not imputed, as if they were not: but we affirme that this cōmeth to passe by the mercy of God, that the holy ones are deliuered from this giltinesse, which otherwise should iustly be reckened sinners & gilty before God. And this sentence it shal not be hard for vs to confirme, forasmuch as there are euident testimonies of the Scripture vpon their matter. For what woulde we haue more plaine, than that which Paule crieth out to the Romaines cap. 7. First both we haue in an other place shewed, and Augustine proueth by stronge reasons, that Paul there speaketh in the person of a man regenerate. I speake not of this, that he vseth these wordes, Euill and Sinne, that they which will speake against vs may not cauill against those words? but who can deny, that a striuing against the law of God is euill? who can deny a withstanding of Iustice to be sinne? Finally, who will not graunt that there is a fault, where is a spirituall misery? But all these thinges are reported of this disease by Paule. Againe, we haue an assured demonstration by the law, by which this whole questiō may easily be discussed. For we are commaunded to loue God with al our heart, with all our soule, with all our powers. Sith all the partes of our soule ought so to be occupied with the loue of God, it is certaine, that they satisfie not the commaundement that cōceiue in their heart any desire, be it neuer so litle, or suffer any such thought at all to entre into their minde, as may withdraw them from the loue of God into vanity. For what? are not these the powers of the soule, to be affected with sodaine motions, to comprehende with wit, to conceiue with minde? Therfore, when these do open a way for vaine or corrupt thoughtes to entre into thē, do they not shew that they are euen so much voide of the loue of God? Wherfore, who so confesseth not that all the lusts of the flesh are sinnes, and that the same disease of lusting, which they call a feeding, is the well springe of sinne, he must needes deny that the transgression of the law is sinne.

Ephe. 5. 26.

Ro. 7. 6.

12 If any man thinke it an absurdity, that all the desires wherwith man is naturally moued in affection, are vniuersally cõdemned, whereas they be put into man by God the author of nature. We answere, that we do not condemne those desires that God hath so engrauen into ỹ mindẽ of man at the first creation, that they can not be rooted out without destroying the very nature of man, but onely outragious and vnbridled motions that fight against the ordinance of God. But nowe sith by reason of the peruersenesse of nature all her powers are infected and corrupted, that in all her doinges appeareth a continuall disorder & intemperance, because the desires can not be seuered frõ such intemperance: therefore we say that they are corrupt. Or (if you like to haue the whole summe in fewer wordes) we teach that all the desires of men are euill: and we accuse them to be gilty of sinne, not in that that they are naturall, but for that they are inordinate: and we call them inordinate, because no pure or cleane thinge can come out of a corrupt and vncleane nature. And Augustine doth not so much vary from this doctrine as he appeareth in shew, while he somewhat too much feareth the enuie that the Pelagians labored to bring him into, he sometime forbeareth to vse the name of sinne: Yet where he wryteth that the law of sinne still remaining in the holy ones, the only giltines is taken away, he plainly sheweth that he doth not so much disagree from our meaning.

Ad Bonif.

13 We will alleage some other sentences, wherby shall better appeare what he thought. In the second booke against Iulian: This law of sinne is both released by the spiritual regeneration, and abideth in the mortall flesh: released herein, because the giltines is taken away in the sacrament wherby the faithfull are regenerate: & it abideth, because it worketh the desires against which the faithfull do fight. Agayne. Therfore the law of sinne (which was also in the members of so great an Apostle) is released in baptisme, but not ended. Againe. The law of sinne (of which yet remaininge the giltinesse, is in baptisme discharged) Ambrose called wickednes: because it is wickednes for the flesh to lust against the Spirit. Againe. Sinne is dead in respect of that giltines wherein it helde vs, and euen being dead, it still rebelleth till it be healed with perfection of buriall. And yet playner in the 5. booke. As the blindnesse of heart is both a sinne, whereby man beleueth not in God: and also a punishmẽt of sinne, whereby a proud heart is chastised with worthy correction: and the cause of sinne when any thing is committed by the errour of a blinde heart: so the lust of flesh against which a good spirit lusteth, is both sinne, because there is in it disobedience against the gouernment of the minde: and also the punishment of sinne, because it is giuen for recompense to the deseruinges of the disobedient: and the cause of sinne in man, when he consenteth by defection or in man, when he is borne: by infection. Here without any doutfull speach he calleth it sinne, because when errour was once ouerthrowen, and the trueth confirmed, he lesse feared sclaunderous reportes. As in the 41. Homely vpon Iohn, where doutlesse he speaketh accordinge to the true meaninge of his minde, he sayth: If in the flesh thou serue the lawe of sinne, do that which the Apostle himselfe saith: let not sinne reigne in your mortal body to obey the desires therof. He saith not, let it not be, but let it not reigne. So long as thou liuest, sinne must needes be in thy members at least let reigne be take from it. Let not that be done which it commaundeth. They that defende that lust is no sinne, are wont to obiect that saying of Iames: Lust, after that it hath coceiued, bringeth forth sinne. But this is eafily cofuted. For vnlesse we thinke that he speaketh of only ill workes or actuall sinnes, euill wil it selfe, shall not be accompted sinne. But where he calleth mischieuous deedes and wicked offenses the offsprings of sinne, and giueth vnto them the name of sinne, it doth not byandby folow thereof, but that to lust, is an euill thing & damnable before God. Rom. 6. 12. Iam. 2.

14 Certaine Anabaptistes in this age, deuise I wote not what phre tike intemperance in steede of spiritual regeneration: saying that the children of God restored into the state of innocency, now ought no more to be carefull for bridling of the lust of the flesh: that the Spirit is to be followed for their guide, vnder whose guiding they neuer go out of the way. It were incredible that mans minde coulde fall to so great madnesse, vnlesse they did openly and proudly babble abroade this doctrine. Truely it is monstruous. But it is meete that such should suffer the punishment of such blasphemous boldenesse, that so haue perswaded their minde to turne the trueth of God into a lie. Shall all the choise of honesty and dishonesty, right and wrong, good & euill, vertue and vice, be taken away? Such difference (say they) commeth of the cursednesse of olde Adam, from which we are exempted by Christ. So now there shalbe no difference betwene fornication and chastity, plaine dealinge and suttelty, trueth and lying, iustice and extortion. Take away vaine feare, say they, the Spirite wil commaunde thee no euill thinge, so that thou boldely and without feare yeelde thee to the guidinge thereof. Who can choose but be astonished at these monstruous thinges? Yet it is a common learning among them, which blinded with madnesse of lustes, haue putte of all common reason, but what Christ (I beseech you) do they frame vnto vs, and what ſpirit do they belch out? For we reknowledge one Chriſt, & his only Spirit whom the Prophets haue cõmended, whom the Goſpell giuen vs doth preach, of whom we there heare no ſuch thinge. That Spirit is no patrone of manſlaughter, whoredom, dronkennes, pride, contention, couetouſnes, & guile: but the author of loue, chaſtity, ſobriety, modeſty, peace, temperance & truth. It is not a giddy ſpirit, & runneth headlong without conſideration through right and wronge, but is full of wiſdom and vnderſtandinge, that diſcerneth rightly betwene iuſt and vniuſt. It ſtirreth not vnto diſſolute and vnbridled licentiouſneſſe, but maketh difference betwene lawfull and vnlawfull, and teacheth to kepe meaſure and temperance: but why do we labour any longer in confuting this beaſtly rage? To Chriſtians the Spirit of the Lord is not a troubleſome phantaſie, which either thẽſelues haue brought forth in a dreame, or haue receiued being forged of other: but they reuerently ſeeke the knowledge of him at the Scriptures, where theſe two things be taught of him: Firſt that he is giuen vs vnto ſanctification, that he might bringe vs into the obedience of Gods will, being purged from vncleanneſſe and defilinges, which obedience can not ſtande, vnleſſe luſtes be tamed and ſubdued, whereunto theſe men would giue the bridle at liberty. Secondly we are taught that we are ſo cleanſed by his ſanctification, that we are ſtil beſieged with many vices and much weakenes, ſo long as we are enclóſed in the burden of our body: wherby it commeth to paſſe, that being farre diſtant frõ perfection, we haue neede alway to encreaſe ſomwhat, and being entangled in vices, we haue neede daily to wraſtle with them. Whereupon alſo followeth, that ſhaking of ſlouth and careleſneſſe, we muſt watch with heedefull mindes, that we be not compaſſed vnware with the ſnares of our fleſh. Vnleſſe paraduenture we thinke that we haue proceeded further thã the Apoſtle, which yet was weried of the Angel of Satan, that his ſtrength might be made perfect with weakenes: and which did vnfainedly repreſent in his fleſh that diuiſion of the fleſh and of the ſpirit.

2.Cor. 12.15. Ro.7.6.

15 But whereas the Apoſtle in deſcribing of repentance reckeneth ſeauen either cauſes or effectes or partes thereof, he doth that of a very good cauſe: and theſe they be: endeuour or carefulneſſe, excuſinge, indignation, feare, deſire, zele, puniſhment. Neither ought it to ſeeme any abſurdity, that I dare not certainely determine whether they ought to be compted cauſes or effectes. For both may be defended in diſputation. They may be alſo called affections ioyned with repentance: but becauſe, leauinge out thoſe queſtions, we may vnderſtande what Paule meaneth, we ſhalbe content with a ſimple declaration of them. He saith therefore, that of the heauinesse which is according to God, ariseth carefulnesse. For he that is touched with an earnest feling of displeasure bycause he hath sinned against his God, is therwithall stirred vp to diligence and heedefulnesse, to winde himselfe clerely out of the snares of the Deuell, to take better heede of his snares, to fall no more from the gouernance of the holy Ghost, not to be oppressed with security. Next is Excusing, which in this place signifieth not the defense, whereby a sinner to escape the iudgement of God, either doth denie that he hath offended, or diminisheth the haynousnesse of his faulte, but a purgation which standeth rather in crauing of pardon, than in defense of his cause. Like as the children that are not reprobate when they acknowledge and confesse their faultes, do yet vse entreating, and that it may take place, they protest by all meanes that they can, that they haue not cast away the reuerence that they owe to their parentes. Finally they so excuse them, as they go not about to proue themselues righteous and innocent, but onely that they may obteine pardon. Then followeth Indignation, whereby the sinner fretteth inwardly with himselfe, quareleth with himselfe, is angry with himselfe, when he recordeth his owne peruersnesse and his owne vnthankefulnesse to God. By the name of feare, he meaneth that trembling that is striken into our mindes so ofte as we thinke both what we haue deserued, and howe horrible is the seueritie of Gods wrath against sinners. For we must needes then be vexed with a maruellous vnquietnesse, which both instructeth vs to humilitie, & maketh vs more ware against the time to come. Now if out of feare do springe that carefulnesse, whereof he had spoken before, then we see with what linking they hang together. It semeth to me that he hath vsed this worde Desire for diligence in our dutie and redy cherefulnesse to obey, whereunto the acknowledginge of our owne faultes ought chiefely to prouoke vs. And thereunto also belongeth zele, which he ioyneth immediatly next vnto it. For it signifieth a feruentnesse, wherewith we be kindled when we be spurred forward with these pricking thoughtes: what haue I done? whether had I throwen my selfe hedlonge, if the mercie of God did not help me? The last of all is punishment, for the more rigorous that we be to our selues, and the streightlier that we examine our owne sinnes, so much the more we ought to trust that God is fauorable and mercifull vnto vs. And truely it is not possible, but that the soule being striken with horrour of the iudgement of God must needes do some execution in the punishing of it selfe. Truely the godly do fele what punishmentes are shame, confusion, mourning, lothing of themselues,

& other affectiõs that ſpring out of earneſt acknowledging of ſinnes. But let vs remember that there is a meaſure to be kepte, that ſorrow do not ſwallowe vs vp, becauſe nothing more redily happeneth to fearefull conſciences than falling to deſpeire. And alſo by that crafty meane whom ſo euer Satã findeth ouerthrowen with dreade of God, he more and more drowneth them in the gulfe of ſorrow, that they may neuer riſe vp againe. Truely the feare can not be to great which endeth with humilitie, and departeth not from hope of pardon. But alway (as the Apoſtle teacheth) the ſinner muſt beware, that while he moue himſelfe to the lothing of himſelfe, he deſpeire not, oppreſſed with to great feare, for ſo do we flee away from God which calleth vs to him by repentance. Vpon which point this leſſon of Bernarde is very profitable: Sorrow for ſinnes is neceſſarie, if it be not continuall. I counſell you ſometime to returne your faute from greuous and painefull remembrance of your owne wayes, and to climbe vp to the plaine grounde of cherefull remembrance of benefites of God. Let vs mingle hony with wormewood, that the holſome bitterneſſe may bring vs health, when it ſhalbe dronke tempered with ſweteneſſe. And if ye thinke of your ſelues in humilitie, thinke alſo of the Lorde in goodneſſe.

Sermone 11. in Cant.

16 Now it may be alſo perceiued what be the frutes of repentãce, euen the duties of godlineſſe toward God, and of charitie toward men, and therewithall a holines and pureneſſe in all our life. Finally, the more earneſtly that any man examineth his life by the rule of Gods lawe, ſo much the ſurer tokens he ſheweth of his repentance. Therefore the holy Ghoſt oftentimes, when he exhorteth vs to repentance, calleth vs ſometime to all the commaundementes of the law, ſometime to the duties of the ſecond table. Albeit in other places after that he hath condemned vncleanneſſe in the very fountaine of the heart, he deſcendeth afterwarde to outwarde teſtimonies that do ſet out true repentãce: of which thing I will hereafter ſet before the readers eyes a table in the deſcription of a Chriſtian life. I will not gather teſtimonies out of the Prophets, wherein they partely ſcorne at their follies that go about to appeaſe God with ceremonies, & do ſhewe that they be mere mockeries, and partely do teache that outwarde vprightneſſe of life is not the principall part of repentance, bycauſe God loketh vpon the heart: who ſo euer is euen meanely exerciſed in ỹ ſcripture, ſhall perceiue of himſelfe without any other mans putting in minde, that when we haue to do with God, we labour in vaine, vnleſſe we beginne at the inward affection of the heart. And the place of Ioel ſhall not a litle helpe to the vnderſtanding of the reste, where he saith: Teare your heartes and not your garmẽts. Also both those pointes are expressed in these wordes of Iames: Ye wicked doers, cleanse your handes: ye double men, purge your heartes. Iac. 4.8 Where in deede there is an addition ioyned to the first part, but after is shewed the very fountaine and beginning that they must wipe away their secret filthinesse, that there may be an altar set vp to God in the very heart. Biside this there are also certaine outward exercises which we vse priuately as remedies to humble our selues or to tame our flesh, and publikely for the declaration of repentance. And they procede from that punishment of which Paule speaketh, for these are the propreties of an afflicted minde, to be in lothesomnesse, mourning and weping, to flee gorgeousnesse and all trimming, and to forsake al delites. 2. Cor. 7. 11. Then he that feleth how great an euell is the rebellion of the flesh, seketh all remedies to bridle it. Moreouer he that well bethinketh him how greuous a thing it is to haue offended the iustice of God, can not rest vntill he haue in his owne humility geuen glorie to God. Such exercises the olde writers do oftentimes rehearse, when they speake of the frutes of repentance. But albeit they do not place the whole force of repentance in them, yet the readers shall pardon me, if I speake what I thinke: it seemeth vnto me that they stand to much vpon them. And if any man will wisely wey it, I trust he will agree with me, that they haue two wayes gone beyond measure. For whē they so much enforced, and with immesurable commendations aduaunced that bodily discipline, this in deede they obteined, that the people did the more earnestly embrace it, but they in a manner darkened that, which ought to haue bene of much greater importance. Secondely, in geuing punishmentes they were somewhat more rigorous than eccleiasticall mildenesse may beare, as we shall haue occasion to shew in an other place.

17 But because many when they heare weping, fasting and ashes spoken of, both often in other places and specially in Ioel, they measure the chiefe part of repentance by fasting and weping: therefore their errour is to be taken away. Ioel. 2. 12. That which is there spoken of the turning of the whole heart to the Lorde, of cutting their heartes and not their garmentes, is proprely belonging to repentance: but weping and fasting are not ioyned as continuall or necessary effectes thereof, but are spoken of in respect of a speciall circumstance. Because he had prophecied, that there hãged ouer the Iewes a most greuous destruction, therefore he counselleth them to preuent the wrath of God, not only in repenting, but also in vttering tokens of their sorrow. For as a man standing to be arrained, vseth humbly to abace himselfe with an ouergrowen bearde, vncombed heare and blacke apparell, to moue the iudge to pitie: so it behoued them when they stode accused before the iudgement seate of God, in piteous array to besech him not to extend his rigour. But although ashes and sackcloth did paraduenture more fitly agree with those times. Yet it is certaine, that weping and fasting shoulde be to a very conuenient good vse among vs, so oft as the Lord semeth to threaten vs any plague or calamitie. For when he maketh any danger to appere, he doth after a certaine maner geue warning, that he is prepared or armed to reuenge. Therefore the prophet did wel, when he exhorted his contrimen to wepinge and fasting, that is to the sorrowfull manner of accused men, whose offences he said a litle before, were had in examination. Euen as the Pastors of the Church should not do ill at this day, if when they see any ruine hanging ouer the neckes of their people, they would crie out vpon them to make haste to fasting and weping: so that they would with greater and more inward care and diligence, alway enforce that which is the principall point, that they must cut their heartes and not their garmentes. It is out of doubt, that fasting is not alway ioyned with repentance, but is appointed peculiarly for times of miserable plagues: and therfore Christ ioyneth it with wayling, when he acquiteth the Apostles from neede thereof, vntill the time that being spoiled of his presence, they should be tormented with griefe. I speake of solēne fasting. For the priuate life of the godly ought to be tempered with honest sparing and sobrietie, that in the whole course thereof there may appere a certaine kinde of fasting. But becawse all this matter shalbe to be declared againe in the place where we shall entreate of the discipline of the Church, therefore I do now the more slenderly touche it. But this one thing I will adde here by the way: when the name of repentance is applied to this outward profession, then it is vnproprely turned from the naturall meaning which I haue aboue set forth of it. For it is not so much a turning vnto God as a confession of fault, with a besecching of God not to charge them with the paine and giltinesse. So to do penance in ashes and sackcloth is nothing els, than to vtter a displeasednesse when God is angry with vs for greuous offenses. And this is a publike kinde of confession, whereby we condemning our selues before the Angels and the world, do preuent the iudgement of God. For Paule rebuking their slouthfulnesse that tenderly beare with their own faultes, saith: if we did iudge our selues, we should not be iudged of God. But it is not alway necessarie to make men openly of counsell and witnesses of our repentance: but to confesse priuately to God is a part of true repent-

Matt. 9. 15.

Mat. 11. 21. Luc. 10. 13.

1. Cor. 11. 3.

repentance which can not be omitted. For there is nothing more vnreasonable than to loke to haue God to pardon vs the sinnes in which we flatter our selues and do hide them by Hipocrisie, least he should bring them to light. And it behoueth vs not onely to confesse those sinnes which we dayely commit, but more greuous offenses ought to drawe vs further, and to call againe into our remembrance thinges that seeme longe ago buried. Which lesson Dauid geueth vs by his example. For being touched with shame of his newly committed fault, he examineth himself euen to the time when he was in his mothers wombe, and cõfesseth that euen then he was corrupted and infected with the filthinesse of the flesh. And this he doth not to diminish the haynousnesse of his fault, as many hide themselues in the multitude, and seke to escape punishment by wrapping other with them. But Dauid doth far otherwise which with simple plainnes enforceth his fault in saying, that being corrupt from his first infancie, he hath not cessed to heape euels vpon euels. Also in an other place he likewise so examineth his passed life, that he craueth the mercie of God for the sinnes of his youth. And truely then onely shall we proue our drowsines to be shakē away from vs, if groning vnder our burden and bewailing our euels, we aske reliefe of God. It is moreouer to be noted, that the repentance which we are commaunded continually to applie, differeth from that repentance, that lifteth vp as it were, from death them that either haue filthily fallen, or with vnbridled licentiousnesse haue throwen forth themselues to sinne, or after a certaine manner of rebellious reuolting, haue shaken of the yoke of God. For the Scripture oftentimes, when it exhorteth to repentance, meaneth thereby as it were a passage or rising againe from death into life: and when it reherseth that the people did penaunce, it meaneth that they were turned from their idolatrie & other grosse offences. And in like manner Paule threateneth mourning vnto sinners that haue not done penance for their wantonnesse, fornication and vnchastitie. This difference is to be diligently marked, least while we heare that few are called to penãce, a more than careless assuredness should crepe vpon vs, as though the mortifieng of the flesh did no more belong vnto vs, the care whereof, the corrupt desires that alway tickle vs, and the vices that commonly budde vp in vs, do not suffer vs to release, Therefore the speciall repentance which is required but of some, whom the Deuell hath violently carried away from the feare of God, and fast bound with damnable snares, taketh not away the ordinary repentance which the corruptnesse of nature compelleth vs to applie throughout all the whole course of our life.

Psa. 51. 7.

Psa. 25. 9.

2. Cor. 12, 21.

19 Now if that be true, which is moſt euidently certaine, that all the ſumme of the Goſpell is conteined in theſe two principall pointes, Repentance and forgeueneſſe of ſinnes: do we not ſee, that the Lord doth therfore freely iuſtifie thē that be his, that he may alſo by the ſanctification of his Spirite reſtore them into true righteouſneſſe? Iohn the Angel ſent before the face of Chriſt to prepare his wayes, preached: Repent ye, for the kingdome of heauen is come nere at hande. In calling thē to repentance, he did put them in minde to acknowledge themſelues ſinners, and all that was theirs, to be damnable before the Lorde, that they might with all their heartes deſire the mortifieng of their fleſh and a newe regeneration in the Spirit. In telling them of the kingdome of God, he called them to faith. For by the kingdome of God which he taught to be at hand, he meant forgeueneſſe of ſinnes, ſaluation, and life, and all that euer we get in Chriſt. Wherefore in the other Euangeliſtes it is written, Iohn cam preaching the Baptiſme of repentance vnto forgeueneſſe of ſinnes. And what is that els, but that they being oppreſſed and weried with the burden of ſinnes, ſhold turne to the Lorde, and conceiue good hope of forgeueneſſe and ſaluation? So Chriſt alſo beganne his preachings: The kingdome of God is come nere at hand: repent ye and beleue the Goſpell. Firſt he declareth that the treaſures of Gods mercie are opened in him, and then he requireth repentance, and laſt of all confidence in the promiſes of God. Therefore when he meant briefly to comprehēd the whole ſumme of the Goſpell, he ſaid, that he muſt ſuffer & riſe againe from the dead, and that repentance and forgeueneſſe of ſinnes muſt be preached in his name. The Apoſtles alſo preached the ſame after his reſurrectiō, that he was raiſed vp by God, to geue to Iſraell repentance and forgeueneſſe of ſinnes. Repentance is preached in the name of Chriſt, when men do heare by the doctrine of the Goſpell that all their thoughtes, their affections, and their endeuors are corrupt and faulty, and that therefore it is neceſſarie that they be borne againe if they will entre into the kingdome of God. Forgeueneſſe of ſinnes is preached when men are taught that Chriſt is made to them redemption, righteouſneſſe, ſaluation and life: in whoſe name they are freely accompted righteous and innocent in the ſight of God, whereas both theſe graces are receiued by faith, as I haue in an other place declared: yet becauſe the goodneſſe of God whereby ſinnes are forgeuen, is the proofe obiect of faith, therefore it ſhalbe good that it be diligently diſtinguiſhed from repentance.

20 Now as the hatred of ſinne, which is the beginning of repentance,

tance, openeth vs the first entrie vnto Christ, which sheweth himselfe to none but to miserable and afflicted sinners, which grone, labour, are loden, are hungry and thirsty, and pine away with sorrow and miserie: so must we endeuor toward repentance, throughout all our life applie it, and follow it to the ende, if we will abide in Christ. For he came to call sinners, but to repentance: he was sent to blesse the vnworthy, but so that euery one should turne himself from his wickednesse. The Scripture is full of such sayings. Wherefore when God offreth forgeuenesse of sinnes, he likewise vseth to require on our parte repentance, secretly declaring thereby, that his mercie ought to be to men a cause to repent them. Do (saith he) iudgement and righteousnesse, bycause saluation is come nere at hand. Againe. There shall come to Sion a Redemer, and to them that in Iacob repēt from their sinnes. Againe. Seke the Lord while he may be found: call vpon him while he is nere. Let the wicked leue his way and the wickednes of his thoughts, and be turned to the Lorde, and he shall haue mercy on him. Againe. Turne ye and repent, that your sinnes may be done away. Where yet is to be noted, that this condition is not so annexed as though our repentance were a foundation to deserue pardon, but rather (because the Lorde hath determined to haue mercy vpon men to this ende that they should repent) he teacheth men whither they shall trauaile if they will obteine grace. Therefore so long as we shall dwell in the prison of our body, we must continually wrastle with the vices of our corrupt flesh, yea with our owne naturall soule. Plato saith in certaine places, that the life of a Philosopher is a meditation of death, but we may more truely say, that the life of a Christian man is a perpetuall studie and exercise of mortifieng the flesh, till it being vtterly slaine, the Spirit of God get the dominion in vs. Therefore I thinke that he hath much profited, that hath learned much to mislike himselfe: not that he shoulde sticke fast in that mire and go no further, but rather that he should hast and long toward God, that being grafted into the death and life of Christ, he should studie vpon a continuall repentance: as truely they can not otherwise do, that haue a naturall hatred of sinne: for no man euer hated sinne, vnlesse he were first in loue with righteousnesse. This doctrine, as it was most simple of all other, so I thought it best to agree with the truth of the Scripture.

21 Now that Repentance is a singular gift of God, I thinke it be so wel knowen by the doctrine aboue taught, that I neede not to repete a long discourse to proue it againe. Therefore the Church praiseth and hath in admiration the benefit of God, that he hath geuen

And Paule commaunding Timothee to be patient and milde toward the vnbeleuers, ſaith: If at any time God geue them repentance that they may repent from the ſnares of the Deuell. God in deede affirmeth that he willeth the conuerſion of all men, and directeth his exhortatiõs generally to all men: but the effectuall working therof hangeth vpon the Spirit of regeneration. Becauſe it were more eaſy to create vs men, than of our owne Ephe. 2. 10. power to put on a better nature. Therefore in the whole courſe of regeneratiõ we are not without cauſe called, the worke of God created to good workes, which he hath prepared that we ſhould walke in them. Whom ſoeuer the lordes will is to deliuer from death, thoſe he quickeneth with the Spirite of regeneration: not that repentance is properly the cauſe of ſaluation, but bycauſe it is alredy ſeen that it is Eſa. 59. 20. vnſeparable from faith and from the mercie of God: ſith (as Eſaye teſtifieth) there is a redemer come to him, and to thoſe that in Iacob are returned from their wickedneſſe. This truely ſtandeth ſtedfaſtly determined, that where ſo euer liueth the feare of God, there the Eſa. 63. 17. Spirit hath wrought vnto the ſaluation of man. Therefore, in Eſaye, when the faithfull complaine and lament that they are forſaken of God, they recken this as a token of being reprobates, that their hearHeb. 6. 6. tes were hardened by God. The Apoſtle alſo meaning to exclude apoſtataes from hope of ſaluation, apointeth this reaſon, that it is impoſſible for them to be renewed vnto repentance: becauſe God in renewing them whom he will not haue periſh, ſheweth a token of his fatherly fauour, and in a manner draweth them vnto him with the beames of his cherefull and mery countenãce: on the other ſide with hardening them, he thundereth againſt the reprobate, whoſe wickedHeb. 10. 29. neſſe is vnpardonable. Which kinde of vengeance the Apoſtle threateneth to wilfull apoſtataes, which when they depart from the faith of the Goſpell, do make a ſcorne of God, reprochefully deſpiſe his grace, and defile and treade vnder feete the bloud of Chriſt, yea as much as in them is they crucifie him againe. For he doth not (as ſome fondly rigorous men would haue it) cut of hope of pardon from all wilfull ſinnes: but teacheth that apoſtaſie is vnworthy of all excuſe: ſo that it is no maruell that God doth puniſh a contempt of himſelf ſo Hebr. 6. 4. full of ſacrilege, with vnappeaſable rigour. For he ſaith that it is impoſſible, that they which haue once ben enlightened, haue taſted of the heauenly gift, haue ben made partakers of the holy Ghoſt, haue taſted of the good worde of God and the powers of the worlde to come, if they fall, ſhould be renewed to repentance, crucifying againe of new, and making a ſcorne of the ſonne of God. Againe in an other place: If (ſaith he) we willingly ſinne after knowledge of the truth receiued, there remaineth no more ſacrifice for ſinnes, but a certaine dreadfull expectation of iudgement, &c. Theſe alſo be the places, out of the wrong vnderſtanding whereof, the Nouatians in old time haue gathered matter to play the mad men: with whoſe rigorouſneſſe certaine good men being offended, beleued this to be a counterfait Epiſtle in the Apoſtles name, which yet in all partes doth truely ſauour of an Apoſtolike ſpirit. But bycauſe we contend with none but with them that allow it, it is eaſy to ſhew, how theſe ſentences do nothing mainteine their errour. Firſt it is neceſſarie that the Apoſtle agree with his maiſter, whiche affirmeth that all ſinne and blaſphemie ſhall be forgeuē, except the ſinne againſt the holy Ghoſt, which is not forgeuen neither in this world, nor in the world to come. It is certaine (I ſay) that the Apoſtle was contented with this exception, vnleſſe we will make him an aduerſary to the grace of Chriſt. Whereupon followeth, that pardon is denied to no ſpeciall offenſes, but onely to one, which proceding of a deſperate rage, can not be aſcribed to weakeneſſe, and openly ſheweth that a man is poſſeſſed of the Deuell. Heb. 10 25.

22 But to diſcuſſe this, it behoueth to enquire what is that ſame ſo horrible offenſe, that ſhall haue no forgeueneſſe. Whereas Auguſtine in one place defineth it an obſtinate ſtifneſſe euen vnto death, with deſpeire of pardō, that doth not well agree with the very wordes of Chriſt, that it ſhall not be forgeuen in this world. For either that is ſpoken in vaine, or it may be committed in this life. But if Auguſtines definitiō be true, then it is not committed, vnleſſe it continue euē vnto death. Whereas ſome other ſay, that he ſinneth againſt the holy Ghoſt, that enuieth the grace beſtowed vpon his brother: I ſee not from whenſe that is fetched. But let vs bring a true definitiō, which being ones proued with ſure teſtimonies, ſhall eaſily by it ſelfe ouerthrowe all the reſte. I ſay therefore, that they ſinne againſt the holy Ghoſt, which of ſet purpoſe reſiſt the truth of God, with brightneſſe whereof they are ſo daſeled, that they can not pretend ignorance: which they do onely to this ende to reſiſt. For Chriſt meaning to expounde that which he had ſaid, immediatly addeth: He that ſpeaketh a worde againſt the ſonne of man, it ſhalbe forgeuen him: but he that blaſphemeth againſt the holy Ghoſt, ſhall not be forgeuen. And Matthew, for the blaſphemie againſt the holy Spirit, putteth the ſpirit of blaſphemie. But how can a man ſpeake a reproche againſt the Sonne, but it is alſo ſpoken againſt the holy Ghoſt? They that ſtumble vnware againſt the truth of God, not knowing it, which Mat. 12. 32. Marc. 3. 29. Luc. 12. 10.

do ignorantly ſpeake euell of Chriſt, hauing yet this minde, that they would not extinguiſh the truth of God diſcloſed vnto them, or ones with one worde offend him, whome they had knowen to be the lordes anointed: theſe men ſinne againſt the father and the ſonne. So there are many at this day, that do moſt hatefully deteſt the doctrine of the Goſpell, which if they did know it to be the doctrine of the Goſpell, they would be redy to worſhip with all their heart. But they whoſe conſcience is conuinced, that it is the worde of God which they forſake and fight againſt, and yet ceſſe not to fight againſt it, they are ſaid to blaſpheme the holy Ghoſt: for aſmuch as they wraſtle againſt the enlightening that is the worke of the holy Ghoſt. Such were many of the Iewes, which when they could not reſiſt the Spirit that ſpake by Stephen, yet endeuored to reſiſt. It is no doubt but that many of them were carried vnto it with zele of the lawe, but it appereth that there were ſome other that of malicious wickedneſſe did rage againſt God himſelfe, that is to ſay againſt the doctrine, which they were not ignoraunt to be of God. And ſuch were thoſe Phariſees, againſt whome the Lord inueyeth, which to ouerthrow the power of the holy Ghoſt, defamed him with the name of Beelzebub. This therefore is the Spirit of blaſphemy, when mans boldneſſe of ſet purpoſe, leapeth forth to reproche of the name of God. Which Paule ſignifieth when he ſaith, that he obteined mercie, becauſe he had ignorantely cõmitted thoſe thinges through vnbelefe, for which otherwiſe he had bene vnworthy of Gods fauour. If ignorance ioined with vnbelefe was the cauſe that he obteined pardon, thereupon followeth, that there is no place for pardon, where knoweledge is ioined to vnbelefe.

Act.6. 10.

Matt.9. 34. and 12.24.

1.Tim. 1.13.

23 But if thou marke it well, thou ſhall perceiue that the Apoſtle ſpeaketh not of one or other particular fall, but of the vniuerſall departinge whereby the reprobate do forſake ſaluation. And it is no maruell, that they whom Iohn in his canonicall Epiſtle affirmeth not to haue bene of the elect, from whome they went out, do fele God vnappeaſable. For he directeth his ſpeach againſt thẽ, that imagined, that they might returne to the Chriſtian religion, although they had ones departed from it: and calling them from this falſe and peſtilent opinion, he ſaith that which is moſt true, that there is no way of returne open for them to the communion of Chriſt, that wittingly and willingly haue caſt it away: But they caſt it not away, that onely in diſſolute licentiouſneſſe of life tranſgreſſe the word of the Lord, but they that of ſet purpoſe caſt away his whole doctrine. Therefore the deceit is in theſe wordes of falling and ſinning. Becauſe the Nouatiãs

expound Falling to be, if a man being taught by the law of the Lorde, that he ought not to steale or to commit fornication, absteineth not from stealing or fornication. But contrariwise I affirme, that there is a secrete comparison of contraries, wherein ought to be repeted all thinges contrarie to that which was first spoken, so that here is expressed not any particular fault, but the whole turning away from God, and (as I may so call it) the Apostasie of the whole man. Therefore when he saith, they which haue fallen after that they haue ones bene enlightened, and haue tasted the heauenly gift, and bene made partakers of the holy Ghost, and also tasted the good worde of God and the powers of the worlde to come: it is to be vnderstanded of them, that with aduised vngodlinesse haue choked the light of the holy spirit, haue spit out againe the tast of the heauenly gift, haue enstranged themselues from the sanctification of the holy Ghost, haue troden vnder foote the worde of God and the powers of the worlde to come. And the more to expresse that aduised purpose of wickednesse, in an other place afterwarde he addeth this worde by name. Wilfully. For when he saith, that there is left no sacrifice for them that sinne willingly after knowledge of the truthe receiued, he doth not denie, that Christ is a continuall sacrifice to purge the iniquities of the holy ones (which he expresly crieth out almost in the whole Epistle, where he declareth the priesthoode of Christ) but he saith, that there remaineth no other when that is ones forsaken: and it is forsaken, when the truth of the Gospell is of set purpose renounced. Hebr.6. 4. Heb.10. 16.

24 But whereas some do thinke it to harde and to far from the tender merciefulnesse of God, that any are put away that flee to beseeching the Lords mercie: that is easily aunswered. For he doth not say, that pardon is denied them if they turne to the Lorde: but he vtterly denieth, that they can rise vnto repentance, bycause they are by the iuste iudgement of God striken with eternall blindnesse for their vnthankefulnesse. And it maketh nothing to the contrarie that afterward he applieth too this purpose the example of Esau, which in vaine attempted with howling & weping to recouer his right of the first begotten. And no more doth that threatening of the Prophet, when they crie, I will not heare. For in such phrases of speache is meante neither the true conuersion, nor calling vpon God, but that carefulnesse of ỹ wicked wherewith being bounde, they are cõpelled in extremity to loke vnto ỹ which before they carelesly neglected, that there is no good thing for thẽ but in ỹ Lords helpe. But this they do not so much call vpon, as they mourne that it is taken from them. Zach.7. 13.

Therefore the Prophet meaneth nothing els by Crying, and the Apoſtle nothing els by Weping, but that horrible torment which by deſperatiō fretteth & vexeth the wicked. This it is good to marke diligently: for els God ſhould diſagree with himſelfe, which crieth
Eze. 18. 21. by the Prophet that he will be mercifull ſo ſone as the ſinner turneth. And as I haue alredy ſaid, it is certaine that the minde of man is not turned to better, but by Gods grace preuenting it. Alſo his promiſe concerning calling vpon him, will neuer deceiue. But that blinde torment wherewith the reprobate are diuerſly drawen, when they ſee that they muſt needes ſeeke God, that they may finde remedie for their euels, and yet do flee from his preſence, is vnproperly called Conuerſion and prayer.

25 But a queſtion is moued, whereas the Apoſtle denieth that
1. Reg. 28. 29. God is appeaſed with fained repentance, how Achab obteined pardon and turned away the puniſhment pronounced vpon him, whom yet it appereth by the reſte of the courſe of his life to haue bene onely ſtriken amaſed with ſodeine feare. He did in deede put on ſacke cloth, ſcattered aſhes vpon him, lay vpon the ground, and (as it is teſtified of him) he was humbled before God: but it was not enough to cut his garmentes when his heart remained thicke & ſwollen with malice. Yet we ſee howe God is turned to mercy. I anſwere that ſo ſomtimes hypocrites are ſpared for a time, but yet ſo that euer the wrath of God lieth vpon them, and that is done not ſo much for their ſakes, as for common example. For whereas Achab had his puniſhmēt mitigate vnto him, what profit got he thereby, but that he ſhould not fele it a liue in earth? Therefore the courſe of God, although it were hidden, yet had a faſt abiding place in his houſe, and he himſelf went
Gen. 27 18. into eternall deſtruction. This ſame is to be ſeene in Eſau. For though he had a repulſe, yet a temporell bleſſing was graunted him at his weping. But bycauſe the ſpirituall inheritance, by the oracle of God could not reſt but with one of the brethren, when Iacob was choſen and Eſau refuſed, that putting away did exclude the mercie of God: this comfort was left him as to a beaſtly man, that he ſhoulde be fat with the fat of the earth and the deaw of heauen. And this is it that I ſaid euen nowe, that it ought to be referred to the example of other, that we ſhould learne the more cherefully to applie our mindes and endeuours to repentance, bycauſe it is not to be doubted that when we are truely and hartily turned, God will be ready to forgeue vs, whoſe mercifulneſſe extendeth it ſelfe euen to the vnworthy, ſo longe as they ſhew any griefe at all. And therwithal we be alſo taught, how terrible iudgement is prepared for all the obſtinate, which now make it a sport with no lesse shameleſſe face than iron heart to despise and set nought by the threateninges of God. After his manner he oftentimes reached out his hand to the children of Israell, to releue their miseries, although their cries were counterfait, and their heart double and false, as himselfe in the Psalme complaineth, that they by and by returned to their nature, and so minded with so frendly gentle dealing to bring then to earnest conuersion, or to make them vnexcusable. Yet in releasing punishmentes for a time, he doth not binde himselfe to a perpetuall lawe thereby, but rather riseth somtimes more rigorously against Hypocrites, and doubleth their peines, that thereby may appere howe much faining displeaseth him. But (as I haue said) he sheweth some examples of his redinesse to geue pardon, by which the godly may be encouraged to amendement of life, and their pride may be the more greuously condemned, that stubbornely kick against the pricke. Psal. 78 36.

The iiij. Chapter.

That all that the Sophisters babble in their scholes of Penance, is far from the pureneſſe of the Gospell. VVhere is entreated of Confession and Satisfaction.

NOw I come to discusse those things, which the Schole Sophisters haue taught of repentance. Which I will run ouer in as few words as may be, bycause I minde not to go through all, least this boke, whiche I labour to drawe into a short abridgment, should growe to a huge greatnesse. And the Sophisters haue entangled it in so many volumes, being a matter otherwise not very hard, that a man shall hardly finde how to get out, if he ones fall into their dregges. First, in defining it, they shew that they neuer vnderstode what repentance was. For they take hold of certaine sayings of the olde writers, which do nothing at all expresse that nature of repentance, as that to repent is to wepe for sinnes passed, and not to commit sinnes to be wept for: Againe, that it is to lament euels passed, and not to commit againe other euels to be lamented. Againe: that it is a certaine sorowfull reuēge, punishing in himselfe that which he is sory to haue committed. Againe: that it is a sorrow of heart, and bitternesse of soule, for the euels that a man hath committed or to which he hath consented. But, to graunt these thinges well saide of the fathers, (which a contentious man might easily enough denie) yet they were not spoken to this entent to describe repentance, but onely to exhort them to whom they wrote, that they should not fall againe into the same offenses, out of which they had ben drawen. But if we list to turne all such titles of commendation into definitions, then other may also be adioined as rightfully as they. As this of Chrysostome, Repentance is a medicine that destroyeth sinne, a gift geuen from heauen, a maruellous vertue, a grace surmounting the force of the law. Yea and the doctrine which they after ward teach, is somwhat worse than these definitions. For they sticke so earnestly in outward exercises, that a manne can gather nothinge els out of infinite volumes, but that repentance is a discipline and rigorousnesse that serueth partly to tame the flesh, and partly to chastise and punish vices: but they kepe maruellous silence of the inward renewing of the minde that draweth with it correction of life. There is in dede much talke among them of Contrition and Attrition, they torment soules with many doubtes, & do thrust into them much trouble and carefulnesse: but when they seeme to haue throughly wounded the heartes, they heale the bitternesse with a light sprinkeling of ceremonies. And when they haue thus curiously defined repẽtance, they diuide it into contrition of hearte, confession of mouth, and satisfaction of worke, no more logically than they defined it, although they wolde seeme to haue wasted all their age in framinge of syllogismes. But if a man will go about to proue by the definition (which kinde of argument is of force among logicians) that a man may wepe for his sinnes passed, and commit no more to be wept for, that he may bewaile his euels passed, and commit no more to be bewailed, and that he may punish himself for that which he was sory to haue committed. &c. although he do not confesse with his mouth: howe will they maintaine their diuision? For if that true penitent man do not confesse, then repentance may be without confession. But if they answer, that this diuision is referred to repentance, in respect that it is a sacrament, or is meant of the whole perfection of repentance, which they comprehend not in their definitions, thẽ is there no cause to blame me, but let them lay the fault in themselues that make not a purer and plainer definition, I truely (according to my grossnesse) when any thing is disputed of, do referre all things to the very definition, which is the stay and grounde of the whole disputation. But admitte that to be their masterlike licence. Now let vs particularly consider all the partes in ordre. Wheras I do negligently leape ouer as trifles those things that they with great grauitie of countenance do publish for misteries, I do it not vnwittingely, neither were it very paineful for me to cõfute al that they thinke thẽselues to haue depely and suttlely disputed) but I woulde thinke it against conscience to wery the readers with such trifles without any profit. Truely it is easy to know by the questiõs which they moue and tosse, and wherewith they miserably encomber themselues, that they prate of things that they know not. As for example: whether the repentance of our sinne pleaseth God, when obstinacie endureth in other. Againe: whether the punishmentes layed vpon man by God, do auaile to satisfaction. Againe: whether repentance may be oftentimes reiterate for deadly sinnes: where they fowly and wickedly define, that penaunce is daily done but for veniall sinnes. Likewise they very much torment themselues with a grosse errour, vpon the sayinge of Hierome, that repentance is a second bourde after shipwracke. Wherin they shewe that they neuer waked from their brutish dulnesse, to feele so much as a farre of the thousandth part of their faultes.

2 But I wold the readers should note, that here is not a quarel about the shadow of an asse, but the most earnest matter of all other is entreated of, that is to say, forgeueneſſe of sinnes. For wheras they require three things to repentance, contrition of heart, confession of mouth, and satisfaction of worke: they do therwithall teach that those three things are necessarie to the obteining of forgeuenes of sinnes. But if it behoue vs to knowe any thinge at all in all oure religion, this truely behoueth vs most of all, I meane to vnderstand and knowe well by what meane, with what lawe, vpon what condition, with what easinesse or hardnesse the forgeueneſſe of sinnes is obtained. If this knowledge stande not plaine and certaine, the cõscience can haue no rest at all, no peace with God, no confidence or assurednesse, but continually trembleth, wauereth, is troubled, is tormented, is vexed, horribly dreadeth, hateth and fleeth the sight of God. But if the forgeueneſſe of sinnes hang vpon those conditions to which they do binde it, then nothing is more miserable, nothing in more lamentable case than we. They make Contrition the first parte of obteining pardon, and they require that to be a due contrition, that is to say perfect and full: but in the meane time they do not determine when a man may be assured, that he hath to the full measure perfectly perfourmed this contrition. Truely I graunt that euery man ought diligently and earnestly to enforce himselfe, with bitterly weping for his sinnes, to whet himselfe more and more to a lothing and hatred of them. For this is a sorrowe not to be repented, that breedeth repentance vnto saluation. But when there is such a bitternesse of sorrowe required as may proportionally aunswer the greatnesse of the fault, and such as may in balaunce counterpaise with the trust of pardon, here the pure consciences are maruellously tormented and troubled, when they see them selues chaunged with a due contrition of ſinnes, and do not ſo atteine the meaſure of that due, that they can determine with them ſelues, that they haue duely performed ſo much as they duely oughte. If they ſay that we muſt do as much as lieth in vs, then come we ſtill to the ſame pointe that we were at before: for how dare any manne aſſure himſelfe that he hath employed all his force to bewaile his ſinnes? So when the conſciences hauinge longe wraſtled with them ſelues, and longe bene exerciſed with battailes, do at length finde no heauen to reſt in, yet ſomewhat to eaſe them ſelues, they enforce them ſelues to a ſorrowe, and wringe out teares to make perfect their contrition.

3 But if they ſay that I ſlaundre them: Let them come forth and ſhewe any one man, that by ſuch doctrine of contrition hath not either bene driuen to deſpeire, or hath not ſet for his defenſe a counterfaitng of ſorrowe in ſteede of true ſorrowe, againſt the iudgement of God. We haue alſo our ſelues ſaid in one place, that forgeueneſſe of ſinnes neuer commeth without repentance, bycauſe none but the afflicted and wounded with conſcience of ſinnes, can ſincerely call vpon the mercie of God: but we haue therewithall further ſaid, that repentance is not the cauſe of the forgeueneſſe of ſinnes. As for thoſe tormentes of ſoules, which they ſay muſt be perfourmed of duetie, we haue taken them away: we haue taught the ſinner not to loke vpon his owne contrition nor his owne teares, but to faſten both his eyes vpon the onely mercie of God. We haue onely put him in minde that Chriſt called the laboring and loden, when he was ſent to publiſh glad tidings to the poore, to heale the contrite in heart, to preach remiſſion to captiues, to deliuer priſonners, and to comforte them that mourne. From which ſhoulde be excluded both the Phariſes, that filled with their owne righteouſneſſe, do not acknowledge their owne pouertie, and alſo the deſpiſers that careleſſe of Gods wrath do ſeke no remedy for their euels. For ſuch do not labour, nor are loden, nor contrite in heart, nor bounde nor captiue. But there is great difference betweene teaching a man to deſerue forgeueneſſe of ſinnes with due and full contrition, which the ſinner can neuer perfourme: and inſtructing him to hunger and thirſt for the mercie of God, that by the acknowledging of his owne miſerie, by his owne vnquietneſſe, wearineſſe and captiuitie, it may be ſhewed him, where he ought to ſeeke for releeſe, reſt and libertie: and finally, he may be taught in the humbling of himſelfe, to geue glorie to God.

Mat. 11. 18. Eſa. 61. Luc. 4. 18.

4 Concerning Cõfeſſion, there hath bene alway great ſtrife betwene the Canoniſtes & Scholediuines: while the one ſorte affirme, that confeſſion is cõmaunded by the ſpeciall cõmaundement of God, and the other sorte deny it and say, that it is commaunded onely by the Ecclesiasticall constitutions. But in this contention hath appeared the notable shamelesnes of the diuines, that haue corrupted and violently wrasted as many places of Scripture, as they alleaged for their purpose. And when they saw that they coulde not so obtaine that which they required, they which would be thought more suttle than the rest escaped away with this shift, that confession came from the law of God, in respect of the substance of it, but afterward receiued forme of the law Positiue. Euen as the foolisheſt sorte amonge the lawyers do say, that Citations came from the law of God, because it is said: Adam where art thou? And likewise Exceptions, because Adam answered as it were by way of exception sayinge: The wife that thou gauest me. &c. but that both citations and exceptions receiued forme giuen them by the Ciuile lawe. But let vs see by what argumentes they proue this confession, either Formed or Vnformed to be the commaundement of God. The Lord (say they) sent the leprous men to the priestes. But what? Sent he thē to confession? Who euer heard it spoken, that the Leuiticall priestes were appointed to heare confessions? Therefore they flie to Allegories, and say: It was commaunded by the law of Moses, that the priestes should discerne betwene leprosie and leprosie: sinne is a spirituall leprosie: therefore it is the priestes office to pronounce vpon it. Before that I aunswere them, I aske this by the way, If this place make thē iudges of the spirituall leprosie, why do they draw to thē the knowledge of naturall and fleshly leprosie? This forsooth is not to mocke with the Scriptures. The law giueth to the Leuiticall priestes the knowledge of Leprosie, therfore let vs take it vpō vs. Sinne is a spirituall leprosie, therfore let vs also be examiners of sinne. Now I answere: sith the priesthoode is remoued, it is necessary that the law be remoued also. All priesthoodes are remoued to Christ, and fulfilled and ended in him, therefore to him onely all the right and honor of priesthoode is also remoued. If they loue so well to follow allegories, let them set Christ before them for the only priest, and heape vpon his iudgemen: seate the free iurisdiction of all things: this we can easily be cōtent to suffer. Moreouer their allegorie is very vnfit, that setteth among the ceremonies that lawe which is merely politike. Why then did Christ sende the leprous men to the priestes? That the priestes shoulde not cauill that he did breake the law that commaunded the man healed of the leprosie, to be shewed before the priest and purged with offering of sacrifice: therefore he commaunded the leprous men beinge cleansed, to do that which belonged to the law. Go (sayth he) and ſhew your ſelues to the prieſt, and offer the gift that Moſes hath commaunded in the law that it ſhoulde be for a witneſſe vnto them. And truely this miracle ſhoulde haue bin a witneſſe vnto them, for they had pronounced them leprous, and now they pronounce them healed. Are they not whether they will or no compelled to become witneſſes of Chriſtes miracles? Chriſt leaueth to them his miracle to be examined, they can not deny it. But becauſe they ſtill dally with it, therefore this worke is for a witneſſe vnto them. So in an other place: This Goſpell ſhalbe preached in all the world, for a witnes to all nations. Againe: Ye ſhalbe led before kings and gouernours, for a witneſſe to them, that is: that in the iudgement of God they may be more ſtrongly conuinced. But if they had rather folow Chriſoſtome: he alſo teacheth that Chriſt did this for ỹ Iewes ſake, that he ſhould not be accompted a breaker of the law. Albeit in ſo cleare a matter I am aſhamed to alleage the witneſſe of any man: wheras Chriſt pronounceth that he leaueth the right of the lawe whole to the prieſtes as to the profeſſed enemies of the Goſpell, which were alway bent to carpe againſt it, if their mouth had not bin ſtopped. Wherefore that the popiſh ſacrificing prieſtes may ſtill keepe this poſſeſſion, let them openly take partes with them which muſt of neceſſity be reſtrained by force, that they ſpeake not ill againſt Chriſt. For this nothinge belongeth to his true miniſters.

and

Hom.12 de muliere Chananæa.

5 They bring their ſecond argument out of the ſame fountaine, that is from an allegorie, as though allegories were of great force to confirme any doctrin. But let them be of force, if I do not proue that I can make a fairer ſhew of thē for my ſide, than they can for theirs. They ſay, The Lord commaunded his Diſciples, that when Lazarus was raiſed vp, they ſhould vnbinde and looſe him from his bondes. Here firſt they lie: for it is no where read that the Lord ſaid this to the Diſciples: and it is much more likely that he ſayd it to the Iewes that ſtoode by him, that the miracle might be made the more euidēt without ſuſpicion of fraude, and his power appeare the greater, that without any touching, with his only word he raiſed vp dead men. For thus I expounde it: that the Lord, to take away all wrongfull opinion frō the Iewes, willed them to rolle away the ſtone, to feele the ſtinke, to behold aſſured tokens of death, to ſee him riſing by the only power of his worde, and them firſt to feele him liuinge. And this is the iudgement of Chryſoſtome. But let vs graunt that this was ſpoken to the Diſciples: what will they get therby? That the Lord gaue his Apoſtles power to looſe. But how much more fitly and more handſomly might theſe thinges be applied by way of allegorie, to ſay that by this

Ioh. 11. 44.

this signe the lord meant to instruct his faithfull, to loose them that he had raised vp: that is, that they should not call into remembrance those sinnes that he had forgotten: that they should not condemne thē for sinners whom he had acquited: that they should not reproch men with those things that he had forgiuen: that they should not be rigorous to punish, and lightly offended, where he is mercifull and easily entreated to spare? Truely nothing ought to moue vs more to readinesse to forgiue, than the example of the Iudge that threatneth that he will be vnappeasable to them that be too rigorous & vngentle. Now let them go and boast of their allegories.

6 But now they ioyne more neere hande with vs, when they fight (as they thinke) with open sentences. They that came to Iohns baptisme, did confesse their sinnes, & Iames willeth that we confesse our sinnes one to an other. No maruell if they that wold be baptised did confesse their sinnes, for it was sayd before that Iohn preached the baptisme of repētance, & baptised in water vnto repentance. Whom should he then haue baptized, but them that had confessed themselues sinners? Baptisme is a token of the forgiueness of sinnes: and who should be admitted to this tokē but sinners, & they that acknowledge thēselues to be such? Therfore they cōfessed their sinnes, that they might be baptised. And not without a cause doth Iames bid vs confesse one to an other. But if they did marke what followeth next after, they would vnderstand, that this also maketh litle for thē. Confesse (saith he) one to an other your sinnes, & pray one for an other. He ioyneth together mutuall confession & mutual praier. If we must confesse to priestes only, thē must we also pray for priestes only. Yea, What and if it might folow of the words of Iames that only priestes might confesse? for when he willeth that we should confesse one to an other, he speaketh only to them that may heare the confessions of other: his word is in Greke Allelous, mutually, interchaungeably, by turnes, or (if they so like best to tearme it) by way of reciprocatiō one to an other. But so interchāgeably none can cōfesse, but they that are mete to heare cōfessions. Which prerogatiue sith they vouchsaue to graunt only to priestes, we do also put ouer the office of confessing to them only. Therfore away with such trifelings, & let vs take the very meaning of the Apostle which is simple & plaine: that is, ỹ we should lay our weakenes one in an others bosome to receiue mutual counsel, mutual cōpassion & mutual comfort one of an other: then that we being naturally priuie to ỹ weakenesses of our brethren, should pray for thē to ỹ Lord. Why do they then alleage Iames against vs, which do so earnestly require ỹ cōfession of the mercy of God? but no man

Gala. 3. 22. Ro. 3.9. can confesse Gods mercy, vnlesse he haue first confessed his owne misery. Yea we rather pronounce him accursed that doth not before God, before his Angels, before the Church, yea and before all men confesse himselfe a sinner. For the Lorde hath concluded all vnder sinnes that all mouthes might be stopped, and all flesh humbled before God, and he only iustified and exalted.

7 But I maruell with what face they dare affirme, that the confession whereof they speake, is of the lawe of God: the vse whereof we graunt in dede to be very auncient, but such as we are able to proue in old time to haue bin at liberty. Truely euen their owne cronacles declare, that there was no certaine lawe or constitution of it before the times of Innocent the third. Surely if they had had a more auncient law, they woulde rather haue taken hold thereof, than haue bin contented with the decree of the counsell of Laterane, and so made themselues to be laughed at, euen of children. In other things they sticke not to make forged decrees, which they father vpon the most auncient Counsells, that they may with very reuerence of antiquity dasell the eyes of the simple. In this point, it came not in their minde to thrust in such a false packe. Therfore by their owne witnesse, there are not yet passed three hundred yeres since Innocent the third laid that snare vpon men, and charged them with necessity of Confessiō. But, to speake nothinge of the time: the very barbarousnesse of the wordes minisheth the credit of that lawe. For where these good fathers commaunde euery one of both kindes, male and female, once euery yeare to confesse all his sinnes to his owne priest, pleasant men do merily take exception, that in this commaundement are contained only Hermaphrodites, & say that it belongeth not to such a one as is either male or female only. Since that time, a more gtosse beastlines hath bewrayed it selfe in their scholers, that can not expound what is meant By his owne priest. Whatsoeuer all the Popes hyred bablers do prate, we hold both that Christ was neuer the author of this law that compelleth men to recken vp their sinnes, and also that there passed a thousande and two hundred yeares from the resurrection of Christ before that any such law was made. And so, that this tyranny was then first brought in, when all godlinesse & learning being destroied, the visiors of Pastors had without choise taken all licentiousnesse vpon them. Moreouer there are euident testimonies both in histories and other auncient writers, which teach that this confession was a politicke discipline redeemed by the Bishops, not a lawe made by Christ or his Apostles. I will alleage but one out of many, which shall be a plaine proufe thereof. Sozomenus reporteth that this constitution of bishops was diligently kept in all the west Churches, but specially at Rome. Wherby he sheweth that it was no vniuersall ordinance of all Churches. But he saith that there was one of the priestes peculiarly apointed to serue for this office. Whereby he doth sufficiently confute that which these men do falsely say of the keyes giuen for this vse vniuersally to the whole order of priesthoode. For it was not the common office of all priestes, but the speciall duety of some one that was chosen therunto by the bishop. The same is he, whom at this day in all cathedrall Churches they call Penitentiarie, the examiner of haynous offenses, and such whereof the punishment pertaineth to good example. Then he saith immediatly after, that this was also the manner at Constantinople, till a certaine woman fayninge that she came to confession, was founde so to haue coloured vnder that pretence the vnhonest company that she vsed with a certaine Deacon. For this act, Nectarius a man notable in holinesse and learninge, bishop of that Church, tooke away that custome of confessinge. Here, here let these asses lift vp their eares. If auricular confession were the law of God, how durst Nectarius repelle and destroy it? Will they accuse for an heretike and schismatike Nectarius a holy man of God, allowed by the consenting voices of all the olde fathers? But by the same sentence they must condemne the Church of Constantinople, in which Sozomenus affirmeth that the maner of confessing was not onely let slip for a time, but also discontinued euen till within time of his remembrance. Yea let them condemne of apostasie not onely the Church of Constantinople, but also all the east Churches which haue neglected that law, which (if they say true) is inuiolable & commaunded to all Christians.

8 This abrogation Chrysostome, which was also bishop of Constantinople, doth in so many places euidently testifie, that it is maruel that these dare mutter to the contrary. Tell (sayth he) thy sinnes that thou maiest do thē away, if thou be ashamed to tel any man the sinnes that thou hast done, tell them daily in thy soule. I do not say, Confesse them to thy fellow seruant, that may reproch thee: tell them to God that taketh care of them. Confesse thy sinnes vpon thy bed, that there thy conscience may daily recognise her euills. Againe. But now it is not necessary to confesse when witnesses be present: let the examination of thy sinnes be done with thy thought: let this iudgement be without witnes: let only God see thee confessing. Againe. I do not lead thee into a stage of thy fellow seruants, I do not cōpel thee to disclose thy sinnes to men, rehearse and vtter thy conscience before God. Shew thy woundes to the Lord the best surgeon, & aske salue of him.

Homi. 4 de Lazaro. Shew to him that will reproch thee with nothing, but will moſt gently heale thee. Againe. Tel not man, leaſt he reproch thee, for neither is it to be confeſſed to thy fellow ſeruant, that may vtter it abroade, but to the Lord. To the Lord ſhew thy woundes which hath care of thee, that is both gentle & a Phiſition. Afterward he bringeth in God ſpeaking thus: I compel thee not to come into the mids of a ſtage, & call many witneſſes, tell thy ſinne to me alone priuatly, ỹ I may heale thy ſore. Shall we ſay that Chryſoſtome did ſo raſhly, when he wrote this and other like thinges, that he would deliuer mens conſciences from theſe bonds wherewith they be bound by ỹ law of God? not ſo. But he dare not require that as of neceſſity, which he doth not vnderſtand to be commaunded by the word of God.

9 But that the matter may be made the plainer and eaſier, firſt we will faithfully rehearſe, what kinde of cõfeſſion is taught by the word of God: and then we wil alſo declare their inuentions, but not all (for who could draw drie ſuch an infinite ſea?) but only thoſe wherin they comprehend the ſome of their ſecret cõfeſſion. Here I am loth to rehearſe how oft the old tranſlatour hath giuen in tranſlation this word Confeſſe in ſtede of Praiſe: which the groſſeſt vnlearned men commonly know: ſauing that it is good to haue their preſumptuouſneſſe bewraied, that do giue away that which was wrytten of the praiſes of God, to their owne tyrannicall commaundement. To proue that cõfeſſion auaileth to cheare the mindes they thruſt in that place of the Pſalme: In the voice of reioiſing & cõfeſſion. But if ſuch change may ſerue, then we ſhall haue what we liſt, proued by what we liſt. But ſeing they are ſo become paſt ſhame, let the godly readers remember that by the iuſt vengeãce of God they haue bin caſt into a reprobate minde, that their preſumption ſhould be ỹ more deteſtable. But if we will reſt in the ſimple doctrine of the Scripture, we ſhall not be in danger of any ſuch deceites to beguile vs. For therin is apointed one order of confeſſinge, that foraſmuch as it is the Lord that forgiueth, forgetteth, and putteth away ſinnes, therefore we ſhould confeſſe our ſinnes to him for to obtaine pardon, he is the Phiſician, therfore let vs ſhew our diſeaſes vnto him. It is he that is grieued & offẽded, therfore let vs ſeke peace at his hand. He is the knower of heartes, & priuie to all thoughtes, therfore let vs make haſt to poure out our hearts before him. Finally it is he that calleth ſinners, therfore let vs not delay to come to him. I haue (ſaith Dauid) made my ſinne knowen vnto thee, & haue not hidde my vnrighteouſnes. I haue ſaid, I wil confeſſe againſt me my vnrighteouſnes to the Lord, & thou haſt forgiuẽ the wickednes of my heart. Such is the other confeſſion of Dauid. Haue euen to him: that is, if we fal downe with a troubled & humbled heart before him, if heartily accusing & condemning our selues before him we pray to be acquited by his goodnes and mercy.

10 He that hartily and before God shall embrace this confession, shal vndoutedly haue both a tongue ready to cõfesse, so oft as it shalbe nedefull for him to publish ỹ mercy of God before mẽ, & not only to whisper the secret of his heart to one man, & once & in his eare: but oft and openly, and in the hearing of all the world simply to rehearse both his owne shame and the magnificence & glory of God. and man. I haue (saith he) sinned to the Lorde, that is to say, now I alleage nothing for my excuse, I vse no shiftes, but that all men may iudge me a sinner, and that the same thing which I would haue had secret frõ the Lord, may be also open to men. Therfore a willing confession before men alway soloweth the secret cõfession that is made to God, so oft as it is profitable for ỹ glory of God or for ỹ humbling of our selues. For this reason the Lord in old time ordained in ỹ peo- Leu.16.

saying after him should openly cõfesse their iniquity in ỹ church. For he foresaw ỹ this help was necessary for thẽ that euery man might be the better brought to a iust reknowledging of himselfe. And mete it is ỹ with ỹ confessiõ of our owne miserywe should among our selues, & before all the world glorifie the goodnesse & mercy of our God.

11 And it is conuenient ỹ this kinde of confessiõ be both ordinary in the church, and also extraordinarily vsed in speciall maner, if it happen at any time the people to be gilty of any generall fault. Of this second kinde we haue an example in ỹ solemne confession which all the people vsed by the meanes & guiding of Esdras and of Nehemias. For where as that long banishment, the destruction of the City Neh.1.

mon reuolting of them all: they could not acknowledge the benefit of deliuerance in such sort as was mete, vnlesse they did first condemne themselues. Neither maketh it matter, if in a whole Congregation ſome few ſometime be innocent. For ſith they be the members of a feeble and diſeaſed body, they ought not to boaſt of healthfulneſſe. Yea it is not poſſible but they muſt alſo thẽſelues gather ſome infection and beare part of the blame. Therefore ſo oft as we be afflicted, either with peſtilence or warre, or barenneſſe or any other plague: if it be our duety to flie to mourning, to faſting and to other ſignes of giltineſſe: then confeſſion it ſelfe, wherupon all theſe things do hang, is not to be neglected. As for the ordinary cõfeſſion, beſide that it is commended by the Lordes owne mouth, there is no wiſeman that conſidering the profit thereof, dare diſallow it. For where as in all holy aſſemblies we make our apparaunce in the ſight of God and the Angels: what other beginning may there be of our pleading, but our reknowledging of vnworthineſſe? But ẏ (ſome man will ſay) is done by euery prayer. For ſo oft as we pray for pardon, we therby confeſſe our ſinnes. I graunt. But if you conſider how great is our careleſneſſe, or drouſineſſe, or ſluggiſhneſſe, you will graunt me that it ſhoulde be a profitable ordinance, if by ſome ſolemne vſe of confeſſion, the Chriſtian common people ſhoulde be exerciſed to humbling themſelues. For though the ceremonie that the Lord commaunded the Iſraelites, was parcel of the nurture of the law, yet in ſome maner it alſo belongeth to vs. And truely we ſee that this vſe is in well ordered churches profitably obſerued, that euery Sonday the miniſter ſhould rehearſe a forme of confeſſion in the name of himſelfe and of all the people, wherein he accuſeth all of wickednes, and craueth pardon of the Lord. Finally with this keye the gate to prayer is opened as well priuatly to euery man, as vniuerſally to all men.

12 Moreouer the Scripture alloweth two formes of priuate confeſſion, one that is made for our owne ſake, whereof that ſayinge of Iames is ſpoken, that we ſhould confeſſe our ſinnes one to an other, for his meaning is, that diſcloſing our wickedneſſes one to an other, we ſhould one help an other with mutuall counſell and comfort. The other forme, that is to be vſed for our neighbours ſake, to appeaſe him & reconcile him vnto vs, if he haue in any thing bin offended by vs. Now in the firſt kinde of confeſſion, although Iames in this hath aſſigned no man by name, into whoſe boſome we ſhoulde vnlode our ſelues, leaueth vs a free choiſe, to confeſſe to him that ſhall ſeeme meeteſt vnto vs of all the flocke of the church: yet we ought principally to choſe the Paſtors, becauſe they are for the moſt part in compariſon of the other to be iudged meeteſt. I ſay that they are meeteſt in compariſon of the reſt, becauſe the Lorde appointeth them by the very calling of their miniſtery, at whoſe mouth we ſhoulde be inſtru-

cted to subdue and correct our sinnes, and also may receiue comfort by trust of pardon. For as the office of mutuall admonishment & reprouinge is committed to all men, yet it is specially enioyned to the ministers. So when as we all ought to comfort and confirme one an other in confidence of Gods mercy: yet we see that the ministers, to assure our consciences of the forgiuenesse of sinnes, are ordayned as it were witnesses and pledges thereof, in so much that they be sayd to forgiue sinnes and loose soules. When thou hearest this to be ascribed vnto them, thinke that it is for thy profit. Therefore let euery one of the faithfull remember this to be his duety, if he be priuately so vexed and troubled with the feelinge of sinnes that he can not winde out himselfe without help of an other, not to neglect the remedy that the Lord hath offered him: that is, for his relefe to vse the priuate confession to his owne Pastor: and for his comfort to craue the priuate help of him, whose duety it is both publiquely and priuately to comfort the people of God with the doctrine of the Gospell. But alway this moderation is to be vsed, where God appointeth no certainetie, not to binde consciences with a certayne yoke. Hereupon followeth that such Confession ought to be free: not to be required of all men, but to be commended to those onely that shall vnderstand themselues to haue nede of it. Then that euen they that vse it for their nede, should not be compelled by any commaundement, or trayned by any deceite, to recken vp all their sinnes, but so farre as they shall thinke it behoueful for them, that they may receiue sound frute of comfort. Faithfull Pastors ought not only to leaue this liberty to the churches, but also to maintaine it, & stoutly stand in defence of it, if they will haue tyranny absent from their ministery and superstition from the people. Mar. 18. Iohn. 3. 23.

13 Of the other sorte of confession Christ speaketh in Matthew. If thou offer thy gift at the altar, & there remembrest that thy brother hath any thing against thee, leaue thy gift there, & go, & first be reconciled to thy brother, & then come and offer thy gift. For so charity that hath bin appaired by our fault, is to be repaired by acknowledging & craving pardon of the offence that we haue committed. Vnder this kinde is contained their confession that haue sinned euen to the offending of the whole church. For if Christ maketh so great a matter of the priuate offence of one mã, to forbid from holy misteries all them that haue sinned against their brother, till they be with iust amendes reconciled: how much greater reason is it, that he that hath offended the church with any euill example, should recouer the fauour of the church with acknowledging his fault? So was the Corin- Matt. 5. 23. 2. Cor. 2. 6.

thian receiued againe to the communion, when he had yelded himselfe obedient to correction. Also this forme of confession was vsed in ỹ old church, as Ciprian maketh mention. They do penance (saith he) in due time, & then they come to confession, and by laying on of the handes of the bishop & the Clergy, they receiue leaue to come to the cõmunion. Any other order or forme of cõfessing, the Scripture vtterly knoweth not, & it is not our duety to binde consciences with new bonds, whom Christ most sharply forbiddeth vs to bring in bõdage. In the meane time I do so much not speake against it that the shepe should present themselues to their shepeherd whẽ they meane to be partakers of the holy supper, that I would most gladly haue it euery where obserued. For both they that haue an encombred conscience, may from thence receiue singular profit, & they that are to be admonished do by that meane prepare place for admonishment, but so alway that tyranny and superstition be away.

14 In these three kindes of confession, the power of ỹ keies hath place: that is, either when the whole church with solemne reknowledging of their faultes craueth pardon: or when a priuate man, that by any notable fault hath bred cõmon offence, doth declare his repentance: or when he that for the vnquietnes of his conscience, doth nede help of ỹ minister discloseth his weakenes vnto him. But there are diuerse ways of taking away offence, because although thereby also the peace of conscience is prouided for, yet the principal end is, that hatred should be takẽ away, & mens mindes knit together with a bond of peace. But this vse that I haue spoken of, is not to be despised, that we may the more willingly cõfesse our sinnes. For when the whole church standeth as it were before the iudgemẽt seate of God, confesseth it selfe gilty, and hath one only refuge vnto the mercy of God: it is no slender or light comfort to haue there present Christs embassadour, hauing cõmaundemẽt of reconciliatiõ, of whom it may heare absolution pronounced vnto it. Here the profitablenes of the keies is worthily cõmended, whẽ this embassage is performed rightly, & with such order & religiousnes as beseemeth it. Likewise when he that had in a maner estranged himselfe from the Church, receiueth pardon & is restored into brotherly vnity: how great a benefite is it that he vnderstandeth himselfe to be forgiuẽ by thẽ, to whom Christ hath sayd: To whom soeuer ye forgiue sinnes in earth, they shal be forgiuen in heauen. And of no lesse effectualnes & profit is priuate absolutiõ, when it is asked by them that haue neede of speciall remedy to relieue their weakenes. For it happeneth oftẽtimes, that he which heareth the generall promises that are directed to ỹ whole congregation of the faithful, remaineth neuertheles in some dout, & hath stil an vnquiet minde, as though he had not yet obtained pardon: & the same mā, if he haue disclosed to his person ỹ secret sore of his mind, & heareth peculiarly directed to himselfe that saying of the Gospel, Thy sinnes are forgiuē thee, be of good hope, stablisheth his minde vnto assurednes & is deliuered frō that trembling, wherewith he was before tormented. But when we speake of the keyes, we must take hede that we dreame not of a certaine power seuered from the preaching of ỹ Gospel. In an other place we shal haue occasion more fully to declare this matter again, where we shal entreat of the gouernment of the church: & there shall we see that all the power to binde & to loose, which Christ hath giuen to his church, is bound to the worde. But this is most true in the ministery of the keyes, the whole force wherof standeth in this, ỹ the grace of the Gospel be publikely & priuatly sealed vp in the heartes of the faithful, by them whom the Lord hath ordained: which can not be done but by only preaching. Mat. 9. 2.

15 But what say the Romish diuines? They decree that euery one of either kinde, so soone as they come to the yeres of discretiō, must yearely once at the least confesse all their sinnes to their owne priest: & that their sinne is not forgiuen, vnlesse they haue firmely conceiued an entent to confesse it: which intent if they performe not when occasion is offred that they may do it, there is now no more entry open for thē into Paradise. And that the priest hath the power of the keies, wherwith he may loose & binde a sinner: because the word of Christ is not in vaine, Whatsoeuer ye binde. &c. About this power they stoutly fight amonge themselues. Some say that there is but one keye in substance, that is the power to binde & loose, and as for knowledge, that it is in dede requisite for a good vse, but that it is only as an accessary & is not essentially ioyned with the other. Some other, because they saw this to be too much an vnbridled licence, haue reckened vp two keies, discretion, & power. Other againe, when they saw the lewd boldnes of priestes to be restrained by this moderation, haue forged other keies, that is to say, authority of discerning which they should vse in giuing determinate sentence: & power, which they should practise in executing of their sentence: & that knowledge standeth by as a coūseller. But they dare not simply expound this binding & loosing to be to forgiue and put away sinnes, because they heare the Lorde cryinge out in the Prophet: It is I, and none other but I: it is I, it is I that put away thy sinnes, O Israell, But they say it is the priestes office to pronounce who be bounde or loosed, and to declare whose sinnes are forgiuen or retained: and that he doth declare it, either by confeſſion when he abſolueth & retained ſinnes,or by ſentence when he excommunicated and receiueth againe to partaking of the Sacramentes.Finally,when they vnderſtand that they be not yet out of this dout,but that it ſtil may be obiected againſt them,that oftentimes their prieſts do binde and looſe men vnworthy,which are not therfore bounde or looſed in heauē:then(which is their laſt refuge) they anſwere that the giuing of the keyes,muſt be conſtrued with a limitation,that is to ſay, that Chriſt hath promiſed, that before his iudgement ſeate ſuch ſentence of the Prieſt ſhalbe allowed as hath bin iuſtly pronounced, accordinge as the deſeruinges of him that is bounde or looſed,did require. Moreouer they ſay, that theſe keyes are giuen by Chriſt to all Prieſts, and are deliuered to them by their Biſhoppes, at the time of their promotinge to prieſthoode: but the free vſe of them, remaineth only with ſuch as do exerciſe Eccleſiaſticall offices: and that the excommunicate & ſuſpended Prieſtes haue in deede the keyes, but rufty & bounde vp. And they that ſay theſe things may well ſeeme modeſt & ſober in cōpariſon of ỹ reſt, which vpon a new anuielde haue forged new keyes with which they ſay the treaſure of the church is locked vp. Theſe keyes we ſhall hereafter trie in place fit for it.

16 Now I will in few wordes anſwere to euery one of theſe particularly. But at this preſent I ſpeake not by what right or what wronge they binde the ſoules of the faithfull with their lawes, foraſmuch as we will conſider that when place ſeruеth. But where they charge men with a law of reckeninge vp all their ſinnes: where they ſay that ſinne is not forgiuen but vpon condition, if there be an intent conceiued to confeſſe it:where they babble that there remaineth no entrie into Paradiſe,if occaſion of confeſſinge be neglected: this is in no wiſe to be ſuffered. Muſt all ſinnes be reckened vp?But Dauid, (Who as I thinke)had well ſtudied vpon the confeſſion of his ſinnes, yet cried out:who ſhall vnderſtand his errours? Lord cleanſe me from my ſecret ſinnes. And in an other place.My iniquities haue paſſed aboue my heade,and like a weighty burden haue waxed heauy aboue my ſtrength. Truely he vnderſtoode how great was the bottomleſſe depth of our ſinnes: how many were the ſortes of our miſchieuous doings,how many heades this monſter Hydra did beare,& how long a taile ſhe drew after her. Therefore he went not about to recken vp a regiſter of them, but out of the depth of euills, he cried vnto the Lord:I am ouerwhelmed, I am buried and choked, the gates of hels haue compaſſed me,let thy hand draw me out, which am drowned in the great pit,and am fainting and ready to die.Who now may thinke

vpon the numbring of his sinnes, whē he seeth that Dauid can make no numbre of his?

17 With this butchery, the soules that haue bin touched with any feelinge of God, haue bin more cruelly vexed. First they called themselues to accompt: then they deuided sinnes into armes, into boowes, into braunches, and into twigges, according to these mens rules: then they weyed the qualities, quantities, and circumstances. And so the matter went a litle forward. But when they had proceeded a litle further, than was on ech side skie, and on ech side seae, no hauen, no safe roade: the mo that they had passed ouer, the greater heape alway did thrust it selfe into their sight, yea they rose vp as hye mountaines, & there appeared no hope, not so much as after long cō passings, any way to escape. And so they did sticke fast betwene the sacrifice & the stone, & at last was found no other issue but desperation. Then these cruel butchers, to ease the woundes that themselues had made, laid certaine gentle plaisters, that euery man should do as much as he could. But new cares againe rose vp, yea new tormentes did slea the silly soules, as to thinke: I haue not emploied time enough, I haue not endeuored my selfe with such diligence as I ought, I haue passed ouer many things by negligēce & the forgetfulnes that commeth by negligence is not excusable. Thē were there ministred other plaisters to asswage such paines, as Repent thee of thy negligence: if it be not altogether careless, it shall be pardoned. But all these things can not close vp the wounde, and are not so much easment of the euill, as poisons couered with honey, that they should not with their bitternesse offend the first tast, but enter into the bowels before that they be perceiued. Therfore this terrible saying alway calleth vpon thē & soundeth in their eares: Confesse all thy sinnes. And this horrour can not be appeased but by assured cōfort. Here let the readers consider, how possible it is to bring into accompt all the doings of a whole yere, & to gather together what sinnes they haue done euery day: forasmuch as experience proueth to euery man, that when at eueninge he shall recken vp the faultes but of one day, his memory is confounded therwith, so great a multitude & diuersity presenteth it selfe. For I speake not of grosse & blockish hypocrites that thinke they haue done sufficiently, if they haue noted three or foure of the greatest sinnes: but I speake of the true worshippers of God, which when they see themselues oppressed with the examination that they haue made, do adde also this saying of Iohn: If our owne heart do accuse vs, God is greater than our heart: and so they quake for feare at the sight of that iudge, whose knowledge farre surmounteth our vnderstanding. 1. Ioh. 3. 20.

18 But wheras a great parte of the world rested them vpon such flatteries, wherewith so deadly a poyson was tempered, this came not so to passe, because they beleued ỳ God was satisfied, or because they themselues were fully satisfied: but that the anchor cast as it wer in the midde sea, shoulde rest a litle from saylinge, or as a wayfaringe man weary and faintinge, shoulde lye downe in the way. I laboure not much in prouinge this. For euery man may be witnesse to himselfe. I will in a shorte summe shew, what maner of law this was. First simply it is impossible, and therefore it can do nothing but destroy, damne, confounde, and cast in ruine and desperation. And then whē it hath ledde sinners from the true feelinge of their sinnes, it maketh them hypocrites and ignoraunt of God & themselues. For while they are wholly busied in reckening vp of their sinnes, in the meane time they forget the secrete sinke of vices, their hidden Iniquities, and inward filthinesse, by knowledge whereof they shoulde chiefely haue weyed their misery. But this was a most certaine rule of confession, to acknowledge and confesse the bottomlesse depth of our euill to be so great as passeth our vnderstandinge. After this rule we see that the Luc. 18. 23. Publicanes confession was made. Lorde be mercifull to me a sinner: as if he should say: All that euer I am, I am altogether a sinner, and I can not attaine with witte or expresse with tongue the greatnesse of my sinnes: let the bottomlesse depth of thy mercy swallow vp the bottomlesse depth of my sinne. But then thou wilt say, what? are not all our sinnes to be confessed? is no confession acceptable to God, but that which is knitte vp in these two wordes, I am a sinner? No, but rather we must endeuour our selues as much as in vs lyeth, to poure out our heart before the Lorde, and not onely in one worde confesse our selues sinners, but also truely and heartily acknowledge our selues to be such: and with all our thought recorde, howe great and diuerse is our filth of sinnes, not onely that we be vncleane, but what, how great, and in howe many partes is our vncleanesse: not onely that we be detters, but with howe great dettes we be loden, and howe many wayes charged: not onely that we be wounded, but also with howe many and deadly strokes we be wounded. With Psa. 19. 31. this reknowledging when the sinner hath wholly poured out himselfe before God, lette him earnestly and sincerely thinke, that yet there remayne moe sinnes, and that the secret corners of their euils are so depe, that they cā not be throughly discloſed. And he crieth out with Dauid: Who vnderstandeth his errours? Lord cleanse me frō my hidden sinnes. Now where they affirme, that sinnes are not forgiuen but with an intent of confessinge firmely conceiued, and that the gate of

paradise is shut against him that neglecteth occasion offered when he may be confessed, God forbid that we shoulde graunt them that. For there is no other forgiuenes of sinnes, than alway hath bin. It is not read that all they haue cõfessed their sinnes in the eare of some priest, that we reade to haue obtained forgiuenesse of sinnes at Christes hand. And truely they could not confesse, where there were neither any priests cõfessors, nor any cõfessing at all. And in many ages after, this confession was vnheard of, at which time sinnes were forgiuen without this condition. But that we may not neede to dispute longer about this, as about a doutfull matter, the word of God is plain, which abideth for euer: Whensoeuer the sinner repenteth, I will no more remember all his iniquities. He that dare adde any thing to this word, bindeth not sinnes, but the mercy of God. For whereas they say, that Iudgement can not be giuen but when the cause is hearde, we haue a solution in readinesse, that they do presumptuously take that vpon themselues, which haue made themselues iudges. And it is a maruell, that they do so boldly frame to themselues such principles, as no man in his right wit will graunt. They boast that the office of Binding and Loosing is committed to them, as though it were a certaine iurisdictiõ ioyned with Inquisitiõ. Morouer their whole doctrine crieth out, that this authority was vnknowen to the Apostles. Neither doth it belong to the priest, but to him which desireth absolution, to know certainely whether the sinner be loosed or no: forasmuch as he that heareth can neuer know whether the reckning be iust and perfect. So should there be no absolution but such as is restrained to his wordes that is to be iudged. Moreouer the whole order of loosing standeth of faith & repentance, which two things are hidden frõ the knowledge of mã, when sentence must be giuen vpon an other man. It foloweth therefore, that ỹ assurance of binding & loosing is not subiect to the iudgement of an earthly iudge: because the minister of the word, when he doth his office, can not giue absolution but cõditionally: but that this is spoken for the sinnes sake, Whose sinnes ye forgiue. &c. that they should not dout that the pardõ which is promised by the commaundement and word of God, shall be ratified in heauen. Eze. 18. 21.

19 Therefore it is no maruell, if we condemne and desire to haue vtterly taken away this Auricular confession, a thing so pestilent & so many waies hurtful to the Church: but if it were a thing by it selfe indifferent, yet forasmuch as it is to no vse nor profite, and hath giuen cause to so many wickednesses, sacrileges and errours, who will not thinke that it ought to be presently abolished? They do in dede recken vppe some good vses, which they boast vpon as very profitable, but theſe either falſe or of no value at all. One only they commend with a ſingular prerogatiue, that ſhame is a great puniſhment of him that cõfeſſeth, wherby the ſinner both is for time to come made warer, & preuenteth the puniſhment of God in puniſhing himſelfe. As though we did not humble a mã with ſhamefaſtnes enough when we cal him to ẏ hie iudgement ſeate of heauen, I meane to the hearing of God. It is forſooth very well profited, if for ſhame of one mans knowledge we ceſſe to ſinne, and be not aſhamed to haue God witnes of our euil conſcience. Although the very ſame is alſo moſt falſe, for it is to be ſeene that by nothing groweth greater confidence or licentiouſneſſe to ſinne, than when men hauinge made confeſſion to a prieſt, thinke that they may wipe their mouth and ſay, I did it not. And not onely they are made all ẏ yeare long the bolder to ſinne: but ail the reſt of the yeare bearing themſelues bolde vpon confeſſion, they neuer ſigh vnto God, they neuer returne to themſelues, but heape ſinnes vpon ſinnes till they vomit vp all at once as they thinke. And when they haue once vomited them vp, they thinke themſelues diſcharged of their burden, and that they haue taken away from God the iudgemẽt that they haue giuen to the prieſt, & that they haue brought God in forgetfulnes when they haue made the prieſt priuie. Moreouer who doth merily ſee the day of confeſſion at hande? Who goeth to confeſſion with a cherefull heart, and cõmmeth not to it rather againſt his will, & as it were drawinge backeward, like as if he were taken by the necke & drawen to priſon? vnleſſe paraduenture it be the very prieſtes, that vſe ioyfully to delite themſelues with mutuall rehearſals of their doings, as were with mery tales? I will not defile much paper with monſtruous abhominations whereof auricular confeſſion ſwarmeth full. Onely this I ſay, If that holy mã did not vnwiſely, that for one rumor of fornication tooke away confeſſion out of his Church, yea, out of the remembrance of his flocke: then we be thereby put in minde what is needefull to be done at this day vpon infinite whordomes, adulteries, inceſtes and bawderies.

20 Where the Confeſſionars alleage for this purpoſe the power of the keyes, and do therupõ ſet the peupe and prore of their kingedome, as the prouerbe is: it is to be ſeene how much they ought to auayle. Then (ſay they) are the keyes giuen without cauſe? Is it ſayd without cauſe: Whatſoeuer you looſe vpon earth, ſhall be alſo looſed in heauen? Do we then make the worde of Chriſt voyde? I anſwere there was a weighty cauſe why the keyes ſhould be giuen, as both I haue euen nowe already declared, and ſhall more plainely ſhew againe when I come to entreat of Excommunication. But what if I do with one swerde cutt of the holde of all that they require, that is with saying, that sacrificing priestes are not ỹ vicars nor successors of the Apostles? But this shall also be to be entreated of in an other place: but nowe they raise vp an engine whereby they wolde most of all defende themselues, and thereby may all their buildinges be ouerthrowen. For Christ did not geue his Apostles ỹ power to binde and loose, before that he gaue them the holy Ghost. Therfore I say, that none haue the power of the keyes that haue not first receiued the holy Ghost. I denie that any man can vse the keyes, but hauing the holy Ghost going before, and teaching him and informing him what is to be done. They trifling say, that they haue the holy Ghost. but in dede they denie it, vnlesse paraduenture they faine (as they do faine in dede) the holy Ghost to be a vaine thing and a thing of nothing, but therin they shall not be beleued. And by this engine they are vtterly ouerthrowen, that of what soeuer dore they boast that they haue the keye, a man may alway aske them whether they haue the holy Ghost which is the iudge and gouerner of the keyes. If they aunswer that they haue, then they may be asked againe, whether the holy Ghost may erre. This they will not be glad to speake expresly, although they crokedly vtter the same by their doctrine. It is therefore to be gathered, that no priestes haue power of the keyes which do commonly without consideration loose those thinges that the Lorde wolde haue to be bounde, and binde those thinges that the Lorde commaunded to be loosed.

21 Wheras they see themselues conuinced by most clere experimentes, that they do without choise loose and binde the worthy and vnworthy, they vsurpe a power without knowledge. And although they dare not denie that knowledge is requisit for a good vse, yet they write that the very power is geuen to euel disposers of it. But this is the power, whatsoeuer thou bindest or loosest in earthe, shalbe bounde or loosed in heauen. Either the promise of Christ must lie, or they that haue this power do well binde and loose. Neither may they dallie and say, that the saying of Christ is limited according to the deseruings of him that is bound or loosed. And we also confesse, that none can be bound or loosed, but they that are worthy to be bound or loosed. But the messengers of the Gospell and the Church haue the worde, by which they measure this worthinesse, in this worde the messengers of the Gospell, may promise to all men forgeuenesse of sinnes in Christ by faith, they may proclaime damnation into all and vpon all that embrace not Christ. In this word the Church pronounceth that fornicatours, adulterers, theues, mansleyers, couetous men, 1 Cor. 6. 9.

vniuſt men,haue no parte in the kingdom of God, and bindeth ſuch with moſt ſure bondes. With the ſame worde the Church looſeth them whome it comforteth being repentant. But what power ſhall this be,not to know what is to be bounde or looſed,& not to be able to binde or looſe without knowledge? Why then do they ſay that they looſe by authoritie geuen vnto them, when the looſing is vncertain? What haue we to do with this imaginatiue power, if there be no vſe of it? But I haue it already proued that either there is no vſe of it, or ſo vncertaine an vſe as may be accompted for none at all. For wheras they confeſſe that there is a great parte of prieſtes that do not rightly vſe the keyes, and that the power without lawefull vſe is of no effect. Who ſhall aſſure me that he of whome I am looſed is a good vſer of the keyes? if he be an euell vſer of it, what hath he els but ſuch a voide diſpoſing of them,as to ſay, what is to be found or looſed in thee I knowe not, for aſmuch as I lack the right vſe of the keyes,but if thou deſerue I looſe thee.But ſo much might do, I will not ſay a lay man (for they could not beare that with patient eares)but a Turke,or a Deuell.For it is aſmuch as to ſay,I haue not the worde of God the ſure rule of looſing, but there is power geuen me to looſe thee, if thy deſeruinges be ſo. We ſee therefore what they meant, when they defined the keyes to be the authoritie of diſcerning, and power of executing: and that knowledge is adioined for a counſeller, and like a counſeller ſerueth for a good vſe: vndoubtedly euen they deſired to reigne at their owne will, licentiouſly,without God and his worde.

22 If any man take exception and ſay, that the lawfull miniſters of Chriſt ſhall be no leſſe doubtefull in their office, bycauſe the abſolution that hangeth vpon faith ſhall alway remaine doubtefull:and then that ſinners ſhall haue either none or a could comforte,bycauſe the miniſter himſelfe which is no competent iudge of their faith, can not be aſſured of their abſolution:we haue aunſwer thereunto in redineſſe. For they ſay that no ſinnes are forgeuen by the prieſt, but ſuch whereof himſelfe hath bene the hearer:ſo by their opinion,the forgeuenes hangeth vpon the iudgement of the prieſt, and if he do not wiſely diſcerne who be worthy of pardon, the whole doing is voide and of no effect.Finally the power whereof they ſpeake,is a iuriſdiction adioined to examination,wherunto pardon and abſolution is reſtrained. In this point is found no ſure ground, but rather it is a bottomleſſe depth. For where the confeſſion is not found, the hope of pardon is alſo lame,and then the prieſt himſelf muſt needes ſticke in ſuſpenſe while he can not tell, whether the ſinner do faithfully

recken vp all his euell deedes. Finally (such is the ignoraunce and rudenesse of priestes) the most parte are no fitter to do this office, than a shomaker is to plowe the ground, and the rest in a manner all ought worthily to suspect themselues. Herevpon therefore riseth the perplexitie and doubtfulnesse of the Popes absolution, bycause they will haue it grounded vpon the person of the priest, and not onely that, but also vpon knowledge, that he may iudge onely of thinges informed, examined and proued. Now if a man should aske of these good docters, whether a sinner be reconciled to God, when some sinnes are forgeuen: I see not what they haue to aunswer, but that they shalbe compelled to confesse that all is vnprofitable, that the priest pronounceth of the forgeuenesse of those sinnes that he hath heard rehearsed, so long as the other sinnes are not deliuered from condemnatiō. On the behalf of him ỹ confesseth how hurtfull carefulnesse holdeth his conscience bound, appereth hereby, that when he resteth vpon the priests discretion, as they call it, he can determine nothing certainly by ỹ word of God. The doctrine that we teach is free and cleare from all these absurdities. For the absolution is conditionall, that the sinner should trust that God is mercifull vnto him, so that he sincerely seeke the cleansing of his sinnes in the sacrifice of Christ, and obeye the grace offred him. So he can not erre, which according to the office of a preacher, proclaimeth that which is geuen him in instructions by the word of God. And the sinner may embrace a sure and cleare absolution, when that simple condition is annexed of the embracing the grace of Christ, according to that generall doctrine of the maister himselfe, Be it done to thee according to thy faith. Which hath bene wickedly despised in the Papacie. Matt. 9. 29.

23 How foolishly they confound those things that the Scripture teacheth of the power of keyes, I haue promised that I will speake in an other place, and there shalbe a more conuenient place for it, when I come to entreate of the gouernement of the Church. But let the readers remēber that those things are wrongfully wrested to Auricular and secret confession, which are spoken by Christ partly of the preaching of the Gospell, and partly of excōmunication. Wherefore when they obiect that the power of loosing is geuen to the Apostles, which priests may vse in forgeuing sinnes acknowledged vnto them, it is plaine that they take a false and fonde principle: becausse the absolution that serueth faith, is nothing els but a witnesse of pardō takē out of the free promise of the Gospell. As for the other confession, that hangeth vpō the discipline of the Church, it pertaineth nothing to secret sinnes, but rather to example, that common offence of the Church may be taken away. But wheras they ſcrape together here and there teſtimonies, to proue that it ſufficeth not to confeſſe ſinnes either to God onely or to lay men, vnleſſe a prieſt be the hearer of them, their trauaile therin is but lewd, and ſuch as they may be aſhamed of. For when the auncient fathers counſell ſinners to vnburden themſelues to their owne paſtour, it can not be expounded of particular rehearſall which then was not in vſe. Then, Lumbard and ſuch like (ſuch was their ſiniſter dealing) ſeme of ſet purpoſe to haue geuen themſelues to fained bokes, by pretenſe whereof they might deceiue the ſimple. They do in deede truely confeſſe, that becauſe abſolution alway accompanieth repentance, therefore there proprely remaineth no bond when a man is touched with repentance, although he haue not yet confeſſed, and therefore that then the prieſt doth not ſo much forgeue ſinnes as pronounce and declare them forgeuen. Albeit in the word of declaring they ſlily bring in a groſſe errour, thruſting a ceremonie in ſtede of doctrine. But wheras they patche vnto it, that he is abſolued in the face of the Church that had alredy obteined pardon before God: they do inconueniently drawe to ỹ peculiar vſe of euery particular man, that which we haue already ſaid to be appointed for common diſcipline, where the offenſe of a hainous and notorious fault is to be taken away. But by and by after, they depraue and corrupt moderation, adding an other manner of forgeuing, with an enioyning of penaltie and ſatisfaction, wherin they preſumptuouſly claime to their owne ſacrifices a power to part that in halfes, which God hath in all places promiſed vs whole together. For when he ſimply requireth repentance and faith, this partition or exceptiõ is a very robberie of God. For it is in effect aſmuch as if the prieſt taking vpon the perſone of a Tribune, ſhould become interceſſour to God, and would not ſuffer God of his mere liberalitie to receiue him into fauour, that hath lien proſtrate before the Tribunes ſeates, and there hath bene puniſhed.

24 The whole ſumme commeth to this point, that if they will make God the authour of this counterfait cõfeſſion, therein is their fallſhod condemned, as I haue proued them falſe forgers in the fewe places that they allege. But ſith it is euident that it is a law made by men, I ſay that it is both tiránicall and made iniuriouſly againſt God, who binding mens conſciences to his word, will haue them free from the bondage of men. Now when for the obteining of pardon, there is a neceſſitie preſcribed of that thing which the Lorde wolde to be free, I ſay that this is a ſacrilege not to be ſuffred, bycauſe there is nothing more properly belonging to God, than to forgeue ſinnes, wherein consisteth saluation for vs. Moreouer I haue shewed that this tirannie was first brought in, when the world was oppressed with filthy barbarousnesse. I haue also taught that it is a pestilent law, that either throweth downe hedlong into desperation the poore soules in whom so euer abideth a feare of God: or where there reigneth careleſnes, deliteth thē with vayne flatteries, & so maketh thē duller. Last of all I haue declared, that what so euer mitigations they bring, tend to no other ende, but to entangle, darken and depraue pure doctrine, and hide vngodlinesse with deceitfull colors.

25 The third place in Repentance they assigne to satisfaction, whereof all that euer they babble may be ouerthrowen with one worde. They say that it is not enough for him that repenteth, to absteine from his former euels, and chaunge his behauior into better, vnlesse he make satisfaction to God for those thinges that he hath done: And that there be many helpes by which we may redeme sinnes, as wepinges, fastinges, oblations and the workes of charitie. With these we must winne the Lord to be fauorable, with these we must pay our dettes to the righteousnesse of God, with these we must make amendes for our defaultes, with these we must deserue pardon. For although by the largenes of his mercy he hath forgeuen our faulte, yet by the discipline of his iustice he reteineth the peine, and that this is the peine that must be redemed with satisfactions. But in effect all that they say commeth to this point, that we do in deede obteine pardon of our sinnes at the mercifulnesse of God, but by meanes of the deseruing of our workes, by which the offense of our sinnes may be recompensed, that due satisfaction may be fully made to Gods righteousnesse. Against such lies. I set the free forgeuenesse of sinnes, than which there is nothing more euidētly spoken of in the Scripture. First, what is forgeuenesse, but a gift of mere liberalitie? For the creditour is not said to forgeue, that acknowledgeth by acquitance that the mony is payed, but he that without any payment willingly of his owne liberalitie cancelleth the detters bonde. Secondly, why is this word, Freely, added, but to take away all opinion of satisfaction? With what confidence therefore do they yet set vp their satisfactions, that are stricken downe with so mighty a thunderbolt? But what? when ỹ Lord crieth out by Esay, It is I, it is I, that do put away iniquities for mine owne sake, and will not be mindefull of thy sinnes: doth he not openly declare, that he fetcheth the cause and fundation of forgeuenesse only from his owne goodnes? Moreouer whereas the whole Scripture beareth this witnesse of Christ, that forgeuenesse of sinnes is to be receiued by his name, doth it not thereby exclude all other names? How then do they teache that it is receiued by the name of ſatisfactions? Neither can they denie that they giue this to ſatisfactions, although they ſay that the ſame be vſed as helpes by way of meanes. For whereas the Scripture ſaith By the name of Chriſt, it meaneth that we bring nothing, we allege nothing of our owne, but reſte vpon the onely commendation of Chriſt. As

Libr. 3. Sentēt. diſt 9. 26 But (ſuch is their peruerſneſſe) they ſay that both forgeueneſſe of ſinnes and reconciliation are performed both at one time, when we are in Baptiſme receiued into the fauour of God by Chriſt: that after baptiſme we muſt riſe againe by ſatisfactions: and that the bloud of Chriſt profiteth nothing, but ſo far as it is diſtributed by the keyes of the Church. Neither do I ſpeake of a doubtefull matter, for aſmuch as they haue in moſt euident writinges bewrayed their owne filthineſſe, and not one or two of them, but all the Scholemen vniuerſally. For their Maiſter, after that he had confeſſed that Chriſt had payed the penaltie of ſinnes vpon the tree, according to the doctri-

2.Tim. 1.9. but after baptiſme they are miniſhed by the helpe of penaunce, that ſo the croſſe of Chriſt and our penaunce may worke together.
1.Ioh.2 2.&12. But Iohn ſaith far otherwiſe, if any ſinne, we haue an aduocate with the Father, euen Ieſus Chriſt, which is the propitiation for our ſinnes. I write vnto you children, bycauſe your ſinnes are forgeuen you for his names ſake. Truely he ſpeaketh to the faithfull, to whom when he ſetteth forth Chriſt to be the propitiation of ſinnes, he ſheweth that there is no other ſatisfaction by which God, being diſpleaſed, may be made fauorable and appeaſed. He doth not ſay: God was ones reconciled vnto you by Chriſt, now ſeeke you other meanes: but he maketh him a perpetuall aduocate, alway to reſtore vs by his interceſſion into the fauour of his father: a perpetuall propitiation, by which our ſinnes may be cleanſed away. For this is euer true that the

He taketh them away (ſaith he) himſelfe and none other, that is to ſay: for aſmuch as he alone is the Lambe of God, he alone alſo is the oblation for ſinnes, he alone the propitiation ſacrifice, he alone the ſatisfaction. For wheras the right and power to forgeue belōgeth proprely to the father, in the reſpect

that he is distinguished from the sonne, as we haue alredy sene: Christ is here set in an other degree, that taking vpon himselfe the paine due vnto vs, he hath taken away our giltinesse before the iudgement of God. Wherevpon foloweth, the we shall no otherwise be partakers of the satisfaction made by Christ, vnlesse the same honour remaine whole with him, which they do wrongfully take to themselues that go about to appease God with their owne recompensinges.

27 And here it is good to consider two thinges: that Christ may haue his due honour kept vnto him whole and vnminished: and that the consciences being assured of the forgeueneſſe of sinne, may haue peace with God. Esaye saith, that the father hath layed the iniquities of vs all vpon his sonne, that we shoulde be healed by his stripes. Which thing Peter rehearsing in other wordes saith: that Christ did in his body beare our sinnes vpon the tree. Paule writeth that sinne was condemned in his flesh, when he was made sinne for vs. That is to say, that the force and curse of sinne was slaine in his flesh, when he was geuen to be a sacrifice, vpon which the whole heape of our sinnes, with all their malediction and curse, with the dredfull iudgement of God, and condemnation of death should be cast. Here those triflinges are in no case to be heard, that after the first purging, euery one of vs doth none otherwise fele the effectualneſſe of the passion of Christ, than after the measure of satisfactorie repentance: but so oft as we fall, we be called backe to the onely satisfaction of Christ. Now set before thee their pestilent follies, as for example: That the grace of God worketh alone in the first forgeueneſſe of sinnes: that if we afterwarde fall, to the obteining of a seconde forgeueneſſe our workes do worke with it. If these thinges may haue place, do these thinges that are here before assigned to Christ remaine safe vnto him? It his a meruellous greate difference, betwene this that our iniquities are layed vpon Christ, that they shoulde be cleansed in him, & this that they are cleansed by our owne workes: betwene this that Christ is the procuringe of mercie, and this that God must be made mercifull by workes. But if we speake of pacifieng the conscience: what pacification shall this be for a mans conscience, to heare that his sinnes are redemed by satisfactions? When shall he certainely knowe the measure of his satisfactiō? Therfore he shall alway doubte whether he haue God mercifull or no, he shall alway be vexed, and alway quake for feare. For they that rest vpon light pety satisfactions, do too contemptuously esteme the iudgement of God, and do litle consider how great is the greuousneſſe of sinne, as we shall declare in an other place. But although we graūt them to redeme some sinnes with iuſt ſatisfaction: yet what will they do when they are oppreſſed with ſo many ſinnes, for ſatisfactiō wherof a hundred liues although they were wholy applied therunto can not ſuffice? Beſide that, all the places wherin the forgeueneſſe of ſinnes is affirmed, do not belong to yonglinges, but to the already regenerate childrē of God, and them that haue bene long nouriſhed in the boſome of the Church. That 2 Cor. 5.20. embaſſage which Paule ſo honorably extolleth, I beſech you in the name of God, be ye reconciled vnto God, is not directed to ſtraungers, but to them that had bene already regenerate. But he, biddinge ſatisfactions farewell, ſendeth them to the croſſe of Chriſt. So when Coloſſ. 2.20. he writeth to the Coloſſians, that Chriſt by the bloud of the croſſe hath pacified all thinges in heauen or in earth, he reſtraineth not this to the onely moment wherein we are receiued into the Church, but extendeth it to our whole courſe. Which eaſily appereth by the proceſſe of the text, where he ſaith, that the faithfull haue a redemption by the bloud of Chriſt, that is forgeueneſſe of ſinnes. Albeit it is ſuperfluous to heape together mo places, that redily offer themſelues to be founde.

28 Here they flee to the ſanctuarie of the fooliſh diſtinction, that ſome ſinnes are veniall, and ſome deadly: that for deadly ſinnes is great ſatisfaction due, that veniall ſinnes are purged with more eaſy remedies, as with ſaying of the Lords prayer, with ſprinkling of holy water, with abſolution at the maſſe. So they mocke and trifle with God. But whereas they alway haue in their mouth veniall and deadly ſinne, yet they coulde neuer diſcerne the one from the other, ſauing that they make vngodlines and vncleanneſſe of heart, a veniall ſinne.
Rom. 6. 23. But we (as the Scripture the rule of right and wrong teacheth vs) do
Eze. 18. 20. pronounce, that the rewarde of ſinne is death, and that the ſoule that ſinneth is worthy of death. But that the ſinnes of the faithful are ve-
Rom. 8. 1. niall, not for that they do not deſerue death, but bycauſe by the mercie of God there is no condemnation to them that are in Chriſt Ieſus, becauſe they are not imputed: bycauſe they are taken away by pardō. I know how vniuſtly they ſclaunder this our doctrine. For they ſay, that it is the Stoikes ſtraunge concluſion, concerning the equalitie of ſinnes. But they ſhall eaſily be conuinced by their owne mouth. For I demaunde of them, whether among the very ſame ſinnes that they cōfeſſe to be deadly, they do not acknowledge one to be greater than an other. It doth not therefore immediatly followe, that ſinnes are egall, becauſe they are all together deadly. When the Scripture definitiuely ſaith, that the reward of ſinne is death, that the obediēce of the lawe is the way of life, and that the tranſgreſſion of the lawe is death,

is death, they can not escape this sentence. What end of satisfieng then will they finde in so great a heape of sinnes? If the satisfaction of one day be the satisfaction of one sinne, while they are about that one satisfaction, they wrappe themselues in many sinnes, sithe the iusteſt man passeth no one day wherin he falleth not many times. Now when they shall prepare themselues to make satisfaction for these sinnes, they shall heape vp great numbers, yea rather innumerable. Then the hope of satisfieng being cut of, what do they stay vpon? how dare they still thinke of satisfieng? Pro.24. 16.

29 They go about to winde out themselues: but (as the prouerbe is) the water still cleaueth vpon them. They forge a distinction of fault and penaltie. They confesse that the fault is forgeuen by the mercie of God, but that when the fault is forgeuen, the penaltie remaineth which the righteousnesse of God requireth to be payed: and that satisfactions do properly belong to the releaſe of the penaltie. Good God, what a skipping lightnesse is this? now they confesse that the forgeuenesse of the fault lieth freely open for men, which sometime they teache men to deserue with prayers and wepinges, and all other kindes of preparations. But yet still all that is taught vs in the scripture concerning the forgeuenesse of sinnes, doth directly fight against this distinction. Which although I thinke that I haue alredy more than sufficiently confirmed, yet I will adde some other testimonies wherwith these winding snakes may be holden so fast, that they shall not be able ones to folde in the toppe of their taile. This is the newe Testament which the Lorde hath couenanted with vs in his Christ, that he will not remember our iniquities. What he meant by these wordes, we learne by an other Prophet where the Lorde saith: If the righteous turne away from his righteousnesse, I will not remember all his righteousnesses. If the wicked depart frō his wickednesse, I will not remember all his iniquities. Wheras he saith that he will not remember their righteousnesse, this is asmuch to say, that he will haue no regard of them in respect to reward them. Therfore not to remember sinnes, is asmuch as not to call them to punishment. The same thing is called in an other place, to cast it behinde his backe, to wipe it away like a cloude, to drowne it in the bottome of the sea, not to impute it and to hide it. By such manners of speche the holy Ghost doth plainely expresse his meaning vnto vs, if we would apply vnto him willing eares to learne. Truely if God do punish sinnes, he imputeth them: if he taketh vengeance, he remembreth them: if he call them to iudgement, he doth not hide them: if he examine them, he doth not cast them behinde his backe: if he loke vpon them, he Ier. 31. 31. hath not wiped them away like a cloude: if he ſift them, he hath not
Pſa. 52. 2. caſt them into the bottome of the ſea. And in this manner doth Auguſtine expound it in plaine wordes. If God haue couered ſinnes, then he would not loke vpon them: if he would not loke vpon them, then he would not marke them: if he would not marke thē, then he would not puniſh them: he would not knowe them, he had rather pardon them. Why therefore did he ſay that ſinnes were couered, that they ſhould not be ſeen: What was meant by this that God did ſee ſinnes, but that he did puniſh them? But let vs heare alſo out of an other place of the Prophet, vpon what conditions the Lorde forgeueth

Ier. 17. 1. in an Adamant ſtone. If they ſignifie (as it is out of doubt) that vengeance ſhalbe geuen for recōpenſe, then is it alſo not to be doubted, but that by contrarie ſentences the Lorde affirmeth, that he remitteth all recompenſing of vengeance. Here I muſt beſech the readers not to harken to my gloſes, but onely that they will ſuffer the worde of God to take ſome place.

30 What, I pray you, had Chriſt done for vs, if we ſhould ſtill be
1. Pet. 2. 24. compelled to ſuffer paine for ſinnes? For when we ſay that he did beare all our ſinnes in his body vpon the tree, we meane nothing els thereby, but that he ſuffred all the peine and puniſhment that was due ſacrifice?

sacrifice? And what sacrifice is there, but that which is offred for vs in the death of Christ? But that which is appointed in the lawe of Moses for cleansing the offenses of sinnes, ministreth vs a strong battell ramme. For the Lord doth not there apoint this or that manner of satisfieng, but requireth the whole recompense in sacrifices. Whereas yet in other thinges, he doth most diligently and in most exact order set out all the ceremonies of expiation. Howe commeth it to passe, that he commaundeth to recompense faultes committed, with no workes at all, but requireth onely sacrifices for satisfaction: but because his will is so to declare, that there is onely one kinde of satisfaction, whereby his iudgement is appeased? For the sacrifices that the Israelites did then offer, were not weyed by the worke of men, but were estemed by their truth, that is to say, by the onely sacrifice of Christ. But what manner of recompense the Lord receiueth of vs, Osee hath very well expressed in fewe wordes. Thou shalt (saith he) take away iniquitie, O God: Loe, here is forgeueneſſe of sinnes. And we shall pay thee calues of our lippes: Loe, here is satisfaction. I knowe that they yet do suttelly slippe away, when they make distinction betwene euerlasting peine, and temporall peines. But when they teach that temporall peine is any kinde of punishment that God taketh as well of the body as of the soule, except onely euerlasting death, this restraining of it doth litle helpe them. For the places that we haue aboue recited, do expresly meane this, that God receiueth vs into sauour with this condition, that in pardoning the fault, he pardoneth all the peine what so euer we had thereby deserued. And so oft as Dauid or the other Prophets do craue pardō of sinnes, they do also there withall pray to be released of the peine. Yea, the very feling of Gods iudgement doth driue them therunto. Againe, when they promise mercie at the Lordes hand, they do in manner alway of purpose preach of the peines and the forgeueneſſe therof. Truely when the Lorde in Ezechiell pronounceth that he will make an ende of the exile in Babylon, and that for his owne sake, not for the Iewes sake, he doth sufficiently shewe that both are of free gift. Finally, if we be deliuered by Christ from giltineſſe of fault, the peines that come thereof, must needes ceſſe.

Osee. 14.3.

Eze. 36. 22. and 32.

31 But for asmuch as they do also arme themselues with testimonies of Scripture, let vs see what manner of argumentes those bee that they allege. Dauid (say they) being rebuked by Nathan the Prophet of adulterie and māslaughter, receiued pardon of his sinne, and yet he was afterward punished by the death of his sonne that he had gotten by that adulterie. We are taught to redeme with satis-

factions ſuch paines as were to be extended after forgeuenes of the fault. For Daniel aduiſed Nebuchadnezer to redeme his ſinnes with almes. And Salomon writeth that for equitie and godlineſſe, iniquities are forgeuen. And in an other place, that with charitie the multitude of ſinnes is couered. Which ſentence Peter alſo confirmeth. Againe, in Luke the Lord ſaith of the woman that was a ſinner, that many ſinnes are forgeuen her, becauſe ſhe hath loued much. Howe peruerſly and wrongfully they euer weye the doinges of God. But if they had marked (as they ſhould not haue ouerpaſſed it) that there are two kindes of Gods iudgement, they would haue ſeen in this rebuking of Dauid, a far other manner of puniſhment, than ſuch as might be thought to tend to reuengement. But bycauſe it not a litle behoueth vs all to vnderſtand wherunto the chaſtiſementes haue reſpect, wherwith God correcteth vs for our ſinnes, and how much they differ from thoſe examples wherewith he purſueth ...e wicked and reprobate with indignation: therefore I thinke it ſhall be not beſide the purpoſe to comprehend it ſhortly in a ſumme. For the order of plaine teaching, let vs call the one kinde of iudgement, the iudegement of Reuenge, the other of Chaſtiſemēt. It is to be vnderſtanded, that God ſo puniſheth his enemies with the iudgement of reuenge, that he vſeth his wrath againſt them, confoundeth them, deſtroyeth them, and bringeth them to nought. Therefore let vs take that to be properly the vengeance of God, when his puniſhing is ioined with his indignation: with the iudgement of Chaſtiſemēt he dealeth not ſo cruelly: as to be angry: nor puniſheth to deſtroy, nor ſendeth downe his lightening to kill. Therefore it is not properly puniſhment or vengeance, but correction and admoniſhment. The one is the doing of a iudge, the other of a father. For the iudge when he puniſheth an euell doer, he hath regard to the offenſe, & puniſheth the very fault: when the father ſomwhat rigorouſly correcteth his childe, he doth it not to be reuenged on him, or to puniſh him, but rather to teach him & make him warer in time to come. Chryſoſtome in a certaine place vſeth a ſimilitude ſomwhat differing from this, but yet it commeth to the ſame point. The ſonne (ſaith he) is beaten, and the ſeruant alſo is beaten: but the one is puniſhed as a bonde ſeruant, bycauſe he hath offended, and the other is chaſtiſed as a freeman and as a ſonne, neding correction. To the one his correction ſerueth for profe and amendement, to the other for a ſcourge and puniſhment.

Dan. 4. 24. Pro. 16. 6. & 10. 12. 1. Pet. 4 8. Luc. 7. 47.

32 But that we may haue the whole matter ſhortly and in a redy ſumme, let this be the firſt of two diſtinctions. Whereſoeuer puniſhmeat is to reuenge, there ſheweth it ſelf the curſe and wrath of God, which which he alway withholdeth from the faithfull. Contrarywise Chastisement both is a blessing of God, and beareth a testimonie of his Ioue, as the Scripture teacheth. This difference is commonly euery where sufficiently expressed in the worde of God. For what so euer afflictions the wicked suffer in this present life, therein is painted out vnto vs as it were a certaine entrie of hell, frō whense they do alredy see a far of their eternall damnation: and they are so far from being amended or taking any profit thereby, that rather by such beginings they are prepared to the most cruell hell that at length abideth for them. But the Lorde chastising chastiseth his seruantes, but he doth not put them to death. Therefore they confesse that to be beaten with his rodde, was good for them vnto true instruction. But as we read euery where that the holy ones suffer such punishmentes with quiet minde, so they haue alway prayed to escape the first kinde of scourges. Chastse me Lorde (saith Ieremie) but in thy iudgement, not in thy wrath, least thou destroy me. Poure out thy wrath vpon the nations that haue not knowen thee, and vpon the kingdomes that haue not called vpon thy name. And Dauid saith: Lorde rebuke me not in thy wrath, nor correct me in thine anger. And it maketh nothing to the contrarie, that oftentimes it is said, that the Lord is angry with them that be his, when he punisheth their sinnes. As in Esaye: I will confesse to thee O Lorde, because thou hast bene angry with me: thy wrath is turned, & thou hast comforted me. Againe Abacuc. Thou that hast bene angry shall remember mercie. And Michee: I will beare the wrath of the Lord, because I haue sinned against him. Where he putteth vs in minde that not onely they that are iustly punished, nothing preuaile with murmuring against him, but also that the faithfull haue aswagement of their sorrow, in considering the purpose of God. For after the same manner it is said that he doth defile his owne inheritance, which yet (as we knowe) he will neuer defile. But that is spoken not in respect of the purpose or meaning of God that punisheth, but of the vehement feling of sorrow, which they fele that suffer any of his seueritie what so euer it be. But he not only pricketh his faithfull with no smal rigour, but sometimes so woūdeth them, that they thinke themselues not far from the damnatiō of hell. So he testifieth that they haue deserued his wrath, and so it behoueth that they should loth themselues in their euels, and be touched with the greater care to appease God, and carefully make hast to craue pardon. But euen in the very same doing he sheweth a more euident testimonie of his fauorable kindenesse than of his wrath. For ỹ couenant cōtinueth that was made with vs in our true Salomon: the truth whereof he that can not decerne, hath affirmed, that it ſhall neuer

I will viſite their ſinnes with a rodde and with ſtripes: but I will not take away my mercie from him. Of which mercie to make vs aſſured, he ſaith, that the rodde wherewith he
2. Sam. 7. 14. will correct the poſteritie of Salomon, ſhalbe of menne, and ſtripes of the children of menne: by which clauſes when he meaneth moderation and lenitie, he therewithall ſecretly declareth, that they can not but bee confounded with extreme and deadly horrour, that fele the hand of God to be againſt them. Howe great regard he hath of
Eſa. 48. 10. this lenitie in chaſtiſing his Iſraell, he ſheweth in the Prophet: I haue purged thee (ſaith he) in fire: But not as Siluer, for then thou ſhouldeſt haue bene all conſumed. Albeit he teacheth that chaſtiſementes ſerue him for to cleanſe him, but he further ſaith that he vſeth the ſame ſo temperately, that he bee not to much conſumed by them. And that is needefull. For the more that euery man reuerently feareth God, and geueth himſelfe to follow godlineſſe, ſo much the tendrer he is to beare his wrath. For the reprobate, although they grone vnder his ſcourges, yet for that they wey not the cauſe, but rather turne their backe both to their owne ſinnes and to the iudgement of God, by that ſlouthfulneſſe they gather a hardneſſe: or bycauſe they murmure and kicke againſt him, and do make an vprore againſt their iudge, that furious ſudden rage aſtonieth them with madneſſe and furor. But the faithfull being admoniſhed by his correction, by and by deſcend to conſider their ſinnes, & being ſtriken with dread and horrour, they flee in humble wiſe to pray to him for pardon, vnleſſe the Lorde did aſwage theſe ſorrowes wherewith the poore ſoules torment themſelues, they would fainte a hundred times euen in ſmal tokens of his wrath.

33 Then let this be the ſecond diſtinction, that when the reprobate are ſtryken with the ſcourges of God, they do alredy after a certaine manner beginne to ſuffer peines by his iudgemēt, and though they ſhall not eſcape vnpuniſhed, for that they haue not taken hede to ſuch tokēs of the wrath of God, yet they are not puniſhed to this ende, to make them come to a better minde: but onely that, to their great hurt, they ſhould proue God to be a iudge and reuenger. But children are beaten with roddes, not that they ſhoulde thereby be puniſhed of God for their ſinnes, but that they ſhould therby profit to amendement. Therefore we take it that they rather haue reſpect to the time to come, than to the time paſt. This I had rather expreſſe

in Chrysostomes wordes than mine owne. For this (saith he) God doth lay peine vpon vs, not punishing our sinnes past, but correcting vs against time to come. And so saith Augustine: That which thou suffrest, that for which thou lamentest, is a medicine to thee and no peine, a chastisement and no damnation. Put not away the scourge, if thou wilt not be put away from the inheritance, &c. Know ye brethren that all this miserie of mankinde when the world groneth is a medicinall sorrow, and not a pennall sentence, &c. These sentences I haue therefore thought good to alleage, that the manner of speche that I haue aboue written, shoulde not seme to any man newe and vnused. And hereunto serue all the complaintes full of indignation wherein the Lorde oftentimes doth expostulate of the vnkindenesse of the people, for that they stiffly despised all punishments. In Esaye he saith: To what purpose should I strike you any more: from the sole of the foote to the crowne of the hed, there is no whole place. But becausse the Prophets are full of such sayinges, it shalbe sufficient to haue briefly shewed that God doth punish his Church for none other intent, but that it shoulde be tamed and amend. Therefore when he did cast Saul out of the kingdome, he punished him to reuengement: When he toke from Dauid his yonge sonne, he corrected him to amendement. According to this meaning is that to be taken which Paule saith, when we are iudged of the Lorde, we are corrected, that we should not be damned with this worlde. That is, when we that be the children of God are afflicted with the hande of our heauenly father, this is no peine wherewith we should be confounded, but only a chastisement wherewith we should be instructed. In which pointe Augustine is plainely on our side. For he teacheth that the peines wherewith men are a like chastised by God, ar diuersly to be considered: bycause to the holy ones they are battels and exercises after the forgeueneſse of their sinnes, to the reprobate they are without forgeueneſse peines of wickedneſse. In which place he rehearseth how peines were layed vpon Dauid and other godly men, and saith that the same tended to this ende, that their godlineſse shoulde by such humbling of them, be exercised and proued. And where Esaye saith, that the Iewish people had their iniquitie forgeuen them, bycause they had receiued full chastisement at the Lordes hande: this proueth not that the pardon of sinnes hangeth vpon the full paiment of the peine: but it is in effect asmuch as if he had said: Bycause ye haue alredy suffred peines enough, and by the greuousneſse and multitude thereof haue bene now pined away with longe mourning and sorrowe, therefore it is nowe time that receiuing the tidinges of full mercie, your heartes shoulde reioyce and fele me to be your father. For there God did take vpon him the person of a father, which repenteth him euen of his iuste seueritie, when he was compelled sharply to correct his sonne.

34 With these thoughtes it is necessarie that the faithfull be furnished in bitternesse of afflictions. It is time that the iudgement beganne at the house of the Lorde, in which his name is called vpon. What should the children of God do, if they did beleue the seueritie of God that they fele to be his vengeance? For he that being striken with the hand of God, imagineth God a punishing iudge, can not conceiue him but angry and enemie vnto him, and detest the very scourge of God as a curse and damnation. Finally he can neuer be perswaded that God loueth him, that shall thinke him so minded toward him, that he is still minded to punish him. But he only profiteth vnder the rod of God, that thinketh him to be angry with his sinnes, but merciefull & louinge to himselfe. For otherwise that must needes happen, which the Prophet complaineth that he felt, where he saith. Thy wraths, O God haue passed ouer me: thy terrors haue oppressed me. Also that which Moses writeth, bycause we haue fainted in thy wrath: and we haue bene troubled in thy indignation, thou hast set our iniquities in thy sight, and our secretes in the light of thy countenance: because all our dayes are gone away in thy wrath: our yeres are consumed as the word that is passed out of a mouth. On the other side Dauid saith thus of his fatherly chastisementes, to teach that the faithfull are rather holpen than oppressed thereby: Blessed is the man whom thou hast corrected O Lorde, and hast instructed in thy lawe, to geue him quiet from euell dayes, while a pit is digged for the sinner. Truely it is a harde tentation, when God sparing the vnbeleuers and winking at their faultes, semeth more rigorous against them that be his. Therefore he gaue them a cause of comfort, the admonishment of the lawe, whereby they shoulde learne, that it is done to prouide for their saluation when they are called againe into the way, and the wicked are caried hedlong into their errours, whose ende is the pit. And it is no difference whether the peine be euerlasting or during for a time. For as well warre, famine, pestilence, and sickenesse as the iudgement of eternall death are the curses of God, when they are layed vpon menne to this ende, to be instrumentes of the Lordes wrath and vengeance against the reprobate.

35 Nowe (as I thinke) all men do perceiue whereunto tended that chastisement of the Lorde vpon Dauid: euen to be an instruction that God is greuously displeased with manslaughter and adulterie,

againſt which he had ſhewed ſo great an indignation in his beloued and faithfull ſeruant: that Dauid ſhould be taught to be no more ſo bold to do ỹ like deede: & not to be a paine whereby he ſhould make a certaine recompenſe to God. And ſo is to be iudged of the other kinde of correction, wherby the Lord puniſhed his people with a ſore peſtilence, for Dauids diſobedience wherinto he was fallen in numbring ỹ people. For he did in deede freely forgiue to Dauid the giltineſſe of his ſinne: but becauſe it pertained both to the publike example of all ages, and alſo to the humbling of Dauid, that ſuch a hainous offenſe ſhoulde not remayne vnpuniſhed: therefore he moſt ſharply chaſtiſed him with his rod. Which marke alſo we ought to haue before our eyes in the vniuerſall curſe of mankinde. For wheras after pardon obtained, we do all yet ſuffer the miſeries that were laid vpon our firſt parent for paine of ſinne: we perceiue our ſelues by ſuch exerciſes to be admoniſhed, how grieuouſly God is diſpleaſed with the tranſgreſſion of his law: that being throwen downe & humbled with knoweledge in conſcience of our owne miſerable eſtate, we may the more feruentely aſpire to true bleſſednes. But he ſhalbe moſt fooliſh that ſhall thinke, that the calamities of this preſent life are layed vpon vs for the giltines of ſinne. And that I thinke was the meaning of Chryſoſtome when he wrote thus. If God do therefore lay paines vpon vs, that he ſhould call vs, perſeuering in euils to repentãce, then when repentance is once ſhewed, the paine ſhalbe ſuperfluous. Therfore, as he knoweth it to be expedient for euery mans nature, ſo he handeleth one man more roughly, and an other with more louinge tenderneſſe. Therfore where he mindeth to teach that he is not vnmeaſurable in taking puniſhmẽts, he reprocheth to the hard hearted and obſtinate people that being ſtriken yet they make not an end of ſinning. In this meaninge he cõplaineth, that Ephraim was as a cake ſcorched on the one ſide, and raw on the other, becauſe the corrections did not pearce into their mindes, that the people hauing their vices boyled out, might be made meete to receiue pardon. Truely he that ſo ſpeaketh, ſheweth, that ſo ſoone as a man hath repented, he will byandby become appeaſable: and that by our ſtifnes he is enforced to that rigour in chaſtiſing of faultes, which ſhould haue bin preuented with willing amendement. Yet foraſmuch as we all are of ſuch hardnes and rudeneſſe, as vniuerſally needeth chaſtiſemẽt: it ſeemed good to him being a moſt wiſe father, to exerciſe all without exceptiõ with a cõmon ſcourge all their life long. But it is maruelous why they ſo caſt their eyes vpon the only example of Dauid, & are not moued with ſo many examples, in which they might haue beholdẽ free for-

Dan.4.24. 36 Daniel in his exhortation wherin he counſelleth Nabuchadnezer to redeeme his ſinnes with righteouſneſſe, and his iniquities with pityinge of the poore: his meaning was not to ſay, that righteouſneſſe and mercy are ſatisfactory appeaſementes of God, and redẽption of paines (for God forbid that there were euer any redẽptiõ ſauing only the bloud of Chriſt) but to referre this word Redeeming rather to men than to God, as if he had ſayd: O king, thou haſt vſed an vnrighteous and violent goruernment, thou haſt oppreſſed the humble, thou haſt ſpoyled the poore, thou haſt hardly and vniuſtly handled thy people: for thy vniuſt exactions, for thy violence and oppreſſion, now render to them mercy and righteouſneſſe. Likewiſe Salomon ſayth, that with charity the multitude of ſinnes is couered: not before God, but amonge men themſelues. For thus is the whole verſe: Hatred raiſeth vp contentions: but charity couereth all iniquities. In which verſe, as his maner is, he doth by way of compariſon of contraries, compare the euils that grow of hatreds, with the frutes of charity: in this meaninge, they that hate together, do one bite, barke at, reproch and rayle at an other, and turne all things to the worſt: but they that loue together, do diſſemble many thinges amonge themſelues, do winke at many thinges, and pardon many thinges one to the other: not that the one alloweth the others faultes, but beareth with them, and helpeth them with admoniſhinge, rather than galleth them with reproching them. And it is not to be douted that Peter alleageth this place in the ſame ſenſe, vnleſſe we will accuſe him of deprauing and wrongfully wreſting the Scripture. But whereas he teacheth that ſinne is purged with mercifulneſſe and liberality, he doth not meane that recompenſe is therewith made for ſinne before the face of the Lorde, ſo that God beinge appeaſed by ſuch ſatisfaction doth releaſe the paine that otherwiſe he would haue layd vpon thẽ, but after the accuſtomed manner of the Scripture he declareth that they ſhall finde him merciſull vnto them that leauinge their former vices and iniquities, do turne to him by godlines & trueth: as if he ſhould ſay, that the wrath of God doth ceſſe and his iudgement reſt, when we ceſſe frō our euill doinges. Neither doth he there deſcribe the cauſe of pardō, but rather the maner of true conuerſion. As many times the Prophets do declare that Hypocrites do in vaine peſter God with forged ceremonious vſages in ſtede of repentance, whereas it is vprightnes of life with the duties of charity that deliteth him. As alſo the author of the Epiſtle to the Hebrues commendinge liberality and gentleneſſe, teacheth that ſuch ſacrifices pleaſe God. And when Chriſt, taunting the Phariſes that giuinge heede only to cleanſinge of diſhes, they neglected the cleanneſſe of the heart, commaunded them to giue almes that all might be cleane: he did not thereby exhorte them to make ſatisfaction: but only teacheth what maner of cleanneſſe pleaſeth God. Of which kinde of ſpeach we haue entreated in an other place. Heb.13 16. Mat.23. 25. Luc.11. 39.

37 As touching the place of Luke, no man that hath with ſounde iudgement read the parable that the Lord did there recite, will make vs any controuerſie thereupon. The Phariſee thought with himſelfe, that the Lord did not know the woman, which he had ſo eaſily receiued into his preſence. For he thought that Chriſt would not haue receiued her, if he had knowen her ſuch a ſinner as ſhe was. And therby he gathered, that Chriſt was not a Prophet that might in ſuch ſort be deceiued. The Lord, to ſhewe that ſhe was no ſinner to whom her ſinnes were already forgiuen, did put out this parable. There were two detters to one creditour vpō vſurie: the one ought fifty, the other ought fiue hundred, both had their dettes forgiuen them. Whether oweth more thanke? the Phariſee anſwered: he to whom moſt is forgiuen. The Lord replied: learne hereby that this womans ſinnes are forgiuē her, becauſe ſhe hath loued much. In which words (as you ſe) he maketh not her loue the cauſe, but the proofe of the forgiueneſſe of her ſinnes. For they are deriued vpon a ſimilitude of that dettour, to whome fiue hundred was forgiuen, to whome he did not ſay that therefore it was forgiuen, becauſe he had loued much: but therefore loued much, becauſe it was forgiuen. And hereunto muſt that ſimilitude be applied in this ſorte: Thou thinkeſt this woman to be a ſinner: but thou oughteſt to know that ſhe is none ſuch, foraſmuch as her ſinnes be forgiuen her. And that her ſinnes be forgiuē her, her loue ought to proue vnto thee, whereby ſhe rendereth thanke for this benefit. It is an argument gathered of the following effect, wherby any thing is proued by ſignes enſuinge. By what meane ſhe obtayned forgiuenes of ſinnes, the Lord openly teſtifieth: Thy faith, ſaith he, hath ſaued thee. Therefore we obtayne forgiueneſſe by fayth: Luc.7. 36.

By charity we giue thankes, and teſtifie the bountifulneſſe of the Lord.

38 As for thoſe things that are commonly founde in the bookes of olde wryters concerninge ſatisfaction, they litle moue me. I ſee in deede that many of them, (I will ſpeake plainly) in a maner all whoſe books remaine, haue either erred in this point, or ſpokē to crabbedly and hardly: but I will not graunt that they were ſo rude and vnskilfull as to haue wrytten thoſe thinges in that ſenſe that the new Satisfactionars do readē thē. Chryſoſtome in one place writeth thus: where mercy is required, examination ceſſeth: where mercy is asked, iudgement is not rigorous: where mercy is craued, there is no place for paine: where is mercy, there is no inquiſition. Where is mercy, the anſwere is pardoned. Which wordes howſoeuer they be wreſted, yet they can neuer be made to agree with the Schoolemens doctrines. In the booke of Eccleſiaſticall doctrines, which is fathered vpon Auguſtine, is red thus: Satisfaction of repentance is, to cut of the cauſes of ſinnes, and not to graunt an entrie to their ſuggeſtions. Whereby appeareth that the doctrine of ſatisfaction that was ſayd to be giuen in recompenſe for ſinnes committed, was euen in thoſe times laughed to ſcorne: foraſmuch as they referre all ſatisfaction to a heedefulneſſe in abſtaining frō ſinnes in time to come. I will not alleage that which the ſame Chryſoſtome ſayth, that he requireth of vs no more, but that we ſhoulde confeſſe our ſinnes vnto him with teares: ſith ſuch ſentences are many times found in his wrytings & others. Auguſtine in deede in ſome places calleth the workes of mercy, remedies to obtaine forgiueneſſe of ſinnes: but becauſe no man ſhoulde ſtumble at that litle word, he himſelfe preuenteth it in an other place. The fleſh of Chriſt (ſayth he) the true and onely ſacrifice for ſinnes, not onely theſe ſinnes that are wholly put away in baptiſme, but alſo theſe that afterward creepe in by weakenes: for which the whole church crieth out at this day, Forgiue vs our treſpaſſes. And they are forgiuen by that ſingular ſacrifice.

39 They haue for the moſt parte called ſatisfaction, not a recompenſe to be rendred to God, but an open declaration whereby they that had bin excommunicate when they woulde be receiued againe to the communion, did aſſertaine the church of their repentāce. For there were enioyned vnto them when they did repent certaine faſtinges and other thinges, whereby they might perſwade men that they were truely and hartily weary of their former life, or rather blotte out the remembrance of their former doinges: and ſo they were ſayd to make ſatisfaction not to God, but to the Church. Which is also expressed of Augustine in these wordes in his Enchiridion to Laurence: Out of that auncient custome the confessions and satisfactions that are at this day vsed, tooke their beginning. Truely very viperous birthes, by which is brought to passe, that there remaineth not so much as a shadowe of that better forme. I know that the olde wryters do sometime speake somewhat hardly, and as I sayd euen now, I do not deny that paraduenture they erred herein. But those thinges that were besprinkled with a few spots, when they are once handeled with these mens vnwashed handes, are altogether defiled. And if we must contende with the authority of olde wryters: good God, what olde wryters do they thrust vnto vs? A good parte of those wherewith Peter Lombard their champion hath botched vp his patched Sentences, is gathered out of the vnsauory dotages of certaine monkes that are caried about vnder the name of Ambrose, Hierome, Augustine, and Chrysostome. As about this presente question he taketh in a maner all out of Augustines boke of repentance, which is foolishely botched of good and bad by some scraper together. It beareth in deede the name of Augustine, but such a booke as no man beinge but meanely learned, would voutchsaue to acknowledge for his. But whereas I do not so narowly examine their follies, lette the readers pardon me whom I would ease of that tediousnesse. For to me it should not be very labourſome, and yet very pausible to bewray to their great shame those thinges that they haue heretofore boasted vpon as misteries, but because my purpose is to teach frutefully, therfore I passe them ouer.

Cap. 65 & is rehearsed in the Decretes cap. in actionibus. de pœnit. distic. 1.

The v. Chapter.

Of the supplyings vvhich they adde to satisfactions, as pardons and purgatory.

OVt of this doctrine of satisfactions do flowe indulgences or pardons. For they say that that which our power wanteth to make satisfaction, is supplied by these pardons. And they runne so farre foorth into madnesse, that they define them to be the distribution of the merites of Christ & of the martyrs, which the Pope dealeth abroade by his bulles. But although they haue more neede of Helleborus to putge their frentike braine, than argumentes to answere them, so that it is not much worthy the trauaile to stand vpon confutinge such triflinge errours, which are already shaken with many battelrammes, and of themselues grow into decaied age, and bende toward fallinge: yet because a shorte confutation of them shalbe profitable for some that be ignoraunt, I will not altogether omit it. As for this that pardons haue ſo longe ſtande ſafe, and haue ſo longe bin vnpuniſhed, hauinge bin vſed with ſo outragious and furious licentiouſneſſe: this may ſerue to teach vs in how darke a night of errours, men in certaine ages paſt haue bin drowned. They ſawe themſelues to boopenly and vncolouredly ſcorned of the Pope & his Bulbearers, gainefull markets to be made of the ſaluation of their ſoules, the price of ſaluation to be valued at a few pence, and nothing ſet out to be frely giuen: that by this colour they be wiped of offrings to be filthily ſpent vpon brothels, bawdes and banketinges: that the greateſt blowers abroade of pardons are the greateſt deſpiſers of thē: that this monſter doth daily more & more with greater licentiouſneſſe ouerrunne the worlde, and grow into outrage, and that there is no ende, newe lead dayly brought, and newe mony gotten. Yet with hye reuerence they receiued, they worſhipped and bought pardons, and ſuch as among the reſt ſaw ſomewhat farther, yet thought them to be godly deceites, whereby men might be beguiled with ſome profit. At the length, ſince the world ſuffered it ſelfe to be ſomewhat wiſer, pardons waxe colde, and by litle and litle become froſen, till they vtterly vaniſh away.

2 But foraſmuch as many that ſee the filthy gaminges, the deceites, theftes, and robberies, wherewith the pardoners haue heretofore mocked and begiled vs, yet ſee not the very fountayne of vngodlineſſe from whence they ſpringe: it is good to ſhew not onely of what ſort pardons be, but alſo what they be, when they are wiped frō all ſpottes. They call the treaſure of the church, the merites of Chriſt and of the holy Apoſtles and Martyrs. The principall cuſtody of this barne (as I haue already touched) they faine to be deliuered to the biſhop of Rome, that he ſhould haue the diſtributiō of ſo great gifts, that he might both giue them by himſelfe, and alſo graunt iuriſdiction to other to giue them. Hereupon procede from the Pope ſomtime plenary pardons, ſomtime pardons for certaine yeres: from the Cardinals, pardons for a hundred dayes: from Biſhoppes, pardons for forty dayes. But they be (as I may naturally deſcribe thē) the profaninge of the bloud of Chriſt, Sathans mockery, to leade away the chriſtian people from the grace of God, from the life that is in Chriſt, and to turne them from the true way of ſaluation. For how could the bloude of Chriſt be more filthily prophaned, than when it is denied to ſuffice the remiſſion of ſinnes, to reconciliation and ſatisfaction, vnleſſe the want thereof as being withered and waſted, ſhoulde be otherwiſe ſupplied and profited? The law and all the Prophetes (ſaith Peter) beare witneſſe of Chriſt, that by him forgiueneſſe of ſinne is without euil deseruinges, that we by him might without good deser-uinges obtaine grace not due vnto vs. Truely where as all their doctrine is patched together of horrible sacrileges and blasphemies, yet this is a more monstruous blasphemy than all the other. Let them remember thēselues, whether these be not their decrees: that the Martyrs haue by their death done more to God, and deserued more, than was nedefull for themſelues: and that they had remaining ſo great a plenty of deſeruings, as did alſo ouerflow vnto other: and that therfore, leaſt ſo great goodneſſe ſhoulde be ſuperfluous, their bloud is mingled with the bloud of Chriſt, and of both theſe bloudes is made the treaſure of the church, for the remiſſiō and ſatisfaction of ſinnes.

Colo.1. 24. And that ſo is the ſayinge of Paule to be taken: I ſupply in my body thoſe things that want of the ſuffrings of Chriſt for his body, which is the church. What is this elſe but to leaue Chriſt only his name, otherwiſe to make him but a common pety ſaint, that may ſcarcely among the multitude be knowen from the reſt? He only, only ſhoulde haue bin preached, he onely ſet foorth, he only named, he only bin looked vnto, when the obtaining of forgiueneſſe of ſinne, ſatisfactiō, and ſanctification are entreated of. But let vs heare their curtalled argumentes. Leaſt the bloude of the Martyrs ſhoulde be ſhed in vaine, therefore let it be employed to the common benefit of the Church. Is it ſo? was it no profit to glorifie God by their death? to ſubſcribe to his trueth with their bloud? by deſpiſinge this preſent life, to teſtifie that they ſought for a better life? by their ſtedfaſtneſſe to ſtrengthen the faith of the church, and ouercome the ſtubborneſſe of the enemies? But this is the matter in deede: they acknowledge no profit of the Martyrs death, if Chriſt only be the propitiator, if he onely died for our ſinnes, if he onely was offered vp for our redemption. So (ſay they) Peter and Paul might neuertheleſſe haue obtayned the crown of victory, if they had died in their beddes. And whereas they haue fought euen to the ſhedinge of their bloude, it woulde not agree with ỹ iuſtice of God to leaue the ſame barren & frutcles. As though God could not tel how to encreaſe in his ſeruants their glory, according to the meaſure of his gifts. But the church receiueth in commune together profite enough, when it is by their triumphes encouraged to a zealous deſire to fight.

4 But how maliciouſly do they wreſt that place of Paule where he

Colo.1. 24. ſaith, that he ſupplieth in his body thoſe thinges that wanted of the ſufferings of Chriſt? For he referreth not the default or ſupplying, to the worke of redemption, ſatisfaction, & expiation: but to thoſe afflictions wherwith all the members of Chriſt, that is to ſay, all the faithfull muſt be exerciſed, ſo longe as they ſhall be in this fleſh. He ſayth therfore, that this remaineth of the ſufferings of Chriſt, that he dayly ſuffereth in his members the ſame that he once ſuffered in himſelfe. Chriſt vouchſaueth to do vs ſo great honor, to recken and accompt our afflictions his owne. Where as Paule added theſe wordes, For the church, he meaneth not for the redemption, for the reconciliation, for the satisfaction of the church, but for the edifyinge and profit of the church. As in an other place he sayth, that he suffereth all things for the electes sakes, that they may obtaine the saluation which is in Christ Iesu. And he wrote to the Corinthians, that he suffered all the troubles that he suffred, for their comfort and saluation. And immediatly in the same place he expoundeth himselfe, when he sayth further, that he was made a minister of the church, not for redemption, but accordinge to the dispensation that was committed vnto him, to preach the Gospel of Christ. If they yet require an other expositour, let them heare Augustine. The sufferinges of Christ (sayth he) are in Christ only as in the head: and both in Christ & the church, as in the whole body. Whereby Paule being one member saith, I supply in my body that which wanteth in the suffrings of Christ. Therfore if thou what soeuer thou be ỳ heareſt this, art one of the members of Christ, whatsoeuer thou sufferest of thẽ that are not the members of Christ, that same wanted in the suffrings of Christ. But wherunto the suffrings of the Apostles taken for the church of Christ do tend, he expoundeth in an other place where he sayth: Christ is to me the gate vnto you: because ye are the shepe of Christ bought with his bloud: acknowledging your price, which is not giuẽ of me, but preached by me. Then he addeth. As he hath giuen his soule, so ought we to giue our soules for our brethren, to edifie peace, & to cõfirme faith. These are Augustines words. But God forbid, that Paul should haue thought that any thing wanted in the suffrings of Christ, as concerning all fulnes of righteousnes, saluation and life: or that he meant to adde any thing thereunto, which so plainly and honorably preacheth, that the abundance of grace was so largely poured out by Christ, that it farre surmounted all the force of sinne. By it only all the saintes haue bin saued, & not by ỳ merit of their owne life or death, as Peter expresly testified: so that he should be sclanderous against God & Christ, that should repose the worthines of any saint any where else than in the only mercy of God. But why do I tary hereupon any longer, as vpon a matter yet doutfull, sith the very bewrayinge of such monstruous errours is a sufficient confutation of them?

2. Tim. 2 10. 1. Cor. 1 6. In Psal. 16. Tract. in Ioh. 47. Rom. 5. 15. Act. 15. 11.

5 Now (to passe ouer such abhominations) who taught the Pope to enclose in lead and parchement the grace of Iesus Christ, which the Lord willed to be distributed by the word of the Gospel? Truely either the Gospell of God must be false, or their pardons false. For, that Christ is offred vs in the Gospel, with all abundance of heauenly benefites, with all his merites, with all his righteousnes, wisdom and grace, without any exception, Paul witnesseth where he saith, that the 2. Cor. 1 word of reconciliation was deliuered to the miniſters, whereby they might vſe this forme of meſſage, as it were Chriſt giuing exhortation by them: we beſech you, be ye ſo reconciled to God? He hath made him ẏ knew no ſinne, to be made ſinne for vs, that we might be made the righteouſnes of God in him. And the faithful know of what va-

2. Cor. 1 17. lue is that common partakinge of Chriſt, which (as the ſame Apoſtle witneſſeth) is offred vs to be enioyed in the Goſpel. Contrariwiſe the pardõs do bring out of the ſtorehouſe of the Pope, a certaine pitance of grace, & faſten it to lead, parchement, yea and to a certaine place, & ſeuere it from the word of God. If a man ſhould aske whence this abuſe tooke beginning: it ſeemeth to haue proceded herof, that when in time paſt penitentes were charged with more rigorous ſatisfactiõs than all could beare, they which felt themſelues aboue meaſure oppreſſed with penãce enioyned them, required of the church a releaſe. The mitigation that was graunted to ſuch, was called an indulgence or pardon. But when they turned Satisfactions from the Church to God, & ſayd that they were recompenſes wherby men may redeeme themſelues frõ the iudgement of God, then they therwithall did alſo draw theſe indulgences or pardons to be propitiatory remedies, to deliuer vs from deſerued puniſhments. As for theſe blaſphemers that we haue recited, they forged thẽ ſo ſhameleſſely, that they can haue no colour at all.

6 Now let thẽ no more trouble vs with their purgation, becauſe it is with this axe already broken, hewed downe, & ouerthrowen from the very fundations. For I do not agree to ſome mẽ, that thinke beſt to diſſemble in this point, and make no mention at all of Purgatory, whereupon (as they ſay) great contentions do ariſe, but ſmall edification is gotten Truely I my ſelfe woulde alſo thinke ſuch triſles worthy to be negligently paſſed ouer, if they did not accompt thẽ earneſt matters. But foraſmuch as purgatory is builded of many blaſphemes, and is dayly vpholden with newe blaſphemes, and raiſeth vp many and grieuous offences, truely it is not to be winked at. This paraduenture might after a ſort haue bin diſſembled for a time, that it was inuented by curious and bolde raſhneſſe without the worde of God: that men beleued of it by, I wot not what reuelations, fained by the craft of Sathan: that for the confirmation of it, certaine places of Scripture were fondly wreſted. Albeit the Lord giueth not leaue to mans preſumptuouſnes ſo to breake into ẏ ſecret places of his iudge-
Deu. 18. 21. ments, & hath ſeuerely forbidden men to enquire for trueth at dead mẽ, neglecting his word, & permitteth not his word to be ſo vnreuerẽtly defiled. But let vs graunt, that all thoſe things might for a while

haue bin borne with, as thinges of no great importaunce. But when the cleansinge of sinnes is sought elsse where then in the bloude of Christ, when satisfaction is giuen away to any other thinge, then it is most perillous not to speake of it. Therefore we must crie out not onely with vehement stretching of our voice, but also of our throte and sides: that Purgatory is the damnable deuise of Sathan, that it maketh voide the Crosse of Christ, that it layeth an intolerable sclander vpon the mercy of God, that it feebleth and ouerthroweth our faith. For what elsse is Purgatory amonge them, but the satisfaction that the soules of men departed do pay after their death? So that ouerthrowing the opinion of satisfaction, Purgatory is immediatly ouerthrowen by the very rootes. But if in our former discourse it is more than euident that the bloude of Christ is the onely satisfaction, propitiatory sacrifice and cleansing for the sinnes of the faithfull: what remaineth but that purgatory is a mere and horrible blasphemie against Christ? I passe ouer the robberies of God wherewith it is daily defended, the offenses that it bredeth in religion, and other thinges innumerable, which we see to haue come out of the same spring of vngodlinesse.

7 But it is good to wringe out of their handes such places as they haue falsly & wrongfully take out of the Scripture. When (say they) the Lord affirmeth that ỹ sinne against the holy Ghost should not be forgiuen in this world, nor in the world to come, thereby he sheweth that there is a forgiuenesse of some sinnes in the worlde to come. But who seeth not that the Lord there speaketh of the fault of sinne? Now if it be so, what is that to their Purgatory, forasmuch as by their opinion the paine is there suffred of those sinnes, wherof they deny not the fault to be forgiue in this present life? But that they may no more carp against vs, they shal haue yet a plainer solution. When the Lord meant to cut of all hope of Pardon from so haynous wickednesse, he thought it not enough to say that it should neuer be forgiue: but the more to amplify it, he vsed a diuision, wherin he comprehended both the iudgement that euery mans conscience feeleth in this life, & the last iudgement that shalbe openly pronounced at the resurrection: as thogh he should haue said: Beware ye of malicious rebellio, as of most present damnatio. For he that of set purpose shal endeuour to quench the light of the holy Ghost, shall not obtaine pardon, neither in this life which is giuen to sinners for their conuersion, nor in the last day when the lambes shalbe seuered by the angels of God fro the goats, and the kingdome of heauen shalbe cleansed from all offenses. Then they bringe foorth that parable out of Matthew: Agree with thine aduersary,least he deliuer thee to the Iudge, & the iudge to the Sargeant, and the Sargeant to the prison, from whence thou shalt not get our,vntil thou hast payed the vttermost farthing. If in this place the Iudge do signifie God,and the aduersary plentifse the Deuil,the Sargeant the Angell, and the prison purgatory, I wil gladly yeelde vnto them.But if it be euident to all men, that Christ meant there to show into how many daungers and mischieues they cast themselues, that had rather obstinatly pursue the extremity of the law, thā deale according to equity & good right, to the ende to exhort his disciples the more earnestly to agreement with equity: where thē I pray you shall Purgatory be found?

Mat. 12. 32. Mar. 3. 28. Luc. 12. 10. Mat. 5. 25.

8 They fetch an argument out of ỹ saying of Paul,where he affir-
Phil. 2. 10. meth that the knees of thinges in heauen,earth & hels, shall bow to Christ.For they take it as cōfessed, that hels can not there be meant of those that are adiudged to eternall damnation. Therfore it remaineth that it must be the soules lying in paine in Purgatory. They did not reason very euil, if the Apostle did by kneelinge meane the true godly worshipping.But sith he teacheth only,that there is a dominiō giuen to Christ whereby all creatures are to be subdued,what proofe is there to the contrary,but that we may by hels vnderstand the Deuils,that shalbe brought before ỹ iudgement of God,to acknowledge
Rom.13 10. him their iudge with feare and trembling? Like as Paul himselfe expoundeth the same prophecy in an other place. All (sayth he) shalbe brought before the iudgemēt seate of Christ.For it is written:So truly as I liue,euery knee shall bow to me.&c.But we may not so expound Reue.5. 13. that which is in the Reuelation:I haue heard all creatures,both these things that are in heauen, & those that are vpon the earth, and these that are vnder the earth,& those that are in the seae,& all those that are in thē,I haue heard thē all say to him that sitteth on the Throne & to the Lambe, Blessing & honor, and glory,and power,for euer & euer. That I do in deede easily graunt, but what creatures do they thinke to be here rehearsed? For it is most certaine, that there are contained creatures both without reason and without sense. Wherby is affirmed nothing else,but that all the partes of the world,from the hiest toppe of the heauens,to the very midle point of the earth,do in their maner declare the glory of their creator. As for that which they 2.Mach 12.43. alleage out of the history of the Machabees, I will not vouchsaue to answere it, least I should seeme to recken that worke in the number of the holy books.But Augustine receiued it for Canonicall.But first, of what sure credit did he receiue it? The Iewes (sayth he) esteeme not the wryting of the Machabees as they do the law,the Prophetes

and the Psalmes, of which the Lord himselfe hath witnessed as of his witnesses, saying: It was necessary, that all thinges should be fulfilled that are wrytten in the law, and the Psalmes, and Prophetes, concerning me. But it hath bin receiued of the Church not vnprofitably, if it be soberly read or heard. And Hierom teacheth without any douting that the authority thereof is of no force to prouing of doctrines. And it euidently appeareth by that old booke, which is entituled vnder the name of Cyprian, concerninge the exposition of the Crede, that it had no place at all in the olde Church. But why do I here striue without cause? As though the author himselfe doth not sufficiently shew, how much he is to be credited, whē in the end he craueth pardon, if he haue spoken any thing not well. Truely he that confesseth his wrytings to nede pardon, sayth plainly that they are not the oracles of the holy Ghost. Beside that, ỹ godlines of Iudas is praised for none other cause, but for that he had an assured hope of the last resurrection, when he sent an offring for the dead to Hierusalem. Neither doth the wryter of that history referre that which Iudas did to be a price of redemption, but that they might be partakers of the eternall life with the other faithful, that had died for their contry & religion. This doing was in deede not without superstition and preposterous zeale, but they are more thā fooles, that draw a sacrifice of the law so farre as vnto vs: forasmuch as we know that things do cesse by the comming of Christ, that then were in vse.

Contra gaudēt. epist. 2. cap. 23. Luk. 23. 2. Mach 15. 36.

9 But they haue an inuincible bulwarke in Paul, which can not so easily be battered. If any man (sayth he) build vpon this foundation, gold, siluer, precious stones, timber, heye, stubble, the Lord shall shew euery mans worke what it is: becausе it shal be reuealed in fier, & the fier shall trie euery mans worke what it is. If any mās worke do burne, it shall suffer losse, but he shalbe safe, but as through the fier. What fier (say they) can that be, but the fier of Purgatory? by which the filthinesses of sinne are clensed away, that we may enter pure in to the kingdom of God? But the most part of the old wryters thought it to be an other fier, that is to say, Trouble or the crosse, by which the Lord trieth them that be his, that they should not rest in the filthines of the flesh: & that is much more probable, than in faining purgatory. Albeit I do neither agree with these men, becausе I thinke I haue attained a certaine and much plainer vnderstanding of that place. But before that I vtter it, I woulde haue thē answere me, whether the Apostles & all ỹ saincts must haue gone through this fier of Purgatory? I know they wil say, nay. For it were to much inconueniēt that they must haue neded to be purged, whose merites they dreame to ouer-

Chrysost. August. & others.

flow aboue measure to all the members of the church. But the Apostle affirmeth it. For he doth not say that the worke of some shalbe proued, but the worke of all. Neither is this my argumẽt, but Augustines, which so confuteth that expositiõ. And (which is more absurdity) he doth not say, ỹ they shal passe through the fire for all works: but if they haue faithfully builded the church, they shall receiue reward when their worke is examined with fier. First we see that the Apostle vsed a Metaphore, when he called the doctrines inuẽted by mans braines, wood, hey, & stubble. And the Metaphore hath an apparant rescue: that as wood so soone as it is put in the fier, consumeth & wasteth, so can not those doctrines continue when they come to be examined. Now no man is ignorant that such triall commeth of the holy Ghost. Therefore to folow the true cause of his metaphore, & match the partes together with iust relation, he called the triall of the holy Ghost, fier. For euen as the nerer that gold & siluer are put to the fier, so much the surer proufe they haue of their goodnes and finenes: so the Lords trueth, ỹ more exactly it is weyed with spiritual examination, so much the greater cõfirmation of credit it receiueth. As hey, wood, & stubble put to the fier, are brought to sudden consuming, so the inuentions of men not stablished by the word of God, can not beare the triall of the holy Ghost, but they byandby fal away and perish. Finally, if forged doctrines be compared to wood, hey, and stubble, because like wood, hey, & stubble, they are burned with fire & destroied: but they are not destroied or driuen away but by the spirit of the Lord: it followeth that the holy Ghost is the fier wherwith they shalbe proued, whose prouf Paul, according to the common vse of the Scripture, calleth The day of the Lord. For it is called ỹ day of the Lord, whensoeuer he doth any way shew his presence to mẽ. But thẽ his face principally shineth, when his trueth shineth vpõ vs. Now haue we proued, that Paul meaneth no other fier, but the triall of the holy Ghost. But how are they saued by ỹ fier, that suffer losse of their worke? That shall not be hard to vnderstande, if we consider of what kinde of men he speaketh. For he toucheth those builders of the church, that keping the true fundation, do build disagreeing matter vpon it, that is to say, they that not swaruing frõ the chiefe & necessary articles of faith, do erre in pointes that be smaler & lesse perilous mingling their owne deuises with the word of God. Such I say, must suffer losse of their worke, hauinge their deuises destroied. But themselues are saued, but as by the fier: that is to say, not that their ignorance and errour is allowable before the Lord, but because they are cleansed from it by the grace and power of the holy Ghost. Therfore who-

whosoeuer haue defiled the golden fineneſſe of Gods word with this dong of purgatory, they muſt nedes ſuffer loſſe of their worke.

10 But they wil ſay, it hath bin an auncient vſage of the church. Paule anſwered this obiection when he comprehendeth his owne time in that ſentence, where he ſayth, that all they muſt ſuffer loſſe of their worke, that in the building of the church, do lay any thing vpō the fundation that agreeth not with it, Therefore when the aduerſaries obiect againſt me, that it hath bin vſed aboue a thouſande and three hundreth yeares, to haue prayers made for the dead: I aske thē againe, by what word of God, by what Reuelation, by what example it was done. For here they do not only want teſtimonies of Scripture but alſo all the examples of holy men that there are red, do ſhew no ſuch thing. Of the mourning and order of funeralles there are ſomtimes found many & long tales: but of prayers you can not ſee one tittle. But of the greater weight that the matter is, the more it ought to haue bin expreſſely ſpoken. But the very old fathers themſelues that prayed for the dead, did ſee that herein they wanted both commaundement of God, and lawfull example. Why then durſt they ſo do? In this I ſay, they did ſuffer ſomwhat as men: & therfore I affirme that, that which they did, ought not to be drawē into example. For where as the faithfull ought to enterpriſe the doinge of nothing, but vpon aſſured conſcience, as Paule teacheth: this aſſuredneſſe is principally required in prayer. But it is likely that they were led by ſome reaſon vnto it: they ſought ſome comfort to relieue their ſorrow: and it ſeemed vnnatural not to ſhew before God ſome teſtimony of their loue toward the dead. Howe mans wit is enclined to this affection, all men know by experience. Alſo the receiued cuſtome was like a burninge brand to ſet many mens mindes on fier. We knowe that with all nations & in all ages there were funerals done for ỹ dead, & their ſoules yearely purged. For though Sathan beguiled fooliſh men with theſe deceites: yet he tooke occaſion ſo to begile by a true principle: that death is not a deſtructiō, but a paſſage out of this life into an other. And it is no dout, but that euē very ſuperſtitiō condēneth the Gentils before the iudgement ſeat of God, for neglecting the care of the life to come, which they profeſſed themſelues to beleue. Nowe Chriſtians, becauſe they would not be worſe than Heathē men, were aſhamed to do nothing for the dead, as though they were vtterly deſtroied. Herupon came that il aduiſed diligence: becauſe if they were ſlow in looking to ỹ funerals, in banketinges & offrings, they thought that they had put themſelues in daunger of a great reproche. And that which firſt proceeded from a wrongful following of the Heathens example, was so multiplied by often new encreases, that now it is the principal holynesse of Papistry, to help the dead in distresse. But the Scripture Reu.14. 13. ministreth an other much better and perfecter comfort, when it testifieth, that the dead are blessed that die in the Lorde. And it addeth a reason: because from thence forth they rest frō their labours. And we ought not so much tenderly to follow our owne affection of loue, to set vp a wrōgful maner of praying in the church. Truely he that hath but meane wisdom, doth soone perceiue that all that is red hereof in the olde wryters, was done to beare with the common vsage, and the ignorance of the people. They themselues also, I graunt, were caried away into errour euen as vnaduised lightnes of beliefe is wont to rob mens wits of iudgement. But in the meane time the very readinge of them doth shew, how doutingly they commend prayers for the dead. Augustine in his booke of confessions, reporteth that Monica his mother did earnestly desire, that she might be remembred in celebrating the ministeries at the Altar. An old wiues request, which ỹ sonne neuer examined by the rule of the Scripture, but according to his affectiō of nature, would haue it allowed of other. As for the booke that he made of care for the deade, containeth so many doutinges, that of right it ought with the coldnes thereof to quench the heate of a foolish zeale: if any man desire to be a proctor for dead men, truely with cold likelihodes it wil bring them out of care that were before careful. For this is one piller of it, that this doing is not to be despised, because it is a custome growē in vse, that the dead should be prayed for. But though I graūt to the old writers of the church, that it is a charitable vse to help the dead: yet we must stil hold one rule which cā not deceiue: that it is not lawfull for vs in our prayers to vse any thing of our own, but our requestes must be made subiect to the word of God: because it is in his wil to appoint what he wil haue to be asked. Now where as the whole lawe and the Gospell do not so much as in one sillable giue liberty to pray for the dead, it is a prophane abuse of the inuocation of God to atttempt more than he commaundeth vs. But that our aduersaries may not boast that they haue the aunciēt church cōpanion of their errour: I say there is great difference betwene thē & it. They vsed a memorial of ỹ dead, least they should seeme to haue cast away all care of them: but they did therewithall confesse that they douted of their state. As for purgatory, they so affirmed nothing that they helde it for a thinge vncertaine. These men require to haue that which they haue dreamed of purgatory, to be holdē wout questiō for an article of faith. They slenderly & only to passe it lghtly ouer, did in the cōmunion of the holy supper cōmend their dead to God:

These

These do continually call vpon the care of the dead,and with importunate praising it,do make it to be preferred aboue all dutieful works of charitie.Yea and it were not harde for vs to bringe forth some testimonies of the olde writers, that do manifestly ouerthrowe all those prayers for the dead,which then weare vsed. As this of Augustine,when he teacheth that all men loke for the resurrection of the flesh and the eternall glorie,and that euery man then receiueth the rest that followeth after death, if he be worthy when he dieth. And therefore he testifieth, that all the Godly do immediatly after death enioy the blessed rest as well as the Prophets, Apostles and martyrs. If their estate be such, what I beseche you, shall our prayers availe them? I passe ouer the grosser superstitions, wherewith they haue bewitched the mindes of the simple: which yet are so innumerable and the most part so mōstruous,that they can haue no honest collour to excuse them. Also I let passe those most filthy byings and sellings that they haue vsed, while the worlde was in such grosse senslesse ignorance.For both I shoulde neuer make an ende,and also the readers shall without any rehearsall of them,haue here sufficient, whervpon they may stablish their consciences. Hom.in Ioan. 456.

The vj. Chapter.

Of the life of a Christian man: And first by vvhat argumentes the Scripture exhorteth vs thereunto.

WE haue already said,that the marke whereunto regeneration tendeth, is that in the life of the faithfull there should appeare an agrement and consent betwene the righteousnesse of God and their obedience:and that so they should confirme the adoption,whereby they are receiued to be children. But although his lawe conteine in it selfe that newnesse, whereby the image of God is restored in vs,yet because our dulnesse hath neede both of many prickinges forwarde and helpes, therefore it shalbe profitable to gather out of diuerse places of the Scripture an order of framing of life, that they that haue a desirous minde of amendement, may not wander out of the way in their endeuour. Now when I take vpon me the framing of a Christian mans life,I am not ignorant that I entre into a manifold and plentuous argument, and such as may with the greatnesse thereof fill a long volume, if I wold absolutely entreate of it in all pointes.For we se into what great length are stretched the exhortatorie orations of olde writers,made onely euery one of one seuerall vertue. And that is not done with too much idle babbling. For what so euer vertue a mā purpose to set out in oration, the ſtile runneth of it ſelfe into ſuch largenes with plentie of matter, that a man can not ſeme to haue diſcourſed well of it, vnleſſe he haue ſpoken much. But my mind is not to ſtretche ſo far the inſtitution of life, which I promiſe to teache, as peculiarly to go through euery ſpeciall vertue, and wander abrode into exhortations. Let ſuch thinges be fetched out of other mens writinges, and ſpecially out of the Homelies of the olde fathers. It ſhalbe enough for me to ſhewe an orderly trade, wherby a godly man may be guided to a right marke of framing his life, and ſhortly to apoint out a certain vniuerſall rule, by which he may well trie what be his duties. There ſhall paraduenture at ſome other ſeaſon be a fit time to make declamations, or I will leaue that to other, which I my ſelfe am not mete to do. I do naturally loue ſhortneſſe, and paraduenture if I would ſpeake more at large, it woulde not frame well with me. And if a lõger manner of teaching were neuer ſo much pleaſing, yet I would ſcarce haue minde to put it in profe. But the courſe of this preſent worke requireth to knit vp a ſimple doctrine with as great ſhortneſſe as I may. As the Phyloſophers haue their certaine endes of right and honeſtie, from which they deriue particular duties and all the companie of vertues: ſo the Scripture is not without her order in this matter: but holdeth a moſt goodly well ordred diſpoſition, and much more certaine than all the Phyloſophers orders. This only is the difference, that they (as they were vaineglorious men) haue diligently endeuoured to atteine an exquiſite plainneſſe of order, to ſhewe fourth the ready aptneſſe of their witte. But the Spirit of God, becauſe he taught without curious affectation, hath not ſo exactely nor continually kept an orderly trade: which yet when he ſometime vſeth, he doth ſufficiently declare, that it is not to be neglected of vs.

2 This inſtruction that the Scripture teacheth, whereof we now ſpeake, ſtãdeth chiefely vpon two partes. The firſt, that there be poured and brought into our mindes a loue of righteouſneſſe, to which otherwiſe we are of nature nothing inclined. The ſeconde, that there be a rule ſet out vnto vs, that may not ſuffer vs to go out of the way in following righteouſnes. In commendation of righteouſnes it hath both very many and very good reaſons: of which we haue herebefore in diuerſe places ſpoken of ſome, and other ſome we ſhall in this place briefely touch. At what foundation may it better beginne, than when it putteth vs in minde that we muſt be holy, becauſe our God is holy? For when we were ſcattered abrode like ſtraying ſhepe, and diſperſed abrode in the maze of the world, he gathered vs together againe, to ioine vs in one flocke with him ſelfe. When we heare mention made of our ioining with God, let vs remember that holinesse must be the bonde thereof. Not that by the merite of holinesse we come into common with him: (where as rather we must first cleaue vnto him, that beying endued with his holinesse, we may followe whether he calleth) but because it greatly perteineth to his glorie, that he haue no fellowship with wickednesse and vncleannesse. Therfore also it teacheth, that this is the ende of our calling, which we ought alway to haue respect vnto, if we will answere God that calleth vs. For to what purpose was it, that we should be drawen out of the wickednesse and filthenesse of the world, if we geue our selues leaue all our life long to wallowe in them still? Moreouer it also admonisheth vs, that to the ende we may be reckened among the people of God, we must dwell in the holy citie Hierusalem. Which as he hath halowed to him selfe, so is it vnlawefull that it be vnholily profaned by the vncleannesse of the inhabitantes. From hence came these sayinges, that they shall haue a place in the tabernacle of God that walke without spot, and studie to followe righteousnesse. &c. Because it is not meete that the Sanctuarie whereon he dwelleth, shoulde be like a stable full of filthinesse. Psa. 35. 8. Psa. 15. 1. & 23.

3 And the better to awake vs, it sheweth that God the father, as he hath ioined vs to him selfe in his Christ, so hath printed an image for vs in him, after which he would haue vs to be fashioned. Now let them finde me a better order among the Phylosophers, that thinke that the phylosophie concerning manners, is in them onely orderly framed. They when they will excellently well exhorte vs to vertue, bring nothing els but that we should liue agreably to nature. But the Scripture bringeth here exhortation from the true welspringe, when it not onely teacheth vs to referre our life to God, the authour of it, to whom it is bonde: but also when she hath taught that we are swarued out of kinde from the true originall & state of our creation, she immediatly addeth, that Christ by whom we come againe into fauour with God, is set before vs for an example, that we should expresse the forme thereof in our life. What may a man require more effectuall then this one thing? Ye what may a manne require more than this onely thing? For if the Lorde hath by adoption made vs children with this condition, that our life shoulde resemble Christ the bond of our adoption: if we do not geue and auowe our selues to righteousnesse, we do not onely with most wicked breach of allegiaunce depart from our creatour, but also we forsweare him to be our sauiour. Then the Scripture taketh matter of exhortation out of all the benefites of God, which she reherseth vnto vs, & all the partes

Mala.1. 6. of our ſaluation. And ſheweth that ſith God hath ſhewed himſelfe a father vnto vs, we are worthy to be cõdemned of extreme vnthankefulneſſe, if we do not likewiſe in our behalfe ſhewe our ſelues children vnto him. Sith Chriſt hath cleanſed vs with the waſhing of his blood, and hath made vs partakers of this cleanſing by baptiſme, it is not ſemely that we ſhoulde be ſpotted with newe filthineſſe. Sith he hath graffed vs into his body, we muſt carefully take hede that we ſprincle not any ſpot or blot vpon vs that are his members. Sith he him ſelfe that is our head, is aſcended into heauen, it behoueth vs that laying away earthly affection, we do with all our heart aſpire to heauenward: Sith the holy Ghoſt hath dedicated vs temples to God, we muſt endeuour that Gods glorie may be honorably ſet out by vs, and muſt not do any thing wherby we may be prophaned with filthineſſe of ſinne: Sith both our ſoule and our body are ordeined to heauenly incorruption and an vnperiſhing crowne, we muſt diligently trauaill, that the ſame may be kept pure and vncorrupted vnto the day of the Lorde. Theſe (I ſay) be the beſt layed foundations to bilde a mans life, and ſuch as the like are not to be found among the Phyloſophers, which in commendation of vertue do neuer climbe aboue the naturall dignitie of man.

1. Theſ. 5.15. 4 And here is a fit place to ſpeake vnto them, that hauinge nothing but the title and badge of Chriſt, yet would be named Chriſtiãs. But with what face do they boſt of his holy name: ſith none haue any fellowſhip with Chriſt, but they that haue receiued a true knowledge of him out of the worde of the Goſpell? But the Apoſtle ſaith, that all they haue not rightly learned Chriſt, that are not taught that they muſt caſt away the old man which is corrupted according to the deſire of errour, and haue not put on Chriſt. Therefore it is proued that they falſly, yea and wrongfully pretẽde the knowledge of Chriſt, although they can eloquently and roundely talke of the Goſpell. For it is not a doctrine of tong, but of life: and is not conceiued as other learnings be, with onely vnderſtanding and memorie, but is then onely receiued when it poſſeſſeth the whole ſoule, and findeth a ſeate and place to hold it in the moſt inward affection of the heart. Therefore either let them ceſſe, to the ſclaunder of God, to boſt of that which they are not, or let them ſhew themſelues not vnworthy ſcholars for Chriſt their maiſter. We haue geuen the firſt place to the doctrine wherin our religion is conteined, becauſe our ſaluation beginneth at it: but the ſame muſt be poured into our hearte, and paſſe into our maners, yea and transforme vs into it, that it be not vnfruteſull vnto vs. If the Philoſophers do iuſtly chaſe againſt them, and do with shamefull reproche driue them from their companie, that professing an art that ought to be the scholemaistres of life, do turne it into a Sophisticall babbling: with how much better reason shall we detest these trifling Sophisters, that are contented to role the Gospell vpon the top of their tonges, the effectuall working whereof ought to pearce into the innermost affections of the heart, to rest in the soule, & to alter the whole man a hundred times more, than the colde exhortations of Philosophers?

5 Yet do I not require, that the maners of a Christian man sauour of nothing but the absolute Gospel: which neuertheless both were to be wished, and we must endeuour vs toward it. But I do not so seuerely require a Gospellike perfection, that I would not acknowledge him for a Christian that hath not yet atteined vnto it. For so should all men be excluded from the Church, sith there is no man found that is not by a great space distant from it, and many haue hetherto but a litle way proceded toward it, who yet should be vniustly cast away. What thē? let that be set for the marke before our eyes, to which alone all our endeuour may be directed. Let that be apointed the gole for vs to runne and trauaile vnto. For it is not lawefull for thee so to make partition with God, to take vpon thee part of these thinges that are commaunded thee in his word, and to leaue part at thine owne choise. For first of all he euery where commendeth integritie as the chiefe part of worshipping him: by which word he meaneth a pure simplicitie of mind that is without all deceitful colour & faining: against which a double heart is set as cōtrarie: as if it should be said, that the beginning of liuing vprightly is spirituall, when the inward affection of the mind is without faining dedicate to God to obserue holinesse & righteousnes. But because no man in this earthly prison of the body hath so great strength to hast with such freshnesse of runninge, as he perfectly ought to do, and the greater number are so feble, that with staggering and haltinge, yea and creping vpon the ground, they auaunce but slowly forward: let vs euery one go according to the measure of his litle power, and procede on our iourney begon. No man shall go so vntowardly, but he shall euery day get some ground, though it be but litle. Therfore let vs not cesse to trauail so, that we may continually procede somwhat in the way of the Lord. And let vs not despeire vpon the slenderne sse of our going forward, for howsoeuer the succesſe aunswere not our desire, yet we haue not lost our laboure when this day passeth yesterday: so that with pure simplicitie we loke vnto our marke, and long toward the ende of our course, not soothingly flattering our selues, nor tenderly bearing with our owne euils, but with continuall endeuour trauailing to this, that we may ſtill become better than our ſelues, till we atteine to goodneſſe it ſelfe: which in deede we ſeke for and followe all our life long: but we ſhall then only atteine it, when being vnclothed of the weakenes of the fleſh, we ſhalbe receiued into the full fellowſhip thereof.

The vij. Chapter.

The ſumme of a Chriſtian life: vvhere is entreated of the forſaking of our ſelues.

ALbeit that the lawe of the Lorde haue a moſt aptly well diſpoſed order to frame a mans life, yet it ſemed good to the heauēly ſcholemaiſter to inſtruct men yet with a more exact trade to the ſame rule that he had ſet fourth in his law. And the beginning of that trade, is this: that it is the dutie of the faithfull to yelde their bodies to God a liuing, holy and acceptable ſacrifice vnto him: and that therein ſtandeth the true worſhipping of him. Herevpon is gathered occaſion to exhorte men, that they do not applie them ſelues to the faſhion of this world, but be transformed in renewinge of their minde, that they may proue what the will of God is. Nowe this is a great thing, that we be conſecrate and dedicate to God: that we ſhould from thenceforth thinke, ſpeake, imagine, or do nothing but to his glorie. For the thing that is conſecrate, can not be applied to vnholy vſes, without great wronge done vnto him. If we be not our own, but the Lordes, it appeareth what errour is to be auoided, and whereunto all the doinges of our life are to be directed. We are not our owne: therefore let neither our owne reaſon nor our owne will beare rule in our counſelles and doinges. We are not our owne: therefore let vs not make this the ende for vs to tend vnto, to ſeke that which may be expediēt for vs according to the fleſh. We are not our owne: therefore ſo much as we may, let vs forget our ſelues and all things that are our owne. On the other ſide, we are Gods: therefore let vs liue and dye to him. We are Gods: therefore let his wiſdome and will gouerne all our doinges. We are Gods: therefore let all the partes of our life tend towarde him as their onely lawful end. Oh how much hath he profited, that hauing learned that himſelfe is not his owne, hath taken frō him ſelfe the rule & gouernment of himſelfe to geue it to God. For as this is ỹ moſt ſtrong working peſtilence to deſtroy men, that they obey thēſelues: ſo it is the onely hauen of ſafetie, neither to knowe nor will any thing by him ſelfe, but onely to follow God going before him. Let this therefore be the firſt ſteppe, that man departe from himſelfe, that he may apply all

Rom. 12.1.

Ro. 14. 8.

all the force of his wit to the obeying of the Lorde. Obeying I call not onely that which ſtandeth in obedience of the worde, but that whereby the minde of man, voide from his owne ſenſualitie of fleſh, bendeth it ſelfe wholly to the will of Gods ſpirit. Of this transformation (which Paule calleth renewing of the minde) where as it is the first entrie into life, all the Phyloſophers were ignoraunt. For they make onely Reaſon the gouerneſſe of man: they thinke ſhe onely ought to be heard: finally to her onely they geue and aſſigne the rule of manners. But the Chriſtian Phyloſophie biddeth her to geue place, and to yeld and be ſubiect to the holy Ghoſt: ſo that man now may not liue himſelfe, but beare Chriſt liuing and reigning in him. Ephe.4. 23. Gala.2. 20.

2 Herevpon followeth alſo this other point, that we ſeeke not the thinges that be our owne, but thoſe thinges that be according to the will of the Lord, and that make to the aduauncemẽt of his glory. This is alſo a profe of great profiting, that in a manner forgetting our ſelues, and altogether leauing the regarde of our ſelues, we trauail to employ our ſtudy to God and his commaundements. For when the Scripture biddeth vs to leaue priuate regard of our ſelues, it doth not onely race out of our mindes the couetouſneſſe of hauing, the gredy ſeking for power and fauour of men: but alſo rooteth out ambition and all deſire of worldly glorie, and other more ſecrete peſtilences. Truly a Chriſtian man muſt be ſo faſhioned and diſpoſed, to thinke throughout all his life, that he hath to do with God. In this ſort, as he ſhall examine all his doings by Gods will and iudgement: ſo he ſhall reuerently direct vnto him all ỹ earneſtly bent diligence of his minde. For he that hath learned to loke vpon God in all things that he hath to do, is therewithall turned a way from all vaine thoughtes. This is that forſaking of our ſelues, which Chriſt euen from their firſt beginning of inſtruction ſo earneſtly gaue in charge to his Diſciples: which when it ones hath gotten poſſeſſion in the heart leaueth no place at all, firſt neither for pride, nor diſdainfulnes, nor vain glorious boſting, then neither for couetiſe, nor filthy luſt, nor riotouſneſſe, nor deintineſſe, nor for other euils that are engẽdred of the loue of our ſelues. Contrariwiſe wherſoeuer it reigneth not, there either moſt filthy vices do range without ſhame, or if there be any ſpice of vertue, it is corrupted with peruerſe deſire of glory. For ſhew me a man, if thou canſt, that vnles he haue forſaken him ſelfe according to ỹ cõmaundement of the Lord, will of his owne free will vſe goodneſſe among men. For all they that haue not ben poſſeſſed with this feling, if they haue followed vertue, they haue done it at ỹ leaſt for praiſes ſake. And all ỹ Phyloſophers that euer moſt of all affirmed that vertue was to be desired for it selfes sake, were puffed vp with so great pride, that is appeared that they desired vertue for no other thinge, but that they might haue matter to be proude vpon. But God is so nothing at all delited, neither with those gapers for the peoples breath, nor with these swelling beastes, that he pronounceth that they haue already receiued their rewarde in the world, and maketh harlottes and Publicanes nerer to the kingdome of heauen, than them. And yet we haue not throughly declared with how many and how great stoppes man is hindred from that which is right, so long as he hath nor forsaken him selfe. For it was truely said in time past, that there is a world of vices hidden in the soule of man. And thou canst finde no other remedies, but denying thy selfe, and leauing regarde of thy selfe, to bende thy minde to seeke those thinges that the Lorde requireth of thee, and to seke them therefore onely becausе they please him.

Tit 2. 12. 3 In an other place the same Paule doth more plainly, although shortly, go through all the partes of a well ordred life, saying: The grace of God that bringeth saluation vnto all men, hath appeared and teacheth vs, that we should denie all vngodlinesse, and worldly lustes, and that we should liue sobre minded, righteously and Godly in this present worlde, loking for the blessed hope and glorious appearing of the mighty God, and of our sauiour Iesus Christ, which gaue him selfe for vs to redeme vs from all vnrighteousnesse, and to purge vs a peculiar people vnto him selfe feruently geuen vnto good works. For after that he hath set forth the grace of God to encorage them, to make redy the way for vs to worshippe God, he taketh away two stoppes that do most hinder vs, that is to say, Vngodlinesse, whervnto we are naturally to much enclined, and Worldly desires, which extende further. And vnder the name of vngodlinesse, he not onely meaneth superstitions, but also comprehendeth all that disagreeth with the earnest feare of God. And worldly lustes are in effect as much as the affections of the flesh. Therfore he commaundeth vs in respect of both the tables of the lawe, to put of our owne wit, and to forsake all that our owne reason and will informeth vs. And all the doinges of our life he bringeth into three partes, sobrietie, righteousnesse, and godlinesse: of the which sobrietie without doubt signifieth as well chastitie and temperaunce, as a pure and measurably sparing vse of temporall things, and a pacient sufferance of pouertie. Righteousnesse conteineth all the duties of equitie, to geue euery man his owne. The thirde is Godlinesse, that seuereth vs from the defilinges of the world, & with true holinesse ioineth vs to God. These things, when they be knit together with an vnseparable knot, make a full perfection. But for as much as nothing is more hard, than forsaking the reason of the flesh, yea subduinge and renouncing her desires, to geue our selues to God and our brethren, and to studie for an angelike life in the filthy state of this earth: therefore Paule, to loose our mindes from all snares, calleth vs back to the hope of blessed immortalitie, admonishing vs not to striue in vaine: because as Christ hath ones appeared the redemer, so at his last comming, he shall shew the frute of the saluation that he hath purchaced. And thus he driueth away the enticementes that blinde vs, and make vs not to aspire as we ought to the heauenly glorie: yea and he teacheth that we must trauaill as men being from home in this worlde, that the heauenly inheritaunce be not lost or fall away from vs.

4 Nowe in these wordes we perceiue, that the forsaking of our selues hath partly respect to men, and partly, yea chiefly to God. For where as the scripture biddeth vs so to behaue our selues with men, that we preferre them before vs in honour, that we faithfully employ our selues wholly to procure their commodities: therefore it greueth such commaundements as our minde is not able to receiue, but first being made voide of naturall sense. For (with such blindenesse we runne all into loue of our selues) euery man thinketh him selfe to haue a iust cause to aduaunce him selfe, and to despise all other in comparison of him selfe. If God haue geuen vs any good gift, by and by bearing our selues bold therof we lift vp our courage, & not only swel, but in a maner burst with pride. The vices wherewith we abound, we do both diligently hide from other, and to our selues we flatteringly faine them light and slender, and sometime embrace them for vertues. And if the same good giftes, which we praise in our selues, or better do appeare in other, least we shoulde be compelled to geue place to them, we do with our enuiousnesse deface them and finde fault with them. If there be any faultes in them, we are not contented seuerely and sharpely to marke it, but we also odiously amplifie it. Herevpon groweth that insolence, that euery one of vs, as though he were priuileged from the common estate, would be hier than the rest, and carelessly and proudly set light by euery man, or despise them as inferiours. The poore yeld to the rich, base people to gentlemen, seruantes to their maisters, vnlearned to the learned: but there is no man that doth not nourishe within himselfe some opinion of excellencie. So euery man in flattering himselfe, beareth a certaine kingdome in his breast. For presumptuously taking vpon them somwhat whereby to please themselues, they iudge vpon the wittes and manners of other menne. But if they come to contention, there bur-ſteth out their poiſon. For many do make a ſhewe of great mekenes, ſo longe as they finde all things gentle and louely: but howe many a one is there that kepeth that continuall courſe of modeſtie, when he is pricked and ſtirred to anger? And there is no remedie hereof, but that the moſt hurtfull peſtilence of loue, of ſoueraingtie and ſelfe loue be rooted out of the bottome of their heartes, as it is rooted out by the doctrine of the Scripture. For there we are ſo taught, that we muſt remember that the good giftes that God hath geuen vs, are not our owne good things, but the free giftes of God, whereof if any be proude, they bewraye their owne vnthankefulneſſe. Who maketh

1. Cor. 4. 7. thee to excell? Paule ſaith, if thou haſt receiued all things, why doſt thou boſt as if they were not geuen thee? Then, that we muſt with continuall reknowledging of our faultes, call our ſelues back to humilitie. So ſhall there remaine in vs nothing to be proude vpon, but there ſhalbe much matter to abace our ſelues. Againe, we are commaunded, whatſoeuer giftes of God we ſee in other men, ſo to reuerence and eſteme thoſe gifts, that we alſo honour thoſe menne in whom they be. For it were a great lewdnes for vs, to take from them that honour, the God hath vouchesaued to geue them. As for their faults, we are taught to winke at them, not to cheriſh them with flattering, but that we ſhould not by reaſon of thoſe faultes triumphe againſt them, to whome we ought to beare good will and honour. So ſhall it come to paſſe, that with what man ſo euer we haue to do, we ſhall behaue our ſelues not onely temperatly and modeſtly, but alſo gently and frendly. As a man ſhall neuer come any other way to true mekeneſſe, but if he haue a heart endued with abacing of himſelfe, and reuerencing of other.

5 Nowe howe hard is it, for thee to do thy dutie in ſeking the profit of thy neighbour? Thou ſhalt herin labour in vaine, vnleſſe thou depart from regard of thy ſelfe, and in a manner put of thy ſelfe. For howe canſt thou performe theſe things that Paule teacheth to be the workes of charitie, vnleſſe thou forſake thy ſelfe, to geue thy
1. Cor. 13. 4. ſelfe wholy to other? Charitie (ſaith he) is patient and gentle, not proude, not diſdainefull, enuieth not, ſwelleth not, ſeeketh not her owne, is not angry, &c. If this one thing be required, that we ſeke not the things that are our owne, we ſhall do no ſmall violence to nature, which ſo bendeth vs to the onely loue of our ſelues, that it doth not eaſily ſuffer vs negligētly to paſſe ouer our ſelues & our owne things, to watch for other mens commodities, yea to depart with our owne right to reſigne it to an other. But the Scripture, to leade vs thether as it were by the hand, warneth vs that what ſo euer gracious giftes

we obteine of the Lorde, they are committed vnto vs vpon this condition, that they ſhould be beſtowed to the common benefit of the Church: and that therefore the true vſe of all Gods graces is a liberall and bountifull communicating of them to other. There can be no certaine rule, nor more forceable exhortatiō could be deuiſed for the kepinge of the ſame, than when we be taught that all the good giftes that we haue, are things of God deliuered, committed to our truſt vpon this condition, that they ſhoulde be diſpoſed to the benefit of our neighbours. But the Scripture goeth yet further, when it compareth them to the powers wherewith the members of mans body are endued. No mēber hath his power for himſelf, nor applieth it to his priuate vſe: but poureth it abrode into the other membres of the ſame body, and taketh no profit therof, but ſuch as procedeth from the common commoditie of the whole body. So whatſoeuer a godly man is able to do, he ought to be able to do it for his brethren, in prouidinge none otherwiſe priuately for himſelfe, but ſo that his minde be bent to the common edification of the Church. Let this therfore be our order for kindneſſe and doing good: that whatſoeuer God hath beſtowed vpon vs, whereby we may helpe our neighbour, we are the Bailies thereof, and bound to render accompt of the diſpoſing of it. And that the onely right diſpoſing is that which is tried by the rule of loue. So ſhall it come to paſſe, that we ſhall alway not only ioine the trauaill for other mens commoditie with the care of our owne profit, but alſo ſet it before the care of our owne. And that we ſhould not happen to be ignorant that this is the true lawe of diſpoſing all the giftes that we receiue of God, he hath in the olde time ſet the ſame lawe euen in the ſmaleſt giftes of his liberalitie. For he cō- Exo. 22. maunded the firſt frutes of corne to be offred vnto him, by which 29 and the people might teſtifie that it was vnlawfull for them to take any 23. 19. frute of the goods that were not firſt conſecrate to him. If the gifes of God be ſo onely then ſanctified vnto vs, when we haue with our owne hande dedicate them to the authour thereof, it is euident that it is an vntrue abuſe thereof that doth not ſauour of ſuch dedicatiō. But it ſhalbe vaine for thee to go about to enriche the Lorde with communicating to him of thy things. Therefore ſith thy liberalitie can not extende vnto him, as the Prophet ſaith, thou muſt vſe it Pſa. 16. toward his ſaintes that are in earth. Therefore almes are compared 3. to holy oblations, that they may nowe be correſpondent to theſe of Heb. 13. the lawe. 16.

6 But, ỳ we ſhould not be wery w̄ doing good (which otherwiſe muſt needes come quickly to paſſe) that other thing muſt be adioined

1 Cor. 13.4. which the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of, that charitie is patient and not moued to anger. The Lorde commaundeth to do good to all vniuerſally, of whom a great part are moſt vnworthy, if they be conſidered by their owne deſeruing. But here ỹ Scripture helpeth with a very good meane, when it teacheth that we muſt not haue reſpect what men deſerue of themſelues, but that the image of God is to be conſidered in all men, to which we owe all honour and loue. But the ſame is moſt diligently to be marked in them of the houſeholde of faith, in ſo much as it is Gala. 6. 10. in them renewed and reſtored by the Spirite of Chriſt. Therefore whatſoeuer man thou light vpon, that needeth thy helpe, thou haſt Eſa. 58. 7. no cauſe to withdraw thy ſelfe from doing him good. If thou ſay that he is a ſtranger: but the Lorde hath geuen him a marke, that ought to be familiar vnto thee, by the reaſō that he forbiddeth thee to deſpiſe thine owne fleſh. If thou ſay that he is baſe and nought worth: but the Lord ſheweth him to be ſuch a one, to whom he hath vouchſaued to geue the beautie of his image. If thou ſay that thou oweſt him nothing for any thing that he hath done for thee: but God hath ſet him as it were in his place, in reſpect of whom, thou knoweſt ſo many and ſo great benefites wherewith he hath bound thee vnto him. If thou ſay that he is vnworthy that thou ſhouldeſt labour any thing at all for his ſake: but the image of God whereby he is commended to thee, is worthy that thou ſhouldeſt geue thy ſelf Mat. 6. 24. and & al that thou haſt vnto it. But if he haue not only deſerued no good 18. 35. at thy hande, but alſo prouoked thee with wrongs and euell doings: euen this is no iuſte cauſe why thou ſhouldeſt ceſſe both to loue him and to do for him the dutifull workes of loue. Thou wilt ſay, he hath far otherwiſe deſerued of me. But what hath the Lorde deſerued? Which when he commaundeth thee to forgeue all wherein he hath offended thee, truely he willeth the ſame to be imputed to himſelfe. Luc. 17. 3 Truely, this is that only way to come to that which is vtterly againſt Matt. 5. 44. the nature of man, much more is it hard for man. I meane, to loue them that hate vs, to recompenſe euell with doinge good, to render bleſſinges for reproches: if we remember that we muſt not conſider the malice of men, but loke vpon the image of God in them, which defacing and blotting out their faultes, doeth with the beautie and dignitie of it ſelfe allure vs to embrace it.

7 Therefore this Mortification ſhall then onely take place in vs, when we performe the dueties of charitie. But it is not he that performeth them, that onely doeth all the dutifull workes of charitie, although he leaue none of them vndone, but he that doth them of a ſincere affection of loue. For it may happen, that a man may fully perform e forme to all menne all that he oweth, so much as concerneth outward duties: and yet he may be far from the true performing of it. For you may see some that would seeme very liberall, which yet do geue nothing but either with pride of loke, or with chorlishnesse of wordes they vpbraide it. And we be come to such wretchednesse in this vnhappy worlde, that almost no almes are geuen of any menne, or at least of the most parte of men, without reprocking. Which peruersnesse should not haue bene tolerable among the very heathen. For of Christians is somwhat more required than to shew a chearefulnesse in countenance, and make their doinges louely with gentlenesse of wordes. First they must take vpon them the personage of him whom they see to neede their helpe, and then so pitie their case, as if themselues did fele and suffer it: so that they may bee caried with felinge of mercie and gentlenesse euen as they would be to helpe themselues. He that shall come so minded to helpe his brethren, will not onely not defile his doinges with any arrogante or vpbraydinge, but also neither will despise his brother to whom he doth good as one needing his helpe, nor treade him vnder foote as one bounde vnto him: no more than we vse to reproch a sicke member, for easing whereof the whole body laboreth, or to thinke it specially bounde to the other members, bycause it hath drawen more helpe vnto it than it hath recompensed. For it is thought that the common enterpartning of duties betwene members of one body, hath no free kinde of gifte, but rather that it is a payement of that which being due by the lawe of nature it were monstruous to denie. And by this reason it shall followe, that he may not thinke himselfe discharged that hath performed one kinde of duetie, as it is commonly vsed, that when a riche manne hath geuen any thinge of his owne, he leaueth other charges to other men, as not belonging to him. But rather euery manne shall thnke thus with himselfe, that he is altogether detter to his neighbours, & that he must determine none other ende of vsing his liberalitie, but when abilitie faileth, which how large so euer it be, must be measured by the rule of charitie.

8 Now let vs more fully declare the principall parte of forsaking our selues, which we said to haue respect to God. We haue said much of it already, which it were superfluous to rehearse againe: it shalbe sufficiẽt to entreate of it so far as it frameth vs to quietnesse of minde and sufferance. First therefore in seking the commoditie or quietnesse of this present life, the Scripture calleth vs hereunto, that resigning vs and our thinges to the Lords will, we should yeld vnto him the affectiõs of our heart to be tamed and subdued. To couet wealth and honors, to compaſſe authoritie, to heape vp riches, to gather together all ſuch follies as ſerue for royaltie and pompe, our luſt is outragious, and our gredineſſe infinite. On the other ſide of pouerty, ignobilitie, and baſe eſtate, we haue a maruellous feare and maruellous hatred, that moue vs to trauaile by all meanes to eſchue them. Hereby a man may ſee, how vnquiet a minde they haue, how many ſhiftes they attempt, with what ſtudies they wery their life, that frame their life after their owne deuiſe: to atteine thoſe thinges that their affection of ambition or couetouſneſſe requireth, and on the other ſide to eſcape pouertie and baſeneſſe. Therefore the godly muſt kepe this way, that they be not entangled with ſuch ſnares. Firſt let them not either deſire, or hope for, or thinke vpon any other meane of proſpering, than by the bleſſing of the Lorde: and therefore let them ſafely and boldely reſt themſelues vpon it. For how ſo euer the fleſh thinke it ſelfe ſufficient of her ſelfe, when ſhe either trauaileth by her owne diligence, or endeuoreth with her owne ſtudie, or is holpen by the fauour of men, to the atteining of honour and wealth: yet it is certaine, that all theſe thinges are nothing, and that we ſhall nothing preuaile with wit or trauaile, but in ſo much as the Lorde ſhall proſper both But on the other ſide his onely bleſſing findeth a way through all ſtoppes, to make all things procede with vs to a ioyfull and lucky ende. Then how ſoeuer we may moſt of all obteine any glorie or wealth without it (as we daily ſee the wicked to get heapes of great honours and richeſſe) yet for as much as they vpon whom reſteth the curſe, do fele no parcell of felicitie, we can obteine nothing without his bleſſing that ſhall not turne vs to euell. And it is not at all to be coueted, that maketh men more miſerable.

9 Therefore if we beleue that all the meane of proſperous ſucceſſe and ſuch as is to be wiſhed, conſiſteth in the onely bleſſing of God, which being abſent, all kindes of miſerie and calamitie muſt happen vnto vs: this remaineth alſo, that we do not gredyly endeuour to wealth and honours ſtanding vpon our owne fineſſe of wit or diligence, nor leaning to the fauour of men, nor truſting vpon a vaine imagination of fortune, but that we alway looke vnto the Lorde, to be led by his guiding to what ſo euer lot he hath prouided. So firſt it ſhall come to paſſe, that we ſhall not violently ruſh to the catching of richeſſe and inuading of honours, by wronge, by guile and euell crafty meanes, or extortion with doing iniury to our neighbours, but ſhall onely followe thoſe fortunes that may not leade vs from innocence. For who may hope for the helpe of Gods bleſſing among fraudes, extortions, and other ſuttle meanes of wickedneſſe?

For

For as Gods blessing followeth noman but him that thinketh purely,and doth rightly, so it calleth back all them of whom it is desired,from crooked thoughtes, and corrupt doinges. Then we shalbe bridled that we burne not with inmeasurable desire of growing rich, nor ambitiously gape for honours. For with what face may a man trust to be holpen of God, to obteine those thinges that he desireth against his worde? For God forbidde that God shoulde geue the helpe of his blessing to that which he curseth with his owne mouth. Last of all, if it succede not according to our wish and hope, yet we shalbe restrained from impatience, and from cursing our estate what soeuer it be: bycause we know that that is to murmure against God, at whose will richesse and pouertie, baseneſse and honours are disposed. Brefely, he that resteth himselfe in such sorte as is a foresaid vpon the blessing of God, neither will by euell suttelties hunt for those things that menne are wont outragiously to couet, by which crafty meanes he thinketh that he shall nothing preuaile: nor if any thing happen prosperously will impute it to himself, and to his owne diligence endeuour or to fortune, but will assigne it to God the authour. But if while other mens estates do florish, he go but slenderly forward, yea or slide backeward, yet he will beare his ill fortune with greater quietneſse and moderatiō of minde, than a prophane manne will beare a meanely good succeſse, which is not altogether so good as he desired: bycause he hath a comfort wherein he may more quietly rest, than vpon the hiest toppe of wealth and authoritie: bycause he accompteth that his thinges are ordered by God as is auailable for his saluation. So we see that Dauid was minded, and yeldeth himselfe to be ruled by God, he declareth himselfe to be like to a weined childe, and that he walketh not in high things or maruellous aboue himselfe. Psa.131.

10 And the godly mindes ought to haue that quietneſse and sufferance not onely consisting in this behalf: but also it must extend to all chaunces whereunto our present life is subiect. Therefore no man hath rightly forsaken himselfe, but he hath so resigned himselfe vp wholly to the Lorde, that he suffreth all the partes of his life to be gouerned by his will. He that is so framed in minde, what so euer happen, will neither thinke himselfe miserable, nor will with enuiousnes against God complaine of his fortune. Howe necessary this affection is, shall herby appeare, if you consider to howe many chaunces we be subiect. Diuerse kindes of diseases do trouble vs, sometime the pestilence cruelly reigneth, sometime we are sharply vexed with calamities of warre, sometime frost or haile deuouring the hope of the yere bringeth barenneſſe, that driueth vs to dearth: ſomtime our wife, parentes, children or kinſfolkes are taken away by death, our houſe is conſumed with fier: theſe be the thinges at chaunсing whereof men curſe their life, deteſt the day of their birth, haue heauen and light in execration, murmure againſt God, and (as they be eloquent in blaſphemies) accuſe him of vniuſtice and crueltie. But a faithfull manne muſt euen in theſe chaunces beholde the mercyfull kindeneſſe and fatherly tenderneſſe of God. Therefore whether he ſee his houſe deſtroyed, his kinſefolke ſlaine, yet he will not therefore ceſſe to praiſe God, but rather will turne himſelfe to this thought: Yet the Grace of the Lorde that dwelleth in my houſe, will not leaue it deſolate. Or if when his corne is blaſted or bitten, or conſumed with froſtes, or beaten downe with haile, he ſee famine at hand, yet he will not deſpeir, nor ſpeake hatefully of God, but will remaine in this con-

Pſa. 79. 13. fidence, We are yet in the Lordes protection, and ſhepe brought vp in his paſtures: he therefore will finde vs foode euen in extremeſt barreneſſe. Or if he bee troubled with ſickneſſe, euen then he will not be diſcouraged with bitterneſſe of ſorrow, to burſt out into impatience and quarell thus with God: but conſidering the righteouſneſſe and lenitie in Gods correction, he will call himſelfe back to patience. Finally, what ſo euer ſhall happen, becauſe he knoweth it ordeined by the hand of God, he will take it with a well pleaſed and thankefull minde, leaſt he ſhould ſtubbornly reſiſt his authoritie, into whoſe power he hath yelded himſelfe and all his. Therefore let that fooliſh and moſt miſerable comfort of the Heathen be far from a Chriſtian mans heart, which to ſtrengthen their mindes againſt aduerſities, did impute the ſame to fortune, with whom they compted it fooliſh to be angry, becauſe ſhe was blinde and vnaduiſed, that blindely wounded both the deſeruing and vndeſeruing. For contrariwiſe this is the rule of godlineſſe, that the onely hand of God is the judge and gouernes of both fortunes, and that it runneth not forward with vnaduiſed ſodeine rage, but with moſt orderly iuſtice dealeth among vs both good thinges and euell.

The viij. Chapter.

Of the bearinge of the croſſe, vvhich is a part of the forſaking of our ſelues.

Mat. 16. 24. BVt a Godly minde muſt yet climbe vp hier, euen to that whereunto Chriſt calleth his diſciples, that euery one take vp his croſſe. For all whom the Lorde hath choſen and voucheſaued to receiue into his companie, muſt prepare themſelues to a hard, hard, trauailesome and vnquiete life, and full of many and diuerse kindes of incommodities. So it is the will of the heauenly father, to exercise them in such sorte, that he may haue a true proose of them that be his. Beginning at Christ, his first begotten sonne, he proceedeth with this order toward all his children. For whereas Christ was the best beloued sonne aboue the rest, & in whom the fathers minde was fully pleased, yet we see howe he was not tenderly and deintily handeled: so that it may be truely sayd, that he was not only exercised with a perpetuall crosse so long as he dwelled in earth, but that al his life was nothing else but a kinde of continuall crosse. The Apostle sheweth the cause thereof to be, that it behoued that he shoulde learne obedience by those things that he suffred. Why then should we priuilege our selues from that estate, whereunto it behoued Christ our head to be subiect, specially sith he became subiect thereunto for our cause, to shew vs an example of patiẽce in himselfe? Therfore the Apostle saith that this is the appointed end of al ỹ childrẽ of God, to be fashioned like vnto him. Whereupon also in hard & sharp chaunces, which are reckened aduersities and euils, ariseth a great comfort vnto vs, that we communicate with the suffrings of Christ: that as he entred out of a maze of all troubles into the heauenly glory, so we may be diuerse tribulations be brought into the same glory. For so saith Paul himselfe, that when we learne the communicatinge of his afflictions, we do also conceiue the power of his resurrection: & whẽ we are fashioned like vnto his death, we are so prepared to the felowship of his glorious risinge againe. Howe much may this auaile to aswage all the painefulnesse of the crosse, that the more we are afflicted with aduersities, so much the more sure is our felowshippe with Christ confirmed? by communicating whereof, our suffrings are not only made blessed vnto vs, but also do much help vs to the furtherãce of our saluation.

Matt. 3. 17. & 17. 5.

Ro. 8. 2.

Act. 14. 22.

Philip. 3 10.

2 Beside that, our Lorde had no neede to take vpon him to beare the crosse, but to testifie & proue his obedience to his father: but we for diuerse causes, haue neede to lead our life vnder a cõtinual crosse. First (as we be naturally bent to attribute all thinges to our flesh) vnlesse our weakenes be shewed vs as it were before our eyes, we do easily esteeme our owne strength aboue due measure, & dout not that whatsoeuer happen, it will continue vnbroken and vnouercome against all harde assaultes. Whereby we are caried into a foolishe and vaine confidence of flesh, and then trusting thereupon, we stubbornly waxe proud against God himselfe, as though our own powers without his grace did suffice vs. This arrogancy he can no way better beate downe, than when he proueth vnto vs by experience, not only how feeble, but also how fraile we be. Therfore he afflicteth vs either with shame, or pouerty, or losse of children, or sickenesse, or other calamities, which we beinge vnable to beare in respect of our selues, do byandby sinke downe vnder them. Beinge so humbled we learne to call vpon his strength, which only maketh vs to stande vpright vnder the heauy burden of afflictions. Yea the most holy, howe wel soeuer they know that they stand by the grace of God & not by their owne force, yet are too much assured of their owne strength & constancy, vnles by the triall of the crosse, he bring them into a more inward knowledge of themselues. The slouthfulnesse crept into Dauid: I sayd in my rest, I shall neuer be moued, Lorde, thou hadst stablished in thy good pleasure a strength to my hil, thou hiddest away thy face, I was striken. For he confesseth that with sluggishnesse in prosperity his senses were dulled, that not regardinge the grace of God, vpon which he should haue hanged, he leaned vnto himselfe, to promise himselfe perpetuall continuance. If this chaunced to so great a Prophet: which of vs ought not to be fearefull, that we may be heedefull? Therefore whereas in prosperity they flatter themselues with opinion of a greater constancy and patience, when they are once humbled with aduersity, they learne that their former opinion was but hypocrisie. The faithfull (I say) beinge admonished by such examples of their diseases, do thereby profit to humility, that beinge vnclothed of the wrongfull confidence of the flesh, they may resorte to ỹ grace of God. And where they are once come to his grace, they feele the presence of Gods strength, wherin is abundantly sufficiẽt succour for them.

Psal. 30 8.

3 And this is it that Paul teacheth, that by troubles is engendred patience, by patience proofe. For wheras God hath promised ỹ faithful that he will be present with thẽ in troubles, they feele the same to be true, when they stand patiently, being vpholdẽ by his hand, which by their owne strength they were not able to do. Patience therefore bringeth a proufe by experience to ỹ holy ones, that God when nede requireth, wil in dede performe the help that he hath promised. And thereby also their hope is confirmed: forasmuch as it were too much vnthankefulnesse not to looke for in time to come, the same trueth of God that they had already by experience proued to be constant and sure. We see nowe howe many good thinges do come vnto vs in one knot by the crosse. For, ouerthrowing the opinion that we falsly presume of our owne strength, & discloſinge our hypocrisie that deliteth vs, it shaketh away the hurtfull confidence of the flesh, and teacheth vs being so humbled, to rest vpō God only, by which it commeth to passe, that we neither be oppressed nor fall downe. And after victory followeth hope, insomuch as the Lord in performing that which he hath promised, stablisheth the credit of his trueth for time to come, Truely, although there were no moe reasons but these, it appeareth how much the exercise of ỹ crosse is necessary for vs. For it is a matter of no small importāce, to haue the blinde loue of thy selfe wiped away, that thou maist well know thine owne weakenes. To fele thine owne weakenesse, that thou maiest learne to distrust thy selfe: to distrust thy selfe, that thou maist remoue thy confidence from thy selfe vnto God: to rest with confidence of heart vpon God, that being vpholden by his help, thou maist cōtinue vnouercomme to the last end: to stande fast by his grace, that thou maist vnderstand that he is true in his promises: to know by proofe the truth of his promises, that thy hope may be strengthened therby.

4 The Lord hath also an other ende of afflictinge his, to trie their patience, and instruct vs to obedience. Not that they can vse any obediēce toward him, other than the same that he giueth them: but so it pleaseth him by open examples to make approued by witnesses, & to set forth the graces that he hath bestowed vpō his holy ones, that they should not lie idly hidde within them. And therfore in bringing forth into open shew the strength of suffrance and constancy, wherewith he hath furnished his seruauntes, it is sayd that he trieth their pacience. And from hense came these sayinges: that God tempted Abraham, & had proofe of his godlinesse, by this that he refused not to offer vp in sacrifice his owne & only sonne. Therfore Peter teacheth, that our faith is so proued in troubles, as golde is tried in a fornace: And who can say that it is not expedient, that the most noble gift of pacience, which a faithfull man hath receiued of his God, should be brought foorth into vse, that it may be made certainely knowen and manifest? For otherwise men will not esteeme it as it is worthy. Now if God himselfe doth rightfully whē he ministreth matter to stirre vp the vertues that he hath giuen to his faithfull, that they shoulde not lie hidden, yea lie vnprofitable and perish: then is there good reason of the afflictions of the holy ones, without which their paciēce should be nothing. I say also that by the crosse they are instructed to obedience, because they are so taught to liue not after their owne wish, but after the will of God. Truely if all thinges shoulde flowe vnto them after their owne minde, they would not know what it were to follow God. And Seneca rehearseth that this was an olde Prouerbe, when they exhorted any man to suffer aduersities, Followe God. By which they declared, that then only men truely entred vnder the yoke of God, when he yelded his hand and backe to Gods correction. Now if it be moſt righteous, that we ſhould ſhew our ſelues in all thinges obedient to the heauēly father, then we ought not to refuſe, that he ſhould by all meanes accuſtome vs to yeld obedience vnto him.

5 But yet we perceiue not how neceſſary this obedience is for vs, vnleſſe we do alſo conſider, howe wanton our fleſh is to ſhake of the yoke of God, ſo ſoone as it hath bin but a litle while deintily and tenderly handeled. The ſame happeneth vnto it, that chaunceth to ſtubborne horſes, which if they be a fewe dayes pampred idlely, they can not afterward for fearceneſſe be tamed, neither do know their rider, to whoſe gouernment they ſomewhat before obeied. And this is con-
Deu. 33 25. tinual in vs that God cōplaineth to haue bin in the people of Iſraell, that beinge well fed and couered with fatneſſe, we kicke againſt him that fed and nouriſhed vs. The liberality of God ſhould in dede haue allured vs to conſider and loue his goodneſſe, but foraſmuch as our euill nature is ſuch, that we are alway corrupted with his tender vſage, it is more than neceſſary for vs, to be reſtrayned by ſome diſcipline, that we runne not outragiouſly into ſuch a ſtubborne wantonneſſe. So that we ſhould not grow fierce with vnmeaſurable abundance of richeſſe, that we ſhould not waxe proud being lifted vp with honors, that we ſhould not become inſolent, being puffed vp with other good gifts, either of the ſoule, body or fortune, the lord himſelf, as he foreſeeth it to be expedient, preuenteth it, and with the remedy of the croſſe ſubdueth & bridleth the fearceneſſe of our fleſh, & that diuerſe wayes, ſo much as is healthfull for euery man. For all are not a like ſicke of all one diſeaſes, or do a like neeede of hard healing. And thereupon is to be ſeene howe ſome are exerciſed with one kinde of croſſe, and ſome with an other. But whereas the heauenly Phiſician handeleth ſome more gently, & purgeth ſome with ſharper remedies, when he meaneth to prouide for the health of all: Yet he leaueth none free or vntouched, becauſe he knoweth all without exception to be diſeaſed.

6 Moreouer, the moſt mercifull father needeth not only to preuēt our weakeneſſe, but many times to correct our paſſed offences. Therfore ſo oft as we be afflicted, the remembrance of our forepaſſed life ought byandby to entre into our minde: ſo without dout we ſhall finde that we haue done ſomewhat worthy of chaſtiſement. Yet we ought not chiefely to grounde our exhortation to patience vpon the
1. Cor. 11. 8. acknowledging of ſinne. For the Scripture miniſtreth vs a farre better conſideration, when it ſayth, that the Lord correcteth vs with aduerſities, uersities, that we should not be damned with this world. Therfore we ought euen in the very sharpenes of tribulatiõs to acknowledge the kindenes & goodnes of our father toward vs, forasmuch as euen then he cesseth not to further our saluation. For he doth afflict, not to destroy or kill vs, but rather to deliuer vs from the damnation of the world. That thought shall leade vs to that, which the Scripture teacheth in an other place: My sonne, refuse not ỹ Lords correctiõ, nor be weary when thou shalt be rebuked of him. For whom the Lord loueth, he correcteth, and embraceth him as a father doth his childe. When we know his rod to be the rod of a father, is it not our duety rather to shewe our selues obedient children and willinge to learne, than with obstinacy to do like desperate men, that are hardned with euill doinges? The Lord leseth vs, vnlesse he call vs backe by correction when we are fallen away from him: so that the author of the Epistle to the Hebrues rightly sayth that we are bastards, and not children if we be out of correction. Therfore we are most froward, if we can not suffer him when he declareth his good will and the care that he hath for our saluation. This the Scripture teacheth to be the difference betwene the vnbeleuers and the faithfull, that the vnbeleuers as the bondslaues of a rooted and hardned wickednes, are made the worse & more obstinate with whipping: the faithful, like children hauing an honest freedome of nature, do thereby profit to repentance. Now must thou choose of whether number thou wilt be. But because I haue spoken of this matter in an other place, I am content to touch it briefely, and so will make an end.

Prou. 3. 11.

Heb. 12. 8.

7 Morouer it is a singular comfort, whẽ we suffer persecution for righteousnes. For then we ought to thinke, how great an honor God vouchesaueth to graunt vs, that he so garnisheth vs with the peculiar marke of his souldiours. I meane that they suffer persecution for righteousnes, not only that suffer for defense of the Gospell, but also that are troubled for any defense of righteousnes. Whether therfore in maintaininge the trueth of God against the lies of Sathan, or in taking in hande the defense of good men and innocentes against the wrongs of the wicked, we be driuen to runne into the displeasure & hatred of the worlde, whereby our life or goods, or estimation may come in daunger: let it not be grieuous or lothsome vnto vs to employ our selues for God, or let vs not thinke our selues miserable in those things in which he hath with his owne mouth pronounced vs blessed. Pouerty in dede, if it be considered in it selfe, is miserable: likewise banishment, contemptious estate, prisonment, shame: Finally, death is the vttermost of all calamities. But when the fauour of our

Matt. 5. 10.

God breatheth vpon vs, there is none of all these thinges, but it turneth to our felicity. Therefore let vs rather be content with the testimony of Christ, than with the false estimation of the flesh. So shall it come to passe, that we shall reioise as the Apostles did, whē God shal accompt vs worthy to suffer reproch for his name. For why? If we being innocent, & knowinge our selues cleare in our conscience, are by the naughty dealinge of wicked men spoiled of our goods: we are in dede brought to pouerty therby among mē, but so richesse do truely grow vnto vs in heauen before God. If we be thrust out of our houses, we are the more inwardly receiued into the houshold of God. If we be vexed & despised, we take so much the deper rootes in Christ. If we be noted with reproches & shame, we are insomuch the more honorable place in the kingdom of God. If we be slaine, so is the entry made open for vs vnto blessed life. Let vs be ashamed to esteeme lesse these things, vpon which the Lord hath set so greate a price, thā shadowish and fickle enticing pleasures of present life.

8 Sith therefore the Scripture doth with these & like admonitiōs giue sufficient comfort for the shames or calamities, that we suffer for defense of righteousnes, we are too much vnthankefull if we do not gladly and cherefully receiue them at the Loods hande: specially sith this is the kinde of crosse, most properly belonginge to the faithfull, whereby Christ will be glorified in vs. As also Peter teacheth. But it is more grieuous to gentle natures to suffer shame than a hundred deathes: therefore Paul expresly admonisheth that we shall not only suffer persecutions, but also reproches, because we trust in the liuinge God. As in an other place he teacheth vs after his example to walke through sclaunder and good reporte. Yet there is not required of vs such a cherefulnes as may take away all feeling of bitternes and sorrow, or else the patience of the holy ones in the crosse were no paciēce, vnles they should be both tormēted with sorrow & vexed with griefe. If there were no hardines in pouerty, no paine in sickenes, no griefe in shame, no horrour in death, what valiantnes or temperance were it to beare thē indifferently? But when euery one of these doth with the naturall bitternes therof bite the hearts of vs all, herin doth the valiantnes of a faithful man shew it selfe, if being assayed with the feeling of such bitternes, how grieuously soeuer he be troubled with it, yet with valiantly resisting he ouercommeth it, his patience vttereth it selfe herein, if being sharply prouoked, he is yet so bridled with the feare of God, that he bursteth not out into any distemper. His cherefulnesse appeareth herin, if being wounded with sadnes and sorrow, he resteth vpon the spiritual comfort of God.

1. Pe. 4. 12.
1. Tim 4 10.
2. Cor. 6 8.

9 This conflict, which the faithfull do sustaine against the natural feeling of sorrow, while they study for patience & temperance, Paul hath very well described in these words. We are put to distresse in all things, but we are not made sorrowfull: we labour, but we are not left destitute: we suffer persecution, but we are not forsaken in it: we are throwen downe, but we perish not. You see how to beare the crosse patiently, is not to be altogether astonished and without all feeling of sorrowe. As the Stoikes in olde time did foolishly describe a valiant harted man, to be such a one as putting of al nature of man, was a like moued in prosperity and in aduersity, in sorrowfull and ioyfull state, yea such a one as like a stone was moued with nothinge. And what haue they profited with this hie wisdom? Forsooth they haue painted out such an image of wisdom as neuer was found, & neuer can hereafter be amonge men: But rather while they coueted to haue to exact and precise a patience, they haue taken away all the vse of patience out of mans life. And at this day also amōg Christians there are new Stoikes, that recken it a fault not only to grone and wepe, but also to be sad and carefull. But these strange conclusions do commonly proceede from idle men, which busying themselues rather in speculation than doing, can do nothing but brede vs such new founde doctrines. But we haue nothinge to do with that stony Philosophie, which our maister and Lord hath condemned not only by his word but also by his example. For he mourned and wept both at his owne and other mens aduersities. The worlde (sayth he) shall reioyse, but you shal mourne and wepe. And because no man should finde fault therwith, by his open proclamation, he hath pronounced them blessed that mourne. And no maruell. For if all weping be blamed, what shall we iudge of ỹ Lord himselfe, out of whose body dropped bloudy teares? If euery feare be noted of infidelity, what shall we iudge of that quaking feare, wherwith we read that he was not sclenderly striken. If all sadnes be misliked, how shall we like this, that he confesseth his soule to be sad euen to the death? 2. Cor. 4 8. Ioh. 17. 20. Mat. 5. 4. Luc. 22. 44.

10 This I thought good to speake to this end, to call godly mindes from despeire: that they should not therefore altogether forsake the study of patience, because they can not put of the natural affection of sorrow: which must needes happen to them, that make of patience a senseleſſe dulnes, and of a valiant and constant man, a stocke. For the Scripture giueth to the holy ones the praise of patience, when they are so troubled with hardnes of aduersities, that yet they be not ouercome nor throwen downe with it: when they be so pricked with bitternesse, that they be also delited with spirituall ioy: when they besdistressed with griefe, that yet they receiue courage againe beinge cheared with the comfort of God. Yet in the meane time that repugnancy abideth still in their heartes, that naturall sense eschueth and dredeth those thinges that it knoweth to be against it: but the affection of godlines trauaileth euen through all those difficulties to the obeying of Gods wil. This repugnancy the Lord expressed when he

Ioh. 21. 30. sayd thus to Peter: When thou wast yong thou didst gird thy selfe & didst walke whether thou wouldest: But when thou art old, an other shall girde thee and leade thee whether thou shalt not be willinge. Neither is it likely that Peter, when the time came that he must glorifie God by his death, was drawen vnwillingly and resistinge vnto it. Else his martyrdome should haue but small praise. But howsoeuer he did with great cherefulnesse of heart obey the ordinance of God, yet because he had not put of the nature of mā, he was doubly strained with two sortes of wils. For when he did by himselfe consider the bloudy death that he shoulde suffer, beinge stricken with horrour thereof, he would gladly haue escaped it. On the other side, when it came in his minde, that he was called vnto it by the commaundement of God, then conqueringe and treadinge downe feare, he gladly, yea and cherefully tooke it vpon him. This therefore wē must endeuour if we will be the Disciples of Christ, that our mindes be inwardly filled with so great a reuerence & obedience to God, as may tame and subdue to his ordinaunce all contrary affections. So shall it come to passe, that with whatsoeuer kinde of crosse we be vexed, euē in the greatest anguishes of minde, we shall constantly kepe patience. For aduersities shall haue their sharpnes, wherwith we shalbe bitten: so when we are afflicted with sickenes, we shal both grone and be disquieted and desire health: so beinge pressed with pouerty, we shalbe pricked with the stings of carefulnes and sorrow: so shall we be striken with griefe of shame, contempt and iniury: so shall we yelde due teares to nature at the buriall of our friendes: but this alway shalbe the cōclusion, But the Lorde willed so. Therefore let vs follow his will. Yea euen in the middest of the prickings of sorow, in the middest of mourning and teares, this thought must needes come betwene, to encline our heart to take cherefully the very same things, by reason whereof it is so moued.

11 But forasmuch as we haue taken the chiefe cause of bearinge the crosse, out of the consideration of the will of God, we must in few wordes define what difference is betwene Philosophicall & Christian patience. Truely very few of the Philosophers climbed to so hie a reason, to vnderstand that the hande of God doth exercise vs by afflictions

ctions,& to thinke that God is in this behalfe to be obeied.But they bring no other reaſon,but becauſe we muſt ſo do of neceſſity.What is this elſe,but to ſay that thou muſt yeelde vnto God, becauſe thou ſhalt trauail in vaine to wraſtle againſt him? For if we obey God,only becauſe we ſo muſt of neceſſity:thē if we might eſcape,we would ceſſe to obey.But the Scripture biddeth vs to conſider a farre other thing in the will of God,that is to ſay,firſt iuſtice and equity, then the care of our ſaluation. Theſe therefore be the Chriſtian exhortations to patience,whether powerty,or baniſhment, or priſonment, or ſhame, or ſickeneſſe,or loſſe of parentes,or children,or any other like thing do grieue vs,we muſt thinke that none of theſe things doth happen, but by the will and prouidence of God,and that he doth nothing but by moſt iuſt order:For why?do not our innumerable and daily offenſes deſerue to be chaſtiſed more ſharply, & with more grieuous correction,than ſuch as the mercifull kindneſſe of God layeth vpon vs? Is it not moſt great equity,that our fleſh be tamed,& as it were made acquainted with the yoke,that ſhe do not wantonly growe wilde accordinge to her nature? Is not the righteouſneſſe and trueth of God worthy, that we ſhould take paine for it? But if there appeare an vndouted righteouſnes in our afflictions,we can not without vnrighteouſnes either murmure or wraſtle againſt it.We heare not now that colde ſonge:We muſt giue place,becauſe we ſo muſt of neceſſity,but we heare a liuely leſſō & full of effectualnes:We muſt obey,becauſe it is vnlawfull to reſiſt:we muſt ſuffer patiently, becauſe impatience is a ſtubborneſſe againſt the righteouſneſſe of God. But now, becauſe that thinge only is worthy to be loued of vs,which we know to be to our ſafety and benefit,the good father doth this way alſo comfort vs, when he affirmeth that euen in this that he afflicteth vs with the croſſe, he prouideth for our ſafety. But if it be certaine that troubles are healthfull for vs,why ſhould we not receiue them with a thankfull and well pleaſed minde? Therefore in patiently ſuffering them, we do not forceably yeelde to neceſſitie, but quietely agre to our owne benefite. Theſe thoughtes (I ſay)do make that how much our mindes are grieued in the croſſe with naturall feelinge of bitterneſſe, ſo much they be cheared with ſpirituall gladneſſe. Whereupon alſo followeth thankeſgiuinge, which can not be without ioy. But if the praiſe of the Lord and thankeſgiuing proceedeth of nothing but of a cherefull and ioyfull heart, and there is nothing that ought to interrupt the ſame praiſing of God and thankeſgiuing in vs:hereby appeareth howe neceſſary it is that the bitternſſe of the croſſe be tempered with ſpirituall ioy.

BVt with whatſoeuer kinde of trouble we be diſtreſſed, we muſt alway looke to this ende, to vſe our ſelues to the contempt of this preſent life, and thereby be ſtirred to the meditation of the life to come. For, becauſe God knoweth well howe much we be by nature enclined to the beaſtly loue of this worlde, he vſeth a moſt fitte meane to drawe vs backe, and to ſhake of our ſluggiſhneſſe, that we ſhoulde not ſticke too faſt in that loue. There is none of vs that deſireth not to ſeeme to aſpire & endeuour all their life long to heauenly immortality. For we are aſhamed to excel brute beaſtes in nothinge: whoſe ſtate ſhoulde be nothinge inferiour to ours, vnleſſe there remayne to vs a hope of eternity after death. But if you examine the deuiſes, ſtudies and doinges of euery manne, you ſhall finde nothing therein but earth. Hereupon groweth that ſenſeleſneſſe, that our minde beinge daſeled with vaine gliſteringe of richeſſe, power and honors, is ſo dulled that it can not ſee farre. Our heart alſo beinge poſſeſſed with couetouſneſſe, ambition and luſt, is ſo weyed downe, that it can not riſe vp higher. Finally all our ſoule entangled with enticementes of the fleſh, ſeeketh her felicity in earth. The Lord, to remedy this euill, doth with continuall examples of miſeries teach this of the vanity of this preſent life. Therfore that they ſhoulde not promiſe themſelues in this life a ſounde and quiet peace, he ſuffereth them to be many times diſquieted and troubled either with warres, or vprores, or robberies, or other iniuries. That they ſhoulde not with too much greedineſſe, gape for fraile and tranſitory richeſſe, or reſt in the richeſſe that they already poſſeſſe, ſometime with baniſhment, ſomtime with barrenneſſe of the earth, ſomtime with fire, ſometime by other meanes he bringeth them to pouerty, or at leaſt holdeth them in meaſure. That they ſhould not with too much eaſe take pleaſure in the benefites of mariage, he either maketh them to be vexed with the frowardnes of their wiues, or plucketh them downe with ill children, or puniſheth them with want of iſſue. But if in all theſe thinges he tenderly beareth with them, yet leaſt they ſhould either ſwell with fooliſh glory, or inmeaſurably reioyſe with vaine confidence, he doth by diſeaſes & dangers ſet before their eyes, howe vnſtable, and vaniſhinge be all the goods that are ſubiect to mortality. Then onely therefore we rightly profit in the diſcipline of the croſſe when we learne that this life, when it is conſidered in it ſelfe, is vnquiet, troubleſome and innumerable wayes miſerable, and in no point fully blessed: & that all those that are reckened the good things therof are vncertaine, fickle, vaine, and corrupted with many euils mixed with them. And hereupon we do determine, that here is nothing to be sought or hoped for but strife: & that when we thinke of our crowne, then we must lft vp our eyes to heauen. For thus we must beleue. That our minde is neuer truely raised to the desire and meditation of the life to come, vnlesse it haue first conceiued a contempt of this present life.

2 For betwene these two there is no meane, the earth must either become vile in our sight, or holde vs bounde with intemperate loue of it. Threfore if we haue any care of eternity, we must diligently endeuour to louse our selues from these fetters. Now because this present life hath many flatteringe pleasures wherewith to allure vs, a great shewe of pleasauntnesse, grace, and sweetenesse, wherewith to delite vs: it is much behoueful for vs to be now and then called away, that we be not bewitched with such allurementes. For what, I pray you, woulde be done if we did here enioy a continuall concourse of good things and felicity, sith we can not with continual spurres of euils be sufficiently awaked to consider the misery thereof? Not onely the learned do know, but also the common people haue no Prouerbe more common than this, that mans life is like a smoke or shadow: and because they sawe it to be a thinge very profitable to be knowen, they haue set it out with many notable sentences. But there is nothinge that we do either more negligently consider, or lesse remember. For we go about all thinges, as though we would frame to our selues an immortality in earth. If there be a corps caried to buriall, or if we walke amonge graues, then, because there is an image of death before our eyes, I graunt we do maruelously well discourse like Philosophers vpon the vanity of this life. Albeit we do not that continually, for many times all these things do nothing moue vs. But when it happeneth, our Philosophie lasteth but a while, which so soone as we turne our backes, vanisheth away, and leaueth no steppe at all of remembrance behind it: finally it passeth away as a clapping of hands vpon a stage at any pleasaunt sight. And we forgettinge not onely death, but also that we be subiect to death, as though we had neuer heard any reporte thereof, fall to a careless assuredness of earthly immortality. If any man in the meane time tel vs of the Prouerb, that man is a creature of a dayes continuance, we graunt it in deede: but so heedelesly, that still the thought of euerlastinge continuance resteth in our minde. Who therefore can deny, that it is a great profit to vs all, not only to be admonished in wordes, but by all the examples of experience that may be to be conuinced of the miſerable eſtate of earthly life: foraſmuch as euen whē we are conuinced, we ſcarcely ceſſe to ſtand amaſed with peruerſe and fooliſh admiration of it, as though it contained the vttermoſt end of good thinges. But if it be neceſſary that God inſtruct vs, it is our duety likewiſe on our behalues, to harken to him when he calleth & awaketh our dulneſſe, that deſpiſinge the worlde we may with all our heartes endeuour to the meditation of the life to come.

3 But let the faithful accuſtome themſelues to ſuch a deſpiſing of preſent life, as may neither engendre a hatred thereof, nor any vnthankefulnes toward God. For this life, howſoeuer it is ful of infinite miſeries, is yet worthily reckened among the not ſclender bleſſinges of God. Therefore if we acknowledge no benefite of God in it, we are gilty of no ſmall vnthankefulneſſe toward God himſelfe. But ſpecially it ought to be to the faithfull a teſtimonie of Gods good will, foraſmuch as it is wholly directed to the furtherance of their ſaluation. For before that he openly deliuer vnto vs the inheritance of eternall glory, his will is to ſhew himſelfe a Father vnto vs by ſmaller examples: and theſe be the benefites that are daily beſtowed vpon vs. Sith therefore this life ſerueth vs to vnderſtande the goodneſſe of God, ſhall we diſdaine it as though it had not a crumme of goodneſſe in it? We muſt therefore put on this feelinge and affection, to recken it amonge the giftes of goodneſſe that are not to be refuſed. For though there wanted teſtimonies of Scripture, of which there are both many and moſt euident, very nature it ſelfe doth exhorte vs to giue thankes to the Lorde, for that he hath brought vs into the light of it, that he graunteth vs the vſe of it, that he giueth vs all neceſſary ſuccours for the preſeruation of it. And this is a much greater reaſon, if we conſider that we are in it after a certaine maner prepared to the glory of the heauenly kingdome. For ſo the Lorde hath ordained that they which in time to come ſhalbe crowned in heauen, muſt fight certaine battels in earth, that they ſhoulde not triumphe, till they had ouercome the hard aduentures of the battell, and obtained the victory. Then an other reaſon is, that we do by diuerſe benefites beginne therein to taſte the ſweeteneſſe of Gods liberality, that our hope and deſire ſhould be whetted to long for the reueling therof. Whē this is determined, that it is a gift of Gods clemency that we liue this earthly life, for which as we be bound vnto him, ſo we ought to be mindefull and thankeful: then we ſhall in fit order come to conſider the moſt miſerable eſtate therof, to this end that we may be deliuered from too much greedineſſe of it, whereunto as I haue before sayd,we are of our selues naturally enclined.

4 Nowe whatsoeuer is taken from the wrongefull desire of this life,ought to be added to the desire of a better life. I graunt in dede that they thought truely,that thought it best not to be borne,& the next,to die quickly. For what could they being destitute of the light of God and true religion,see therein but vnhappy & miserable? And they did not without reason, that mourned and wept at the birthes of their friendes,& solemnely reioysed at their burials, but they did it without profit,because beinge without the right doctrine of faith, they did not see howe that may turne to good to the godly,which is of it selfe neither blessed nor to be desired: and so they ended their iudgement with desperation. Let this therefore be the marke of the faithful in iudging of mortall life, that when they vnderstand it to be of it selfe nothing but misery,they may resort wholly the more frēshly and readily to the eternal life to come. When we come to this cōparison, then this present life may not onely be safely neglected, but also vtterly despised and lothed in comparison of the other. For if heauen be our contrey, what is the earth else but a place of banishment? If the departing out of the world be an entring into life,what is the world but a graue? to abide in it,what is it else but to be drowned in death? If to be deliuered from the body is to be set in perfect liberty,what is the body else but a prison? If to enioy the presence of God is the hiest summe of felicity,is it not miserable to lacke it? But til we be escaped out of the world,we wander abroade frō the Lord. Therfore if the earthly life be compared with the heauenly life,doutlesse it ought to be despised & troden vnder foote. But it is neuer to be hated,but in respect that it holdeth vs in subiection to sinne, & yet that hatred is not properly ro be layd vpon our life. But howsoeuer it be, yet we must be so moued either with wearinesse or hatred of it, that desiring the end of it,we may be also ready at the will of the Lord to abide in it: so that our wearines may be farre from al grudging & impatience. For it is like a place in battel array, wherein the Lorde hath placed vs,which we ought to kepe till he call vs away. Paule in deede lamenteth his state that he is holden bond in the bondes of the body longer thā he wished, & sigheth with feruent desire of his redēption: neuertheles to obey the commaundement of the Lord,he professed himself ready to both, because he acknowledgeth himself to owe this vnto God,to glorifie his name, either by death or life: and that it is in God to determine what is most expediēt for his glory. Therfore if we must liue & die to the Lord,let vs leaue to his will the time of our life & death: but so that we be still feruent in desire of death,and be continually occupied in meditation therof,& despise this life in comparison of the immortality to come, and wish to forsake it when it shall please the Lord because of the bondage of sinne.

5 But this is mõstruous,that in stede of that desire of death,many that bost themselues to be Christians,are so afraid of it,that they trẽble at euery mention of it, as of a thing betokening vnluckely & vnhappy. Truely it is no maruell, if naturall sense in vs do quake for feare when we heare of the dissoluing of vs.But this is in no wise tolerable, that there be not in a Christian mans brest the light of godlines,that shoulde with greater comfort ouercome and suppresse that feare, how great soeuer it be.For if we consider that this vnstedfast, faulty, corruptible, fraile withering,& rottẽ tabernacle of our body, is therfore dissolued,ỹ it may afterward be restored again into a stedfast,perfect,vncorruptible & heauenly glory: shall not faith compell vs feruently to desire that which nature feareth? If we consider that by death we are called home out of banishment,to inhabite our contrey,yea a heauenly contrey,shal we obtaine no comfort therby?But there is nothing that desireth not to abide continually. I graunt,and therefore I affirme, that we ought to looke vnto the immortality to come,where we may attaine a stedfast state that no where appeareth in earth. For Paul doth very well teach,that the faithfull ought to go cherefully to death:not because they would be vnclothed,but because they desire to be newly clothed.Shal brute beastes,yea & lifeles creatures,euen stocks & stones,knowing their present vanity,be earnestly bent to looking for the last day of the resurrectiõ,that they may with the children of God be deliuered from vanity,& shal we that are endued with the light of wit,& aboue wit enlightened with the spirit of God,when it standeth vpon our being,not lift vp our mindes beyond this rottennes of earth? But it pertaineth not to my present purpose, nor to this place,to speake against this peruersnes. And in the beginning I haue already professed, that I woulde not here take vpon me the large handling of common places. I would counsel such fearefull mindes to read Cyprians booke of Mortality,vnlesse they were mete to be sent to the Philosophers,that they may beginne to be ashamed when they see the contempt of death that those do shew. But this let vs hold for certainely determined, that no man hath well profited in Christes schoole,but he that doth ioyfully looke for the day both of death & of the last resurrection.For both Paul describeth all ỹ faithfull by this marke,& also it is common in the Scripture,to call vs thither as oft as it wil set forth a groũd of perfect gladnes. Reioise(saith the Lord)& lift vp your heads, for your redemption commeth nere at hand. Is it reasonable, I pray you, that the thing which he willed to be of so great force to raise vp ioy & cherefullnes in vs, should brede nothing but sorrow & discouragemēt? If it be so, why do we stil bost of him as our Schoolemaister? Let vs therfore get a sounder mind, & howsoeuer the blinde & senseless desire of the flesh do striue against it, let vs not dout to wish for the comming of the Lord, not only with wishing, but also with groning & sighing, as a thing most happy of all other. For he shall come a redemer to vs, to draw vs out of this infinit gulfe of euils & miseries, and to leade vs into that blessed inheritance of his life and glory.

6 This is certainely true: all the nation of the faithfull, so longe as they dwel in earth, must be as shepe appointed to slaughter, that they may be fashioned like Christ their head. Therefore they were in most lamentable case, vnlesse they had their minde raised vp into heauē, & surmounted all that is in the world, and passed ouer the present face of things. Contrariwise whē they haue once lifted their heades aboue all earthly thinges, although they see the wealth and honors of the wicked florishing, if they see thē enioyinge quiet peace, if they see thē proude in gorgiousnes and sumptuousnesse of all thinges, if they see thē to flow in plentiful store of all delites, beside that if they be spoiled by their wickednesse, if they sustaine reprochful dealings at their pride, if they be robbed by their couetousnes, if they be vexed by any other outrage of theirs: they will easily vphold themselues in such aduersities. For that day shalbe before their eies, when the Lorde shall receiue his faithfull into the quiet of his kingdom, when he shal wipe all teares from their eies, when he shall clothe them with the robe of glory & gladnes, when he shall feede thē with ỹ vnspeakeable swetenesse of his deinties, when he shall aduance them to the fellowshippe of his hie estate: finally when he shall vouchsaue to enterparten his felicity with them. But these wicked once that haue florished in the earth, he shall throw into extreme shame, he shall change their delites into tormentes, their laughing and mirth into weping and gnashing of teeth, he shall disquiet their peace with terrible torment of conscience, he shall punish their deintinesse with vnquenchable fier, & shall put their heades in subiectiō to those godly mē, whose patience they haue abused. For this is righteousnesse (as Paule testifieth) to giue release to the miserable & to them that are vniustly afflicted, & to render affliction to the wicked that do afflict the godly, when the Lorde Iesus shal be reuealed from heauen. This truely is our onely comfort, which if it be taken away, we must of necissity either despeir, or flatteringely delite our selues with the vayne comfortes of the worlde to

For euen the prophet confeſſeth that his feete ſtagged, when he taried too long vpon conſideringe the preſent proſperity of the wicked: and that he could not otherwiſe ſtande ſtedfaſt, but when he entred into the ſanctuary of God, and bended his eies to the laſt end of the godly & the wicked. To conclude in one word, then only the croſſe of Chriſt triumpheth in the hearts of the faithfull vpon the Deuill, fleſh, ſinne & the wicked, when our eyes are turned to the power of the reſurrection.

The x. Chapter.

Howe we ought to vſe this preſent life, and the helps thereof.

BY ſuch introductions the Scripture doth alſo well informe vs what is the right vſe of earthly benefites: which is a thinge not to be neglected in framing an order of life. For if we muſt liue, we muſt alſo vſe the neceſſary helpes of life: neither can we eſchue euen thoſe things that ſeeme rather to ſerue for delite than for neceſſity. Therefore we muſt keepe a meaſure, that we may vſe them with a pure conſcience, either for neceſſity or for delight. That meaſure the Lorde appointeth by his worde, when he teacheth that this life is to them that be his, a certaine iorney through a ſtraunge countrey, by which they trauaile towarde the kingdome of heauen. If we muſt but paſſe through the earth, doutleſſe we ought ſo farre to vſe the good thinges of the earth, as they may rather further than hinder our iourney. Therfore Paul doth not vnprofitably counſell vs ſo to vſe this worlde, as though we vſed it not: and to bye poſſeſſions with ſuch a minde as they vſe to be ſolde. But becauſe this place is ſlippery, and ſo ſlope on both ſides, that it quickely maketh vs to fall, let vs labour to faſten our foote there, where we may ſtande ſafely. For there haue bin ſome, that otherwiſe were good and holy menne, which when they ſawe intemperance and ryot continually to range with vnbridled luſt, vnleſſe it be ſharply reſtrained, & were deſirous to correct ſo great a miſchief, they could find none other way, but ſuffred mā to vſe the benefites of the earth, ſo far as neceſſity required. This was in dede a Godly counſell, but they were to ſeuere. For (which is a very perillous thinge) they did put ſtreighter bondes vpon conſciences, than thoſe wherewith they were bound by the word of God. And they expounde neceſſity, to abſtaine from all thinges which a man may be without. And ſo by their opinió, a mā might ſcarcely take any more foode than bread & water. And ſome be yet more ſeuere: as it is red of Crates the Thebane, that did throwe his goods into the ſea,

becauſe if they were not deſtroyed, he thought that he ſhoulde be deſtroyed by them. Many at this day, while they ſeeke a pretence, whereby the intemperance of the fleſh in vſe of outwarde thinges may be excuſed, and while they go about to prepare a way for the fleſh raging in wantonnes, do take that as a thing confeſſed, which I do not graunte them, that this libertie is not to be reſtrained with any limitation of meaſure, but that it is to be left to euery mans conſcience to vſe as much as he ſeeth to be lawfull for him. Truly I confeſſe, that conſciences neither ought nor can in this point be bounde by certaine and preciſe formes of lawes. But for as much as the Scripture teacheth generall rules of lawfull vſe, we muſt ſurely meaſure the vſe according to theſe rules.

2 Let this be a principle: that the vſe of Gods giftes ſwarueth not out of the way, when it is referred to that ende, whereunto the authour him ſelfe hath created and apointed them for vs, for as much as he hath created them for our good and not for our hurt. Therefore no man can kepe a righter way, than he that ſhall diligently loke vnto this ende. Nowe if we conſider to what ende he hath created meates, we ſhall finde that he meant to make prouiſion not onely for neceſſitie but alſo for delite and pleaſure. So in apparell, beſide neceſſitie he apointed an other ende, which is comlineſſe and honeſtie. In herbes, trees, and frutes, beſide diuerſe profitable vſes, there is alſo a pleaſantneſſe of ſight, and ſweteneſſe of ſmell. For if this were not true, the Prophet would not recken among the benefites of God that wine maketh glad the heart of man, and that oyle maketh his face to ſhine: the Scripture would not echewhere, to ſet fourth his liberalitie, rehearſe that he hath geuen all ſuch things to men. And the very naturall qualities of things do ſufficiently ſhew, to what ende and how far we may vſe them. Shall the Lord haue ſet in floures ſo great a beutie, as preſenteth it ſelfe to our eyes: ſhall he haue geuen ſo great a ſwetenes of ſauour as naturally floweth into our ſmelling: and ſhall it be vnlawfull either for our eyes to take the vſe of that beautie, or for our ſmelling to feele that ſweteneſſe of ſauour? what? Hath he not ſo made difference of colours, that he hath made ſome more acceptable than other? what? Hath he not geuen to gold and ſiluer, to iuorie and marble, a ſpeciall grace whereby they might be made more precious than other metalles or ſtones? Finally hath he not made many things commendable vnto vs without neceſſary vſe? Pſ. 104. 15.

3 Therefore away with that vnnaturall Philoſophie, which in graunting vs of the creatures no vſe but for neceſſitie, not onely doth niggardly bereue vs of the lawfull vſe of Gods liberalitie, but alſo can not take place, vnleſſe it firſt haue ſpoiled man of all his ſenſes and made him a blocke. But on the other ſide we muſt with no leſſe diligence prouide a ſtay for ỹ luſt of the fleſh, which if it be not brought into order, ouerfloweth without meaſure: and it hath (as I haue ſaid) defenders of it, which vnder pretenſe of allowed libertie do graunt vnto it all thinges. Firſt there is one bridle put in the mouth of it, if this be determined, that all things are created for vs to this ende, that we ſhould know the authour of them, and geue him thankes for his tender kindneſſe toward vs. Where is thy thankes geuing, if thou ſo gluttonouſly fill thy ſelfe with deinty meates or with wine, that thou either be made ſenſleſſe, or vnfit to do the duties of godlineſſe and of thy calling? Where is the reknowledging of God, if thy fleſh by to great abundance boiling in filthy luſt, doth with her vncleanneſſe infecte thy minde, that thou canſt not ſee any thinge that is right or honeſt? In apparell, where is thankefulneſſe to God, if with coſtly gorgiouſneſſe thereof we both fall in admiration of our ſelues and diſdaine other? If with the trimneſſe and cleanlineſſe of it, we prepare our ſelues to vnchaſtitie? Where is the reknowledging of God, if our minde be fixed vpon the gaineſſe of our apparell? For many ſo geue all their ſenſes to bodely delites, that the minde lieth ouerwhelmed Many are ſo delited with marble, gold, and paintings, that they become as it were menne made of marble, that they bee as it were turned into metalles, and bee like vnto painted Images. The ſmelle of the kitchen, or ſweteneſſe of ſauour ſo dulleth ſome, that they can ſmell nothing that is ſpirituall. And the ſame is alſo to be ſeen in the reſt. Therfore it is certaine that hereby the licenciouſneſſe of abuſing is ſomewhat reſtrained, and that rule of Paule confirmed, that we be not to carefull of the fleſh, for the luſtes therof, to which if we graunt to much, they boile out aboue meaſure and temper.

Rom. 13 14.

4 But there is no ſurer nor redier way than that which is made vs by the contempt of this preſent life, and the meditation of heauenly immortalitie. For thervpon follow two rules: the one, that they which vſe this world, ſhould be ſo minded as though they vſed it not, they that mary wiues as though they did not mary: they ỹ bye as though they did not bye, as Paule teacheth. The other, that they ſhould learne as well to beare pouertie, quietly and patiently, as abundance moderatly. He that biddeth thee to vſe this world as though thou didſt not vſe it, doth cut away not onely the intemperance of gluttonie in meat and drinke, and to much deintineſſe, ſumptuoſneſſe, pride, hautineſſe, and niceneſſe, in fare, bilding, and apparell, but alſo all care and affection that may either withdrawe thee or hinder thee

from thinking of the heauenly life, or from ſtudy to garniſh thy ſoule. But this was long ago truely ſaid of Cato: that there is great carefulneſſe of trimming our body, and great careleſneſſe of vertue. And it is an olde prouerbe that they which are much buſied in care of their body are commōly careleſſe of their ſoule. Therefore, although the libertie of the faithfull in outward things is not to be reſtrained to a certain forme, yet truly it muſt be ſubiect to this law, to beare very little with their owne affections, but contrariwiſe ſtill call vpon themſelues with continually bent minde, to cut of all ſhew of ſuperfluous plentie, much more to reſtraine ryotous exceſſe, and to take diligent hede, that they do not of helpes make to them ſelues hinderaunces.

5 The other rule ſhalbe, that they that haue but ſmall and ſclender richeſſe, may learne to lacke patiently, that they be not carefully moued with immeaſurable deſire of them: which pacience they that kepe, haue not a litle profited in the Lords ſchole: as he that hath not at leaſt ſomewhat profited in this behalf, can ſcarcely haue any thing whereby to proue him ſelfe the ſcholar of Chriſt. For beſide this that the moſt part of other vices do accompanie the deſire of earthly thinges, he that beareth pouertie impatiently, doth for the moſt part bewray the contrarie diſeaſe in abundance. I meane hereby that he which wilbe aſhamed of a poore cote, wilbe proude of a coſtly cote: he that will not be content with a hungry ſupper, will be diſquieted with deſire of a deintier, and would alſo intemperately abuſe thoſe deinties if he had them: he that hardly and vnquietly beareth a priuate and baſe eſtate, will not abſteine from pride if he climbe to honors. Therefore let all them that haue an vnfained zele of Godlineſſe, endeuour to learne by the Apoſtles example, to be ful and hungry, to haue ſtore & ſuffer want. The Scripture hath alſo a third rule, whereby it tempereth the vſe of earthly things, of which we haue ſpoken ſomewhat when we entreated of the preceptes of charitie. For the Scripture decreeth that all earthly things are ſo geuen vs by the bountifulneſſe of God, and appointed for our commoditie, that they may be as things deliuered vs to kepe, wherof we muſt one day yeelde an accompt. We muſt therfore ſo diſpoſe thē, that this ſaying may cōtinually ſound in our eares, yeld an accompt of thy bailiwike. Therewithall let this alſo come in our minde. Who it is that aſketh ſuch an accompt, euen he that hath ſo much commended abſtinēce, ſobrietie, honeſt ſparing, and modeſtie, and abhorreth riotous ſumptuouſneſſe, pride, oſtētation and vanitie, which alloweth no other diſpoſing of goodes, but ſuch as is ioined with charitie: which hath already with his owne mouth condemned all thoſe delitefull things

6 Laſt of all, this is to be noted, that the Lord biddeth euery one of vs in all the doinges of his life, to haue an eye to his calling. For he knoweth with how great vnquietneſſe mans wit boileth, with how ſkipping lightneſſe it is caried hether and thether, howe gredy his ambition is to holde diuerſe things at ones. Therfore that all things ſhould not be confounded with our follie and raſheneſſe, he hath apointed to euerie man his duties in ſeuerall kindes of life. And that no man raſhly runne beyond his bondes, he hath named all ſuch kindes of lyfe, vocations. Therefore euery mans ſeuerall kinde of life is vnto him as it were his ſtanding apointed him by God, that they ſhould not all their life vncertainly wander about. And this diuiſion is ſo neceſſary, that all our doings are meaſured thereby in his ſight, and oftentimes contrary to the iudgement of mans reaſon and Philoſophie. There is no deede accompted more noble, euen among the Philoſophers, than for a man to deliuer his contrie from tyrannie: but by the voice of Gods iudgement the priuate man is openly condemned that layeth hand vpon a tyrant. But I will not tarry vpon reheartſing of examples, It is ſufficient if we knowe that the calling of the Lorde is in euery thing the beginning and fundation of well doing: to which he that doth not direct himſelfe, ſhall neuer kepe a right way in his doinges. He may paraduenture ſometime do ſomewhat ſeming worthy of praiſe: but whatſoeuer that be in the ſight of men, before the throne of God it ſhalbe reiected; moreouer there ſhalbe no conuenient agrement in the partes of his life. Therefore our life ſhall then be beſt framed, when it ſhalbe directed to this marke: For then, no man caried with his owne raſhneſſe will attempt more than his calling may beare, becauſe he knoweth that it is not lawefull to paſſe beyond his bondes. He that ſhalbe a man of baſe eſtate, ſhall contentedly liue a priuate life, leaſt he ſhoulde forſake the degree wherein God hath placed him. Againe this ſhalbe no ſmall relefe to cares, labors, greues, and other burdens, when a man ſhall know that in all theſe things, God is his guide. The more willingly the magiſtrate will execute his office: the houſholder will bind him ſelfe to his dutie: euery man in his kinde of life will beare and paſſe through the diſcommodities, cares, tediouſneſſe, and anguiſhes thereof: when they are perſwaded that euery mans burdē is laid vpon him by God. Herevpon alſo ſhall growe ſingular comfort, for as much as there ſhalbe no worke ſo filthy and vile, (if it be ſuch a one as thou obey thy calling in it) but it ſhineth & is moſt precious in the ſight of God.

The xj. Chapter.

Of the iustification of Faith, and first of the definition of the name and of the thing.

I Thinke I haue already sufficiently declared before, howe there remaineth for men being accursed by the lawe one onely helpe to recouer saluation: againe, what Faith is, and what benefites of God it bestoweth vpon man, and what fruites it bringeth fourth in him. The summe of all was this, that Christ is geuē vs by the goodnesse of God, and conceiued and possessed of vs by faith, by partaking of whome we receiue principally twoo graces: the first, that being reconciled to God by his innocencie, we may nowe in stede of a iudge haue a mercifull father in heauen: the second, that being sanctified by his Spirit, we may geue our selues to innocencie and pureneſſe of life. As for regeneration, which is the second grace, we haue already spoken of it as much as semed to be sufficient. The manner of iustification was therefore lesse touched, becausse it serued well for our purpose, first to vnderstande both how the Faith by which alone we receiue frely geuen righteousnesse by the mercie of God, is not idle from good workes: & also what be the good workes of the holy ones, wherevpon part of this question entreateth. Therefore they are first to be throughly discussed, and so discussed that we must remembre that this is the chiefe stay of vpholding religiō, that we may be the more carefull and hedefull about it. For vnlesse thou first knowe, in what state thou art with God, and what his iudgement is of thee: as thou hast no ground to stablishe thy saluation, so hast thou also none to raise thy reuerēt feare toward God. But the necessitie of this knowledge shall better appere by knowledge it selfe.

2 But that we stumble not at the first entrie, (which we should do if we should entre disputation of a thing vnknowen) let vs first declare what is meant by these speches, Man to be iustified before God, To be iustified by faith or by workes. He is said to be iustified afore God, that is pronounced by the iudgement of God both iust and accepted for his owne righteousnesse sake. For as wickednesse is abhominable before God, so a sinner can not finde fauour in his eyes, in respect that he is a sinner, or so long as he is accompted such a one. Therfore whereſoeuer sinne is, there also appereth the wrath and vengeance of God. He is iustified that is not accompted in place of a sinner but of a iust man, and by reason thereof he standeth fast before the iudgement seate of God when all sinners fall. As if an innocēt be brought to be arained before the seate of a righteous iudge, when iudgement is geuen accordinge to his innocencie, he is saide to be iustified before the iudge: so he is iustified before God that being exempt out of the number of sinners hath God a witnesse and affirmer of his righteousnesse. Therfore after the same manner a man shalbe said to be iustified by workes, in whose life there is founde such cleannesse and holynesse, as may deserue the testimonie of righteousnesse before ỹ throne of God: or he that with the vprightnes of his workes is able to aunswere and satisfie Gods iudgement. Cõtrariwise he shalbe said to be iustified by faith that being excluded from the righteousnesse of workes, doth by faith take holde of the righteousnes of Christ: wherewith when he is clothed, he appeareth in the sight God, not as a sinner, but as righteous. So we simply expound iustification to be an acceptation, whereby God receiuing vs into fauour taketh vs for righteous. And we say that the same consisteth in forgeueneſſe of sinnes, and imputation of the righteousneſſe of Christ.

3 For confirmation hereof there are many and euident testimonies of Scripture. First it can not be denied, that this is the proper and most vsed significatiõ of the word. But because it is too long to gather all the places and compare them together, it shalbe enough to put the readers in minde of them, for they may of them selues easely marke them. But I will bring fourth some, where this iustification that we speake of is expressely entreated of by name. First where Luke sayeth that the people when they had heard Christ did iustifie God. And where Christ pronounceth that wisdome is iustified by her children: he doth not meane there, that they do geue righteousnesse, which alway remaineth perfect with God, although all the world go about to take it away from him: nor in this place also to make the doctrine of saluation righteous, which hath euer that of it selfe. But both these speches are as much in effect, as to geue to God and his doctrine the praise that they deserue. Againe whẽ Christ reprocheth the Pharisees, that they iustifie them selues, he doth not meane that they obteine righteousnesse by well doing, but do vainegloriously seke for the fame of righteousnesse, whereof in deede they be voide. They that are skilfull of the Hebrue tongue do better vnderstande the sense of this phrase: in which tongue they are not onely called wicked doers, that are gilty in their conscience of any wicked doing, but also they that come in daunger of iudgement of condemnation. For when Bersabe sayeth that she and Solomon shalbe wicked doers, she doth not therein acknowledge any offense, but complaineth that she and her son shalbe put to shame, to be numbred among the reprobate

probate and condemned. But by the processe of the text it easely appeareth, that the same worde in Latine also, can not otherwise be taken but by way of relation, and not to signifie any qualitie. But as concerning the matter that we are nowe in hande with: where Paule saith that the Scripture did forsee, that God iustifieth the Gentiles by faith, what may a man vnderstande thereby, but that God doth impute righteousnesse by faith? Againe, when he saith that God iustifieth the wicked man that is of the faith of Christ, what meaning can be thereof, but by the benefit of faith to deliuer them from the damnation which their wickednesse deserued? And yet he speaketh more plainely in the conclusion, when he cried out thus, Who shall accuse Gods elect? It is God that iustifieth, who shall condemne? It is Christ that died, yea that rose againe, and nowe maketh intercession for vs. It is as much in effect as if he should say, Who shall accuse them whome God acquiteth? who shall condemne them whose patrone Christ is and defendeth them? To iustifie therefore is nothing els, than to acquite him that was accused, from giltinesse as allowinge his innocencie. Sith therefore God doth iustifie vs by the intercession of Christ, he doth acquite vs, not by allowance of our owne innocency, but by imputation of righteousnesse, that we may be compted for righteous in Christ, which are not righteous in our selues. So in the. 13. Chapter of the Actes, in Paules sermon: by him is forgeuenes of sinnes preached vnto you, and euery one that beleueth in him is iustified from all those things, from which you could not be iustified in the lawe of Moses. You see that after forgeueneesse of sinnes, iustification is added in place of an exposition. You see plainely that it is taken for absolution, you se that it is taken away from the workes of the lawe. you see that it is the mere beneficiall gift of Christ, you see that it is receiued by faith. Finally you see that there is a satisfaction spoken of where he sayeth that we are iustified from sinnes by Christ. So when it is said that the Publicane came iustified out of the Temple, we can not say that he obteined righteousnesse by any deseruing of workes. This therefore is saide that after pardon of his sinnes obteined, he was compted for righteous before God. He was therefore righteous, not by approuinge of workes, but by Gods free absolution. Wherefore Ambrose sayeth very well, that calleth the confession of sinnes a lawefull iustification.

4 But to leaue striuing about the word: If we loke vpon the thing it selfe as it is described vnto vs, there shall remaine no more doubte. For truely Paule doth expresse iustification by the name of acceptation, when he saith (Ephes. 1. a. 5.) we are apointed vnto adoption by Christ, according to ỹ good pleasure of God, vnto the praise of his glorious fauour, whereby he hath accompted vs acceptable or in fauour. For the same is meant by it that is saide in an other place, that God doth frely iustifie. In the 4. Chapter to the Romaines, he first calleth it an imputation of righteousnesse, and sticketh not to say that it consisteth in forgeuenesse of sinnes. That man (said he) is called of Dauid a blessed man, to whom God accõpteth or imputeth righteousnesse without workes, as it is written: Blessed are they whose iniquities are forgeuen. &c. Truely he there doth entreate not of one part of iustification, but of all iustification wholly. And he testifieth that Dauid in that place maketh a definition of iustification, when he pronounceth that they are blessed to whom is geuen free forgeuenesse of sinnes. Whereby appereth that this righteousnesse whereof he speaketh, is in comparison simply set as contrary to giltinesse. But for this purpose, that is ỹ best place where he teacheth, that this is the summe of the message of the Gospell, that we should be reconciled to God: because it is his will to receiue vs into fauour through Christ, in not imputing sinnes vnto vs. Let the reders diligently wey all the whole processe of the text. For by & by after, where he addeth by way of exposition, that Christ which was without sinne was made sinne for vs, to expresse the manner of reconciliation, doubtlesse he meaneth nothing els by the word recõciling but iustifying. And that which he saith in an other place, that we are made righteous by the obedience of Christ, could not stand together, vnlesse we be accompted righteous before God, in him, and without our selues.

Rom. 3. 24. Rom. 4. 6. 2. Cor 5 18. Rom. 5. 19.

5 But where as Osiander hath brought in, I wote not what monster of essentiall righteousnes, whereby, although his will was not to destroy free righteousnes, yet he hath wrapped it within such a mist, as darkeneth godly mindes, & bereueth them of the earnest feling of the grace of Christ: therefore ere I passe further to other thinges, it is worthy labour to cõfute this doting errour. First this speculatiõ is but of mere & hungry curiositie. He doth in deede heape together many testimonies of Scripture, to proue that Christ is one with vs, and we one with him, which nedeth no profe: but because he kepeth not this bonde of vnitie, he snareth him selfe. But we which holde that we are made all óne with Christ by the power of his Spirit, may easily vndo all his knottes. He had conceiued a certaine thing very neare to the opinion of Manichees, to desire to conuey the substance of God into men. Herevpon riseth an other inuention of his that Adam was fashioned after the Image of God, because euen before the fall Christ was ordained the paterne of the nature of man. But by cause I would would be shorte, I will tarry vpon the matter that I haue presently in hande. He saith that we are one with Christ. We graunt. But we denie that the substance of Christ is mingled with oures. Moreouer we say that this principle that Christ is righteousnesse to vs, because he is an eternall God, the fountaine of righteousnesse & the very selfe righteousnesse of God, is wrongfully drawen to defende his deceites. The readers shall pardon me, if I do nowe but touche these thinges that the ordre of teaching requireth to be differred into an other place. But although he excuse himselfe from meaning nothing els by the name of essentiall righteousnesse, but to resist this opinion that we are accompted righteous for Christes sake: yet he plainly expresseth that he is not contented with that righteousnes that is purchased for vs by the obedience and sacrifice of Christ, but faineth that we are substãtially righteous in God, as well by substãce as by quality poured into vs. For this is the reason why he so earnestly affirmeth, that not only Christ, but also ỹ father & the holy Ghost do dwell in vs. Which although I graunt to be true, yet I say that he wrongfully wresteth it. For he should haue considered the manner of dwelling, that is, that the father and the holy Ghost are in Christ, and as the fulnesse of the Godhead dwelleth in him, so do we possesse whole God in him. Therfore all that he saith seuerally of the father & the holy Ghost, tẽdeth to no other ende but to draw ỹ simple from Christ. And then he thrusteth in a mixture of substances, whereby God pouring himselfe into vs, doth make vs as it were a part of himselfe. For he reckeneth it almõst a matter of nothing, that it is wrought by the power of the holy Ghost, that we grow into one with Christ, & that he is our heade & we his membres, vnlesse his very substãce be mingled with vs. But in the father & the holy Ghost (as I haue said) he doth more openly bewray what he thinketh, euen this, that we be iustified not by the only grace of the Mediator, and that righteousnesse is not simply or perfectly offered vs in his persone, but that we are made partakers of the righteousnes of God, whẽ God is essentially made one with vs.

6 If he did say no more, but that Christ in iustifying vs, is by essentiall conioining made oures: and that not onely he is our heade, in that he is manne, but also that the substance of the diuine nature is powred into vs. He should with lesse hurte feede him selfe deintily, and paraduenture so great a contention should not haue bene raised for this doubtinge errour. But sith this beginning is like a cuttle that with casting out of blacke and thicke bloode hideth her many tailes, we must needes earnestly resiste vnlesse we will wittingly & willingely suffer that righteousnesse to be taken from vs, which only bringeth vs confidence to glory of ſaluation. For in all this diſcourſe, the name of righteouſneſſe, and this worde iuſtifying, extende to two partes: that to be iuſtified is not onely to be reconciled to God with free pardon, but alſo to be made righteous, that righteouſnes is not a free imputation but a holineſſe and vprightneſſe, which the ſubſtance of God remaining in vs doth breath into vs. Then he ſtoutly denieth, that Chriſt is our righteouſneſſe in reſpect that being a prieſt he did with ſatisfactorily purging ſinnes appeaſe his father towarde vs, but in reſpect that he is eternall God and life. To proue that firſt point, that God doth iuſtifie not onely by forgeuing but alſo by regenerating, he aſketh whether God doth leaue them whom he doth iuſtifie ſuch as they were by nature, chaunging nothing of their vices. The aunſwere hereof is very eaſy: that as Chriſt can not be torne in partes ſo theſe two things which we together and iointly receiue in him, that is to ſay righteouſneſſe and ſanctification, are inſeparable. Therfore, whomſoeuer God receiueth into fauour, he doth alſo therwithall geue them the ſpirit of adoption, by the power whereof he newly faſhioneth them after his image. But if the brightneſſe of the ſunne can not be ſeuered from the heate thereof, ſhall we therefore ſay that the earth is warmed with the light, and enlightened with the heate? There is nothing more fit for this purpoſe, than this ſimilitude The ſunne with his heate geueth life and frutefulneſſe to the earth, with his beames he geueth light and brightneſſe. Here is a mutuall and vnſeparable conioining: yet reaſon forbiddeth to conuey to the one that which is peculiar to the other. Like abſurditie is in this confuſion of two ſortes of graces, that Oſiander thruſteth in. For becauſe God doth in deede renew them to the obſeruing of righteouſneſſe whom he freely accompteth for righteous, therefore Oſiander confoundeth that gift of regeneration with this free acceptation, and affirmeth that they be al one and the ſelfeſame thing. But the Scripture ioining them both together, yet doth diſtinctly recken them, that the manifold grace of God may ỹ better appere vnto vs. For that ſaying of Paule is not ſuperfluous, that Chriſt was geuen vs vnto righteouſneſſe and ſanctification. And whenſoeuer he reaſoneth to proue by the ſaluation purchaced for vs by the fatherly loue of God, and by the grace of Chriſt, that we are called to holineſſe and cleanneſſe, he plainely declareth that it is one thing to be iuſtified and an other to be made newe creatures. But when Oſiander cometh to the Scripture, he corrupteth as many places as he allegeth. Where Paule ſaith that faith is accompted for righteouſneſſe to him that worketh not, but beleueth in him that iuſtifieth the wicked man, he expoundeth it to make righteous. With like rashnesse, he depraueth all the fourth Chapter to the Romains, and sticketh not with like false colour to corrupt that place which I euen now alleged, Who shall accuse the electes of God? it is God that iustifieth: where it is plaine that he speaketh simply of giltinesse and acquiting, & the meaning of the Apostle hangeth vpon a comparing of cõtraries. Therfore Osiander is found too fond a babbler, as well in that reason as in alleging the testimonies of Scripture. And no more rightly doth he speake of the name of righteousnesse, in saying that faith was accompted to Abraham for righteousnesse, after that embracing Christ (which is the righteousnesse of God and God him selfe) he excelled in singular vertues, whereby appereth that of two whole places he hath wrongfully made one corrupt place. For the righteousnes that is there mentioned, perteineth not to the whole course of his calling: but rather the holy Ghost testifieth, that although the vertues of Abraham were singularly excellent, and that with long continuance he at length had encreased them: yet he did no other way please God, but by this, that he receiued by faith the grace offered in the promise. Wherevpon followeth, that in iustification there is no place for workes, as Paule very well affirmeth. Rom. 4. 5.

7 As for this that Osiander obiecteth, that the power of iustifying is not in faith of it selfe, but in respect that it receueth Christ, I willingly graũt it. For if faith did iustifie of it selfe, or by inward force, as they call it and as it is alway feble and vnperfect, could not worke iustification but in part, so should the iustification be maimed, that should geue vs but a pece of saluation. As for vs, we imagine no such thing, but in proper speaking do say, that God onely iustifieth: and then we geue the same to Christ, because he was geuẽ vs vnto righteousnesse: and faith we compare as it were to a vessell. For except we came emptie with open mouth of our soule to craue the grace of Christ, we can not be able to receiue Christ. Wherevpon we gather that we do not take from Christ the power of iustifying, when we teache that he is first receiued by faith, before that his righteousnesse be receiued. But yet I do not admit the crooked figures of this Sophister, when he saith that faith is Christ: as if an earthen pot were a treasure, because gold is hiddẽ in it. For the reason is not vnlike, but that faith although it be by it selfe of no worthines or price, may iustifie vs in bringing Christ, as a pot full of money maketh a man riche. Therefore I say that faith, which is onely the instrument to receiue righteousnesse, is vnfitly mingled with Christ, which is the materiall cause and both author and minister of so great a benefit. Nowe is this doubt also dissolued. Howe this worde Faith ought to be vnderstanded when we entreate of iustification.

8 In the receiuing of Christ he goth further: for he sayeth, that the inward worde is receiued by the ministration of the outwarde worde, thereby to drawe vs from the priesthode of Christ and the persone of the Mediatour to his outwarde Godhed. As for vs, we deuide not Christ, but we say that he is the same eternall worde of God, which reconciling vs to God in his flesh, gaue vs righteousnesse: and we confesse that otherwise he could not haue fulfilled the office of Mediatour, and purchaced vs righteousnesse, vnlesse he had bene eternall God. But this is Osianders doctrine, where as Christ is both God and man, that he was made righteousnesse to vs, in respect of his nature of Godhed, and not of manhode. But if this properly belong to the Godhed, then it shall not be peculiar to Christ, but common with the father and the holy Ghost, for as much as there is not one righteousnesse of the one, & an other of the other. Morouer that which was naturally from eternitie, could not be conueniently said to be made to vs. But although we graunt this, that God was made righteousnesse for vs: howe shall it agree that that which is set betwene, is made of God? Truely that properly belongeth to the persone of the Mediatour: which though he conteine in him selfe the nature of Godhede, yet here he is specially signified by his proper title, by which he is seuerally discerned from the father and the holy Ghost. But he folishly triumpheth in that one worde of Hieremie, where he promiseth that the Lord Iehoua shalbe our righteousnesse, but out of that he shall gather nothing, but that Christ which is righteousnes, is God openly shewed in the flesh. In an other place we haue rehearsed out of Paules sermō, that God purchaced to himselfe the Church with his bloud, if any man gather therevpon, that the bloud wherewith sinnes were purged was diuine, and of the nature of Godhed, who can abide so fowle an errour? But Osiander thinketh that with this so childishe a cauillation he hath gotten all things, he swelleth, he leapeth for ioy, and stuffeth many leaues full with his bigge wordes: when yet there is a plaine and redy solution for it in saying that the worde Iehoua in deede when he is made the issue of Dauid shalbe the righteousnesse of the godly: But Esaye teacheth in what sense, saying: My iust seruant shall with knowledge of himselfe iustifie many. Let vs note that the father speaketh: that he geueth to the sonne the office of iustifying: he addeth a cause, for that he is iust, and setteth the manner or meane as they call it in the doctrine wherby Christ is knowen. For it is a more cōmodious exposition to take this worde Daah knowledge passiuely. Herevpon I gather first that Christ was made righteousnesse when he did put on the fourme of a seruaunt: secondely that he did iustifie vs in respect that he shewed him selfe obedient to his father: and that therefore he doth not this for vs according to his nature of Godhed, but according to the office of dispensation committed vnto him. For although God alone is the fountaine of righteousnesse, & we be made righteous by no other meane but by the partaking of him: yet because we are by vnhappy disagrement estranged from his righteousnesse, we must needes come downe to this lower remedy, that Christ may iustifie vs with the force of his death and resurrection.

Act. 20. 28.

9 If he obiect that this is a worke of such excellency, that it is aboue the nature of man, and therfore can not be ascribed but to the nature of God, the first I graunt: but in the second I say that he is vnwisely deceiued. For although Christ could neither clense our soules with his bloud, nor appease his father with his sacrifice, nor acquite vs frō giltinesse, nor do the office of priest, vnlesse he had bene true God, because the strength of the flesh had bene to weake for so great a burden: yet it is certain that he performed all these things according to his nature of manhod. For if it be demaunded how we be iustified, Paule answereth, by the obedience of Christ. But did he any otherwise obey than by taking vpon him the shape of a seruāt? wherevpon we gather that righteousnesse was geuē vs in his flesh. Likewise in the other wordes (which I maruell that Osiander is not ashamed to allege so often) he apointeth the fountaine of righteousnesse no where els but in the flesh of Christ. Him that knew no sinne he made sinne for vs, that we might be ỹ righteousnesse of God in him. Osiander with full mouth aduaunceth the righteousnes of God, and triumpheth as though he had proued that it is his imaginatiue Ghost of essentiall righteousnesse: when the wordes sound far otherwise, that we be righteous by the cleansing made by Christ. Very yong beginners should not haue bene ignorant that the righteousnesse of God is taken for the righteousnesse that God alloweth, as in Iohn, where the glorie of God is compared with the glorie of men. I knowe that sometime it is called the righteousnesse of God, whereof God is the authour and which God geueth vs: but though I say nothing, the reders that haue their sound wit do perceiue that nothing els is meant in this place but that we stande vpright before the iudgement seate of God, being vpholden by the cleansing sacrifice of Christes death. And there is not so great importance in the word, so that Osiander do agree with vs in this point that we are iustified in Christ, in this respect that he was made a propiciatorie sacrifice for vs, which can not agree with his nature of Godhed. After which sort, when Christ meaneth to seale the righteousnesse & saluation that he hath brought vs, he setteth before vs an assured pledge thereof in his flesh. He doth in deede call him selfe the lyuely bred, but expressing the manner here, he addeth that his flesh is verily meate, and his bloud is verily drinke. Which manner of teaching is sene in the Sacramentes, which although they direct our faith to whole Christ, and not to halfe Christ, yet they do there withall teache that the matter of righteousnesse and saluation remaineth in his flesh: Not that in that that he is onely man, he either iustifieth or quickeneth of him selfe, but because it pleased God to shewe openly in the mediatour that which was hidden and incomprehensible in him selfe, whereupon I am wont to say, that Christ is as it were a fountaine set opē for vs, out of which we may drawe that which otherwise should without fruite ly hidden in that close and depe spring that riseth vp vnto vs in the persone of the Mediatour. In ths manner & meaning, I do not deny that Christ as he is God and man doth iustifie vs, and that this is also the worke of the father & the holy Ghost as well as his. Finally, that the righteousnesse whereof Christ maketh vs partakers, is the eternall righteousnesse of the eternall God, so that he yelde to the sure and plaine reasons that I haue alleged.

10 Nowe that he shoulde not with his cauillations deceiue the vnskilfull, I graunt that we want this incomparable benefit, till Christ be made ours Therefore we set that conioyning of the head and the membres, the dwelling of Christ in our heartes, and that misticall vnion, in the hiest degree: that Christ being made ours, may make vs partakers of the giftes wherewith he is endued. Therefore we do not beholde him a far of out of our selues, that righteousnesse may be imputed vnto vs, but because we haue put on him, and are grafted into his body: finally, because he hath vouchsaued to make vs one with him, therefore we glorie that we haue a fellowship of righteousnesse with him. So is Osianders sclaunderous cauillation confuted, where he saith that we compt faith righteousnesse, as though we spoiled Christ of his right, when we say that we come by faith empty to him, to geue roume to his grace, that he onely may fil vs. But Osiander refusing this spirituall conioining, enforceth a grosse mingling with the faithfull, and therefore he odiously calleth all them Zuinglians that subscribe not to his fantasticall errour, cōcerning essentiall righteousnesse: because they do nor thinke that Christ is substācially eaten in the Lordes supper. As for me, I compt it a great glorie to be so re-

proched of a proude man & geuen to his owne erros. Albeit he toucheth not me onely, but also other writers well knowen to the world, whom he ought to haue modestly reuerēced. It moueth me nothing, which meddle not with mine owne priuate cause: and so much the more sincerely I handle this cause, being free from all corrupt affection. Where as therefore he so importunately requireth essentiall righteousnesse, and the essentiall dwelling of Christ in vs, it tendeth to this ende: First that God should with a grosse mixture poure himself into vs, as he faineth a fleshly eating of Christ in ỹ supper: secondly that God shoulde breath his righteousnesse into vs, whereby we may be really righteous with him: for by his opinion, this righteousnesse is as well God himselfe, as the goodnesse or holinesse, or pureneſſe of God. I will not spende much labour in wiping away the testimonies that he bringeth, which he wrongfully wresteth from the heauenly life to this present state. Through Christ (sayth Peter) are geuē vs the precious & most great promises, that we should be made partakers of the nature of God: As though we weare nowe such as the Gospell promised that we shalbe at the last comming of Christ: yea Iohn telleth vs, that we shall then see God as he is, because we shalbe like vnto him. Onely I thought good to geue a small tast to the readers, that I do of purpose passe ouer these trifles: not for that it is harde to confute them, but becausse I will not be tedious in a superfluous worke. 1. Pet. 1. 4. 1. Iohn. 3. 1.

11 But in the secōde point lurketh more poison, where he teacheth that we are righteous together with God. I thinke I haue already sufficiently proued, that although this doctrine were not so pestilent, yet becausse it is colde and fruteless, & of it selfe so vaine that it melteth away, it ought worthely to be vnsauorie to sound and godly Readers. But this is an intolerable wickednesse, vnder pretēse of double righteousnesse, to enfeble the earnest assuraunce of saluation, and to cary vs aboue the cloudes, that we should not embrace by faith the grace of propiciation, & call vpon God with quiet mindes. Osiander scorneth thē, that teach that this word Iustifying is a law terme: becausse, we must be righteous in deede. And he abhorreth nothinge more than so say, that we be iustified by free imputation. But, if God do not iustifie vs by acquiting and pardoning, what meaneth that saying of Paule, God was in Christ reconciling the world to him selfe, not imputing to men their sinnes. For, him that had done no sinne, he made sinne for vs, that we might be the righteousnes of God in him. First I winne thus much, that they be iudged righteous that be reconciled to God. The manner howe is declared, for that God iustifieth 1. Cor. 5. 12.

by forgeuing: as in an other place iuſtification is ſet as contrary to accuſation, which comparing of them as contraries, doth clerely ſhewe that it is a phraſe borrowed from the vſe of the lawe. And there is no man being but meanly practiſed in the Hebrew tongue, if he haue a ſober braine, that is ignoraunt that this phraſe came from thence, and whereunto it tendeth, and what it meaneth. Nowe where Paule ſayeth that Dauid deſcribed ỹ righteouſneſſe without workes, in theſe wordes, Bleſſed are they whoſe ſinnes are forgeuen: Let Oſiander aunſwere me whether this be a full definition or but halfe a one. Truely Paule bringeth not in the Prophet for a witneſſe, as though he taught that forgeueneſſe of ſinnes is but a part of righteouſnes, or a thing that ioineth with other to the iuſtifying of man: But he includeth whole righteouſnes in free forgeueneſſe, pronouncing the man bleſſed, whoſe ſinnes are couered, to whom God hath forgeuen iniquities, and to whom he imputeth no tranſgreſſions. He doth meaſure and iudge ſuch a mans felicitie thereby, becauſe he is not this way righteous in deede, but by imputation. Oſiander taketh exception and ſayeth, that this ſhould be ſclaunderous to God, and contrary to his nature, if he ſhould iuſtifie them that in deede remaine ſtill wicked. But we muſt remember, as I haue already ſaide, that the grace of iuſtifying is not ſeuered from regeneration, although they be ſeuerall things. But becauſe it is more than ſufficiently knowen by experience, that there abide alwaies in the righteous ſome remnantes of ſinne, it muſt needes be that they be farre otherwiſe iuſtified than they be reformed into newneſſe of life. For this later point of reformation, God ſo beginneth in his elect, & throughout the whole courſe of their life, by litle & litle, & ſomtime ſlowly procedeth in it, that they be alway before his ſeat in danger of ỹ iudgement of death, But he iuſtifieth them, not by partmeale, but ſo that they may freely, as clothed with the purenes of Chriſt, appere in heauen For no portion of righteouſneſſe could appeaſe our conſciences, till they be ſatisfied that God is fully pleaſed with vs, becauſe we be righteous in his ſight with out exception. Wherupon followeth, that the doctrine of iuſtification is miſturned, yea ouerturned from the very foundatiō, when doutinge is caſt into mens mindes, when the affiance of ſaluation is ſhaken, when the free and dredleſſe inuocation is hindered, yea when quiet and tranquillitie with ſpirituall ioy is not ſtabliſhed. Wherevpon Paule gathereth an argument by contraries, to proue, that the inheritance is not by the lawe. For by this meane faith ſhould be made voide, which if it haue reſpect to workes, is ouerthrowen, becauſe none of the moſt holy ſhall therin finde wherevpon to truſt.

Rom. 4. 7.
Pſ. 32. 1.
Gala. 3. 18.

This

This difference of iustifyinge and regeneratinge (which two thinges. Osiander confounding together, calleth two sortes of righteousnes) is very well expressed by Paule: For speaking of his reall righteousnes in deede, or of the vprightnes wherewith he was endued (which Osiander nameth essentiall righteousnesse) he lamentably crieth out: Wretch that I am: who shall deliuer me from the body of this death? Rom. 7. 24. But fleeinge to the righteousnes which is grounded vpon the onely mercy of God, he gloriously triumpheth ouer both life, death, reproches, hunger, sword, and all aduersities. Who shall accuse the electes of God whome he iustifieth? For I am surely perswaded, that nothing Rom. 8. 33. shall seuere vs frō his loue in Christ. He plainly publisheth, ý he hath the righteousnes which alone fully sufficeth to saluatiō before God, so that the wretched bondage which he knowing to be in himselfe, did alitle before bewaile his estate, may not monish nor any way hinder his boldnes to glory. This diuersity is sufficiently knowen, and so familiar to all the holy ones, that grone vnder the burden of iniquities, & yet with victorious confidence, do mount vp aboue all feares. As for this that Osiander obiecteth, that it disagreeth with the nature of God, it falleth vpon himselfe. For although he clotheth the holy ones with a double righteousnes as it were with a furred garment, yet he is compelled to confesse that without forgiuenesse of sinnes they neuer pleased God. If that be true, then at least let him graunt, that they which are not righteous in deede, are accompted righteous accordinge to the appointed proportion of imputation, as they call it. But how farre shall a sinner extende this free acceptation that is put in place of righteousnes? shall he measure it by the pound or by the ounce? Truely he shall hang doutfull and wauering to this side & that side, because he may not take vnto him so much righteousnesse as shalbe necessary to stablishe confidence. It is happy that he that would binde God to a law, is not iudge of this cause. But this shall stande stedfast, that thou mayst be iustified in thy sayinges and ouercome when thou art iudged. But howe great presumption is it Ps. 51. 6 to condemne the chiefe iudge when he freely acquiteth, that this aunswere may not be in force, I will haue mercy vpon whome I will haue mercy. And yet the intercession of Moses which God did put to Exo. 32. 19. silence with this saying, tended not to this ende that he should spare none, but that he should acquite altogether, taking away their condemnation although they were gilty of offense. And we do say that they which were lost haue their sinnes buried and so are iustified before God: because, as God hateth sinne, so he cā loue none but thē whom he iustifieth. But this is a maruellous manner of iustifyinge, that they being couered with the righteousnesse of Christ stand not in feare of the iudgement which they haue deserued, and when they worthily condemne themselues are accompted righteous without themselues.

12 But the readers are to be warned, that they take good heede to the mistery which he braggeth that he will not hide from them. For after that he hath longe and largely trauailed to proue that we do not obtaine fauour with God by the only imputatiō of the righteousnesse of Christ, because this should be impossible for him to compt them for righteous that are not righteous, (I vse his owne wordes) at length he concludeth that Christ was giuen vs vnto righteousnes, not in respect of his nature of manhoode but of his nature of Godhead: and that although this righteousnesse can not be found but in the person of the Mediatour, yet it is the righteousnesse not of mā but of God. he doth now binde vp his rope made of two righteousnesses, but he plainely taketh away the office of iustifyinge from Christes nature of manhode. But it is good to see how he disagreeth. It is sayd in the same place, that Christ was made vnto wisdom, which belongeth to none but to the eternal word. Therefore Christ in that he is man is not wisdom. I answere that the onely begotten sonne of Col.2.3 God was in deede his eternall wisedome, but in Paules wrytinges that name is giuen him in diuerse wise, because all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge are layd vp in him. That therefore which he had with his father, he disclosed vnto vs: and so that which Paul saith is not referred vnto the essence of the sonne of God, but to our vse, and is rightly applied to Christes nature of manhoode: because although he shined a light in darkenes, before that he did put on flesh, Iohn.8.12. yet it was a hidden light till the same Christ came foorth in the nature of man, the shininge sunne of righteousnesse, which therefore calleth himselfe the light of the world. Also it is foolishly obiected of him, that the power of iustifying is farre aboue both Angels and men: forasmuch as this hangeth not vpon the worthinesse of any creature, but vpon the ordinance of God. If Angels will take vpon them to satisfie God, they can nothinge preuaile, because they are not appoin-
Ga.3 13 ted therunto. But this singularly belonged to Christ being man, which was made subiect to the law, to redeme vs from the curse of the law. Also he doth sclaunderously cauill, that they which deny that Christ is our righteousnesse accordinge to his nature of Godhead, do leaue but one part of Christ, & (which is worse) do make two gods, because although they confesse, that God dwelleth in vs, yet they say againe that we are not righteous by the righteousnes of God. For although

we call Christ the author of life, in respect that he suffered death to destroy him that had the power of death, we do not byandby take away that honor from whole Christ as he was openly shewed God in the flesh, but we only make a distinction how the righteousnes of God is conueied vnto vs, ẏ we may enioy it. In which point Osiander hath too fowly erred. Neither do we deny that that which is openly giuen vs in Christ, proceedeth frō the secret grace & power of God: & we striue not against this, that the righteousnesse which Christ giueth vs is the righteousnesse of God that proceedeth from God: but we hold this stedfastly, that we haue righteousnes & life in the death & resurrection of Christ. I ouerpasse that heaping together of places wherof he may wel be ashamed, wherwith he hath tediously cōbred the readers without choise & without common reason, to proue that wheresoeuer is made mention of righteousnes, there ought to be vnderstanded this essentiall righteousnes. As where Dauid calleth vpon the righteousnesse of God to help him: whereas he doth the same aboue a hundred times, Osiander sticketh not to corrupt so many sentences. And nothing strōger is the other obiection, that that is properly and rightly called righteousnesse, whereby we be moued to do rightly, but that God only worketh in vs both to will & to performe. For we do also not deny, but that God reformeth vs with his Spirite vnto holinesse of life and righteousnes: but we must first see whether he do this by himselfe and immediatly, or by the hand of his Sonne, with whom he hath left all the fullnesse of his holy Spirit, that with his abundant store he should supply the nede of his members. Moreouer although righteousnesse come vnto vs out of the secret fountaine of the godhead, yet it followeth not that Christ which sanctified himselfe in the flesh for our sakes, was righteousnes vnto vs according to his nature of godhead. No lesse fonde is that which he sayth, that Christ himselfe was righteous by the righteousnes of God. Because vnlesse ẏ wil of his father had moued him, he could not himselfe haue satisfied ẏ office cōmitted vnto him. For though we haue in an other place sayd, that all the deseruings of Christ himselfe do procede from the mere good will of God, yet ẏ maketh nothing to that fantasticall thing, wherwith Osiander bewitcheth both his owne & simple mens eyes. For who woulde suffer a man to gather this conclusion, that because God is the fountaine & beginning of our righteousnesse, therfore we be essentially righteous, & the essence of Gods righteousnes dwelleth in vs? In redeminge the church (sayth Esay) God did put on his righteousnesse as a harnesse: but did he so to spoile Christ of his armure which he hadde giuen him, to make him to be no perfect redeemer? But the Prophet meant nothing elſe but that God borowed nothing out of himſelfe, nor was holpen by any aide to redeme vs. Which thing Paul briefely expreſſed in other wordes, ſaying that Rom 3. 25. he gaue vs ſaluation to the ſhewinge of his righteouſneſſe. But this doth not ouerthrowe that which he teacheth in an other place, that

Rom. 5. 19. we are righteous by the obedience of one man. Finally whoſoeuer wrappeth vp a double righteouſneſſe, that poore ſoules may not reſt in the mere only mercy of God, he doth in a mockery crowne Chriſt with thornes.

13 But foraſmuch as a great parte of men, imagineth righteouſnes to be made of faith and works, let vs firſt ſhew this alſo, that the righteouſneſſe of faith and workes do ſo differ, that when the one is ſta-
Philip. 3 8. bliſhed, the other muſt needes be ouerthrowen. The Apoſtle ſayeth that he eſteemed all things as dong, that he might winne Chriſt and finde in him the righteouſneſſe that is of God by fayth, comptinge not his righteouſneſſe that which is by the law, but that which is by the faith of Ieſu Chriſt. You ſee that here is alſo a cõpariſon of cõtraries & that here is declared that he which wil obtaine the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt, muſt forſake his owne righteouſneſſe. Therefore in Rom 10 3. an other place he ſayeth, that this was the cauſe of fall to the Iewes that going about to ſtabliſh their owne righteouſnes, they were not ſubiect to the righteouſneſſe of God. If in ſtabliſhing our owne righteouſneſſe we ſhake away the righteouſneſſe of God, therefore to obtaine Gods righteouſnes our owne muſt be vtterly aboliſhed. And
Rom. 3. 27. he ſheweth the ſame thinge, when he ſayth, that our gloryinge is not excluded by the law, but by faith. Wherupon followeth that ſo long as there remaineth any righteouſneſſe of workes, howe litle ſoeuer it be, there ſtill remaineth to vs ſome matter to glory vpõ. Now if faith exclude all glorying, then the righteouſneſſe of workes can no wiſe be coupled with the righteouſnes of faith. To this effect he ſpeaketh
Ro. 4. 2. ſo plainely in the 4. chapter to Romaines, that he leaueth no roume for cauillations or ſhiftes: If (ſayth he) Abraham was iuſtified by workes, he hath glory. And immediatly he addeth: but he hath no glory in the ſight of God It followeth therfore that he was not iuſtified by workes. Then he bringeth an other argument by contraries, when reward is rendered to workes, that is done of det and not of grace. But righteouſneſſe is giuen to faith according to grace: Therfore it is not of the deſeruinges of workes. Wherefore farewell their dreame, that imagine a righteouſnes made of faith & workes mingled together.

14 The Sophiſters thinke that they haue a ſutle ſhift, that make to themselues sport and pastime with wresting of Scripture and with vaine cauillations. For they expound works in that place to be those which mē not yet regenerate do only literally & by the endeuour of free will without the grace of Christ: & do say that it belongeth not to spirituall workes. So by their opinion a man is iustified both by faith & by workes, so that the workes be not his owne, but the gifts of Christ and frutes of regeneration. For they say that Paule spake so for none other cause, but to conuince ỹ Iewes, trusting vpon their owne workes, that they did foolishly presume to claime righteousnesse to themselues, sith the only Spirit of Christ doth giue it vs, and not any endeuour by our owne motion of nature. But they do not marke that in the comparison of the righteousnesse of the lawe and the righteousnes of the Gospell, which Paul bringeth in in an other place, all workes are excluded with what title soeuer they be adorned. For he teacheth that this is the righteousnesse of the lawe, that he should obtaine saluation that hath performed that which the law commaundeth: & that this is ỹ righteousnes of faith, if we beleue that Christ died and is risen againe. Moreouer we shall hereafter shew in place fit for it, that sanctification & righteousnes are seuerall benefites of Christ. Wherupon followeth that the very spirituall workes come not into the accompt, when the power of iustifyinge is ascribed to faith. And where Paul denieth (as I euen now alleaged) that Abraham had any thinge whereupon to glory before God, because he was not made righteous by workes: this ought not to be restrained to the literall and outward kinde of vertues, or to the endeuour of free will. But although the life of the patriarch Abraham were spirituall & in maner Angelike, yet he had not sufficient deseruinges of workes to purchace him righteousnesse before God. Ga.3.11

15 The Scholemē teach a litle more grosly that mingle their preparations: but these do lesse infect the simple and vnskilful with corrupt doctrine, vnder pretense of Spirit and grace hiding the mercy of God which onely is able to appease tremblinge consciences. But we confesse with Paul that the doers of the law are iustified before God: but because we are all farre from the keeping of the law, hereupon we gather, that the workes which should most of all haue auailed to righteousnes, do nothing help vs because we lacke thē. As for the cōmon Papistes or Schoolemen, they are in this point doubly deceiued: both because they call faith an assuredneſse of conscience in lookinge for reward at the hande of God for deseruinges, and also because they expounde the grace of God not to be a free imputation of righteousnesse, but the holy Ghost helping to the endeuour of holinesse. They

Heb.11. 6. read in the Apoſtle that he which commeth to God, muſt firſt beleue that there is a God, and then that he is a rendrer of reward to them that ſeeke him. But they marke not, what is the maner of ſeking. And that they are deceiued in the name of grace, is plainely proued by their owne wrytings. For Lombard expoundeth, that iuſtification by Chriſt is giuen vs two wayes. Firſt (ſayth he) the death of Chriſt doth iuſtifie vs, when by it charity is ſtirred vp in our heartes, by which we are made righteous. Secondly that by the ſame death ſinne is deſtroyed, whereby Sathan held vs captiue, ſo that nowe he hath not whereby to condemne vs. You ſee how he conſidereth the grace of God principally in iuſtificatiō, to be ſo far as we are directed to good works by the grace of the holy Ghoſt. He woulde forſoth haue folowed the opinion of Auguſtine: but he foloweth him a far of, & goeth far out of the way from rightly followinge him: becauſe if Auguſtine haue ſpoken any thing plainly he darkeneth it, if there be any thinge in Auguſtine not very vnpure, he corrupteth it. The Scholemē haue ſtil ſtraied from worſe to worſe, till with headlong fall at length they be rolled downe into a Pelagian errour. And the very ſentence of Auguſtine, or at leaſt his manner of ſpeakinge is not altogether to be receiued. For though he ſingularly well taketh from man all praiſe of righteouſneſſe and aſſigneth it wholly to the grace of God, yet he referreth grace to ſanctification, wherby we are renued into newneſſe of life by the holy Ghoſt.

Sent. li. 3. diſt. 16. ca. 2.

16 But the Scripture, when it ſpeaketh of ŷ righteouſnes of faith, leadeth vs to a far other ende, that is to ſay, that turning away frō the loking vpō our owne workes, we ſhould only loke vnto the mercy of God & perfectiō of Chriſt. For it teacheth this order of iuſtification, that firſt God vouchſaueth to embrace man beinge a ſinner with his mere & free goodnes conſidering nothing in him but miſery wherby he may be moued to mercy, foraſmuch as he ſeeth him altogether naked & voide of good workes, fetching frō himſelfe the cauſe to do him good: then, that he moueth the ſinner himſelfe with feeling of his goodnes, which deſpeiring vpon his owne workes caſteth al ŷ ſumme of his ſaluation vpon Gods mercy. This is the feelinge of faith, by which feling the ſinner cōmeth into poſſeſſion of his ſaluation, when he acknowledgeth by the doctrine of the Goſpel that he is recōciled to God: that obtaininge forgiuenes of ſinnes by meanes of the righteouſnes of Chriſt, he is iuſtified: & although he be regenerate by the Spirite of God, he thinketh vpon continuall righteouſneſſe layed vp for him not in the good workes to which he applieth himſelf, but in ŷ only righteouſnes of Chriſt. Whē theſe things ſhalbe euery one particular ticularly weied, they shall giue a perfect declaration of our sentence. Albeit they might be better disposed in an other order thā they are set forth, But it maketh litle matter, so ỳ they hang together in such sort that we may haue the whole matter truely declared & surely proued.

17 Here it is good to remember the relation that we haue before said to be betwene faith and the Gospell: becausе it is sayd for this cause that faith iustifieth, for that it receiueth & embraceth the righteousnesse offered in the gospel. And whereas it is sayd to be offered by the gospel, thereby all consideration of works is excluded. Which thing Paul declareth many times elsе where, but most plainly in two places For, to the Romaines, cōparing the law & the gospel together he sayth: the righteousnes that is by the law is thus, the mā that doth these thinges shall liue in them. But the righteousnesse that is of faith offereth saluation, if thou beleue in thy heart and confesse with thy mouth the Lord Iesus, & that the father hath raised him vp from the dead. See you not how he maketh this the difference of the law and the gospel, that the law giueth righteousnesse to workes, and the gospell giueth free righteousnesse without helpe of workes? it is a notable place, and that may deliuer vs out of many hard doutes, if we vnderstande that the same righteousnesse that is giuen vs by the gospel is free from all conditions of the law. This is the reason, why he doth more than once with great seeminge of contrariety set the promise by way of oppositiō against the lawe, as if the inheritance be of the law, then is it not of the promise: and all the rest in the same chapter to the same effect. Truely the law it self hath also her promises. Therfore there must needes be in the promises of the gospell, somethinge different & diuerse from the promises of the law, vnlesse we will confesse that the comparison is very fonde. But what diuersity shall this be, vnlesse it be that they are freely giuen, and vpholden by the only mercy of God, whereas the promises of the law hang vpon the condition of workes. Neither lette any manne here carp against me, and say, that in this place the righteousnesse is reiected which menne of their owne force and freewill would compell God to receiue: forasmuch as Paul without exception teacheth that the law in commaundinge profiteth nothinge: becausе there is none not only of the common multitude, but also of the perfectest, that fulfilleth it. Loue vndoutedly is the chiefe point of the law: when the Spirite of God frameth vs vnto it, why is it not to vs a cause of righteousnesse, but for that euen in the holy ones it is vnperfect, and therefore of it selfe deserueth no reward.

Rom.10 5.

Ro.8.2a

18 The second place is this. It is manifest that no man is iustified by the law before God: Becauſe the righteous man ſhall liue by faith, Ga.3.12 But the law is not of faith: but the man that doth theſe thinges ſhall liue in them. How coulde this argument otherwiſe ſtande together, vnleſſe we agree vpon this point, that workes come not into the accompt of faith, but are vtterly to be ſeuered from it? The lawe (ſayth he) differeth from faith. Why ſo? becauſe workes are required to the righteouſneſſe thereof. Therefore it followeth that workes are not required to the righteouſneſſe of faith. By this relation it appeareth, that they which are iuſtified by faith are iuſtified beſide the deſeruing of workes, yea without the deſeruing of workes, becauſe faith receiueth that righteouſnes which the Goſpel giueth. And the Goſpel differeth from the law in this point, that it bindeth not righteouſnes to workes, but ſetteth it in the only mercy of God. Like hereunto is that Rom.4.2. which he affirmeth to the Romaines, that Abraham had nothinge to glory vpon, becauſe faith was imputed to him vnto righteouſneſſe, & he addeth a confirmation, becauſe then there is place for the righteouſneſſe of faith, whē there are no workes to which a reward is due. Where be workes (ſayth he) due reward is rendered vnto them: that which is giuen to faith is freely giuen. For the very meaninge of the words that he vſeth in that place ſerue to proue the ſame. Wheras he adioyneth within a litle after, that therfore we obtaine the inheritāce by faith as according to grace, hereupon he gathereth that the inheritance is of free gift, becauſe it is receiued by fayth: and howe commeth ẏ, but becauſe faith without any help of workes leaneth wholly vpon the mercy of God? And in the ſame meaning, without dout he

3. teacheth in an other place, that the righteouſnes of God was openly ſhewed without the law, although it haue witneſſe borne of it by the law & the Prophets: becauſe excluding the law, he ſayth that it is not holpen by workes, and that we obtaine it not by working, but come empty that we may receiue it.

19 By this time the reader perceiueth with what equity the Sophiſters do at this day cauill at our doctrine, when we ſay that man is iuſtified by faith only. They dare not deny that man is iuſtified by faith becauſe it is ſo often found in Scripture: but becauſe this word, Only, is neuer expreſſed, they can not abide to haue ſuch an addition made. Is it ſo? But what will they anſwere to theſe wordes of Paule, where Ro.4.2. he affirmeth that righteouſneſſe is not of faith except it be freely giuen? Howe can free gift agree with workes? And with what cauillations will they mocke out, that which he ſayth in an other place, that Rom.1.17. the righteouſneſſe of God is manifeſtly ſhewed in the Goſpell? If righteouſneſſe be manifeſtly ſhewed in the Goſpell, ſurely therin is con-

contained not a torne or halfe righteousnesse but full and perfect. Therefore the law hath no place therein. And they stand vpon not onely a false but also a foolish shift about this exclusiue word, Only. Doth not he perfectly enough giue all thinges to onely fayth, that taketh all thinges from workes? What, I pray you meane these sayinges: that righteousnesse was manifestly shewed without the lawe: that man is iustified freely and without the workes of the lawe? Here they haue a witty shift to escape withall, which although they deuised it not thēselues but borrowed it of Origen & certaine of the old writers, yet is very foolish. They prate that the ceremoniall workes of the law, not the morall, are excluded. They profit so with continuall brawlinge, that they knowe not the very first rules of Logike. Do they thinke that the Apostle doted when he alleaged these places to proue his sayinge? The man that shall do these thinges shall liue in them: and, Cursed is euery one that fulfilleth not all thinges that are wrytten in the volume of the lawe. Vnlesse they be madde, they will not say that life was promised to the kepers of Ceremonies, or curse thretened onely to the breakers of them. If these places be to be vnderstanded of the moral law, it is no dout that the morall workes also are excluded from the power of iustifying. To the same purpose serue these argumentes that he vseth: becausse the knowledge of sinne was by the lawe, therefore righteousnesse is not by the lawe. Because the lawe worketh wrath, therefore it worketh not righteousnesse. Because the lawe can not make conscience assured, therefore also it can not giue righteousnesse. Because faith is imputed vnto righteousnesse, therefore righteousnesse is not a reward of worke, but is geuen beinge not due. Because we are iustified by faith, therefore glorynge is cutte of. If there had bin a law giuen that might giue life, then righteousnesse were truely by the law: but God hath shutte vp all vnder sinne that the promise might be giuen to the beleuers. Let them nowe fondly say if they dare, that these thinges are spoken of ceremonies and not of manners: but very children would hisse out so great shamelesnesse. Therefore let vs holde this for certaine, that the whole lawe is spoken of, when the power of iustifyinge is taken away from the law.

Ga. 3. 10

Rom. 3. 20. & 4. 15.

Ga. 3. 21

20 But if any man maruell why the Apostle vsed such an addition, not beinge content with onely naming of workes: the reason is ready to be shewed for it. For, although workes be so hiely estemed, yet they haue that value by the allowance of God, rather than by their owne worthinesse. For who can boast vnto God of any righteousnesse of workes, but that which he hath allowed? Who dare claime any reward as due vnto thē, but such as he hath promised? They haue therfore this of the bountifulnes of God, ý they are cōpted worthy both of the name & reward of righteousnesse: & they be of value only for this cause, whē the purpose of him that doth them is by thē to shew his obediēce to God. Wherfore ý Apostle in an other place, to proue that Abraham could not be iustified by workes, alleageth that ý law was giuen, almost foure hundred & thirty yeares after the couenant made. Vnlearned mē would laugh at such an argumēt, because there might be righteous workes before the publishing of the law. But because he knew ý there was no such value in works but by the testimony & vouchsauing of God, therfore he taketh it as a thing cōfessed ý before the law they had no power to iustifie. We vnderstand why he namely expresseth ý worke of the law, whē he meaneth to take away iustification from any workes because controuersy may be moued of those & none other. Albeit somtime he excepteth all workes without any addition, as when he sayth that by the testimony of Dauid blessednes is assigned to that man, to whom the Lord imputeth righteousnes without workes. Therfore they can with no cauillations bring to passe, but that we shal get this general exclusiue, only. And they do in vaine seeke that trifling suttelty, that we are iustified by that only faith which worketh by loue, so that righteousnes must stande vpon loue. We graunt in deede with Paul, that no other faith iustifieth, but that which is effectually workinge with charity: but that faith taketh not her power of iustifying from that effectualnes of charity. Yea it doth by no other meane iustifie, but because it bringeth vs into the communicating of the righteousnes of Christ. Or else all that which the Apostle so earnestly presseth, shoulde fall to nought. To him that worketh (sayth he) the reward is not reckened accordinge to grace, but accordinge to det. But to him that worketh not, but beleueth in him that iustifieth the vnrighteous, his faith is imputed vnto righteousnes, Could he speake more euidently than in so saying? that there is no righteousnes of faith but where there are no works to which any reward is due: & that onely then faith is imputed vnto righteousnes, when righteousnes is giuen by grace that is not due.

21 Now let vs examine how true that is, which is sayd in the definition, that the righteousnes of faith is the recōciliation with God, which consisteth vpon the only forgiuenes of sinnes. We must alway returne to this principle, that the wrath of God resteth vpon all mē, so long as they continue to be sinners. That hath Esay excellētly wel set out in these wordes: The hand of the Lord is not shortned, that he is not able to saue: nor his eare dulled that he cā not heare: but your iniqui-iniquities haue made disagreemēt betwene you & your God,& your sinnes haue hidden his face from you that he heareth you not. We heare that sinne is the diuision betwene man & God, & the turninge away of Gods face from the sinner. Neither can it otherwise be. For it is disagreeing frō his righteousnes to haue any fellowship with sinne. Wherfore the Apostle teacheth that man is enemy to God till he be restored into fauour by Christ. Whom therfore the Lord receiueth into ioyninge with him,him he is sayd to iustifie: becausse he can neither receiue him into fauour nor ioyne him with himselfe, but he must of a sinner make him righteous. And we further say,that this is done by the forgiuenesse of sinnes. For if they whom the Lord hath reconciled to himselfe be iudged by their workes, they shalbe found stil sinners in deede, who yet must be free & cleane from sinne. It is certaine therfore that they whom God embraceth,are no otherwise made righteous,but becausse they are cleansed by hauing the spottes of their sinnes wiped away by forgiuenes, that such a righteousnesse may in one word be called the forgiuenes of sinnes. Rom. 5. 8.

22 Both these are most clerely to be seene by these words of Paul, which I haue already alleaged: God was in Christ reconcilinge the world to himselfe,not imputing their sinnes to man, & he hath left with vs the word of reconciliatiō. And then he addeth the summe of his message,that him which knew no sinne he made sinne for vs,that we might be made the righteousnes of God in him. Here he nameth righteousnesse and reconciliation without difference, that we may perceiue that the one is mutually contained vnder the other. And he teacheth the manner to attaine this righteousnesse to be when our sinnes are not imputed vnto vs. Wherfore dout thou not hereafter how God doth iustifie vs,when thou heares that he doth reconcile vs to himselfe by not imputing sinnes. So to ỹ Romaines he proueth by the testimony of Dauid,that righteousnes is imputed to man without workes, becausse Dauid pronounceth the man blessed whose iniquities are forgiuen,whose sinnes are couered, to whom the Lord hath not imputed his offenses. Without dout by blessednes he there meaneth righteousnesse. As sith he affirmeth the same to stande in the forgiuenesse of sinnes,there is no cause why we should otherwise define it. Therefore Zacharie the father of Iohn the Baptist singeth that the knowledge of saluatiō consisteth in the forgiuenes of sinnes. Which rule Paule followinge in his Sermon which he made to the Antiochians concerninge the summe of saluation,as Luke reporteth it, concluded in this maner: by him forgiuenes of sinnes is preached vnto you,& euery one that beleueth in him is iustified from all these 2.Cor 3 19. 2.Cor.3 21. things,frō ẅ ye could not be iuſtified in the law of Moſes. The Apoſtle ſo knitteth the forgiuenes of ſinnes with righteouſnes,ẏ he ſheweth ẏ they be both all one. Wherupō he rightfully reaſoneth ẏ the righteouſnes is freely giuen vnto vs,which we obtaine by the louing kindnes of God. Neither ought it to ſeme a ſtrāge vnuſed ſpeach,that the faithful are righteous before God,not by workes,but by free acceptatiō: ſith both it is ſo oft found in ẏ Scripture,& the old authors alſo do ſomtime ſo ſpeake. For Auguſtin ſaith thus in one place: The righteouſnes of the ſaintes in this world ſtādeth rather in forgiuenes of ſinnes,thā in perfection of vertues. Wherwith agreeth the notable ſentēces of Bernard: Not to ſinne is the righteouſnes of God: but ẏ righteouſnes of man,is the merciful kindenes of God. He had before affirmed that Chriſt is to vs righteouſnes in abſolution, and therfore that they only are righteous that haue obtained pardon by mercy.

23 Herupō alſo followeth this,that by the only meane of Chriſtes righteouſnes,we obtain to be iuſtified before God. Which is aſmuch in effect as if it were ſaid,ẏ mā is not righteous in himſelf,but becauſe the righteouſnes of Chriſt is by imputatiō enterpartened with him, which thing is worthy to be heedefully marked. For ẏ triflinge errour vaniſheth away,to ſay ẏ mā is therfore iuſtified by faith,becauſe faith taketh part of the Spirit of God by which he is made righteous,which is ſo cōtrary to the doctrine aboue taught,ẏ they can neuer be made to agree together. For it is no dout ẏ he is void of his own righteouſnes,ẏ is taught to ſeke righteouſnes without himſelfe. This the Apoſtle affirmeth moſt plainly when he writeth ẏ he which knew no ſinne was made for vs a propitiatory ſacrifice to cleanſe away ſinne,that we might be made the righteouſnes of God in him. You ſee ẏ our righteouſnes is not in vs but in Chriſt, & ẏ it belongeth to vs only by this title,becauſe we be partakers of Chriſt, becauſe we poſſeſſe all his richeſſe with him. And it maketh nothing to the contrary ẏ in an other place he teacheth,ẏ ſinne was condēned of ſinne in the fleſh of Chriſt, that the righteouſneſſe of the law might be fulfilled in vs: where he meaneth no other fulfillinge,but ẏ which we obtaine by imputation. For the Lorde Chriſt doth in ſuch ſort cōmunicate his righteouſnes with vs,that after a certaine maruellous maner, he poureth the force therof into vs,ſo much as pertaineth to the iudgement of God. It appeareth that he did no otherwiſe meane, by ẏ other ſentēce which he had ſpoken a litle before: As by the diſobediēce of one man we were made ſinners,ſo by the obedience of one mā we are iuſtified What is it elſe to ſet our righteouſnes in ẏ obedience of Chriſt,but to affirme that hereby only we are accōpted righteous, becauſe the obediēce of Christ is imputed vnto vs as if it were our owne? Therfore me thinkes that Ambrose hath excellētly well shewed how there is an example of this righteousnes in the blessing of Iacob. For as Iacob hauing not of himselfe deserued the preeminency of the first begotten sonne, hid himselfe in the apparel of his brother, & being clothed with his brothers cote ỹ sauored of a most swete smell, he crept into ỹ fauour of his father, & receiued the blessing to his owne commodity vnder the person of an other: so we do lie hiddē vnder the precious pure-nes of Christ our elder brother, that we may get a testimony of righ-teousnes in ỹ sight of God. The words of Ambrose are these: Wheras Isaac smelt the sauour of the garmentes, paraduenture this is meant therby, that we are not iustified by workes but by faith: becausе flesh-ly weakenes hindreth workes, but the brightnes of faith which meri-teth forgiuenes of sinnes, ouershadoweth the errour of deedes. And truely so it is. For, that we may appeare before the face of God vnto saluation, it is necessary for vs, to smell swe etely with his odour, and to haue our faultes couered and barred with his perfection.

Li. 2 de Iac. & vita be-ata.

That, to the end vve may be fully perſvvaded of the free iuſtification, vve muſt lift vp our mindes to the iudgement ſeate of God.

ALthough it appeareth by most euident testimonies, that all these thinges are true, yet we shall not clearly perceiue how necessary they be, vntill we haue set before our eyes those things ỹ ought to be the grounds of all this disputation. First therefore let vs remember this, that we purpose not to speake of the righteousnesse of a worldly iudicial court, but of the heauenly iudge-ment seate: that we should not measure by our owne small portiō, by what vprightnes of workes Gods iudgement may be satisfied. But it is maruelous to see with what rashnes & boldnes it is commonly de-bated. Yea & it is to be seene how none do more boldly or with fuller mouthes (as the saying is) prate of the righteousnes of workes, than they ỹ are either monstruously sicke of open outward diseases, or be ready to burst with inward vices. That cōmeth to passe because they thinke not vpon the righteousnes of God, whereof if they had neuer so litle feelinge, they would neuer make so great a mockery of it. And truely it is out of measure lightly regarded, when it is not acknowled-ged to be such & so perfect that nothing be imputed vnto it but euery way whole & absolute, & defiled with no vncleanesse: such as neuer was & neuer shall be able to be founde in man. It is in deede easie and ready for euery man in Schooles to talke vainely vpon the worthines of workes to iustifie men. But when they come into the sight of God, such dalliances must auoide, because there is earnest doing vsed, and no trifling strife about words. To this, to this I say, we must apply our minde, if we wil profitably enquire of true righteousnes, how we may answere the heauenly iudge when he calleth vs to accompt. Lette vs thinke him to be a iudge, not such a one as our owne vnderstandings do of themselues imagine: but such a one as he is painted out in the Scripture, with whose brightnes the starres shalbe darkened, by whose strength the hils do melt away, by whose wrath the earth is shaken, by whose wisdom the wise are taken in their suttelty, by whose pureness all things are proued vnpure, whose righteousnesse the Angels are not able to beare, which maketh the innocent not innocēt, whose vengeance when it is once kindled pearceth to the bottome of hel. If he (I say) sit to examine mens doinges, who shall appeare assured before his throne? who shall dwell with a deuouringe fier? sayth the Prophet. Who shall abide with continuall burninges? he that walketh in righteousnesses & speaketh trueth, &c. But let such a one come forth, whatsoeuer he be. But that aunswere maketh, that none commeth forth. For this terrible saying soundeth to the contrary: Lord if thou marke iniquities, Lorde, who shal abide it? truely all must needes immediatly perish, as it is wrytten in an other place: Shall man be iustified if he be compared with God, or shall he be purer thā his maker? Beholde they that serue him are not faithful, and he hath found peruersnes in his Angels. How much more shal they that dwel in houses of clay, & that haue an earthly fundation, be consumed with mothes? they shalbe cut downe from the morninge to the euening. Beholde amonge his Saintes there is none faithfull, and the heauens are not cleane in his sight: how much more is man abhominable and vnprofitable, which drinketh iniquity as water? I graunt in dede that in the booke of Iob, is mention made of a righteousnesse that is hier than the keeping of the law. And it is good to vnderstand this distinction: because although a man did satisfie the law, yet he could not so stand to the triall of that righteousnesse that passeth all senses. Therefore although Iob be cleare in his owne conscience, yet he is amased, and not able to speake because he seeth that very angelike holinesse can not appease God, if he exactly weye their workes. But I therefore will at this time ouerpasse that righteousnesse which I haue spoken of, because it is incomprehensible: but only this I say, that if our life be examined by the rule of the wrytten law, we are more than senseles if so many curses wherwith the Lord hath willed vs to be awaked do not torment vs with horrible feare, & amonge other this generall curse, Cursed is euery one that doth not abide in all the thinges that are wrytten in the booke. Finally all this discourse shalbe but vnsauory and cold, vnlesse euery man yelde himselfe gilty before the heauenly iudge, and willingly throw downe and abace himselfe, beinge carefull how he may be acquited.

2 To this, to this I say, we should haue lifted vp our eies, to learne rather to tremble for feare, than vainly to reioise. It is in deede easie, so long as ỹ cõparison extendeth no further than men, for euery man to thinke himself to haue somwhat which other ought not to despise. But when we rise vp to haue respect vnto God than suddenly ỹ confidẽce falleth to the ground & commeth to nought. And in the same case altogether is our soule in respect of God, as mans body is in respect of the heauen. For the sight of the eie, so long as it cõtinueth in vewing things that lie nere vnto it, doth shew of what pearcing force it is, but if it be once directed vp to the sunne, then being daseled and dulled with the too great brightnes therof, it feleth no lesse feblenes of it selfe in beholding of the sunne, thã it perceiued strength in beholding inferiour things. Therfore let vs not deceiue our selues with vaine confidence, although we compt our selues either egall or superiour to other men: but that is nothing to God, by whose will this knowledge is to be tried. But if our wildenes can not be tamed with these admonitions, he will answere to vs as he sayd to the Pharisees: you be they that iustifie your selues before mẽ: but that which is hie to men is abhominable to God. Now go thy way and proudly boast of thy righteousnes among men, while God from heauen abhorreth it. Luk. 16 15.

But what say the seruauntes of God that are truely instructed with his Spirit? Enter not into iudgement with thy seruant, because euery liuing man shal not be iustified in thy sight. Another sayth, although in somewhat diuerse meaning. Man can not be righteous with God: if he will contende with him, he shall not be able to answere one for a thousand. Here we now plainely heare what is the righteousnesse of God, euen such as can be satisfied with no workes of men, to whom when it examineth vs of a thousande offẽses, we can not purge our selues of one. Such a righteousnes had that same chosen instrument of God Paule conceiued, when he professed that he knew himselfe gilty in nothing, but that he was not thereby iustified. Psal. 143. 2. Iob. 9. 8 1. Cor. 4. 4.

3 And not only such exãples are in the holy Scriptures, but also all godly wryters do shewe that they were alway of this minde. So Augustine sayth. All the godly that grone vnder this burden of corruptible flesh, and in this weakenesse of life haue this only hope that we haue one mediatour Iesus Christ the righteous, and he is the appeasement for our sinnes. What sayth he? If this be their only hope, Ad Bonif. lib. 3 cap. 5.

where is the confidence of workes? For when he calleth it only, he leaueth none other. And Bernard sayth. And in deede where is safe & stedfast rest & assurednes for the weake, but in the woũdes of the Sauiour? & so much the surer I dwell therin as he is mightier to saue. The world rageth, the body burdeneth, the deuil lieth in waite. I fall not, because I am builded vpon the sure rocke. I haue sinned a grieuous sinne, my conscience is troubled, but it shal not be ouertrobled, because I shall remember the woundes of the Lord. And hereupon afterward he concludeth: Therefore my merite is the Lords takinge of mercy, I am not vtterly without merite, so long as he is not without mercies. But if the mercies of the Lord be many, then I also haue as many merites. Shal I sing mine owne righteousnesses? Lord I will remẽber only thy righteousnes. For that is also my righteousnes, for he is made vnto me righteousnes of God. Againe in an other place. This is ỹ whole merite of man, if he put his whole hope in him that saueth whole mã. Likewise where retaining peace to himselfe he leaueth the glory to God. To thee (sayth he) let glory remaine vnminished: it shalbe well with me, if I haue peace. I forswere glory altogether, least if I wrongfully take vpõ me that which is not mine owne, I loose also ỹ which is offred me. And more plainly in an other place he sayth: Why should the church be careful of merites, which hath a surer & safer way to glory vpon the purpose of God? So there is no cause why thou shouldest aske, by what merites we hope for good things, specially when thou heareſt in the Prophet, I wil do it, not for your sakes, but for mine own sake, sayth the Lord. It sufficeth for merite, to know that merites suffice not. But as it sufficeth for merit not to presume of merites, so to be without merites sufficeth to iudgement. Wheras he freely vseth this word Merites for good workes, we must therein beare with the custome. But in the end his purpose was to make hipocrites afrayd, that wildly range with licentiousnesse of sinning against the grace of God. As afterward he expoundeth himselfe, saying: Happy is the Church that neither wãteth merites without presumption, nor presumption without merites. It hath whereupon to presume, but not merites. It hath merites, but to deserue not to presume. Is not the very not presuming a deseruing? Therefore it presumeth so much the more boldly, because it presumeth not, hauing large matter to glory vpon, euen the many mercies of the Lord.

4 This is the trueth. The exercised consciences perceiue this to be the onely sanctuary of safety, wherein they may safely rest themselues when they haue to do with the iudgement of God. for if the Starres that seemed most bright in the night season, do loose their brightneſſe with ſight of ỹ ſunne, what thinke we ſhall become euen of the rareſt innocencie of man, when it ſhalbe compared with the pureneſſe of God? For that ſhalbe a moſt ſeuere examination, that ſhall pearce into the moſt hidden thoughtes of the heart, and (as Paule ſaith) ſhall reuele the ſecretes of darkneſſes, and diſcloſe the hidden thinges of the heart, which ſhall compell the lurking and vnwilling conſcience to vtter all thinges that now are fallen out of remembrance. The Deuell our accuſer will preſſe vs, which is priuie to all the wicked deedes that he hath moued vs to do. There the outward pompous ſhewes of good workes which now onely are eſtemed, ſhall nothing profit vs. Onely the pureneſſe of will ſhalbe required. Wherefore the Hypocriſie, not onely whereby euery man knowing himſelfe gilty before God deſireth to boſt himſelfe before men, but alſo wherewith euery man deceiueth himſelfe before God (as we be all inclined to ſtroke and flatter our ſelues) ſhall fall downe confounded, howſoeuer it now be proude with more than dronken boldneſſe. They that bend not their wit to ſuch a ſight, may in deede for a ſhort time ſwetely & pleaſantly frame a righteouſnes to themſelues, but it is ſuch a righteouſneſſe as ſhalbe by and by ſhaken away from them at the iudgement of God: like as great richeſſe heaped vp in a dreame do vaniſh away from men when they awake. But they that ſhall earneſtly as it were in the ſight of God, enquire of the true rule of righteouſneſſe, ſhall certainly finde that all the workes of mẽ, if they be iudged by their owne worthines, are nothing but defilings and filthineſſe: that that which among the common people is accompted righteouſneſſe, is before God mere wickedneſſe: that that which is iudged puritie, is vnclenneſſe: that that which is reckened glorie, is but ſhame. 1 Cor. 4.5.

5 From this beholding of the perfection of God, let it not greue vs to deſcend to loke vpon our ſelues without flatterie or blinde affectiõ of loue. For it is no maruell if we be all ſo blinde in this behalf, for aſmuch as none of vs doth beware of the peſtilent tenderneſſe toward himſelf, which (as the Scripture crieth out) naturally ſticketh faſt in vs all. To euery man (ſaith Salomon) his owne way is right in his owne eyes. Againe. All the wayes of man ſeme cleane in his owne eyes. But what? Is he acquited by this blindneſſe? No. But (as he further ſaith in the ſame place) the Lord weyeth the heartes, that is to ſay, while man flattereth himſelfe by reaſon of the outwarde viſor of righteouſneſſe that he beareth in reſemblance, in the meane time the Lorde with his balance examineth the hidden vnclennes of the heart. Therefore ſith we ſo nothing profit with ſuch flatteries, let vs Pro. 21. 2. & 16. 2.

not wilfully mocke our ſelues to our owne deſtruction. But that we may trie our ſelues rightly, we muſt neceſſarily call back our cõſcience to the iudgement ſeate of God. For we do altogether neede his light to diſcloſe the ſecret foldinges of our peruerſneſſe, which otherwiſe lie too depely hidden. For then, and neuer till then, we ſhall clerely perceiue what is meant hereby: that man being rottenneſſe and a worme, abhominable and vaine, which drinketh wickednes as water is far from being iuſtified before God. For who ſhoulde make that cleane that is conceiued of vncleane ſeede? not one man. Then ſhall we alſo finde that by experience, which Iob ſaid of himſelfe: If I will go about to ſhew my ſelfe innocent, mine owne mouth ſhall condemne me: if I will ſhewe my ſelfe righteous, it will proue me wicked. For that is not meant of one age onely, but of all ages, which the Prophet in old time complained of Iſrael, that all went aſtray like ſhepe, that euery one turned aſide to his owne way. For he there cõprehẽdeth all them, to whom the grace of redemption ſhould come. And the rigorouſneſſe of this examination ought to procede ſo far, till it ſubdue vs, ſo that we be fully throwen downe withall, and by that meane prepare vs to receiue the grace of Chriſt. For he is deceiued that thinketh himſelfe able to receiue the enioying of this grace, vntill he haue firſt thrown downe all hawtines of minde. This is a knowen ſaying: that God confoundeth the proude, and geueth grace to the humble.

6 But what way is there to humble our ſelues, but that we being altogether needy and empty, ſhould geue place to the mercy of God? For I do not call it humbleneſſe, if we thinke that we haue any thing remaining with vs. And hetherto they haue taught a very hurtefull hypocriſie, that haue ioined theſe two things together, that we muſt thinke humbly of our ſelues before God, & that we muſt make ſome accompt of our owne righteouſneſſe. For if we confeſſe to God contrarie to our owne thinking, we do wickedly lie vnto him: but we can not thinke as we ought, but that by and by all that ſemeth glorious in vs muſt be troden vnder foote. Therfore when thou hearеſt in the Prophet, that there is prepared ſaluation for the humble people, and abacement for the eyes of the wicked: Firſt thinke, that there is no entrie open to ſaluation, vntill thou haue layed away all pride and taken to thee perfect humbleneſſe; then, that the ſame humbleneſſe is not a certaine modeſty whereby thou geueſt ouer to the Lord a heare bredth of thine owne right, as they are called humble before men that do neither preſumptuouſly aduaunce themſelues, nor reprochfully triumph ouer other, although they ſtand vpon ſome eſtimation mation of their owne excellence: but an vnfained submission of a minde throwen downe with feling of his owne miserie and nedinesse. For it is so echewhere described in the worde of God. When the Lorde saith thus in Zephanias: I will take away out of thee him that outragiously reioiseth, and I will leaue in the middes of thee the afflicted man, and the proore man, and they shall trust in the Lorde: doth he not there plainely shewe who be humble? euen they that lie afflicted with knowledge of their owne pouertie. On the other side he calleth the proude, outragious reioisers, because men ioying in prosperitie are wont to reioise without measure. But to the humble whom he purposeth to saue, he leaueth nothing but to trust in the Lorde. And likewise it is said in Esaye: Whom shall I looke vnto, but to the poore and contrite in spirit, and him that feareth my wordes? Againe: The hie and excellent, that inhabiteth eternitie, his name is holy, that dwelleth on hie, and in the holy place, and with the contrite and humble spirit, to quicken the spirit of the humble and the heart of the contrite. When thou so oft heareſt the name of contrition, vnderstand thereby the wound of the heart, that suffreth not a man throwen downe on the ground to rise againe. With such contrition ought thy heart to be wounded, if thou wilt according to the saying of God be aduaunced with the humble. If that be no: done, thou shalt be brought lowe with the mighty hande of God to thy shame and disgracement.

7 And our best Schoolemaister thinking it not enough to shewe it out in wordes, hath also set out vnto vs in a parable the image of true humilitie as in a painted table. For he bringeth forth a Publicane that standing a far of, not daring to lifte vp his eyes to heauen, with much knocking his breſt prayeth in this wise: Lorde be mercifull to me a sinner. Let vs not thinke these to be tokens of fained modestie, that he dare not loke vp to heauen, nor to come nerer, that with knocking his breſt he confesseth himselfe a sinner: but let vs know that they bee testimonies of inward affection. On the other side he setteth the Pharisee, which thanketh God that he is not of the common sorte of men, either an oppresser, or an vnrighteous man, or an adulterer, bycause he fasted twise on the Sabbat, and gaue tithes of all that he possessed. He doth with open cõfession acknowledge that the righteousnesse which he hath is the gift of God: but bycause he standeth in confidence that he is righteous, he departeth from God vnfauored & in hatred. The Publicane by acknowledging of his own wickednesse is iustified. Hereby we may se, howe great is the estimation of our humbling vs before God: so that the heart can not be open to receiue his mercie, vnleſſe it be firſt voide of all opinion of his owne worthineſſe. When this opinion hath poſſeſſed the place, it ſhutteth vp the way for Gods mercie to entre. And that no man ſhould doubte hereof, Chriſt was ſent of his father into the earth with this commiſſion, to bring glad tidings to the poore, to heale the contrite in heart, to preach libertie to the captiue, and deliuerance to them that were ſhut vp in priſon, & to cõfort them that mourne: to geue them glorie for aſhes, oyle for mourninge, the robe of praiſe for the ſpirit of ſorrowe. According to this commiſſion, he calleth none but them that labour and are loden to take part of his liberalitie. And in an other place he ſaith: I came not to call the righteous, but ſinners.

Iſa. 61. 1.

Mat. 11. 28.

Matt. 9. 13.

8 Therefore if we will geue place to the calling of Chriſt, let all arrogancy & careleſneſſe depart far away from vs. Arrogãcy groweth of a fooliſh perſuaſion of our owne righteouſneſſe, when a man thinketh himſelfe to haue ſomwhat, by the deſeruing whereof he may be commended before God, careleſneſſe may be euen without any perſuaſiõ of workes. For many ſinners, becauſe being dronke with ſweteneſſe of vices they thinke not vpon the iudgement of God, lie as it were ſenſleſly amaſed with a diſeaſe of drouſineſſe, that they aſpire not to the mercie offred them. But we muſt no leſſe ſhake of ſuch dull ſluggiſhneſſe, than we muſt caſt away all vaine confidence of our ſelues, that we may without encombrance haſten to Chriſt, that we being empty and hungry may be filled with his good things. For we ſhall neuer ſufficiently haue truſt in him, vnleſſe we vtterly diſtruſt of our ſelues, we ſhall neuer ſufficiently raiſe vp our courages in him, vnleſſe they be firſt throwen downe in our ſelues. We ſhall neuer ſufficiently haue conſolation in him, vnleſſe we be firſt deſolate in our ſelues. Therefore we be then mete to take hold of and obtaine the fauour of God, caſting away all truſt of our ſelues, but truſting vpon the onely aſſuredneſſe of his goodneſſe, when (as Auguſtine ſaith) forgetting our owne deſeruings, we embrace the giftes of Chriſt. Becauſe if he ſought deſeruings in vs, we ſhould not come to his giftes. Wherewith Bernard very well accordeth, comparing proude men to vnfaithfull ſeruantes, that arrogantly claime any thing be it neuer ſo litle to their owne deſeruings: becauſe they do wrongfully keepe to themſelues the praiſe of grace paſſing by them, as if a wall would ſay that it bringeth forth the ſunbeame which it receiueth through a window. But, not to tary longer herevpon, let vs take a ſhort but a generall and ſure rule, that he is prepared to take parte of the frutes of Gods mercie, that hath vtterly emptied himſelfe, I will not ſay of righteouſneſſe, which is none at all, but of the vaine and windie image of righteouſnes. Becauſe euery man ſo much hindereth his receiuing of the liberalitie of God as he reſteth in himſelfe.

The xiij. Chapter.

That there are twoo things to be marked in free iuſtification.

AND here are alway two things to be principally loked vnto: that is to ſay, that there may remaine to the Lorde his glorie vnminiſhed, and as it were wholly and perfectly mainteined, and to our conſciences an vntroubled quietneſſe and calme tranquilitie before his iudgement. We ſee how oft and how earneſtly the Scripture exhorteth vs, to geue onely to God a confeſſion of praiſe, when we entreate of righteouſnes. And the Apoſtle teſtifieth, Rom. 3. that this was the Lordes principall purpoſe of geuing vs righteouſ- 15. neſſe in Chriſt, that he might ſhewe his owne righteouſneſſe. And what a ſhewing that ſhould be, he declareth immediatly after: that is, if he alone be knowen to be righteous, and that iuſtified him that is of the faith of Ieſus Chriſt. Thou ſeeſt that the righteouſneſſe of God is not ſufficiētly ſet out, vnleſſe he alone be accompted righteous, and do communicate the grace of righteouſneſſe to them that deſerue it not. By this meane he will haue euery mouth to be ſtopped, and the whole World to be made ſubiect to him. For while man hath any thing to ſpeake in his owne defence, ſo longe there is ſomewhat taken away from the glory of God. So in Ezechiel he teacheth Eze. 20. howe much we glorifie his name by reknoweledging of our owne 42. wickedneſſe. You ſhall remember (ſayeth he) the wayes and all the wicked doinges wherewith ye haue bene defiled. And ye ſhall be diſpleaſed with your ſelues in your owne ſight, in all the euels that ye haue committed. And ye ſhall knowe that I am the Lorde, when I ſhall do good to you for mine owne names ſake, and not according to your moſt wicked offences. If theſe thinges be conteined in the true knowledge of God, that we being brooſed with knowledge of our owne iniquitie, ſhould conſider that he doth good to vs where as we be vnworthy therof: why then do we to our great hurt attempt to ſteale away from the Lorde any parcell be it neuer ſo ſmall of the praiſe of his free goodneſſe? Like wiſe Ieremie when he crieth out, Iere. 9. Let not the wiſe man glorie in his wiſdome, or the riche man in his 23. richeſſe, or the ſtrong man in his ſtrength, but let him that glorieth, glorie in the Lorde: doth he not there declare that ſomewhat is diminiſhed from Gods glorie, if man glorie in him ſelfe? To this pur-

1.Cor. 1.30. poſe truely doth Paule apply thoſe wordes, when he teacheth that all the partes of our ſaluation are repoſed in Chriſt, that we ſhoulde not glory but in the Lord. For his meaning is that he riſeth vp againſt God and darkeneth his glorie, whoſoeuer thinketh that he hath any thing be it neuer ſo litle of his owne.

2 This is the truth, we neuer truely glorie in him, vnleſſe we be vtterly put from our own glory. On the other ſide, this is to be holde for a catholike principle, that all they glorie againſt God that glorie in them ſelues. For Paule iudgeth that onely by this meane the world is made ſubiect to God, when all matter to glorie vpon is vtterly taken from men. Therefore Eſaye, when he declareth that Iſrael ſhall haue their iuſtificatiō in God, ſaith alſo that they ſhal there alſo haue their prayſe: as though he ſhould ſay, that the Lorde to this ende iuſtifieth the elect that they ſhould glorie in him and in nothing els. But howe we ought to be praiſed in the Lorde, he had taught in the verſe next before: that is, that we ſhould ſweare that our righteouſneſſes and ſtrength are in the Lorde. Not that there is not required a bare confeſſion, but confirmed with an othe, that a man ſhould not thinke that he ſhall be diſcharged with I wote not what fained humilitie. And let no man here allege for excuſe, that he doth not glorie when without arrogance he reknowledgeth his owne righteouſneſſe: for there can be no ſuch eſtimation but it engendreth confidence, nor confidence but it bredeth glorie. Therfore let vs remember that in all the diſputation of righteouſneſſe we muſt haue regard to this ende, that the praiſe thereof remaine with the Lord whole and perfect. For as much as for declaration of his righteouſneſſe (as the Apoſtle teſtifieth) he hath poured out his grace vpon vs, that he might be iuſt and iuſtifying him that is of the faith of Chriſt. Wherefore in an other place, when he had taught that the Lorde gaue vs ſaluation, to ſet out the glorie of his name, afterward as it were repeting the ſame thing he addeth: ye are ſaued by grace and by the gift of God, not by workes, that none ſhould glorie. And when Peter telleth that we are called vnto hope of ſaluation that we ſhoulde declare the powers of him that hath called vs out of darkeneſſe into his maruelous light, without doubt his meaning is ſo to make the onely praiſes of God to ſound in the eares of the faithfull, that they ſhould with depe ſilence oppreſſe all arrogancie of the fleſh. In a ſumme, man can not without robbery of God chalenge to him ſelfe any one crum of righteouſneſſe: becauſe euen ſo much is plucked and taken away from the glorie of Gods righteouſneſſe.

Rom. 2. 19. Eſa. 45. 25. Rom. 3. 26. Eph.1 2 Eph.1.8

3 Now if we aſke by what meane the conſcience may be quited before before God, we shall finde no other meane but if free righteousnesse be geuen vs by the gist of God: Let vs alway think vpon this saying of Salomon, Who shall say: I haue cleansed my heart, I am made cleane from my sinne? Truely there is no man that shall not be ouerwhelmed with infinite filthinesse. Therefore let euen the perfectest man descende into his owne conscience, and call his doinges to accompt: what ende shall he haue? Shall he swetely rest as though all thinges were in good order betwene him and God? and shall he not rather be vexed with terrible torments, when he shall fele matter of damnation abiding in him selfe if he be iudged according to his workes? The conscience, if it loke vpon God, must of necessitie either haue assured peace with his iudgement, or be beseged with the terrours of helle Therfore we profit nothing in disputing of righteousnesse vnlesse we stablish such a righteousnesse, with the stedfastnesse wherof our soule may be stayed in the iudgement of God. When our soule shall haue whereby it may both without feare appeare before the face of God, and receiue his iudgement, vnshaken, then and not till then let vs knowe that we haue found an vnfained righteousnesse Therfore not without cause the Apostle standeth so much vpon this point, with whose wordes I had rather expresse it than with mine own. If (saith he) the promise of inheritance be of the law, faith is made voide, the promise is made abolished. He first inferreth that faith is disanulled & made voide if the promisse of righteousnesse haue respect to the deseruings of our works, or do hang vpon the keping of the law, For so could neuer any man assuredly rest in it: because it could neuer come to passe that any man might assuredly determine with him self that he had satisfied the law, as in deede neuer any man doth by works fully satisfie it. Whereof that we should not neede to seke far for testimonies to proue it, euery man may be a witnesse to him selfe that will with a right eye behold himselfe. And herby appeareth, in how depe and darke corners hypocrisie buried the mindes of men, while they so carelesly beare with themselues, that they stick not to set their own flatteries against the iudgement of God, as though they would binde to a stay of his iudiciall proceding, but the faithfull that do sincerely examine them selues, are greued and tormented with a far other manner of carefulnesse. Therfore there should so entre into all mindes a doubting, and at length a very despeire where eche man for him selfe should make accompt, with how great a burden of det he is still ouerpressed, and how far he is from the cõdition wherwith he is charged. Loe, how faith is by this meane already expressed and extinguished. For to wauer, to varie, to be carried vp and downe, to sticke fast in doubting, to be holden in ſuſpéce, to ſtagger, and at length to deſpeire, is not to truſt: but to ſtrengthen thy minde with cõſtant certaintie and perfect aſſurednes, & to haue whereupon to reſt and faſten thy foote.

4 He adioineth alſo an other thing, that is, that the promiſe ſhall thereby be made of no effect and voide. For if the fulfilling thereof do hang vpon our deſeruing, when ſhall we come thus farre as to deſerue the bountifulnes of God? Alſo this ſecond point hangeth vpon the former: For the promiſe ſhall not be fulfilled but to them that beleue it. Therefore if faith be fallen, there ſhal remaine no force of the promiſſe, Therefore the inheritance is of faith, that it may be according to grace, to ſtabliſh the promiſe. For it is aboundantly well ſtabliſhed when it reſteth vpon the onely mercy of God: becauſe his mercy & truth are with a perpetuall knot ioined together, that is to ſay, whatſoeuer God mercifully promiſeth, he alſo faithfully perfor-

Let thy mercies (ſaith he) come vnto me, thy ſaluatiõ according to thy word. And rightfully: bycauſe God is by no other meane perſwaded to make the promiſe, but of his owne mere mercie. Therefore we muſt herein ſtay, and deepely faſten all our hope and not to looke to our own works, to ſeke any helpe of them. And that you ſhould not think

Eccleſ. 9.1. 1.Cor. 2.16 he be worthy of loue or hatred? Who hath knowen the Lords meaning? Or who hath bene his counſeller? Here now faith muſt of neceſſitie helpe vs, here muſt his truth ſuccour vs, that that which is hidden from vs in the heart of the father, may be reueled by the Spirit, and his Spirit teſtifying it may perſwade out heartes that we are the ſonnes of God. And it may perſwade vs by calling and iuſtifying vs freely by faith, in which things there is as it were a certaine meane paſſage from the eternal predeſtination to the glorie that is to come. Briefely let vs thus conclude. The Scripture declareth that the

promises of God are not stablished, vnlesse they be taken hold of with assured affiance of conscience: and whersoeuer there is any doubting or vncertaintie it pronounceth that they be voide. Againe it pronounceth that they do nothing but stagger and wauer if they rest vpon our owne workes. Therefore we must needes either lose righteousnesse, or we must not consider our owne workes, but onely faith must take place, whose nature is this, to lift vp her eares and shut her eyes, that is to say, to be hedefully bent to the promise only, and to turne away her thought from all mans worthinesse or deseruing. So is that notable prophecie of Zacharie fulfilled, that when the wickednes of the land shalbe done away, a man shall call his frend vnder his vine and vnder his figge tree, where the Prophet declareth that ỹ faithfull do no otherwise enioy true peace but after obteining of the forgeuenesse of sinnes. For this cauelation is to be remembred in the Prophetes, that when they speake of the kingdome of Christ, they set out the outward blessinges of God as figures of the spirituall things. Whereupon Christ is called both the king of peace and our peace, because he appeaseth all the troublesom motions of cõscience. If we seke by what meane he doth it, we must needes come to the sacrifice by which God is appeased. For he shall neuer cesse to tremble for feare that shall not determine that God is appeased by the onely satisfactorie cleansing wherin Christ hath susteined his wrath. Finally peace is no where els to be sought for but in the terrors of Christ our redemer.

5 But why do I vse so darke a testimonie? Paule euery where deRom. 5. nieth, that there is peace or quiet ioy left to consciences, vnlesse it be 1. determined that we be iustified by faith. And he therewithall declareth whense that assurednes cometh, namely when the loue of God is poured into our heartes by the holy Ghost: as if he had said, that our consciences can not otherwise be quieted, vnlesse we be certenly persuaded that we please God. Whereupon also in an other place he Rom. 5. crieth out in the person of all the godly, Who shall seuer vs from the loue of God, which is in Christ? because we shall tremble euen at euery litle breath, till we be arriued into the hauen: but we shalbe without care euen in the darkenes of death, so long as the Lord shall shew him selfe a pastor to vs. Therefore whosoeuer prate that we are Psa. 3. iustified by faith, because being regenerate we are iust by liuing spiri- 4. tually: they neuer tasted the sweetenesse of grace, to consider that God wil be merciful vnto them. Wherupon also followeth, that they do no more know the manner of praying rightly, than Turkes and whatsoeuer other profane Nations. For (as Paule witnesseth) it is no true faith vnleſſe it teache and put vs in minde of that moſt ſwete

Gala.4. 6. name of Father, yea vnleſſe it open our mouth freely to crie out Abba father. Which in an other place he more plainely expreſſeth, where he ſaith that in Chriſt we haue boldneſſe and entrie in confidence by the faith of him. Truly this cometh not to paſſe by the gift of regeneration: which as it is alway vnperfect in the fleſh, ſo it conteineth in it ſelf manifold matter of douting. Wherfore we muſt of neceſſity come to this remedy, that the faithfull ſhould determine that they may by no other right, hope for the inheritaunce of the heauenly kingdome, but becauſe being graffed into the body of Chriſt they are frely accompted righteous. For as touching iuſtification, faith is a thing merely paſſiue, bringing nothing of our own to the recouering of the fauour of God, but receiuing of Chriſt that which we want.

The xiiij. Chapter.

VVhat is the beginning of iuſtification, and the continuall procedinges thereof.

THat the matter may be made more plaine, let vs ſearch, what may be the righteouſneſſe of man in the whole courſe of his life: and let vs make fower degrees thereof. For men either being endued with no knowledge of God, are drowned in idolatrie: or being entred into profeſſion by ſacramentes, denying God with vncleanneſſe of life, whom they confeſſe with mouth, they are Chriſts no further thā in name or they be hypocrits, which couer the wickednes of their harts, with vayn deceitful colors: or being regenerate by ỹ ſpirit of God, they endeuour themſelues to true holineſſe. Specially when they are to be iudged by their naturall giftes, from the crowne of their head to the ſole of their foote, there ſhall not be found one ſparcle of goodnes, vnles paraduenture we will accuſe the ſcripture of falſhed, when it ſetteth out all the ſons of Adam

This forſoth is the worthines, with confidence whereof they muſt be proued. But if any among then excell with ſuch honeſty of manners as may haue ſome

shewe of holines among men: yet because we know that God regardeth not the outward glistering, we must search the very foũtaine of workes if we will haue them to auaile any thing to righteousnesse. We must (I say) throughly loke into them, from what affection of heart these works procede. But although here lieth open a most large fielde to discourse in, yet because the matter may be declared in very fewe wordes, I will follow asmuch as I may a brefenes in teaching.

2 First I deny not that whatsoeuer excellent gifts appeare in the vnbeleuers, they are the gifts of God. Neither do I so differ from common iudgement, that I would affirme that there is no difference betwene the iustice, temperance and equitie of Titus and Traianus, and the rage, intemperance, and crueltie of Caligula, or Nero, or Domitian: betwene the filthy lustes of Tiberius, and in this behalfe the continence of Vespasian: and (that we may not tarry vpon some speciall vertues or vices) betwene the obseruing and the despising of right and lawes. For there is so great difference of right and wronge, that it appeareth euen in the dead image therof. For what thing shall there remain well ordered in the world, if we cõfound these together? Therefore such a difference betwene honest and vnhonest doinges, the Lorde hath not onely engrauen in the mindes of all men, but also doth oft confirme it with the dispensation of his prouidence. For we see how he extendeth many blessings of this present life to them that among men do follow vertue Not bycause that outward image of vertue deserueth so much as the least benefite of his: but so it pleaseth him to declare by proose how much true righteousnes pleaseth him, when he suffereth euen outward and fained righteousnesse not to be without rewarde. Whereupon followeth that which we euen nowe confessed, that these vertues, such as they be, or rather images of vertues, are the giftes of God, forasmuch as there is nothing in any wise praise worthy, which procedeth not from him.

3 But neuertheles it is true which Augustine writeth, that all they that are straungers from the true religiõ of the one God, howsoeuer they be accompted worthy of admiration for opinion of vertue, are not onely worthy of no rewarde, but rather are worthy of punishmẽt, because they do with defiling of their heart, bespot the pure good things of God. For though they be the instruments of God, to preserue ỹ felowship of men with iustice, cõtinence, tẽperance of minde, valiantnes, and wisedom: yet they do very euelly execute these good workes of God: because they are restrained from euill doing, not by sincere loue of goodnes, but either by onely ambition, or by loue of themselues, or by some other croked affection. Wheras therfore they Libr. 4. contra Iulianũ are corrupt by the very vncleannes of hart as by their beginning, they are no more to be reckened among vertues, than those vices, which are wont to deceiue by reason of nerenes and likenesse of vertue. Finally when we remembre, that the ende of that which is right, euer is that God be serued: whatsoeuer tendeth to any other ende, forthwith worthily loseth the name of right. Bycause therefore they haue not respect to the marke which the wisedome of God appointeth: although ỹ thing that they do, seeme good in doing, yet by a wrongful ende it is sin. He cõcludeth therfore that all the Fabricij, Scipioes, and Catoes, in all those excellent actes of theirs: yet sinned in this behalfe, that whereas they lacked the light of faith, they did not apply them to the ende to which they ought to haue applied them: & that for that cause, true righteousnes was not in them: forasmuch as duties are not weyed by the doings, but by the endes.

1. Ioh. 5 12. 4 Moreouer if it be true which Iohn saith, that there is no life without ỹ sonne of God: who so haue no part in Christ, what maner of men so euer they be, what soeuer they do or go about, yet they runne forward with their whole course into destruction & the iudgement of eternall death. After this reason, is that said of Augustine. Our religion discerneth the righteous from the vnrighteous, not by lawe of workes: but by the very lawe of faith, without which, those that seeme good workes are turned into sins. Wherfore the same Augustine saith very well in an other place, when he compareth the endeuor of such men to running out of the way. For howe much faster a man runneth out of the way, so much further he is from the marke, and therefore is made so much more miserable. Wherefore he affirmeth that it is better to halt in the way, than to runne out of the way. Finally it is certaine that they are euell trees, forasmuch as without the cõmunicating of Christ there is no sanctification. They may therefore beare faire fruites and beautifull to the eye, yea & sweete in tast, but in no wise good fruites. Hereby we easily perceiue that whatsoeuer man thinketh, purposeth, or doth, before that he be reconciled to God by faith, is accursed, and not onely of no value to righteousnesse, but of certaine deseruing to damnation. And why dispute we hereof as of a doutfull thing, sith it is already proued by the witnesse of the Apostle, that it is impossible that any man may please God without faith?

Heb. 11. 6.

5 But there shall yet appeare a plainer prose, if the grace of God be in comparison, directly set against the naturall state of man. For the Scripture crieth out euery where, that God findeth nothing in man whereby he may be prouoked to do good to him, but with his owne

Iohn. 5 25.

free goodnesse preuenteth him. For what can a deade man do to atteine life? But when he lightneth vs with the knowledge of himselfe, he is said to raise vs from death, and to make vs a newe creature. For we see that oftentimes, specially of the Apostle, the goodnes of God is set forth vnto vs by this title, God (saith he) which is rich in mercy, for the great loue wherewith he loued vs, euen when we were dead by sinnes, hath made vs aliue together in Christ &c. In an other place, where vnder the figure of Abraham he entreateth of the generall calling of the faithful, he saith: it is God that geueth life to the dead, and calleth those thinges that are not, as though they were. If we be nothing, what (I beseech you) can we do? Wherefore ỹ Lorde strongly beateth downe this arrogancy, in the history of Iob, in these wordes: who preuenteth me, and I shall rendre it him? for all things are mine. Which sentence Paule expounding applieth it to this, that we should not thinke that we bring any thing to the Lorde but mere shame of needines and emptines. Wherefore in ỹ place aboue cited, to proue that we are come into the hope of saluation by his grace alone, not by works, he allegeth that we are his creatures because we are new begotten in Christ Iesus, to the good workes which he hath prepared that we should walke in thẽ: As if he had said: which of vs may boaste that he hath with his righteousnesse prouoked God, sith our first power to do good procedeth out of regeneration? For as we are made by nature, oyle shall soner be wronge out of a stone, than a good worke out of vs. Truly it is wonderfull if man being cõdemned of so great a shame, dare yet say that there remaineth any thing with him. Therefore let vs confesse with this noble instrument of God, that we are called of God with a holy calling, not according to our workes, but according to his purpose and grace: and that the kindnes & loue of God our sauiour toward vs hath appeared, because he hath saued vs, not by the works of righteousnesse which we haue don, but according to his owne mercy: ỹ being iustified by his grace, we might be made the heires of eternall life. By this cõfession we dispoill man of all righteousnesse euen to the least litle peece thereof, till he be by only mercy regenerate into hope of eternall life: forasmuch as if the righteousnesse of workes do bring any thing toward the iustifying of vs, it is falsly said that we are iustified by grace. Truly the Apostle had not forgotten himselfe, when he affirmed iustificatiõ to be of free gift, which in an other place reasoneth ỹ grace is nowe not grace, if works do any thing auaill. And what other thing doth the Lord mean, whẽ he saith that he came not to call righteous men but sinners? If onely sinners are receiued, why seeke we an entry by fained righteousnes?

6 Still this ſame thought hath now, & then recourſe to my minde, that it is perill leaſt I ſhould do wrong to the mercies of God, which do ſō carefully trauaill in prouinge of this thing as though it were doutfull or darke. But bycauſe our enuiouſnes is ſuch, as vnleſſe it be moſt ſtraightly thruſt out of place, it neuer yeldeth to God ẏ which is his, I am cōpelled to tary ſomwhat the longer vpon it. Yet foraſmuch as the ſcripture is clere enough in this matter, I wil in fighting rather vſe ẏ wordes thereof then mine owne. Eſaye, when he hath deſcribed the vniuerſall deſtruction of mākind, doth immediatly after very fitly adioin the ordre of reſtoring. The Lorde hath ſeen, and it ſemed euell in his eyes. And he ſawe, that there is no man: and he marualled that there is none that offereth himſelfe: and he hath ſet ſaluation in his owne arme, & hath ſtrengthened himſelfe with his owne righteouſneſſe. Where are our righteouſneſſes if it be true which the Prophet ſaith: that there is no man that helpeth the Lorde in recouering his ſaluation? So an other prophet, where he bringeth in the Lorde, diſcourſing of the reconciling of ſinners to himſelfe, ſaith: I will eſpouſe thee to me for euer, in righteouſnes, iudgement, grace and mercie. I wil ſay to her ẏ hath not obteined mercy, thou haſt obtained mercy. If ſuch conuenant, which it is certaine to be the firſt conioining that we haue with God, ſtandeth vpon the mercie of God, there is left no foundation of our owne righteouſneſſe. And I would fain learne of thoſe men which faine ẏ man meteth God with ſome righteouſneſſe of works, whether they thinke that there is any righteouſneſſe at all, but that which is acceptable to God, If it be madnes to thinke ſo, what acceptable thing to God can procede from his enemies, whom he wholly abhorreth with all their doings? That all we, I ſay, are the dedly and profeſſed enemies of our God, the truth it ſelfe teſtifieth, till being iuſtified, we are receiued into frendſhip. If iuſtification be the beginning of loue, what righteouſneſſe of workes ſhall go before it? So Iohn, to turne away that peſtilent arrogance, doth diligently put vs in minde how we did not firſt loue him. And the ſelfe ſame thing the Lorde had long before taught by his Prophet: I will loue thē, ſaith he, with a free loue, becauſe mine anger is turned. Certainly his loue is not prouoked by workes if it hath of his owne accorde inclined it ſelfe vnto vs. But the rude common ſorte of men thinke it to be nothing els, but that no man hath deſerued that Chriſt ſhould performe our redēption: yet that to the entring into the poſſeſſion of redemption, we be holpen by our owne workes. Yea but howſoeuer we be redemed of Chriſt, yet till we be by the calling of the Father graffed into the communiō of him, we are both heires of darke-bloode of Christ. If we be by the Spirit sprinkled with the bloode of Christ vnto cleansing, let vs not thinke that before such watering we be any other than a sinner is without Christ. Let this therefore re-maine certaine, ẏ the beginning of our saluatiō is as it were a certaine resurrection frō death to life: becausse when for Christs sake it is geuen to vs to beleue in him, thē we first begin to passe from death into life.

7 Vnder this sort are comprehended they which haue in the diuision aboue set bene noted for the second and third sort of men.
For the vncleannesse of conscience proueth that both of them are not yet regenerate by the Spirit of God. And againe, whereas there is no regeneration in them, this proueth the want of faith. Whereby appeareth that they are not yet reconciled to God, nor yet iustified in his sight: forasmuch as these good things are not atteined to, but by faith. What can sinners being estrāged from God bring forth, but that which is accursed in his iudgement? With this foolish boldnes in deede, both all wicked men are puffed vp, & specially hypocrites, because howesoeuer they knowe that their whole heart swarmeth full of filthinesse, yet if they do any works ẏ haue a shew of goodnes, they thinke them worthy that God should not despise thē. Herof groweth righteousnes: but euen when they acknowledge thēselues vnrighte-meate, shall it be sanctified? The priests aunswered: No. And Haggee said. If a defiled man in soule touch any of such these things, shall it be defiled? The priests answered: it shalbe defiled. Haggee said. So is this people before my face, saith the Lord: & so all the works of their hands, & all things ẏ they offer to me shalbe defiled. I wold to god that this saying might either get full credit with vs, or well be settled in our remēbrāce. For there is no man, though he be otherwise in his whole life neuer so hainous a wicked doer, ẏ can abide to be perswaded, that which ẏ Lord here plainely pronoūceth. The naughtiest man, so sone as he hath performed one or two doubtfull deedes of ẏ law, doubteth not that it shalbe accõpted to him for righteousnes. But ỹ Lord crieth to the contrarie, that there is no sanctification gotten thereby, vnlesse the heart be first well cleansed. And not contented therewith, he affirmeth that all the workes whatsoeuer they be that procede from sinners, are defiled with vncleannes of the heart. Therefore let the name of righteousnesse depart from these workes which are by the Lordes owne mouth condemned of filthines. And with howe fit a similitude doth he shew the same? For it might haue bene obiected, that whatsoeuer the Lorde had commaunded, was inuiolably holy. But he on the cõtrarie side setteth against them, that it is no maruell, if those things that are hallowed by the lawe of the Lorde, are defiled with the filthinesse of naughty men: whereas an vncleane hand prophaneth a holy thing with touching it.

Esa. 1. 13. 8 The same matter he excellently well handleth in Esaye, Offer not (saith he) sacrifice in vaine: incense is abhomination to me: my soule hateth your Calendes & solemnities. They are become tedious to me, & I haue bene werie with bearing them: when you shall hold vp your handes I will tourne away mine eyes from you: when you shall multiply prayer I will not heare: for your hãdes are full of bloud. Be washed, be cleane, take away ỹ euell of your thoughts. What meaneth this that the Lord so lotheth the obeyinge of his owne lawe? Yea but he here refuseth nothing that is of the naturall obseruing of the lawe, ỹ beginning whereof he euery where teacheth to be the vnfained feare of his name. When that is taken away, what so euer things are offered him are not onely trifles, but stinking and abhominable filthinesse. Nowe let the hypocrites go, & keping peruersnes wrapped vp in their heart, endeuour to deserue the fauour of God with works.

Pro. 15. 8. But by this meane, they shall more & more prouoke hĩ to wrath. For to him the sacrifices of wicked are abhominable, and the only prayer of vpright men pleaseth him. Therefore we hold ỹ out of dõut, which ought to be most cõmonly knowen to him, that is euen but meanely exercised in the Scriptures, that euen those workes that glister most gloriously in men not yet truly sanctified, are so farre from righteousnesse in the sight of the Lord, that they be iudged sins. And therfore they haue said most truely that haue taught that fauour with God is not procured to any person by workes: but contrarywise that workes do then please, & neuer till then, when ỹ person hath first found grace in the sight of God. And this ordre is religiously to be kept, to which the scripture leadeth vs by ỹ hand. Moses wryteth that the Lord had respect to Abell & to his workes. See you not how he declareth that God is fauorable to the menne, before that he hath respect to their workes?

workes? Wherfore the cleansing of the heart must go before, that the workes which come from vs, may be louingly receiued of God: because this saying of Ieremy is alway in force, that the workes of God haue respect vnto trueth. And that it is only faith by which the hearts of men are clensed, the holy Ghost hath affirmed by the mouth of Peter: whereby it is certaine, that the first fundation is in true and liuely faith. Act 15. 6. Ier. 5. 3

9 Now let vs looke what righteousnes they haue, whom we haue set in the fourth degree. We graunt that when God by the meane of the righteousnes of Christ, reconcileth vs to himselfe, & giuing vs free forgiuenesse of sinnes accompteth vs for righteous, with such mercy is also conioyned this his beneficial doinge, that by his holy spirit he dwelleth in vs, by the power whereof the lustes of our flesh are daily more & more mortified, but we are sanctified: that is to say, hallowed to the Lord vnto true purenes of life, when our heartes are framed to the obedience of the law: that this may be our chiefe wil, to serue his will, and by all meanes to aduaunce only his glory. But euen while by the guidinge of the holy Ghost we walke in the wayes of the Lord, least yet we forgettinge our selues should waxe proude, there are left certaine remnants of imperfection, which may minister vs matter of humility. There is none righteous, (saith the Scripture) that doth good and sinneth not. What maner of righteousnes therfore will they yet get by their workes? First I say, that the best worke that can be brought foorth of them, is yet alway sprinkeled and corrupted with some vncleanesse of the flesh, and hath as it were some dregges mingeled with it. I say, let a holy seruant of God choose out of all his life the most excellēt thing that he shall thinke that he hath done in the whole course therof, & let him wel consider all the partes of it, without dout he shall finde somewhere somewhat sauoringe of the rottennesse of the flesh, forasmuch as to doing well our cherefull quickenesse is neuer such as it ought to be, but in slacking our course our weakenesse is much. Although we see that there are euident foule blots wherwith the workes of the holy are bespred, yet graunt that they be nothing but most litle spottes: shall they nothing offend the eies of God, before whom euen the starres are not cleane? Thus haue we shewed that there commeth not so much as one good worke out of holy men, which if it be iudged in it selfe, deserueth not iust reward of shame. 1 Reg. 8. 6.

10 Secondly I say, that if it were possible that we should haue som throughly pure and perfect workes, yet one sinne is enough to blotte out and quench all the remembrance of the former righteousnesse,

Eze.18. 24. Iac.2. 10. as the Prophet sayth. With whom also Iames agreeth: He that offendeth (saith he) in one, is made gilty of all. Nowe sith this mortall life is neuer pure or void from sinne, whatsoeuer righteousnes we should purchace, being from time to time with sinnes following corrupted, oppressed and lost, it shoulde not come into the sight of God, nor be accompted to vs for righteousnesse. Finally when the righteousnesse of workes is entreated of, we must not haue respect to the worke of the lawe, but to the commaundement. Therefore if we seeke righteousnesse by the law, we shall in vaine bring forth one or two workes: but a perpetuall obediēce of ỹ law is there necessary. Wherfore the lord doth not but once (as many foolishly thinke) impute to vs righteousnesse that same forgiuenesse of sinnes wherof we haue spoken, that hauinge once obtained pardon of our life past, we should afterward seeke righteousnes in the law: becausse he should so do nothing else but bring vs into a false hope, and mocke and laugh vs to scorne. For sith no perfection coulde come to vs so longe as we are clothed with this flesh, & sith the law threatneth death & iudgemēt to all thē ỹ performe not ful righteousnes in worke: it shal alway haue wherof it may accuse and condemne vs, vnlesse the mercy of God on the other side did withstand it, to acquite vs from time to time with continuall forgiuenesse of sinnes. Wherefore this standeth alway certaine which we sayd at the beginninge, that if we be weied by our owne worthinesse, whatsoeuer we purpose or go about, yet we with all our trauailes and endeuours are worthy of death and destruction.

11 Vpon these two pointes we must strongly stand fast: that there was neuer any worke of a godly mā, which if it were examined by the seuere iudgement of God, was not damnable. Againe, if there be any such shewed, (which is not possible for man) yet being corrupted and defiled with the sinnes, wherewith it is certaine that the doer of it is loden, it looseth the grace. And this is the chiefe point of our disputation. For about the beginninge of iustification there is no strife betwene vs and the sounder sorte of Scholemen, but that a sinnner being freely deliuered from damnation obtaineth righteousnesse, and that by the forgiuenesse of sinnes: sauing that they vnder the word of Iustification comprehend the renuing wherewith we are newly formed by the Spirit of God vnto the obedience of the law & they thus describe the righteousnes of a man regenerate, that man being once reconciled to God by the faith of Christ, is by good workes iudged righteous before God, and by their deseruinge is accepted. But the Rom.4. 13. Lorde contrariwise pronounceth that he imputed to Abraham faith for righteousnesse, not at the time when he yet serued Idols, but when he had already many yeares excelled in holinesse of life. Therfore Abraham had long worshipped God from a pure heart, and had performed the obedience of the lawe which may be performed of a mortall man, yet he hath righteousnesse reposed in fayth. Whereupon we gather, according to the argument of Paule, that it was not of workes. Likewise when it is sayd in the Prophet. The righteous man shall liue by faith, it is not spoken of wicked & prophane men, whom the Lord iustifieth by conuerting them to the faith, but the speach is directed to the faithfull, and to them is promised life by faith. Paule also taketh away all dout, when for confirminge of that sentence, he taketh this verse of Dauid. Blessed are they whose inquities are forgiuen. But it is certaine, that Dauid speaketh not of the wicked, but of the faithfull, such as himselfe was: becausse he spake out of the feeling of his owne conscience. Therefore this blessednesse we must not haue once in our life, but hold it throghout all our life. Last of all he testifieth that the embassage concerning the free reconciliation with God is not published for one or two dayes, but is perpetuall in the church. Therefore the faithfull haue euen to the end of their life no other righteousnesse than that which is there set forth. For Christ euerlastingly remaineth the Mediator to reconcile the father to vs, & the effectualnesse of his death is euerlasting: namely washing, satisfaction, expiation, finally perfect obedience, wherwith all our iniquities are couered. Neither doth Paul to the Ephesians say, that we haue the beginning of saluation out of grace, but that we are saued by grace, not of workes, that no man should glory.

2. Cor. 5 18.

12 The startinge holes which the Scholemen do here seeke to escape by, do not deliuer them. They say that good workes are not by inward worthines in themselues of so great value, that they be sufficient to purchase righteousnes: but this, that they be of so great value, is of grace accepting them. Then, becausse they be driuen to confesse that the righteousnesse of workes is in this life alway vnperfect, they graunt that we, so longe as we liue, do neede forgiuenesse of sinnes, whereby the want of workes may be supplied: but, that the defaultes which are committed, are recompenced with workes of supererogation. For I answere, that the acceptinge grace as they call it, is none other than his free goodnesse wherewith the father embraceth vs in Christ, when he clotheth vs with the innocency of Christ, & accompteth the same ours, that by the beneficial meane therof he may take vs for holy, pure, and innocent. For, the righteousnes of Christ (which as it only is perfect, so only can abide the sight of God) must be set in our steade, and be presented at the barre as a surety. Herewith we being furniſhed, do obtaine continuall forgiueneſſe of ſinnes in faith. With the pureneſſe hereof our filthineſſes and vncleanneſſes of imperfections being couered are not imputed: but are hidden, as if they were buried, ỳ they may not come into the iudgement of God, vntil the houre come, when the old mā being ſlaine & vtterly deſtroied in vs, the goodneſſe of God ſhall receiue vs into bleſſed peace with the new Adā, where let vs looke for the day of the Lord, in which in receiuing vncorrupt bodies, we ſhall be remoued into the glory of the heauenly kingdom.

13 If theſe thinges be true, verily no workes of ours can of themſelues make vs acceptable & pleaſing to God: neither can the workes themſelues pleaſe, but in reſpect that man beinge couered with the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt, pleaſeth God, & obtaineth forgiueneſſe of his ſinnes. For God hath not promiſed the reward of eternall life to ſome certaine workes, but onely pronounceth that he which doth theſe things, ſhal liue: ſettinge the notable curſe againſt all them that continue not in all thinges. Whereby the deuiſe of righteouſneſſe in parte is largely confuted, ſith no other righteouſnes is admitted into heauē, but a whole obſeruing of the law. And no whit ſounder is that which they are wont to babble of ſupplying of recompence by works of Supererogation. For why? Do they not ſtill returne to the ſame
Leu.18. 5. place from whence they are already ſhut out: that he which kepeth the law in parte, is by workes ſo farre righteous? That which no man of ſound iudgemēt will graunt them, they do too ſhameleſly take for cōfeſſed. So oft the Lord teſtifieth that he acknowledgeth no righteouſneſſe of workes, but in the perfect obſeruing of his law. What obſtinacy is it, that we when we are deſtitute of that obſeruing, leaſt we ſhoulde ſeeme ſpoiled of all glory, that is, to haue altogether giuen place to God, do boaſt our ſelues of I wot not what ſmall peeces of a few workes, and go about by ſatisfactions to redeme that which wanteth. Satisfactions haue already before bin ſufficiently ouerthrowen, that we ought not now ſo much as to dreame of thē. Only this I ſay, that they which ſo play the fooles, do not wey how deteſtable a thing ſinne is before God: for truely they ſhould vnderſtand that the whole righteouſneſſe of men beinge layd vpon a heape, is not ſufficient to Gene. 3. 17. make recompence for one ſinne. For we ſee that man was by one offence ſo caſt away and abandoned of God, that he therewithall loſt all meane to recouer ſaluation. Therfore the power of Satisfaction is taken away, wherewith they flatter themſelues, but ſurely ſhall neuer ſatisfie God, to whom nothing is pleaſant or acceptable that proceedeth frō his enemies. And his enemies are all they to whom he purpoſeth poseth to impute sinnes. Therefore our sinnes must be couered and forgiuen, before that the Lorde haue respect to any worke of ours. Whereupon followeth that the forgiuenes of sinnes is of free grace which they do wickedly blaspheme that trust in any satisfactions. Let vs therfore, after the example of the Apostle, forgetting those things that are behinde vs, and hasting forward to those thinges that are before vs, runne in our race, endeuoringe to the price of the hie callinge. Phil.3. 13.

14 But how doth the boasting of the workes of supererogation agree with that rule which is taught vs, that when we haue done all thinges that are commaunded vs, we should say that we are vnprofitable seruantes, and that we haue done no more than we ought? To say before God, is not to faine or to lie, but to determine with thy selfe, that which thou art assured of. The Lord therefore commaundeth vs vnfainedly to thinke and consider with our selues, that we do not any free beneficial doings to him, but to render due seruice. And worthily. For we are seruauntes endetted in so many seruices, as we are not able to discharge, although all our thoughts & all our members, were turned into dutefull deedes of the law. And therefore that which he sayth. When ye haue done all thinges that are commaunded you, &c. is asmuch in effect, as if the righteousnes of one man were more thā all the righteousnes of men. How therfore may we (of whom there is none that is not most farre distant from this marke) be so bolde as to boast that we haue added a heape to the full measure? Neither is there any cause why any man may take exceptiō and say, that nothing withstandeth but that his endeuour may proceede beyonde necessary duties, which in some behalfe ceasseth those that be from necessary. For this we must altogether holde, that we can imagine nothinge that auaileth either to the worship or the loue of God, which is not cōprehended vnder the law of God. If it be a part of the law, let vs not boast of voluntary liberality, where we are bound to necessity. Luk. 17. 10.

15 And for this purpose that glorying of Paule is out of season alleaged. That amōg the Corinthians he did of his owne wil yeld of his right, which otherwise he might haue vsed if he had would, and that he hath emploied vpon them not onely so much as he ought of duety, but also hath giuen them his free trauaill beyonde the boundes of dueties. But they should haue marked the reason there expressed, that he did this least he should be an offense to the weake. For false and deceitful workemen did boast themselues with this alluring shew of liberality, wherby they might both procure fauour to their poisonous doctrines, and raise vp hatred to the Gospell, so that Paule was driuen 1. Cor. 6. 1.

of necessity either to bring the doctrine of Christ into danger, or to meete with such craftes. Go to: if it be to a christian man an indifferent thinge, to runne into offense, when he may refraine it, then I graunt that the Apostle did somthing of Supererogatiō for the lord. But if this were by right required of a wise distributer of the Gospel, then I say ỳ he did that which was his duety to do. Finally although there appeare no such cause, yet this saying of Chrysostome is alway true, that all our thinges are in the same case wherein are the proper possessions of bondmen, which it is certaine by the law to be due to their Lord. And Christ hath vttered the same in the parable. For he asked what thanke we will giue to a bonde seruant when hauing bin all the day trauailed with sundry labours he returneth home to vs in the euening. But it is possible, that he hath labored with greater diligence than we durst haue required. Be it so: yet he hath done no thing but that which by his estate of bondage he ought, for he with his whole ability is ours. I speake not of what sort their Supererogatiōs are which these men wil boast of to God: for they be trifles, such as he neither hath at any time commaunded, nor doth approue them, nor will allow them whē accompt shalbe to be made before him. In this signification onely we will graunt that they are workes of Supererogation, namely of which it is spoken in the Prophet: who hath required these things at your hands? But let them remember what is in an other place also spoken of these things: Wherefore do ye weye your siluer & not in bread? Ye spend in labour & not in being satisfied. It is in deede not very hard for these idle Rabbines to dispute vnder the shadow in a soft chaire: but when the soueraigne iudge shall sit in his iudgement seate, such windy decrees shall of necessity vanishe away. This, this was to be sought what affiance of defense we may bring to his iudgemēt seate, not what we may talke of in schooles & corners.

Luk. 17 7.

Psal. 55. 2.

16 In this behalfe there are chiefely two pestilences to be driuen out of our mindes: that we put no affiance in the righteousnesse of workes. And that we ascribe no part of glory to them. The Scriptures do euery where thrust vs from all maner of affiance, whē they teach that our righteousnesses do stinke in the sight of God, vnlesse they receiue a good sauor from the innocence of Christ, & that they can do nothing but prouoke the vengeance of God, vnlesse they be sustained by the tendernes of his mercy. Moreouer they so leaue nothing to vs, but that we shoulde craue ỳ mercy of our iudge with that confession of Dauid, that none shal be iustified before him, if he require accompt of his seruantes. But where Iob sayth: If I haue done wickedly, wo to me: but if I do righteously, yet I wil not so lift vp my head:

Psa. 143 2.

head: though he meane of that most hie righteousnes of God, wherunto the very Angels answere not: yet he therewithall sheweth that when they come to the iudgement of God, there remaineth nothing for all mortal men, but to hold their peace as dumme. For it tendeth not only to this purpose that he had rather willingly yeelde than dangerously striue with the rigorousnes of God: but he meaneth that he felt no other righteousnes in himselfe, than such as at ỹ first moment should fall before the sight of God. When affiance is driuen away, al glorying must also necessarily depart. For who can giue the praise of righteousnes to these workes, the affiance whereof trembleth before the sight of God? We must therefore come whether Esay calleth vs, that all the seede of Israell may be praised & glory in God: because it is most true which he saith in an other place, that we are the planting of the glory of God. Our minde therefore shall then be rightly purged, when it shal neither in any behalfe rest vpon the confidence of workes, nor reioyse in the glory of them. But this errour encouraged foolish men to the puffinge vp of this false & lying affiance, that they alway set the cause of their saluation in workes. Esa. 46. 10. Esa. 61. 3.

17 But if we looke to the foure kindes of causes, which the Philosophers teach vs to consider in the effect of thinges, we shall finde that none of them doth accord with workes in the stablishing of our saluation. For the Scripture doth euery where reporte that the cause of procuringe the eternall life to vs, is the mercy of the heauenly father and his free loue towarde vs: that the Materiall cause is Christ with his obedience, by which he purchaced righteousnesse for vs. What also shall we say to be the formall or instrumentall cause but faith? And these three causes Iohn comprehendeth together in one sentence, when he saith, God so loued ỹ world, that he gaue his only begotten sonne, that euery one which beleueth in him may not perishe, but may haue euerlastinge life. Now the finall cause the Apostle testifieth to be both the shewinge of the righteousnesse of God and the praise of his goodnesse: where he rehearseth also the other three in expresse wordes. For he saith thus to the Romaines: all haue sinned and do neede the glory of God: but they are iustified freely by his grace. Here thou hast the head & first fountain, namely that God embraced vs with his free mercy. Then followeth: By the redemption which is in Christ Iesu. Here thou hast as it were the matter whereof righteousnesse is made for vs through fayth in his bloude. Here is shewed the instrumental cause, whereby the righteousnesse of Christ is applied to vs. Last of all he ioyneth the ende, when he sayth, vnto the shewing of his righteousnes that he may be righteous Ioh. 3. 16. Rom. 3. 23.

& the righteousmaker of him that is of the faith of Christ. And (to touch by the way that this righteousnes standeth of reconciliation) he setteth expressely by name, that Christ was giuen to vs for reconciliatiō. So in the first chap. also to the Ephesians he teacheth that we are receiued of God into fauour by mere mercy: that the same is wrought, by the intercession of Christ: receiued, by fayth: all to this ende, that the glory of the goodnesse of God may fully shine. When we see y all the partes of our saluation are so without vs, what cause is there y we should now either haue affiāce or glory in works? Neither can euen the most sworne enemies of the grace of God moue any controuersie with vs about the efficient or finall cause, vnlesse they will deny the whole Scripture. In the Materiall & Formall cause they cast a false colour, as though our workes haue a halfe place with faith and the righteousnesse of Christ. But this also they teache, the Scripture crying out against them, which simply affirmeth both that Christ is to vs for righteousnesse and life, & that this benefit of righteousnes is possessed by only faith.

18 But whereas the holy men do oftentimes strengthen & comfort themselues with remembrance of their owne innocency and vprightnes, & somtime also forbeare not to report of it with praise, that is done two waies: either that in cōparing their good cause with the euill cause of the wicked, they conceiue thereby assured trust of victory, not so much for commending of their owne righteousnesse, as for the iust & deserued condemning of their aduersaries: or that euen without comparison of other, while they recorde themselues before God, the purenes of their owne conscience bringeth to thē both some comfort & affiance. Of the first of these two wayes, we shal see hereafter: nowe let vs briefely declare of the latter, howe it agreeth with that which we haue aboue sayd, that in the iudgement of God we must rest vpon no affiance of workes, and glory vpon no opinion of them. This is the agreement that the holy ones, when it concerneth the founding and stablishing of their saluation, do without respect of workes bend their eies to the only goodnesse of God. And they do not only bend themselues to it afore all things as to the beginning of blessednesse, but do rest therein as in the fulfilling of it. A conscience so founded, raised and stablished, is also stablished with consideration of workes: namely so farre as they are the witnessinges of God dwelling and reigning in vs. Sith therfore this affiance of workes hath no place, vnlesse thou haue first cast the whole affiance of thy minde vpon the mercy of God: it ought not to seeme contrary to that wherupon it hangeth. Wherfore when we exclude the affiance of workes,

we meane onely this that a Christian minde may not bowe to the merit of workes as to the succour of saluation, but shoulde throughly rest in the free promise of righteousnesse. But we forbid it not to vnderprop and strengthen this faith with the signes of the good will of God toward it selfe. For if al the good giftes which God hath bestowed vpon vs, when they be recorded in remembrance, are to vs after a certaine maner as it were beames of the face of God, by which we are enlightened to beholde that soueraigne light of goodnesse: much more is the grace of good workes, which sheweth that the Spirit of adoption is giuen vs.

19 When therfore the holy ones do by innocency of conscience confirme their faith, & gather matter of reioysing, they do nothinge but call to minde by the frutes of their calling, that they are adopted of the Lord into the place of children. This therefore that is taught by Salomon, that in the feare of the Lord is stedfast assurednes: and this that sometime the holy ones vse this protestation, to the entent that they may be heard of the lord, that they haue walked before his face in vprightnes & simplicity: haue no place in laying the fundatiō of stablishing of cōscience: but are thē only of value, if they be taken of the ensuing effect: because both that feare is no where which may stablish a full assurednes, & ỹ holy ones are priuie in their cōscience of such an vprightnes, wherwith are yet mingled many remnantes of the flesh. But forasmuch as of the frutes of regeneration they gather an argument of the holy Ghost dwellinge in them, they do there by not slenderly strengthen themselues to looke for ỹ help of God in all their necessities, when they by experiēce finde him their father in so great a matter. And euen this also they can not do, vnlesse they haue first conceiued the goodnes of God, sealed with no other assuredneſſe, than of the promise. For if they beginne to weie it by good workes, nothing shalbe more vncertaine nor more weake: forasmuch as if workes be considered by themselues, they shall no lesse by their imperfection shew profe of the wrath of God, thā they do with howsoeuer vnperfect pureneſſe testify his good will. Finally they do so set out the benefites of God, that yet they turne not away from the free fauour of God, in which Paul testifieth that there is ỹ length, breadth, depth & heigth of them: as if he should say, Whethersoeuer the senses of the godly do turne themselues, how hie soeuer they clime, how farre & wide soeuer they extende them, yet they ought not to go out of the loue of Christ, but holde themselues wholly in the meditation thereof, because it comprehendeth all kindes of measures in it. And therefore he sayth that it excelleth & surmounteth aboue all knowledge: and that when we acknowledge how much Christ hath loued

Rom. 8. 37. vs, we are fulfilled into all the fulneſſe of God. As in an other place, when he glorieth that all the Godly are vanquiſhers in battell, he by andby addeth a reaſon, becauſe of him that loued vs.

20 We ſee now that there is not in the holy ones that affiance, of works, which either giueth any thing to the merite of them (foraſmuch as they regard thē none otherwiſe than as the gifts of God, wherby they reknowledge his goodnes none otherwiſe thā as ſignes of their callinge, whereby may thinke vpon their election) or which withdraweth not any thinge from the free righteouſneſſe which we obtaine in Chriſt, foraſmuch as it hangeth vpon it, and ſtandeth not without it. The ſame thinge doth Auguſtine in few wordes, but very wel ſet out where he writeth. I do not ſay to the Lord, deſpiſe not the workes of my handes, or I haue ſought the Lord with my handes & haue not bin deceiued. But, I do not cōmend the works of my hands: for I feare, leaſt when thou haſt looked vpon them, thou ſhalt finde moe ſinnes than merites. Only this I ſay, this I aske, this I deſire, deſpiſe not the workes of thy hands, behold in me thy worke, not mine. For if thou beholdeſt mine, thou damneſt me: if thou beholdeſt thine, thou croweſt me. For alſo whatſoeuer good workes I haue, they are of thee. He ſetteth two cauſes, why he dare not boaſt of his workes to God, becauſe if he haue any good workes, he ſeeth therein nothing his owne: ſecondly, becauſe the ſame is alſo ouerwhelmed with multitude of ſinnes. Whereupon commeth to paſſe that the conſcience feeleth therby more feare & diſmaying than aſſurednes. Therfore he would haue God no otherwiſe to looke on his well doings, than that reknowledging in them the grace of his calling, he may make an end of the worke which he hath begonne.

21 But furthermore wheras the Scripture ſheweth that the good workes of the faithful, are cauſes why the Lord doth good to them, that is ſo to be vnderſtāded, that that which we haue before ſet may ſtand vnſhaken, that the Effect of our ſaluation conſiſteth in the loue of God the Father: the Matter, in the obediēce of the Sonne: the Inſtrument, in the enlightning of the holy Ghoſt, that is to ſay, in faith: that the ende is the glory of the ſo great kindeneſſe of God. Theſe things withſtand not, but that the Lord may embrace workes as inferiour cauſes. But whenſe commeth that? Namely whome the Lorde of his mercy hath appointed to the inheritance of eternall life, them with his ordinary diſpenſation he doth by good workes bringe into the poſſeſſion thereof. That which goeth before in order of diſpenſation, he calleth the cauſe of that which followeth. After this manner ner he sometime deriueth eternal life from workes: not for that is to be ascribed to them: but because whom he hath chosen, thē he doth iustifie, that he may at length glorifie them, he maketh the grace that goeth before which is a step toward that which foloweth, after a certaine maner the cause of it. But so oft as he hath occasiō to assigne the true cause, he biddeth vs not to flee to workes, but holdeth vs in the onely thinkinge vpon the mercy of God. For what manner of thinge is this which he teacheth by the Apostle, The rewarde of sinne is death: the grace of the Lorde, is life euerlastinge? Why doth he not set righteousnesse in comparison against sinne, as he setteth life against death? Why doth he not make righteousnesse the cause of life, as he maketh sinne the cause of death? For so should the cōparison of contraries haue stande well together, which is much broken by this turninge. But the Apostle meant by this comparison to expresse that which was trueth, that death is due to the deseruinges of men: that life is reposed in the onely mercy of God. Finally in these manners of speaking is rather expressed the order than the cause: because God in heapinge graces vpon graces, taketh cause of the first to adde the seconde, that he may leaue nothinge vndone to the enriching of his seruantes: and he so cōtinually extendeth his liberality, that yet he would haue vs alway to looke vnto the free electiō which is fountaine and beginninge of it. For although he loueth the giftes which he daily giueth, insomuch as they spring out of that fountaine: yet it is our part to holde fast that free acceptation, which alone is able to vpholde our soules: as for such giftes of his Spirite as he afterward giueth vs, so to adioyne them to the first cause, that they minish nothing of it.

Rom. 8. 30.

Rom. 6. 13.

The xv. Chapter.

That those thinges that are commonly boasted concerning the merites of vvorks, do ouerthrovv as vvell the praise of God in giuing of righteousnesse, as also the assurednesse of saluation.

NOw we haue declared that which is the chiefe point in this matter: that because if righteousnes be vpholdē with works, it must needes byandby fall downe before the sight of God, it is contained in the onely mercy of God, the onely communicating of Christ, and therefore in only faith. But, let vs diligently marke that this is the chiefe stay of the matter, least we be entangled with that generall errour, not only of the common people, but also of learned men. For so soone as question is moued of the iustification of faith & works, they flee to those places which seeme to giue to works ſome merit in the ſight of God: as though the iuſtification of works were fully wonne, if it be once proued that they be of any value with God. But we haue aboue plainely ſhewed that the righteouſneſſe of workes conſiſteth only in the perfect & full keping of the law. Wherupon foloweth that no man is iuſtified by workes but he that hauing climbed vp to ỹ hieſt top of perfection can not be proued gilty of any offenſe be it neuer ſo litle. Therfore it is an other & a ſeueral queſtiō: Howſoeuer workes ſuffice not to iuſtifie a man, whether yet do they not deſerue fauour with God?

2 Firſt of the name of merite I muſt needes ſay this afore hande, that whoſoeuer firſt applied it to works of men cōpared to the iudgement of God, he did very ill prouide for the pureneſſe of faith. Truely I do by my good wil abſtaine frō ſtriues about wordes, but I would wiſh that this ſobriety had alway bin vſed among Chriſtian wryters, that they woulde not haue founde in their heartes to vſe wordes ſtrange from the Scriptures, which engendred much offenſe and no frute. For whereto, I beſech you, was it needefull to haue the name of Merite brought in, when the price of good workes might be fitely expreſſed by an other name without offenſe? But howe much offenſe that worde containeth in it, is euident with the great hurt of the worlde. Surely as it is moſt proude it can do nothinge but darken the grace of God, and fill men with froward pride. The olde wryters of the Church, I graunt, haue commonly vſed it, and I would to God they had not with the abuſinge of one litle word giuen to poſteritie matter of errour. Howebeit they themſelues alſo do in many places teſtifie, howe in no caſe they meant to giue any preiudice agaynſt the trueth. For thus ſayeth Auguſtine in one place, Let Merites of men here holde their peace, which haue periſhed by Adam: and lette the grace of God reigne, by Ieſus Chriſt. Againe, The ſaintes giue nothing to their owne Merites: they will giue all to none but to thy mercy, O God. In an other place, When man ſeeth that whatſoeuer good he hath, he hath it not from himſelfe, but from his God, he ſeeth that all that which is praiſed in him, is not of his owne Merites, but of the mercy of God. You ſee howe takinge from men the power of doinge well, he alſo throweth downe the dignity of Merite. And Chryſoſtome ſayth, Our workes, if there be any, which folow the free calling of God, are repayment and det: but the giftes of God are grace and bountifulneſſe and the greatneſſe of liberall giuinge. But, leauinge the name, let vs rather looke vpon the thinge. I haue verily before alleaged a ſentence out of Bernarde, As it ſufficeth to Merite, not to preſume of Merites: ſo to want Merites, ſufficeth ſufficeth to iudgement. But by addinge forth with an expoſition, he ſufficiently mitigateth the hardneſſe of the worde, where he ſaith: Therefore care thou to haue Merites: when thou haſt them, knowe that they are giuen: hope for frute, the mercy of God: and ſo thou haſt eſcaped all danger, of pouerty, vnthankefulneſſe, and preſumption. Happy is the church which neither wanteth Merites without preſumption, nor preſumption without Merites. And a litle before he hadde largely ſhewed, howe Godly a meaninge he vſed. For of Merites (ſayth he) why ſhoulde the Church be carefull, which hath a ſtedfaſter and ſurer cauſe to glorie of the purpoſe of God? God can not deny himſelfe, he wil do that which he hath promiſed. If there be no cauſe why thou ſhouldeſt aske, by what merites may we hope for good thinges? ſpecially ſith thou heareſt it ſayd, Not for your ſakes, but for my ſake: it ſufficeth to Merit, to know that Merites ſuffice not. Eze. 36. 22.

3 What all our workes deſerue, the Scripture ſheweth when it ſayth that they can not abide the ſight of God, becauſe they are ful of vncleanneſſe: then, what the perfect obſeruing of the law (if any ſuch could be found) ſhal deſerue, when it teacheth that we ſhould thinke our ſelues vnprofitable ſeruantes when we haue done all things that are commaunded vs: becauſe we ſhal haue giuē nothing freely to the Lord, but only haue performed our due ſeruices, to which there is no thanke to be giuen. But thoſe good workes which he himſelfe hath giuen vs, the Lord both calleth ours and teſtifieth that they are not onely acceptable to him, but alſo that they ſhal haue reward. It is our duety againe for our parte, to be encouraged with ſo great a promiſe, and to gather vp our heartes, that we be not wearied with well doinge, and to yeelde true thankefulneſſe to ſo great bountifulneſſe of God. It is vndouted ẏ it is the grace of God whatſoeuer there is in workes that deſerueth praiſe: that there is not one droppe, which we ought properly to aſcribe to our ſelues. This if we do truely and earneſtly acknowledge, there vaniſheth away not onely all affiance but alſo opinion of Merite. We (I ſay) do not parte the praiſe of good workes (as the Sophiſters do) betwene God and man: but we reſerue it whole, perfect, and vnminiſhed to the Lorde. Onely this we aſſigne to man, that euen the ſelfe ſame workes that were good he by his vncleanneſſe corrupteth and defileth. For nothinge commeth out of man, howe perfect ſoeuer he be, that is not defiled with ſome ſpot. Therefore let the Lord call into iudgement euen theſe thinges that are beſt in the workes of menne: he ſhall verily eſpie in them his owne righteouſneſſe, but mans diſhoneſty and ſhame. Good workes Luk. 17 10.

therefore do pleaſe God & are not vnprofitable to the doers of them, but rather they receiue for rewarde the moſt large benefites of God: not becauſe they ſo deſerue, but becauſe the goodneſſe of God hath of it ſelfe appointed this price vnto them. But what ſpitefulneſſe is this, that men not cõtented with that liberality of God, which giueth vndue rewardes to workes that deſerue no ſuch thing, do with ambition ful of ſacrilege endeuour further, that that which is wholly of the liberality of God, may ſeeme to be rendered to the merites of men. Here I appelle to the common iudgement of euery man. If any man that hath a taking of profit in a peece of ground by an others mãs liberall graunt, do alſo claime to himſelfe the title of propriety: doth he not by ſuch vnthankefulnes deſerue to looſe the very ſelfe poſſeſſion which he had? Likewiſe if a bondeſlaue beinge made free of his Lord, do hide the baſenes of the eſtate of a Libertine, & boaſt himſelf to be a freeman borne: is he not worthy to be brought backe into his former bondage? For this is the right vſe of enioying a benefite, if we neither claime to our ſelues more than is giuen, nor do defraude the author of the benefite of his praiſe: but rather do ſo behaue our ſelues, that that which he hath giuen from himſelfe to vs, may ſeeme after a certaine maner to remaine with him. If this moderation be to be kept toward men, let all men looke & conſider what maner of moderation is due to God.

Liber-tine, is he that is free by manumiſſiõ, not by birth

4 I knowe that the Sophiſters do abuſe certaine places, to proue therby that the name of Merit toward God is found in the Scriptures. They alleage a ſentence out of Eccleſiaſticus, Mercy ſhall make place to euery man, according to the Merit of his workes. And out of the Epiſtle to the Hebrues, Forget not doing good and communicating, for with ſuch ſacrifices men merite of God. As for my right in reſiſting the authority of Eccleſiaſticus, I do now releaſe it. Yet I deny that they faithfully alleage that which Eccleſiaſticus, whatſoeuer writer he were, hath wrytten. For the Greeke copie is thus: πάσῃ ἐλεημοσύνῃ ποιήσει τοπον, ἕκαστος γὰρ κατὰ τὰ ἔργα αὐτοῦ εὑρήσει. He ſhal make place to euery mercy, & euery man ſhal finde according to his works. And that this is ỹ true text, which is corrupted in the Latine tranſlation, appeareth both by the framing of theſe words, & by a lõger ioyning together of the ſentence going before. In the Epiſtle to the Hebrues, there is no cauſe why they ſhould ſnare vs in one litle worde, when in the Greeke wordes of the Apoſtle is nothing elſe but that ſuch ſacrifices do pleaſe and are acceptable to God. This alone ought largely to ſuffice to ſubdue & beate downe the outragiouſnes of our pride, that we faine not any worthineſſe to workes beyonde the rule of Scripture. Now the doctrine of the Scripture is, that all our good workes are continually besprinkled with many filthy spottes, wherwith God may be worthily offended and be angry with vs: so far is it of, that they be able to winne him to vs, or to prouoke his liberality toward vs: Yet becausse he of his tender kindenesse doth not examine them by extremity of law, he taketh thē as if they were most pure, & therfore though without merit, he rewardeth them with infinite benefites both of this present life and of the life to come. For I do not allowe the distinction set by men otherwise learned and godly: that good workes deserue the graces that are giuen vs in this life, and that eternall life is the reward of faith alone. For the Lord doth commonly alway set in heauen the reward of labors and the crowne of battel. Againe to giue it so to the merit of workes, that it be taken away frō grace, that the Lord heapeth vs with graces vpon graces, is against the doctrine of the Scripture. For though Christ sayth that to him that hath, shalbe giuen, and that the faithfull and good seruant which hath shewed himselfe faithfull in fewe thinges, shalbe set ouer many: yet he also sheweth in an other place, that the encreases of the faithfull are the giftes of his free goodnesse. All ye that thirst (sayth he) come to the waters: and ye that haue not money, come and bye milke and honie without money and without any exchange. Whatsoeuer therefore is nowe giuen to the faithfull for help of saluation, yea and blessednesse it selfe, is the meere liberality of God: yet both in this and in those he testifieth that he hath consideration of workes: becausse, to testifie the greatnesse of his loue towarde vs, he vouchsaueth to graunt such honor not only to vs, but also to the giftes which he hath giuen vs. Mat. 25. 21. & 29. Esa. 55. 1.

5 If these thinges had in the ages past bin handeled & disposed in such order as they ought to haue bin, there had neuer arisen so many troubles and dissensions. Paul sayth that in the buildinge of Christian doctrine, we must kepe still that fundation which he had layed among the Corinthians, beside which no other can be layed: and that the same fundation is Iesus Christ. What maner of fundation haue we in Christ? is it, that he was to vs the beginninge of saluation: that the fulfilling thereof should follow of our selues? and hath he but only opened the way, by which we should go forward of our owne strēgth? Not so: but, as he sayd a litle before, when we acknowledge him, he is giuen to vs for righteousnesse. No manne therefore is well founded in Christ, but he that hath full righteousnesse in him: forasmuch as the Apostle sayeth not that he was sent to helpe vs to obtaine righteousnes, but that he himselfe might be our righteousnesse, 1. Cor. 3. 11. 1. Cor. 1. 30.

Ephe.1. 4. Colo.1. 14. & 20. Namely, that we are choſen in him from eternitie before the making of the world, by no deſeruing of oures, but according to the purpoſe of the good pleaſure of God: that by his death we are redemed from the damnation of death, and deliuered from deſtruction: that in him we are adopted of the heauenly father into children and heires: that Ioh.10 28. by his bloud we are recõciled to the Father: that being geuen to him to be kept we are deliuered from perill of periſhing and of being loſt: that being ſo engrafted in him, we are already after a certaine manner partakers of eternall life, being entred into the kingdome of God by hope: and yet more: that hauinge obteined ſuch partaking of him, howe ſo euer we be yet fooles in our ſelues, he is wiſdom for vs before God: howſoeuer we be ſinners, he is righteouſneſſe for vs: howſoeuer we be vncleane, he is cleanneſſe for vs: howſoeuer we be weake, howſoeuer vnarmed and lieng open in danger of Satan, yet oures is the power which is geuen him in heauen and earth, Mat.28 18. whereby he may treade downe Satan for vs, and breake the gates of helles: howſoeuer we ſtill cary about with vs the body of death, yet he is life for vs: brefely that all his things are oures, and we in him haue all things, in our ſelues nothing: vpon this foundation. I ſay, it behoueth that we be builded, if we will encreaſe into a holy temple to the Lorde.

6 But the world hath a longe time bene otherwiſe taught. For there haue bene found out I wote not what morall good workes, by which men may be made acceptable to God before that they be graffed in Chriſt. As though the Scripture lieth, when it ſaith, that 1.Ioh.5 12. they are all in death which haue not poſſeſſed the Sonne. If they be Rom.14 23. in death, howe ſhould they bring forth matter of life? As though it were of no more force, ỹ whatſoeuer is done without faith, is ſinne: as though there may be good frutes of an euell tree. But what haue theſe moſt peſtilent Sophiſters left to Chriſt wherin he may ſhewe forth his power? They ſay that he hath deſerued for vs the firſt grace, namely the occaſion of deſeruing: that it is nowe our part not to faile the occaſion offred. O deſperate ſhameleſneſſe of vngodlineſſe. Who would haue thought that men profeſſing the name of Chriſt, durſt ſo ſtrippe him naked of his power, and in a manner treade him vnder foote? This teſtimonie is eche where ſpoken of him, that all they are iuſtified that beleue in him: theſe fellowes teache, that there commeth from him no other benefit, but this, that the way is opened 1.Ioh.5. 12. to euery man to iuſtifie himſelfe. But I would to God they taſted what theſe ſayings meane: that all they haue life that haue the Sonne Iohn.5. 24. of God: that whoſoeuer beleueth, is already paſſed from death into

to life: that we are iustified by his grace, that we might be made heires of eternall life: that the faithfull haue Christ abidinge in them, by whome they cleaue fast to God: that they which are partakers of his life, do sit with him in heauenly places: that they are transplanted into the kingdome of God, and haue obteined saluatiō. and innumerable other such. For they do not declare, that there cōmeth by the faith of Christ nothing but ỹ power to obteine righteousnesse or saluation, but that they are both geuen to vs. Therefore so sone as thou art by faith engraffed into Christ, thou art already made the sonne of God, the heire of heauen, partaker of righteousnesse, possessor of life, and (that their lies may be better confuted) thou hast not obteined the fit abilitie to deserue, but euen all the deseruinges of Christ: for they are communicated to thee. Rom. 3. 24. 1. Ioh. 3 23. Eph. 2. 6. Colo. 1. 13.

7 So the Sorbonical scholes, the mothers of all errours, haue taken from vs the iustificatiō of faith which is the summe of all godlinesse. They graunt verily in worde, that man is iustified by formed faith: but this they afterward expound, becausе good workes haue of faith this that they auaile to righteousnesse: that they seme in a manner to name faith in mockage, sith without great enuiousnesse it could not be passed ouer in silence, seing it is so oft repeted of the Scripture. And not yet cōtented, they do in the praise of good works priuilie steale from God somwhat to geue away to man. Becausе they see that good workes litle auaile to aduaunce man, and that they can not be properly called Merites, if they be accompted the frutes of the grace of God: they picke them out of the strength of free will, oyle forsooth out of a stone. And they denie not in deede that the principall cause of them is in grace: but they affirme that thereby is not excluded free will, by which is all merit. And this not onely the latter Sopisters do teach, but also their Pythagoras, Lombard: whome if you compare with these men, you may say to be sound witted and sobre. It was truely a point of maruelous blindenesse, that when they had Augustine so oft in their mouth, they sawe not with howe great caresulnesse that man prouided that no peece of the glorie of good workes were it neuer so litle, should be conueyed to men. Here before where we entreated of free wil, we recited certain testimonies of his to this purpose, of which sort there are oftētimes found many like in his wrytinges: as when he forbiddeth vs that we should no where bost of our merites, becausе euen they also are the giftes of God: And when he writeth, that all our merite is onely of grace, that it is not gotten by our sufficience, but is all made by grace, &c. It is no maruell that Lombard was blinde at the light of the Scripture, in Libr. 2. dist. 28. In Psal. 144. Epist. 105.

whiche it appereth that he was not ſo well practiſed. Yer nothing could be deſired more plaine againſt him and his diſciples, than this word of the Apoſtle, For when he forbiddeth Chriſtiãs all glorieng, he adioineth a reaſon why it is not lawefull to glorie: becauſe we are that handiworke of God, created to all good workes, that we ſhould walke in them. Sith therefore there cõmeth out of vs no good thing, but in ſo much as we be regenerate: and our regeneration is whole of God without exception: there is no right why we ſhould claime to our ſelues one ounce in good workes. Finally whereas they cõtinually call vpon good workes, in the meane time they ſo inſtruct conſciences, that they neuer dare haue affiance, that they haue God wel pleaſed and fauorable to their workes. But contrariwiſe we, without making any mention of Merite, do yet by our doctrine raiſe vp the courages of the faithfull with ſingular comfort, when we teach them that in their workes they pleaſe God, and are vndoutedly accepted vnto him. Yea and alſo here we require that no man attempt or go about any worke without faith, that is to ſay, vnleſſe he do firſt with aſſured confidence of minde determine that he ſhall pleaſe God.

Eph. 2. 10.

8 Wherefore let vs not ſuffer our ſelues to be led ſo much as one heare bredth away from this onely foundation: which being layed, wiſe builders do afterward well & orderly builde vpon it. For if there be neede of doctrine and exhortation, they put men in minde, that the Sonne of God hath appered to this ende, that he may deſtroy the workes of the deuell: that they ſhould not ſinne which are of God, that the time paſt is enough for the fulfilling of the deſires of the Gẽtiles: that the elect of God are veſſels of mercie choſen out vnto honour, which ought to be made cleane from all filthineſſe. But all is ſpoken at ones, when it is ſhewed that Chriſt wil haue ſuch diſciples, which forſaking, themſelues, and taking vp their croſſe, do followe him. He that hath forſaken himſelfe, hath cut of the roote of all euels, that he may no more ſeke thoſe thinges that are his owne. He that hath taken vp his croſſe, hath framed himſelfe to all patience and mildeneſſe. But the example of Chriſt conteineth both theſe and all other duties of godlineſſe & holineſſe. He ſhewed himſelfe obedient to his father, euen to the death: he was wholly occupied in doing the workes of God: he with his whole heart breathed out the glorie of his father: he gaue his ſoule for his brethren: he both did good and wiſhed good to his enemies. If there be neede of comfort, theſe will bring maruelous comfort, that we be in affliction, but we are not made carefull: that we labour, but we are not forſaken: we are brought lowe, but we are not confounded: ws are throwen downe, but we do not

Loe, we do not iustifie a man by workes before God: but we say that all they that are of God, are regenerate and made a newe creature, that they may 2. Pet. 1. 10.

The xvj. Chapter.

A confutation of the sclaunders, vvhereby the Papistes go about to bring this doctrine in hatred.

WIth this one word may the shamelesnesse of certaine vngodly mē be confuted which sclaunder vs with saying that we destroy good workes, and do drawe men away from the following of them, when we say that they are not iustified by workes, nor do deserue saluation: and againe, that we make to easy a way to righteousnesse, when we teach that it lieth in the free forgeueneſſe of sinnes, and that we do by this enticement allure men to sinne, which are of their owne will too much enclined therto already. These sclaunders (I say) are with that one word sufficiently confuted: yet I will brefely answer to them both. They allege that by the iustification of faith, good workes are destroyed. I leaue vnspoken, what māner of men be these zelous louers of good workes which do so backbite vs. Let them haue licence as freely to rayle as they do licentiously infect the whole world with the filthinesse of their life. They faine that they be greued, that when faith is so gloriously aduaunced, workes are driuen downe out of their place. What if they be more raised vp, and stablished? For neither do we dreame of a faith voide of good workes, nor a iustification that is without them. This onely is the difference, that when we confesse that faith and good workes do necessarily hang together, yet we set iustification in faith, not in works. For what reason we do so, we haue in redineſſe eaſily to declare, if we do but turne to Chriſt vnto whome our faith is directed, and from whome it receiueth her whole ſtrength. Why therefore are we iuſtified by faith? bycauſe by faith we take holde of the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt, by which alone we are reconciled to God. But this thou canſt not take holde of, but that thou muſt alſo therewithall take hold of ſanctification. For he was geuen to vs, for righteouſneſſe, wiſdome, ſanctification, and redemption. Therefore Chriſt iuſtifieth none whom he doth not alſo ſanctifie. For theſe benefites are coupled together with a perpetuall and vnſeparable knot, that whome he enlighteneth with his wiſdome, them he redemeth: whome he redemeth, he iuſtifieth: whome he iuſtifieth, he ſanctifieth. But for aſmuch as our queſtion is onely of righteouſneſſe and ſanctifying, let vs ſtay vpon theſe. We may put difference betwene them, yet Chriſt conteineth them both vnſeparably in himſelfe. Wilt thou therefore obteine righteouſneſſe in Chriſt? Thou muſt firſt poſſeſſe Chriſt: and thou canſt not poſſeſſe him, but that thou muſt be made partaker of his ſanctification: becauſe he can not be torne in peeces. Sith therefore the Lorde doth graunt vs theſe benefites to be enioyed none otherwiſe than in geuing himſelfe, he geueth them both together, the one neuer without the other. So appereth how true it is, that we are iuſtified not without workes, and yet not by works: becauſe in the partaking of Chriſt, wherby we are iuſtified, is no leſſe conteined ſanctification than righteouſneſſe.

1.Cor. 1.30.

2 That alſo is moſt falſe, that the mindes of men are withdrawen from the affection of weldoing, when we take from them the opinion of meriting. Here by the way the readers muſt be warned, that they fooliſhly reaſon from reward to merit, as I ſhall afterward more plainely declare: namely becauſe they know not this principle, that God is no leſſe liberall when he aſſigneth reward to workes, than when he geueth power to do well. But this I had rather differre to the place fit for it. Now it ſhalbe enough to touch howe weake their obiection is: which ſhalbe done two wayes. For firſt whereas they ſay that there ſhalbe no care of well framing of life, but when hope of reward is ſet before them: they erre quite from the truth. For if this onely be entended when men ſerue God, that they loke to reward, or let out to hire or ſell their labors to him, they litle preuayle: for God will be freely worſhipped, freely loued: he (I ſay) alloweth that worſhipper, which when all hope of receiuing reward is cut of, yet ceſſeth not to worſhippe him. Moroeuer if men be to be pricked forward, no man can put ſharper ſpurres vnto them, than thoſe that are taken of the ende of our redemption and calling: ſuch as the word of God spurreth men withall, when it teacheth, that it is to wicked vnthankefulnesse, not mutually to loue him againe which first loued vs: that by the blood of Christ our cõsciences are cleansed from dead workes, to serue the liuing God: that it is a hainous sacrilege, if being ones cleansed, we defile our selues with newe filthinesse, and prophane that holy blood: that we are deliuered from the handes of our enemies, that we may without feare serue him in holinesse and righteousnesse before him all the dayes of our life: that we are made free from sinne, that we may with a free Spirit followe righteousnes: that our olde man is crucified, that we may rise againe into newnesse of life: againe that if we be dead with Christ (as becommeth his members) we must seeke those things that are aboue, and must in the world be waifaring men from home, that we may long toward heauen where is our treasure: that the grace of God hath appered to this ende, that forsaking all vngodlinesse and worldly desires, we may liue soberly, holily, and godlily in this world, loking for the blessed hope and the appering of the glorie of the great God and sauiour: therefore that we are not apointed that we should stirre vp wrath to our selues, but that we may obteine saluation by Christ: that we are the temples of the Holy Ghost, which it is not lawfull to be defiled: that we are not darkenesse, but light in the Lord, which must walke as children of light: that we are not called to vncleanesse, but to holinesse: becausse this is the will of God, our sanctification, that we absteine from vnlawfull desires: that our calling is holy, that the same is not fulfilled but with pureneſse of life: that we are for this purpose deliuered from sinne, that we should obey to righteousnesse. Can we be pricked forward to charitie with any more liuely argument than that of Iohn, that we should mutually loue one an other as God hath loued vs? that herein his children do differ from the children of the Deuell, the children of light from the children of darkenesse, bycause they abide in loue? Againe with that argument of Paule, that we if we cleaue to Christ, are the members of one body, which it is mete to be holpen one of an other with mutuall duties? Can we be more strongly prouoked to holinesse, than when we heare againe of Iohn, that all they that haue this hope, do sanctifie themselues, bycause their God is holy? Againe of ỹ mouth of Paule: that hauing the promise of adoption, we should cleanse our selues from all the defiling of the flesh and spirite? than when we heare Christ setting forth himselfe for an example vnto vs that we should follow his steppes?

word

3 And these fewe things I haue set forth for a tast. For if I should entende to go through all, I ſhoulde be driuen to make a longe volume. The Apoſtles are all full of encouragementes, exhortations & rebukings, wherby they may inſtruct the man of God to euery good worke, and that without any mention of merite. But rather they fetch their chiefe exhortatiõs from this that our ſaluation ſtandeth vpon the onely mercie of God and vpon no merite of ours. As Paule, after that he hath in a whole Epiſtle diſcourſed that there is no hope of life for vs but in the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt, when he commeth downe to moral exhortations, he beſecheth them by that mercy of God which he hath vouchſaued to extend to vs. And truely this one cauſe ought to haue bin ſufficient, that God may be glorified in vs. But if any be not ſo vehemently moued with the glory of God, yet the remembrance of his benefites ought to haue bin, moſt ſufficient, to ſtirre vp ſuch men to do well. But theſe men, which do paraduenture with thruſting in of merites beate out ſome ſeruile & conſtrained obediences of the law, do falſly ſay that we haue nothing whereby we may exhorte menne to good workes, becauſe we go not the ſame way to worke. As though God were much delited with ſuch obediences, which proteſteth that he loueth a cherefull giuer, & forbiddeth any thing to be giuen as it were of heauines or of neceſſity. Neither do I ſpeake this for that I do either refuſe or deſpiſe that kinde of exhortation, which the Scripture oftentimes vſeth, that it may leaue no meane vnattempted euery way to ſtirre vp our mindes. For it rehearſeth the reward which God will render to euery man accordinge to his workes. But I deny that that is the only thing, yea or the chiefe among many. And then I graunt not that we ought to take beginninge thereat. Moreouer I affirme that it maketh nothinge to the ſettinge vp of ſuch merites as theſe men boaſt of, as we ſhall hereafter ſee. Laſt of all I ſay that is to no profitable vſe, vnleſſe this doctrine haue firſt taken place, that we are iuſtified by the onely merite of Chriſt, which is conceiued by faith but by no merites of our workes, becauſe none can be fitte to the endeuour of holineſſe, vnleſſe they haue firſt digeſted this doctrine. Which thinge alſo the Prophet very well ſignifieth, when he thus ſpeaketh to God: With thee is mercy, that thou mayſt be feared. For he ſheweth that there is no worſhippinge of God, but when his mercy is acknowledged, vpon which alone it is both founded and ſtabliſhed. Which is very worthy to be noted, that we may knowe not onely that the beginninge of worſhippinge God aright is the affiance of his mercy, but alſo that the feare of God (which the Papiſtes will haue to be meritorious) can not haue the name of merite, becauſe it is grounded vpon the pardon and forgeueneſſe of ſinnes.

4 But it is a moſt vayne ſclaunder, that men are allured to ſinne, when we affirme the free forgeueneſſe of ſinnes, in which we ſay that righteouſneſſe conſiſteth. For, we ſay that it is of ſo great value, that it can with no good of oures be recompenſed, and that therefore it ſhould neuer be obteined, vnleſſe it were freely geuẽ. Moreouer that it is to vs in deede freely geuen, but not ſo to Chriſt which bought it ſo derely, namely with his owne moſt holy bloud, biſide which there was no price of value enough that might be paied to the iudgement of God. When menne are taught theſe things, they are put in minde that it is no thanke to them that the ſame moſt holy bloud is not ſhed ſo oft as they ſinne. Furthermore we learne, that our filthineſſe is ſuch, as is neuer waſhed away but with the fountaine of this moſt pure bloud, Ought not they that heare theſe things, to conceiue a greater horrour of ſinne, than if it were ſaid that it is wiped away with the ſprinkling of good workes? And if they haue any thing of God, howe can they but dred being ones cleanſed, to wallowe themſelues againe in the mire, as much as in them lieth to troble & infect the pureneſſe of this fountaine? I haue waſhed my feete (ſaith the faithfull ſoule in Salomon) how ſhall I againe defile them? Now it is euidẽt, whether ſort do both more abace the forgeueneſſe of ſinnes, and do more make vile the dignitie of righteouſneſſe. They babble that God is appeaſed with their owne trifling ſatisfactiõs, that is, their donge: We affirme that the giltineſſe of ſinne is more greuous than can be purged with ſo light triſtes: that the diſpleaſure of God is more heauie than can be releaſed with theſe ſatisfactions of no value, and that therefore this is the prerogatiue of the onely bloude of Chriſt. They ſay that righteouſnes (if it faile at any time) is reſtored and repaired by ſatisfactorie workes: we thinke it more precious than that it can be matched with any recompenſe of workes, and that therefore for the reſtoring thereof we muſt flee to the onely mercie of God. As for the reſt of thoſe thinges that perteine to the forgeueneſſe of ſinnes, let them be ſought out of the next chapter. Cant. 5. 3.

The xvij. Chapter.

The agreement of the promiſes of the lawe and the Goſpell.

NOw let vs alſo go through the other arguments wherewith Satan by the ſoldiars of his garde, goeth about either to ouerthrowe or batter the iuſtification of faith. This I thinke we haue already wrong from the ſclaunderers, that they can no more charge vs as enemies of good workes. For, iuſtification is taken away from good workes, not that no good workes ſhould be done, or that thoſe which be done ſhould be denied to be good, but that we ſhould not put affiãce in them, not glorie in them, not aſcribe ſaluation to them. For this is our affiance, this is our glorie, and the onely authour of our ſaluation, that Chriſt the ſonne of God is ours, and we likewiſe are in him ỹ ſonnes of God, and heyers of the heauẽly kingdome, being called by the goodneſſe of God, not by our owne worthineſſe, into the hope of eternall bleſſedneſſe. But bycauſe they do biſide theſe aſſaile vs, as we haue ſaid, with other engines, go to, let vs go forward in beating away theſe alſo. Firſt they come backe to the promiſes of the lawe, which the Lorde did ſet forth to the kepers of his lawe: and they aſke whether we will haue them to be vtterly voide or effectuall. Bycauſe it were an abſurditie and to be ſcorned to ſay that they are voide, they take it for cõfeſſed that they are of ſome effectualneſſe. Hereupon they reaſon that we are not iuſtified by only faith. For thus ſaith the Lorde: And it ſhalbe, if thou ſhalt heare theſe commaundementes and iudgementes, and ſhall kepe them and do them, the Lorde alſo ſhall kepe with thee his couenant and mercie which he hath ſworne to thy fathers, he ſhal loue thee and multiplie thee, and bleſſe thee, &c. Againe, If ye ſhall well direct your wayes and your endeuors, if ye walke not after ſtrange Gods, if ye do iudgement between man and man, and go not backe into malice, I will walke in the middeſt of you. I will not recite a thouſand peces of the ſame ſorte, which ſith they nothing differ in ſenſe, ſhalbe declared by the ſolution of theſe. In a ſumme, Moſes teſtifieth that in the lawe is ſet forth bleſſing and curſe, death & life. Thus therfore they reaſon, that either this bleſſing is made idle and fruteleſſe, or that iuſtificatiõ is not of faith alone. We haue already before ſhewed, howe if we ſticke faſt in the lawe, ouer vs being deſtitute of all bleſſing, hangeth onely curſe which is threatned to all tranſgreſſors. For the Lord promiſeth nothing but to the perfect kepers of his lawe, ſuch as there is none found. This therfore remaineth, that all mankinde is by the law accuſed, and ſubiect to curſe and the wrath of God: from which that they may be looſed, they muſt needes go out of the power of the law, & be as it were brought into libertie from the bondage thereof: not that carnall libertie which ſhould withdrawe vs from the keping of the lawe, ſhould allure vs to thinke all things lawfull and to ſuffer our luſt, as it were the ſtayes being broken & with looſe reines to run at riot: but the ſpirituall libertie, which may comfort and raiſe vp a diſmayed and ouerthrowen conſcience, ſhewing it to be free from the curse and damnation wherewith the lawe helde it downe bond and fast tied. This deliuerance from the subiection of the lawe, and Manumission (as I may call it) we obteine when by faith we take holde of the mercie of God in Christ, whereby we are certified and assured of the forgeueneſſe of sinnes, with the feling whereof the lawe did pricke and bite vs.

2 By this reason euen the promises that were offred vs in the lawe, should be all vneffectuall and voide, vnlesse the goodnesse of God by the Gospell did helpe. For, this condition that we kepe the whole lawe, vpon which the promises hang, and whereby alone they are to be performed, shall neuer be fulfilled. And ỹ Lorde so helpeth, not by leauing part of righteousnesse in our workes, and supplying parte by his mercifull bearing with vs, but when he setteth onely Christ for the fulfilling of righteousnesse. For the Apostle, when he had before said that he and other Iewes beleued in Iesus Christ, knowing that man is not iustified by the workes of the lawe, addeth a reason: not that they should be holpen to fulnesse of righteousnesse by the faith of Christ, but by it should be iustified, not by the workes of the lawe. If the faithfull remoue from the lawe into faith, that they may in faith finde righteousnesse which they see to be absent from the lawe: truely they forsake the righteousnesse of the lawe. Therefore now let him that list, amplifie the rewardinges which are said to be prepared for the keper of the lawe, so that he therewithall consider that it commeth to passe by our peruersnesse, that we fele no frute thereof till we haue obteined an other righteousnesse of faith. So Dauid, when he made mention of the rewarding which the Lord hath prepared for his seruantes, byandby descendeth to the reknowledging of sinnes, whereby that same rewarding is made voide. Also in the xix. Psalme, he gloriously setteth forth the benefites of the lawe, but he by and by crieth out: Whoe shall vnderstand his faultes? Lord cleanse me from my secret faultes. This place altogether agreeth with the place before, where when he had said that all the wayes of the Lorde are goodnesse and truth to them that feare him, he addeth: For thy names sake Lorde, thou shalt be mercifull to my peruersnesse, for it is much. So ought we also to reknowledge, that there is in deede the good will of God set forth vnto vs in the lawe, if we might deserue it by workes, but that the same neuer commeth to vs by the deseruing of workes.

Gala. 2. 16.

Psa. 19. 12.

Psa. 25. 10.

3 How then? Are they geuen that they should vanish away without frute? I haue euen now already protested that the same is not my meaning. I say verily that they vtter not their effectualnesse toward vs, so long as they haue respect to the merit of works, and that therfore if they be considered in themselues, they be after a certaine manner aboliſhed. If the Apoſtle teacheth that this noble promiſe: I haue geuen you commaundements, which who ſo ſhall do ſhal liue in thē, is of no value if we ſtand ſtill in it, and ſhall neuer a whit more profit than if it had not bene geuen at all: becauſe it belongeth not euen to the moſt holy ſeruauntes of God, which are all far from the fulfilling of the lawe, but are compaſſed about with many tranſgreſſions. But when the promiſes of the Goſpel are put in place of them, which do offer free forgeuenes of ſinnes, they bring to paſſe that not onely we our ſelues be acceptable to God, but that our workes alſo haue their thanke: & not this onely that the Lorde accepteth them, but alſo extendeth to them the bleſſings which were by couenāt due to the keping of the lawe. I graunt therfore, that thoſe things which the Lorde hath promiſed in his lawe to the followers of righteouſneſſe and holineſſe, are rendred to the workes of the faithfull: but in this rendring, the cauſe is alway to be conſidered that powreth grace to workes. Now cauſes we ſee that there be three. The firſt is, that God turning away his ſight from the workes of his ſeruantes, which alway deſerue rather reproche than praiſe, embraceth them in Chriſt, and by the onely meane of faith reconcileth them to himſelfe without the meane of workes. The ſecond, that of his fatherly kindneſſe and tender mercifulneſſe, he lifteth vp workes to ſo great honour, not weyeng the worthineſſe of them, that he accompteth them of ſome value. The third, that he receiueth the very ſame workes with pardon, not imputing the imperfection, wherewith they all being defiled, ſhould otherwiſe be rather reckened among ſinnes than vertues. And hereby appereth how much the Sophiſters haue bene deceiued, which thought that they had gaily eſcaped all abſurdities when they ſaid that workes do not of their owne inwarde goodneſſe auaile to deſerue ſaluation, but by the forme of the couenant, becauſe the Lorde hath of his liberality ſo much eſtemed them. But in the meane time they conſidered not, howe far thoſe workes which they would haue to be meritorious, were from the condition of the promiſes, vnleſſe there went before both iuſtification grounded vpon onely faith, and the forgeueneſſe of ſinnes, by which euen the good workes themſelues haue neede to be wiped from ſpottes. Therefore of three cauſes of Gods liberalitie, by which it is brought to paſſe that the workes of the faithfull are acceptable, they noted but one, and ſuppreſſed two, yea and thoſe the principall.

Leu. 18. Eze. 20. 11. Rom. 10 5.

4 They allege the ſaying of Peter, which Luke rehearſeth in the Actes:

Actes: I finde in truth that God is not an accepter of persones; but Act. 10.
in euery nation he that doth righteousnesse is acceptable to him. And 34.
hereupon they gather that which semeth to be vndouted, that if man doth by right endeuors get himselfe the fauour of God, it is not the beneficiall gift of God alone that he obteineth saluation: yea that God doth so of his mercy helpe a sinner, that he is by workes bowed to mercy. But you can in no wise make the Scriptures agree together, vnlesse you note a double accepting of man with God. For, such as man is by nature, God findeth nothing in him whereby he may be enclined to mercie, but onely [illegible]erie. If therefore it be certaine that man is naked and needy of all goodnesse, and on the other side full stuffed and loden with all kindes of euels, when God first receiueth them: for what qualitie, I pray you, shall we say that he is worthy of the heauenly calling? Away therefore with the vaine imagining of merites, where God so euidently setteth out his free mercifulnesse. For, that which in the same place is said by the voice of the Angell to Cornelius, that his prayers and almes had ascended into the sight of God, is by these men most lewdly wrested, that man by endeuor of good workes is prepared to receiue the grace of God. For it must needes be that Cornelius was already enlightened with the Spirit of wisedome, sith he was endued with true wisdome, namely with the feare of God: that he was sanctified with the same Spirit, sith he was a follower of righteousnesse, which the Apostle teacheth Gal. 5. 5 to be a most certaine frute thereof. All those things therfore which are said to haue pleased God in him, he had of his grace, so far is it of that he did by his owne endeuor prepare himselfe to receiue it. Truely there can not one sillable of the Scripture be brought forth, that agreeth not with this doctrine, that there is none other cause for God to accept man vnto him, but because he seeth that man should be euery way lost, if he be left to himselfe: but because he will not haue him lost, he vseth his owne mercie in deliuering him. Now we see how this accepting hath not regard to the righteousnesse of man, but is a mere token of the goodnesse of God toward men being miserable and most vnworthy of so great a benefit.

5 But after that the Lorde hath brought man out of the bottomlesse depth of destruction, and seuered him to himselfe by grace, of adoption: because he hath newe begotten him & newly formed him into a newe life, he nowe embraceth him, as a newe creature with the giftes of his Spirit. This is that accepting whereof Peter maketh mention, by which the faithfull are after their vocation allured of God euen in respecte also of workes: for the Lorde can not but loue and kisse those good things which he worketh in them by his Spirit. But this is alway to be remembred, that they are none otherwise acceptable to God in respect of workes; but in as much as for their cause and for their sakes, whatsoeuer good workes he hath geuen them in encreasing of his liberalitie, he also vouchesaueth to accept. For whense haue they good workes, but because the Lorde, as he hath thosen them for vessels vnto honor, so will garnish them with true godlinesse? Whereby also are they accompted good, as though there were nothing wanting in them, but because the kinde Father tenderly graunteth pardon to th[illegible] deformities & spottes that cleaue to them? Summarily, he signifieth nothing els in this place, but that to God his children are acceptable and louely in whom he seeth the markes and features of his owne face. For we haue in an other place taught that regeneration is a repairinge of the image of God in vs. For asmuch as therfore whersoeuer the Lorde beholdeth his owne face, he both worthily loueth it and hath it in honor: it is not without cause said, that the life of the faithfull being framed to holinesse and righteousnesse pleaseth him, but bycause the godly being clothed with mortall flesh, are yet sinners, and their good workes are but begonne and sauoring of the faultinesse of the flesh: he can not be fauorable neither to those nor to these, vnlesse he more embrace them in Christ than in themselues. After this manner are those places to be taken, which testifie that God is kinde and mercifull to the followers of righteousnesse, Moses said to the Israelites. The Lorde thy God kepeth couenant, to a thousand generations: which sentence was afterward vsed of the people for a common manner of speach. So Salomon in his solemne prayer, saith, Lord God of Israell, which kepest couenant and mercie to thy seruantes which walke before thee in their whole heart. The same wordes are also repeted of Nehemias. For, as in all the couenantes of his mercie, the Lorde likewise on their behalues requireth of his seruantes vprightnesse & holinesse of life, that his goodnesse should not be made a mockerie, and that no man swelling with vaine reioising by reason thereof should blesse his owne soule, walking in the meane time in the peruersnesse of his owne heart: so his will is by this way to kepe in their dutie them that are admitted into the communion of the couenant: yet neuertheless the couenant it selfe is both made at the beginning free, and perpetually remaineth such. After this maner Dauid when he glorieth that there was rendred to him reward of the cleannesse of his handes, yet omitteth not that fountaine which I haue spoken of, that he was drawen out of the wombe, because God loued him:

2. Sam. 22. 1.

where he so setteth out the goodnesse of his cause, that he abateth nothing from the free mercie which goeth before all giftes, whereof it is the beginning.

6 And here by the way it shalbe profitable to touch what these formes of speaking do differ from the promises of the lawe. I call promises of the lawe, not those which are eche where commonly written in ỹ bookes of Moses: (for as much as in them also are foũd many promises of the Gospell) but those which properly belong to the ministerie of the lawe. Such promises, by what name so euer you list to call them, do declare that there is reward redy vpon condition, if thou do that which is commaunded thee. But when it is said, that the Lorde kepeth the couenant of mercie to them which loue him, therin is rather shewed what manner of men be his seruantes which haue faithfully receiued his couenant, than the cause is expressed why the Lorde should do good to them. Nowe this is the manner of shewing it. As the Lord vouchsaueth to graunt vs ỹ grace of eternall life, to this ende that he should be loued, feared, and honored of vs: so whatsoeuer promises there are of his mercy in the Scriptures, they are rightfully directed to this, and that we shoulde reuerence and worship the author of the benefites. So ofte therefore as we heare that he doth good to them that kepe his lawe, let vs remember that the children of God are there signified by the dutie which ought to be continuall in them: that we are for this cause adopted, that we should honor him for our Father. Therefore lest we should disherite our selues from the right of adoption, we must alway endeuor to this wherunto our calling tendeth. But let vs againe kepe this in minde, that the accomplishmẽt of the mercie of God hangeth not vpon the workes of the faithfull: but that he therefore fulfilleth the promise of saluation to them which aunswer to their calling in vprightnesse of life, because in them he acknoweth the naturall tokens of his children which are ruled with his Spirit vnto good. Hereunto let that be referred which is in the xv. Psalme spoken of the Citizens of the Church, Lorde whoe shall dwell in thy tabernacle, and whoe shall rest in thy holy hill? The innocẽt in handes and of a cleane heart, &c. Againe in Esaye, Who shall dwell with deuouring fire? He that doth righteousnesse, he that speaketh right thinges, &c. For there is not described the stay whereupon the faithfull may stand before the Lorde, but the manner wherewith the most mercifull father bringeth them into his fellowship, and therein defendeth and strengtheneth them. For, because he abhorreth sinne, he loueth righteousnes: whom he ioineth to himselfe, them he cleanseth with his spirit, that he may Esa. 33. 14.

make them of like fashion to himselfe and his kingdome. Therefore if the question be of the first cause whereby the entrie is made open to the holy ones into the kingdome of God, from whense they haue that they may stand fast and abide in it, we haue this aunswer ready, because the Lorde by his mercie both hath ones adopted them, and perpetually defendeth them. But if the question be of the manner, then we must come downe to regeneration and the frutes thereof, which are rehersed in that Psalme.

7 But there semeth to be much more hardnesse in these places, which do both garnish good workes with the title of righteousnesse, and affirme that man is iustified by them. Of the first sort there be very many places, where the obseruinges of the commaundements are called iustifications or righteousnesses. Of the other sort, that is Deut.6. 25. an example which is in Moses, This shalbe our righteousnesse, if we kepe all these commaundementes. And if thou take exception and say that this is a promise of the lawe, which being knit to a condition Deu 24 13 Psa 106 30. impossible, proueth nothing. There be other of which you can not make the same answer, as this, And that shalbe to thee for righteousnesse before the Lord, to redeliuer to the poore man his pledge, &c. Againe, that which the Prophet saith, that the zele in reuenging the shame of Israell, was imputed to Phinees for righteousnesse. Therefore the Pharisees of our time thinke that here they haue a large matter to triumph vpon. For when we say, that when the righteousnesse of faith is set vp, the iustification of workes geueth place, by the same right they make this argument, If righteousnesse be of workes, then it is false that we are iustified by faith onely. Though I graunt that the commaundementes of the lawe are called righteousnesses: it is no maruell: for they are so in deede. Howebeit we must warne the readers that the Grecians haue not fitly translated the Hebrue word Hucmi, Dikaiomata, righteousnesses for commaundementes. But for the word, I willingly release my quarell. For neither do we denie this to the lawe of God, that it conteineth perfect righteousnesse. For although, bycause we are detters of all the things that it commaundeth, therefore euen when we haue performed full obedience therof, we are vnprofitable seruantes: yet becawse the Lorde hath vouchsaued to graunt it the honor of righteousnesse, we take not away that which he hath geuen. Therefore we willingly confesse that the full obedience of the lawe is righteousnesse that the keping of euery commaundement, is a part of righteousnesse, if so be that the whole summe of righteousnesse were had in the other partes also. But we denie that there is any where any such forme of righteousnesse And there-

therefore we take away the righteousnesse of the lawe, not for that it is maimed and vnperfect of it selfe, but for that by reason of the weakenesse of our flesh it is no where seene. But the Scripture not onely calleth simply the commaundements of the Lorde, righteousnesses: but it also geueth this name to the workes of the holy ones. As when it reporteth that Zacharie & his wife walked in the righteousnesses of the Lorde: truely when it so speaketh, it weyeth workes rather by the nature of the lawe, than by their owne propre estate. Howbeit here againe is that to be noted, which I euen now said, that of the negligence of the Greke translator is not a lawe to be made. But for asmuch as Luke would alter nothing in the receiued trãslatiõ, I will also not striue about it, For God hath cõmaunded these things that are in the lawe to men for righteousnesse: but this righteousnes we performe not but in keping the whole lawe: for by euery transgression it is broken. Wheras therefore the lawe doth nothing but prescribe righteousnesse: if we haue respecte to it, all the seuerall commaundementes thereof arę righteousnesse: if we haue respect to men of whom they are done, they do not obteine the praise of righteousnesse by one worke, being trespassers in many, and by that same worke which is euer partly faulty by reason of imperfection. Luc.1.6

8 But nowe I come to the second kinde, in which is the chefe hardnes. Paule hath nothing more strong to proue the righteousnesse of faith, than that which is written of Abraham, that his faith was imputed to him for righteousnesse. Sith therefore it is said that the acte done by Phinees was imputed to him for righteousnesse: what Paul affirmeth of faith, the same may we also cõclude of woorks. Whereupon our aduersaries, as though they had wonne the victorie, determine that we are in deede not iustified without faith, but that we are also not iustified by it alone, and that workes accomplish our righteousnesse. Therefore here I beseech the godly, that if they knowe that the true rule of righteousnesse is to be taken out of the Scripture only, they will religiously and earnestly wey with me, howe the Scripture may without cauillations be rightly made to agree with it selfe. For asmuch as Paule knewe that the iustification of faith is the refuge for them that are destitute of their owne righteousnesse, he doth boldly conclude that all they that are iustified by faith, are excluded from the righteousnesse of workes. But sith it is certaine that the iustification of faith is common to all the faithfull, he doth therof with like boldenesse conclude ỳ no man is iustified by works, but rather contrariewise that men arę iustified without any helpe of workes. But it is one thing to dispute of what value workes are by Gen.4. 4. Psa.106 31.

themſelues, and an other thing what accompt is to be made of them after the ſtabliſhing of the righteouſneſſe of faith. If we ſhall ſet a price vpon workes according to their worthineſſe, we ſay that they are vnworthy to come into the ſight of God: and therefore that man hath no workes whereof he may glorie before God: then, that being ſpoiled of all helpe of workes he is iuſtified by onely faith. Nowe we define righteouſneſſe thus, that a ſinner being receiued into the communion of Chriſt, is by his grace reconciled to God, when being cleanſed with his bloode he obteineth forgeueneſſe of ſinnes, and being clothed with his righteouſneſſe as with his owne, he ſtandeth aſſured before the heauenly iudgement ſeate. When the forgeueneſſe of ſinnes is ſet before, the good workes which followe haue nowe an other valuation than after their owne deſeruing: bycauſe whatſoeuer is in them vnperfect, is couered with the perfection of Chriſt: whatſoeuer ſpottes or filthineſſe there is, it is wiped away with his cleanneſſe, that it may not come into the examination of the iudgement of God. Therefore when the giltines of all treſpaſſes is blotted out, whereby men are hindred that they can bring forth nothing acceptable to God, and when the faulte of imperfection is buried, which is wonte alſo to defile good workes: the good workes which the faithfull do, are compted righteous, or (which is all one) are imputed for righteouſneſſe.

9 Now if any man obiect this againſt me to aſſaile the righteouſneſſe of faith, firſt I will aſke whether a man be compted righteous for one or two holy workes, being in the reſt of the workes, of his life a treſpaſſer of the lawe. This is more than an abſurditie. Then I will aſke if he be compted righteous for many good workes, if he be in any parte founde gilty. This alſo he ſhall not be ſo bolde to affirme, when the penall ordinance of the lawe crieth out againſt it, and pro-
Deu. 27 clameth all them accurſed which haue not fulfilled all the commaundements of the lawe to the vttermoſt. Moreouer I will go further and aſke, whether there be any worke that deſerueth to be accuſed of no vncleanneſſe or imperfection. And howe could there be any ſuch before thoſe eyes, to whom euen ỹ very ſtarres are not cleane enough,
Iob. 4 nor the Angels righteous enough? So ſhall he be compelled to graunt
18. that there is no good worke which is not ſo defiled with tranſgreſſiõs adioined with it, and with the corruptneſſe of it ſelfe, that it can not haue the honour of righteouſneſſe. Nowe if it be certaine that it proceedeth from the righteouſneſſe of faith that workes which are otherwiſe vpure, vncleane, and but halfe workes, not worthy of the ſight of God, much leſſe of his loue, are imputed to righteouſneſſe, why

why do they with boastinge of the righteousnesse of workes destroy the iustification of faith, whereas if this iustification were not, they should in vaine boast of that righteousnes? Will they make a vipers birth? For therto tende the sayings of the vngodly men. They can not deny that the iustification of faith is the beginning, foundation, cause, matter, and substance of the righteousnesse of works: yet they conclude that man is not iustified by faith, because good workes also are accompted for righteousnesse. Therefore let vs let passe these follies & confesse as the trueth is, that if the righteousnes of workes of what sorte soeuer it be accompted, hangeth vpon the iustification of faith, it is by this not onely nothinge minished but also confirmed, namely whereby the strength thereof appeareth more mighty. Neither yet let vs thinke that workes are so commended after free iustification, that they also afterward come into the place of iustifyinge a man, or do parte the office betwene them and faith. For vnlesse the iustification remaine alway whole, the vncleannes of workes shalbe vncouered. And it is no absurdity, that a man is so iustified by faith that not only he himselfe is righteous, but also his workes are esteemed righteous aboue their worthines.

10 After this maner we will graunt in workes not onely a righteousnesse in partes (as our aduersaries themselues would haue) but also that it is allowed of God as if it were a perfect & ful righteousnes. But if we remember vpon what fundation it is vpholden, all the difficulty shalbe dissolued. For then & not till then it beginneth to be an acceptable worke, when it is receiued with pardon. Now whense cōmeth pardon, but because God beholdeth both vs and all our things in Christ? Therfore as we, when we are graffed into Christ, do therfore appeare righteous before God, because our wickednesses are couered with his innocence, so our works are & be taken for righteous, because whatsoeuer faultinesse is otherwise in them, beinge buried in the cleanneſse of Christ, it is not imputed. So we may rightfully say, that by only faith not only we but also our workes are iustified. Now if this righteousnes of workes of what sort soeuer it be, hangeth vpon faith and free iustification, and is made of it: it ought to be included vnder it, and to be sette vnder it as the effect vnder the cause thereof, as I may so call it: so farre is it of that it ought to be raised vp either to destroy or darken it. So Paule to driue men to confesse that our blessednesse consisteth of the mercy of God, not of workes, chiefely enforceth that saying of Dauid, Blessed are they whose iniquities are forgiuen, and whose sinnes are couered. Blessed is he to whom the Lorde hath not imputed sinne. If any man do thrust in to

Matt. 5. 3. that man is alway miserable, vnlesse he be deliuered from misery by forgiuenes of sinnes. Forasmuch as therefore all the kindes of blessednesse which are extolled in the Scriptures, do fall downe void, so that man receiueth frute of none of them, til he haue obtained blessednesse by forgiuenesse of sinnes, which may afterward make place for them: it followeth that this is not only the hiest & the chiefe but also the only blessednesse: vnlesse paraduenture you will haue that it be weakened of those which consist in it alone. Nowe there is much lesse reason why ẏ calling of men righteous should trouble vs, which is cõmonly giuen to the faithful. I graunt verily that they are called righteous of ẏ holines of life: but forasmuch as they rather endeuour to the following of righteousnes, than do fulfill righteousnes it selfe, it is meete that this righteousnes such as it is, giue place to the iustification of faith, from whence it hath that which it is.

11 But they say ẏ we haue yet more busines with Iames, namely which with open voice fighte h against vs. For he teacheth both that
Iam. 1. Abraham was iustified by workes, and also that all we are iustified by 12. workes, not by faith onely. What then? will they draw Paule to fight with Iames? If they holde Iames for a minister of Christ, his saying must be so taken that it disagre not frõ Christ speaking by the mouth of Paule. The holy Ghost affirmeth by the mouth of Paule, that Abraham obtained righteousnesse by fayth, not by workes: and we also do teache that all are iustified by faith without the workes of the lawe. The same holy Ghost teacheth by Iames that both Abrahams righteousnes & ours consisteth of workes, not of only faith. It is certaine ẏ the holy Ghost fighteth not with himselfe. What agreement shall there be therfore of these two? It is enough for the aduersaries, if they plucke the righteousnesse of faith which we woulde haue to be fastened with most deepe rootes: but to render to consciences their quietenesse, they haue no great care. Whereby verily you may see that they gnawe the iustification of faith, but in the meane time do appoint no marke of righteousnesse where consciences may stay. Therefore let them triumphe as they list, so that they may boast

of no other victory than that they haue taken away all certainety of righteousnesse. And this wretched victory they shal obtaine, where the light of trueth being quenched, the Lord shall suffer them to ouerspred the darkenesse of lies. But whersoeuer the trueth of God shall stand, they shall nothing preuaile. I deny therefore that the saying of Iames which they still continually hold vp against vs as it were the shielde of Achilles doth any thinge at all make for them. That this may be made plaine, first we must looke at the marke that the Apostle shooteth at: and then we must note where they be deceiued. Because there were then many (which mischiefe is wont to be continuall in the Church) which openly bewraied their infidelity, in neglecting and omitting all the proper workes of the faithfull, and yet ceassed not to boast of the false name of faith: Iames doth here mock the fooliſh boldnesse of such men. Therefore it is not his purpose in any point to diminish the force of true faith, but to shew how fondly those trifles did chalenge so much the vaine image of it, that beinge contented herewith they carelesly ranne dissolutely abroade into all licentiousnesse of vices. This ground being conceiued, it shalbe easie to perceiue where our aduersaries do misse. For they fall into two deceites in the word, ỹ one in the name of faith, the other in the word of iustifying. Wheras the Apostle nameth faith a vaine opinion farre distant from the trueth of faith, it is spoken by way of grauntinge, which is no derogation to the matter: which he sheweth at the beginning in these wordes. What profiteth it, my brethren, If any man say that he hath faith, and hath no workes? He doth not say, if any haue faith without workes, but, If any man boast. More plainely also he speaketh a litle after, where he in mockery maketh it worse than the deuills knowledge: last of all, when he calleth it dead. But by the definition you may sufficiently perceiue what he meaneth. Thou beleuest (sayth he) that there is a God. Truely if nothinge be contained in this faith but to beleue that there is a God, it is now no maruell if it do not iustifie. And when this is taken frō it, let vs not thinke that any thinge is abated from the Christian faith, the nature whereof is farre otherwise. For after what maner doth true faith iustifie vs, but when it conioyneth vs with Christ, that beinge made one with him we may enioy the partakinge of his righteousnesse: It doth not therefore iustifie vs by this that it concieueth a knowledge of the being of God, but by this that it resteth vpon the assurednes of the mercy of God.

12 We haue not yet the worke, vnlesse we examine also the other deceite in the word, forasmuch as Iames setteth part of iustificatiō in workes. If you will make Iames agreeinge both with the reſt of the Scriptures,& with himſelfe,you muſt of neceſſity take ỹ word of Iuſtifying in an other ſignificatiõ than it is taken in Paul. For Paul ſayth that we are iuſtified,when the remembrance of our vnrighteouſneſſe beinge blotted out,we are accompted righteous. If Iames had ment of that taking,he had wrongfully alleaged that out of Moſes,Abraham beleued God,&c. For he thus frameth it together: Abraham by workes obtained righteouſneſſe, becauſe he ſticked not at the commaundement of God,to offer vp his ſonne. And ſo the Scripture was fulfilled which ſaith,that he beleued God,and it was imputed to him for righteouſneſſe. If it be an abſurdity, that the effect is before his cauſe, either Moſes doth in that place falſely teſtifie, that faith was imputed to Abraham for righteouſnes:or he deſerued not righteouſneſſe by that obedience which he ſhewed in offering vp of Iſaac. Abraham was iuſtified by his faith, when Iſmaell was not yet conceiued, which was now growen paſt childehoode before that Iſaac was borne. How therefore ſhall we ſay,that he got to himſelfe righteouſneſſe by obedience which followed long afterward? Wherfore either Iames did wrongfully miſturne the order (which it is a wickednes to thinke)or he meant not to ſay that he was iuſtified, as though he deſerued to be accompted righteous. Howe then? Truely it appeareth that he ſpeaketh of the declaration of righteouſnes and not the imputation:as if he had ſaid. Who ſo are righteous by true faith,they do proue their righteouſneſſe with obedience & good workes, not with a bare and imagelike viſor of faith. In a ſumme, he diſputeth not by what meane we are iuſtified,but he requireth of the faithful a working righteouſneſſe. And as Paule affirmeth that men be iuſtified without the help of workes: ſo Iames doth here ſuffer them to be accompted righteous which want good workes. The conſideringe of this ende, ſhall deliuer vs out of all dout. For our aduerſaries are hereby chiefly deceiued,that they think that Iames defineth the maner of iuſtifying, wheras he trauaileth about nothing elſe but to ouerthrow their peruerſe careleſnes,which did vainly pretend faith to excuſe their deſpiſinge of good workes. Therefore into how many waies ſoeuer they wreſt the wordes of Iames, they ſhal wring out nothing but two ſentences:that a vaine bodileſſe ſhew of faith doth not iuſtifie,and that a faithfull man not contented with ſuch an imaginatiue ſhew,doth declare his righteouſnes by good workes.

13 As for that which they alleage out of Paule the ſame meaning, that the doers of the lawe, not the hearers, are iuſtified,it nothinge helpeth them. I will not eſcape away with the ſolution of Ambroſe, that that that is therfore spoken becauſe ỹ fulfilling of the law is faith in Chriſt. For I ſee that it is but a meere ſtarting hole, which nothinge needeth where there is a broad way open. There the Apoſtle throweth downe the Iewes from fooliſh confidence, which boaſted thé ſelues of the onely knowledge of the lawe, when in the meane time they were the greateſt deſpiſers of it. Therefore that they ſhould not ſtand ſo much in their owne conceite for the bare knowledge of the law he warneth them, that if righteouſneſſe be ſought out of the law, not ỹ knowledge but the obſeruing of it is required. We verily make no dout of this that the righteouſneſſe of the law ſtandeth in works: nor yet of this alſo, that the righteouſneſſe conſiſteth in the worthineſſe and merites of workes But it is not yet proued, that we are iuſtified by workes, vnleſſe they bring forth ſome man that hath fulfilled the law. And that Paule meant none otherwiſe, the hanging together of the text ſhalbe a ſufficient teſtimony. After that he had generally condemned the Gentiles and the Iewes of vnrighteouſneſſe, then he deſcendeth to the particular ſhewinge of it, and ſaith that they which ſinned without the Law, do periſh without the law: which is ſpoken of the Gentiles: but they which haue ſinned in the law, are iudged by the law: which pertaineth to the Iewes. Nowe becauſe they winkinge at their owne treſpaſſinges proudely gloried of the only law: he adioyneth that which moſt fitly agreed, that the law was not therefore made, that men ſhould be made righteous by only hearing of the voice thereof: but then and not til then when they obeied. as if he ſhould ſay: Seekeſt thou righteouſnes in the law? alleage not ỹ hearing of it, which of it ſelfe is of ſmall importance, but bring workes, by which thou maiſt declare that the law was not ſet for thee in vaine. Of theſe workes becauſe they were all deſtitute, it followed that they were ſpoiled of gloryinge of the law. Therefore we muſt of the meaning of Paule rather frame a contrary argument. The righteouſnes of the law conſiſteth in the perfection of workes. No man can boaſt that he hath by workes ſatisfied the law. Therefore there is no righteouſnes by the law.

14 Now they alleage alſo theſe places, wherin the faithfull do boldly offer their righteouſnes to the iudgement of God to be examined, and require that ſentence be giuen of them according to it. Of which ſorte are theſe: Iudge me O Lord according to my righteouſneſſe, & according to my innocēce, which are in me. Againe, Heare my righteouſneſſe, O God. Thou haſt proued my heart, and haſt viſited it in the night, & there was no wickedneſſe found in me. Againe, The Lord ſhall render to me accordinge to my righteouſnes, and he ſhall Pſa. 7. 1. Pſal. 17. 1. Pſa. 18. 21.

recompence me according to the cleanneſſe of my handes. Becauſe I haue kept the wayes of the Lord, and haue not wickedly departed frō my God. And I ſhalbe vnſpotted and ſhal kepe me from my iniquity.

Pſa.26. 1. Againe, Iudge me, Lord, becauſe I haue walked in mine innocence. I haue not ſit with lying men, I will not entre in with thē that do wicked things. Deſtroy not my ſoule with the vngodly, my life with mē of bloode: in whoſe handes are iniquities: whoſe right hande is filled with giftes. But I haue walked innocently. I haue aboue ſpoken of the affiance which the holy ones do ſeeme ſimply to take to thēſelues of workes. As for theſe teſtimonies ẏ we haue here alleaged, they ſhal not much accombre vs if they be vnderſtanded accordinge to their compaſſe, or (as they cōmonly call it) their circūſtance. Now ẏ ſame is double. For neither would they haue them to be wholly examined that they ſhoulde be either condemned or acquited according to the continuall courſe of their whole life: but they bring into iudgement a ſpeciall cauſe to be debated. Neither do they claime to themſelues righteouſnes in reſpect of the perfection of God, but by cōpariſon of naughty & wicked men. Firſt when the iuſtifying of man is entreated of, it is not only required that he haue a good cauſe in ſome particular matter, but a certaine perpetuall agreement of righteouſneſſe in his whole life. But the holy ones, when they call vpon the iudgement of God to approue their innocēcy, do not offer themſelues free from all giltineſſe & in euery behalfe faultleſſe: but verily when they haue faſtned their affiance of ſaluation in his goodnes only, yet truſting that he is the reuenger of the poore afflicted againſt right and equity, they commend to him the cauſe wherin the innocent are oppreſſed. But when they ſette their aduerſaries with them before the iudgement ſeat of God, they boaſt not of ſuch an innocence as ſhall anſwere to ẏ purenes of God if it be ſeuerely ſearched, but becauſe in compariſon of the malice, obſtinacy, ſuttlety and wickedneſſe of their aduerſaries they know that their plainneſſe, righteouſneſſe, ſimplicity, and cleanneſſe is knowen and pleaſing to God: they feare not to call vpon him to be iudge betwene themſelues & them. So when

1.Sa.26 13. Dauid ſaid to Saul: The Lord rendre to euery man accordinge to his righteouſnes & trueth: he meant not that the Lord ſhould examine by himſelfe and reward euery man according to his deſeruinges, but he tooke the Lord to witneſſe, how great his innocency was in compariſon of the wickednes of Saul. And Paul himſelfe, when he boſteth

1.Cor.1 12. with this gloryinge that he hath a good witnes of conſcience, that he hath trauailed with ſimplicity & vprightnes in the Church of God, meaneth not that he ſtandeth vpon ſuch gloryinge before God, but being

being compelled with the ſclaunders of the wicked, he defendeth his faithful & honeſt dealing, which he knew to be pleaſing to the merciful kindnes of God, againſt all euill ſpeaking of mē whatſoeuer it be. For we ſee what he ſayth in an other place, that he knoweth no euill by himſelfe, but ẏ he is not thereby iuſtified: namely becauſe he knew that the iudgement of God far ſurmounteth the bleared ſight of mē, Howſoeuer therfore the godly do defend their innocence againſt the hypocriſie of the vngodly, by the witneſſing & iudgemēt of God: yet when they haue to do with God alone, they all crie out ẇ one mouth: If thou marke iniquity, Lord, Lord who ſhall abide it: Entre not into iudgement wirh thy ſeruantes: becauſe euery one that liueth ſhal not be iuſtified in thy ſight: and diſtruſting their owne workes, they gladly ſing, Thy goodneſſe is better than life. 1. Cor. 4. Pſa. 130 3. & 140 2. Pſa. 36. 4.

15 There are alſo other places not vnlike to theſe before, in ẅ a man may yet tary. Salomon ſaith, that he which walketh in his vprightnes, is righteous. Againe, That in the path of righteouſneſſe is life, and that in the ſame is not death. After which manner Ezechiel reporteth that he ſhal liue life that doth iudgement and righteouſnes None of theſe do we either deny or darken. But let there come forth one of the ſonnes of Adam with ſuch an vprightnes. If there be none, either they muſt periſh at the ſight of God, or flee to the ſanctuary of mercy. Nither do we in the meane time deny but that to the faithfull their vprightnes, though it be but halfe & vnperfect, is a ſtep toward immortality. But whence commeth that but becauſe whom the Lord hath taken into the couenant of grace, he ſearcheth not their works according to their deſeruings, but kiſſeth thē with fatherly kindenes? Wherby we do not only vnderſtād ẏ which the ſcholemē do teach, ẏ works haue their value of ẏ accepting grace. For they meane, ẏ works which are otherwiſe inſufficiēt to purchaſe righteouſnes by ẏ couenant of ẏ law, are by ẏ accepting of God auaūced to ẏ value of equality. But I ſay ẏ they being defiled both with other treſpaſſings & with their owne ſpottes, are of no other value at all, than inſomuch as the lord tenderly graunteth pardō to both: ẏ is to ſay, giueth free righteouſnes to mā Neither are here thoſe prayers of the Apoſtle ſeaſonably thruſt in place, where he wiſheth ſo great perfectiō to the faithful, ẏ they may be faultles & vnblamable in the day of ẏ lord. Theſe words in dede ẏ Celeſtines did in old time turmoile, to affirme a perfectiō of rtghteouſnes in this life. But, which we thinke to be ſufficient, we anſwere briefly after Auguſtin, tha all the godly ought in dede to endeuour toward this marke, ẏ they may one day appeare ſpotles & faultleſſe before ẏ face of God: but becauſe ẏ beſt & moſt excellēt maner of 15. this life is nothing but a going forward, we ſhall then and not til then attaine to this marke, when beinge vnclothed of this fleſhe of ſinne we ſhall fully cleaue to the Lord. Yet wil I not ſtiffely ſtriue with him which will giue the title of perfection to the holy ones, ſo that he alſo limit the ſame with the words of Auguſtine himſelfe. When (ſayth he) we will call the vertue of the holy ones, perfect: to the ſame perfection alſo belongeth the acknowledging of imperfectiō both in trueth and in humility.

Libr. ad Bonif. 3 cap. 7.

The xviij. Chapter.

That of the reuvarde, the righteouſneſſe of vvorkes is ill gathered.

NOwe lette vs paſſe ouer to thoſe ſayinges which affirme, that God will render to euery man accordinge to his workes: of which ſort are theſe. Euery man ſhall beare away that which he hath done in the body, either good or euill. Glory and honor to him that worketh good: trouble & diſtreſſe vpō euery ſoule of him that worketh euill. And they which haue done good thinges, ſhall go into the reſurrection of life: they which haue done euill, into the reſurrection of iudgement. Come ye bleſſed of my father: I haue hungred, and ye gaue me meate: I haue thirſted, & ye gaue me drink, &c. And with them let vs alſo ioyne theſe ſayinges, which call eternall life the reward of workes. Of which ſort are theſe. The rendring of the handes of a man ſhalbe reſtored to him. He that feareth the commaundement, ſhalbe rewarded. Be glad and reioyſe, behold, your reward is plentifull in heauen. Euery mā ſhal receiue reward according to his labor. Where it is ſayd that God ſhall render to euery man accordinge to his workes, the ſame is eaſily aſſoiled. For, that maner of ſpeakinge doth rather ſhewe the order of followinge, than the cauſe. But it is out of dout, that the Lord doth accompliſh our ſaluation by theſe degrees of his mercy, when thoſe whom he hath choſen he calleth to him: thoſe whom he hath called, he iuſtifieth: thoſe whom he hath iuſtified, he glorifieth. Although therefore he do by his only mercy receiue thē that be his into life, yet becauſe he bringeth them into the poſſeſſion thereof by the race of good workes, that he may fulfill his worke in them by ſuch order as he hath appointed: it is no maruell if it be ſaid that they be crowned according to their workes, by which without dout they are prepared to receiue the crowne of immortality. Yea and after this maner it is fitly ſayd that they worke their owne ſaluation, when in applying themſelues to good workes, they practiſe themſelues towarde eternall life: namely as in an other byandby afterward added: Which the sonne of man shall giue you.

Wherby appeareth ẏ the word of Working is not set as contrary to grace, but is referred to endeuour: & therfore it foloweth not, ẏ either the faithful are thẽselues authors of their owne saluation, or that the same procedeth from their workes. How then? So soone as they are taken into the felowship of Christ, by the knowledge of the Gospel, & the enlightning of the holy Ghost, eternall life is begonne in thẽ.
Nowe the same good worke which God hath begonne in thẽ, must Phil. 1.

2 There is no cause why we should of the name of rewarde gather an argument that our workes are the cause of saluation. First let this be determined in our heartes, that the kingdom of heauẽ is not a reward of seruants, but an inheritance of children, which they only shal heritance. We see how they do as it were by expresse wordes prouide that we impute not eternal blessednes to workes, but to the adoption of God. Why therfore do they therewithall together make mention of workes? This question shalbe made plaine with one example of Scripture. Before the birth of Isaac, there was promised to Abraham a Gen. 15.

sandes of the sea, & other like. In many yeares afterward, Abraham, as he was commaunded by the oracle, prepared himselfe to offer vp his sonne in sacrifice. When he had performed this obedience, he receiued a promise. I haue sworne by my self (saith the Lord) becaus Gen. 22 thou hast done this thing, & hast not spared thine owne only begot- 3 & 17.
ten sonne, I wil blesse thee & multiply thy seede as the starres of the skie, & the sandes of the sea: thy seede shal possesse the gates of their enemies, and all the nations of the earth shalbe blessed in thy seede, because thou hast obeied my voice. What heare we? Hath Abraham by his obedience deserued the blessinge, the promise whereof he had receiued before that the commaundement was giuen? Here verily we haue it without circumstances shewed, ỹ the lord rewardeth the works of the faithful with those benefites which he had already giuen them before that the workes were thought of, hauing, yet no cause why he should do good to them but his owne mercy.

3 Yet doth the Lord not deceiue nor mocke vs when he saith that he rendreth for reward to works the same thing which he had before workes freely giuen. For, because he wil haue vs to be exercised with good workes, to thinke vpon the deliuery or enioyinge (as I may so call it) of these things which he hath promised, and to runne through them to the blessed hope set before vs in heauen, the frute of the promises is also rightly assigned to them, to the ripenesse wherof they do not bring vs. The Apostle very fitly expressed both these pointes, whē he sayd that the Colossians apply themselues to the dueties of charity, for the hope which is laied vp for them in heauen, of which they Colo.1. 4. had before heard by the word of the true speaking Gospel. For when he sayth that they knewe by the Gospell, that there was hope layd vp for them in heauen, he declareth that the same is by Christ only, not vnderpropped with any workes. Wherwith accordeth that saying of 1.Pe.1. 5. Peter, that the godly are kept by the power of God, through faith, vnto the saluation which is ready to be manifestly shewed at the time appointed for it. Whē he sayth that they labor for it, he signifieth that the faithful must runne all the time of their life, that they may attaine to it. But least we shoulde thinke that the reward which the Lord promiseth vs, is not reduced to the measure of merite, he did put foorth a Mat.12. 1. parable, in which he made himself a householder, which sent all them that he met, to the trimming of his vineyard, some at the first houre of the day, some at ỹ second, some at ỹ third, yea & some also at the 11. At eueninge he payed to euery one egall wages. The exposition of which parable, that same old wryter whatsoeuer he was, whose booke is caried abroade vnder the name of Ambrose of the callinge of the Gentiles, hath briefely and truely set out. I will vse rather his wordes
Li.1.ca 3. than mine owne. The Lorde (sayth he) by the rule of this comparison hath stablished the diuersity of manifolde calling, belonginge to one grace: where without dout they which being let into the vineyard at the 11. houre, are made egall with them that had wrought the whole day, do represent the estate of them, whom for the aduancing of the excellency of grace, the tender kindenes of the lord hath rewarded

at the waning of the day, and at the endinge of their life: not payinge wages for their labour, but pouring out the richesse of his goodnesse vpon them whom he hath chosen without workes, that euen they also which haue swet in great labour, and haue receiued no more than the last, may vnderstand that they haue receiued a gift of grace, not a reward of workes. Last of all, this also is worthy to be noted in these places, where eternall life is called the reward of workes, that it is not simply taken for the cõmunicating which we haue with God to blessed immortality, when he embraceth vs with fatherly good will in Christ: but for the possessing or enioying (as they call it) of blessednes, as also the very words of Christ do sound, In time to come life euerlasting. And in an other place, Come & possesse the kingdom, &c. After this maner Paul calleth adoptiõ, the reuealing of the adoption which shalbe made in the resurrection: and afterward expoundeth it the redemption of our body. Otherwise as estranginge from God is eternall death, so when man is receiued of God into fauour, that he may enioy the communicatinge of him & be made one with him, he is receiued from death to life: which is done by the beneficial meane of adoptiõ only. And if, as they are wont, they stiffely enforce the reward of works, we may turne against them that sayinge of Peter, that eternall life is the reward of faith.

Mat. 10. 30. Mat. 25. 34. Rom. 8. 18. 1. Pe. 1. 9.

4 Therefore let vs not thinke, that the holy Ghost doth with such promise set forth the worthinesse of our workes, as if they deserued such reward, For ỹ Scripture leaueth nothing to vs, whereof we may be aduaunced in the sight of God. But rather it wholly endeuoreth to beate downe our arrogance, to humble vs, to throw vs downe, and altogether to breake vs in peeces. But our weakenes is so succoured, which otherwise would byandby slip & fall downe, vnlesse it did sustaine it selfe with this expectation, and mitigate her tedious grieues with comfort. First how hard it is for a mã to forsake & deny not only all his thinges, but also himselfe, let euery man consider for himselfe. And yet with this introductiõ Christ traineth his schollers, that is, all the godly. Then throughout all their life he so instructeth thẽ vnder the discipline of the crosse, that they may not set their heart either to the desire or cõfidence of present good things. Briefly he so handleth them for the most part, that which way soeuer they turne their eies throughout the whole wideneſse of the worlde, they haue on euery side nothing but desperation present before them: so that Paule sayth, that we are more miserable then all men if our hope be onely in this world. That they shoulde not faint in these so great distresses, the lord is present with them, which putteth them in mind to lift vp

1.Cor. 15 19 their heade hier, to call their eies further, ỳ they finde with him the bleſſednes which they ſee not in ỳ world. This bleſſednes he calleth, reward, wages, recompenſe, not weying the merit of workes, but ſignifying that it is a recõpenſing to their troubles, ſufferinges, ſclaunders. &c. Wherfore nothing withſtandeth, but ỳ we may after the example of the Scripture, call eternall life a rewarding, becauſe in it the Lord receiueth his from labors into reſt, frõ afflictiõ into proſperous & happy ſtate, from ſorrow into gladnes, from pouerty into flowinge wealth, frõ ſhame into glory, & changeth al the euils which they haue ſuffred for greater good things. So it ſhal alſo be no inconuenience, if we thinke holines of life to be a way, not which openeth an entry into the glory of the heauenly kingdom, but whereby the elect are led Rom. 8. 30. of their God into ỳ diſcloſing of it: foraſmuch as this is his good will, to glorifie them whom he hath ſanctified. Only let vs not imagine a correllatiõ of merit & reward, wherin the Sophiſters do fondly ſtick faſt, becauſe they conſider not this end which we ſet forth. But how vnorderly is it, whẽ the lord calleth vs to one end, for vs to loke to an other? Nothinge is more euident, than that rewarde is promiſed to good workes, to relieue the weakeneſſe of our fleſh with ſome conforte, not to puffe vp our mindes with glory. Whoſoeuer therefore doth therby gather the merit of works, or doth in one balance weye worke with reward, he erreth farre from the right marke of God.

2.Tim.4 8. Aug. ad Valent. de gra. & lib. arbit. 5 Wherfore when the Scripture ſaith that God the iuſt iudge wil one day render to his a crowne of righteouſneſſe, I do not only take exception with Auguſtine, and ſay: To whom ſhould he being a iuſt iudge, render a crowne, if he had not beinge a mercifull father giuen grace? and how ſhould there be righteouſnes, vnleſſe grace went before which iuſtifieth the vnrighteous? How ſhould theſe due thinges be rendered, vnleſſe theſe vndue thinges were firſt giuen? But alſo I adde an other thinge. Howe ſhould he impute righteouſneſſe to our workes, vnleſſe his tender mercifulneſſe did hide the vnrighteouſnes that is in them? How ſhould he iudge them worthy of reward, vnleſſe he did by immeaſurable bountifulneſſe take away that which is worthy of puniſhment? For he is wont to call eternall life, grace: becauſe it is rẽdred to the free gifts of God when it is repaied to works. But the Scripture doth further humble vs, and therwithall raiſe vs vp. For beſide this that it forbiddeth vs to glory in workes, becauſe they are the free giſts of God, it therewithall teacheth that they are alway defiled with ſome dregges, that they can not ſatisfie God, if they be examined by the rule of his iudgement: but leaſt our courage ſhould faint, it teacheth ỳ they pleaſe by only pardõ. But although Auguſtine

speaketh somwhat otherwise than we do: yet that he doth not so disagree in the matter, shall appeare by his words in his third booke to Boniface. Where when he had cõpared two men together, the one of a life euen miraculously holy & perfect, the other honest in dede & of vncorrupt maners, but not so perfect but that much wanteth in him: at ỹ last he concludeth thus. Euen this man which in maners seemeth much inferiour, by reason of the true faith in God whereof he liueth and according to which he accuseth himselfe in all his offenses, in all his good workes praiseth God, giuinge to himselfe the shame, & to him the glory, & taking from himselfe both the pardon of sinnes, & the loue of weldoinges, when he is to be deliuered out of this life, he passeth into the fellowship of Christ. Wherefore, but because of faith? Which although it saue no man without workes (for it is it, which worketh by loue, not a reprobat faith) yet by it also sinnes are released, because the righteous man liueth of faith: but without it euen the same which seeme good works are turned into sinnes. Here verily he doth plainly confesse ỹ which we so much trauaile to proue, that the righteousnes of good workes hangeth hervpon, that they are by pardon allowed of God. Cap 5. Hab. 2. 4.

6 A very neare sense to the places aboue recited, haue these: Make to your selues friends of the Mammon of wickednes, that when you shal faile, they may receiue you into euerlastinge tabernacles. Commaunde the rich men of this world not to be proudly minded, nor to trust in vncertaine richesse but in the liuinge God, to do well, to become riche in good workes, to lay vp in store for themselues a good fundation against the time to come, that they may obtaine eternall life. For good works are compared to the richesse, which we may enioy in the blessednesse of eternall life. I answere, that we shall neuer come to the true vnderstãding of them, vnlesse we turne our eies to the marke wherunto the holy Ghost directeth his words. If it be true which Christ saith, that our minde abideth there where our treasure is, as the childrẽ of ỹ world are wont to be earnestly bent to the getting of those things which serue for the delites of this present life: so the faithfull must looke, sith they haue learned that this life shal byandby vanish away like a dreame, that they send those thinges which they would enioy, thither where they shal haue perfect life. We must therfore do as they do which purpose to remoue into any place, wher they haue chosen to rest their whole life. They sende their goods before, & do not miscõtentedly want thẽ for a time: becaus they think themselues so much more happy, how much more goods they haue where they shal tary long. If we beleue that heauen is our countrey, it Luk. 16. 9. 1. Tim. 6 17.

behoueth vs rather to sende away our richesse thither than to keepe thē here where we must loose them with sudden remouing. But how Mat.25. 40. shal we send them thither? If we cōmunicate to the necessities of the poore: to whom whatsoeuer is giuen, the lord accompteth it giuen to Pro.19. 17. himselfe. Wherupon cōmeth that notable promise. He that giueth to the poore, lendeth for gaine to the Lorde. Againe he that liberally
2.Cor.9 6. soweth, shall liberally reape. For those things are deliuered into the hand of the lord to kepe, which are bestowed vpō our brethrē by the duety of charity. He, as he is a faithful keper of ỹ which is deliuered to him, wil one day restore it with plentiful gaine. Are thē our duetifull doings of so great value with God, that they be as richesse laid vp in store for vs in his hand? Who shal feare so to say, when the Scripture doth so of: & plainly witnesse it? But if any man will leape from the mere goodnes of God to the worthines of works, he shalbe nothing holpen by these testimonies to the stablishing of his errour. For you can gather nothing rightly therof but the mere inclination of Gods tendernes toward vs: forasmuch as to encourage vs to well doing although the seruices which we do to him are not worthy of so much as his only looking vpon thē, yet he suffreth none of them to be lost.

7 But they more enforce the words of the Apostle, which when he comforteth the Thessalonias in troubles, teacheth that the same
2 The.1 5. are sent to them, ỹ they may be accōpted worthy of the kingdom of God, for which they suffer. For (saith he) it is righteous with God, to render trouble to thē ỹ trouble you: but to you, rest with vs when the lord Iesus shalbe shewed from heauen. But the author of the epistle
Hebr.6. 10. to the Hebrues saith, God is not vnrighteous, ỹ he should forget your worke, & ỹ loue which you haue shewed in his name for ỹ you haue ministred to the saintes. To the first place I answere, that there is no
Rom.8. 29. worthines of merit spoken of: but becausse God ỹ father willeth that we whom he hath chosen to be his children, should be made like to Luk.24 26. Christ his first begottē sonne: as it behoued that he should first suffer, Act.4. 22. & thē entre into the glory appointed for him: so must we also by many tribulations entre into the kingdome of heauen. Therfore when we suffer tribulatiōs for the name of Christ, there are as it were certaine marks printed vpon vs, wherwith God vseth to marke the shepe
Gala.6. 17. of his flocke. After this maner therfore we are accompted worthy of the kingdom of God, becausse we beare in our body ỹ markes of our lord & maister which are the signes of the children of God. To this 1.Cor.4 10. purpose make these sayinges. That we beare about in our body the mortification of Iesus Christ ỹ his life may be shewed in vs. That we be fashioned like to his suffrings, that we may come to the likenes of his resurrectiō from the dead. The reason which is adioyned serueth not to proue any worthines, but to confirme ỹ hope of the kingdom of God: as if he had said, As it agreeth with the iust iudgemēt of God, to take vengeance of your enemies for the vexations that they haue done to you: so agreeth it also to giue to you release & rest from vexations. The other place, which teacheth that it so becommeth the righteousnesse of God not to forget the obediences of them that be his, that it declareth it to be in a maner vnrighteous if he should forget thē, hath this meaning: God to quicken our slouthfulnes, hath giuen vs assurance that the labor shall not be vaine which we shal take for his glory. Let vs alway remēber ỹ this promise, as all other should bring vs no profit, vnlesse the free couenaunt of mercy went before, wherupon the whole assurednes of our saluation should rest. But standing vpon that couenant, we ought assuredly to trust, there shall also not want reward of the liberality of God to our workes howesoeuer they be vnworthy. The Apostle to confirme vs in that expectation, affirmeth ỹ God is not vnrighteous, but will stande to his promise ones made. Therefore this righteousnes is rather referred to the trueth of Gods promise, thā to his iustice of rendring due. According to which meaning there is a notable saying of Augustin, which as the holy mā sticketh not to rehearse oftē as notable, so I thinke it not vnworthy that we should continually remēber it. The lord (saith he) is faithfull, which hath made himselfe detter to vs, not by receiuing any thing of vs, but by promising all things to vs. In psal. 32. and 109.

8 There are also alleaged these sayings of Paul. If I haue all faith, so that I remoue mountaines out of their place, but haue not charity, I am nothing. Againe, Now there remaine hope, faith & charity, but the greatest among these is charity. Againe, Aboue all thinges haue charity, which is the bonde of perfection. By the first two places our Pharises affirme that we are rather iustified by charity than by faith, namely by the chiefer vertue as they say. But this fonde argument is easily wiped away. For we haue in an other place already declared, that those things which are spokē in the first place pertaine nothing to true faith. The other place we also expounde of true faith, than which he sayth that Charity is greater: not that it is more meritorius, but because it is more frutefull, because it extendeth further, because it serueth mo, because it remaineth alway in force, whereas the vse of faith cōtinueth but for a time. If we haue regard to excellēce, the loue of God should worthily haue ỹ chiefe place, of which Paule here speaketh not. For he enforceth this thing only, ỹ we should with mutuall charity edifie one an other in ỹ Lord, but let vs imagine that 1. Cor. 13. Colo. 3. 14.

charity doth euery way excell faith: yet what man of ſounde iudgement, yea or of ſounde braine, will gather thereof that it doth more iuſtifie? The power of iuſtifying which faith hath, conſiſteth not in the worthineſſe of the worke. Our iuſtification ſtandeth vpon the onely mercy of God & the deſeruing of Chriſt, which iuſtificatiō whē faith taketh holde of, it is ſaid to iuſtifie. Now if you aske our aduerſaries in what ſenſe they aſſigne iuſtification to charity, they wil anſwere that becauſe it is a duetifull doing acceptable to God, therefore by the deſeruing thereof righteouſneſſe is imputed to vs by the acceptation of the goodnes of God. Here you ſee how wel the argument procedeth. We ſay that faith iuſtifieth, not becauſe by the worthines of it ſelfe it deſerueth righteouſnes to vs, but becauſe it is an inſtrument by which we freely obtain ỹ righteouſnes of Chriſt. Theſe mē, omitting ỹ mercy of God, and paſſing ouer Chriſt, (where the ſumme of righteouſneſſe ſtandeth) do affirme that we are iuſtified by the benefit of charity becauſe it excelleth aboue faith: euen as if a man woulde reaſon that a king is fitter to make a ſhooe thā is a ſhooemaker, becauſe he is an infinite way more excellent. This onely argument is a plaine example that all the Sobornicall ſchooles do not ſo much as taſt with the vttermoſt part of their lippes what the iuſtification of faith is. But if any wrangler do yet carpe and aske, why in ſo ſmall diſtance of place we take the name of faith in Paule ſo diuerſly: I haue a weighty cauſe of this expoſition. For ſith thoſe gifts which Paule rehearſeth are after a certaine maner vnder faith & hope, becauſe they pertaine to ỹ knowledge of God, he cōtemneth thē all by way of recapitulatiō vnder the name of faith & hope: as if he ſhould ſay bothe prophecy, & tōgues, & the grace and knowledge of interpretation tende to this marke to lead vs to the knowledge of God, And we know God in this life none otherwiſe but by hope & faith. Therfore when I name faith & hope, I comprehende all theſe thinges together. And ſo there remaine theſe three, Hope, Faith, Charity: that is to ſay, how great diuerſity of gifts ſoeuer there be, they are all referred to theſe. Among theſe the chief is charity, &c. Out of the thirde place they gather, If Charity be the bonde of perfection, then it is alſo the bonde of righteouſneſſe which is nothinge elſe but perfection. Firſt, to ſpeake nothinge howe Paule there calleth perfection, when the members of the Church well ſet in order do cleaue together, & to graunt that we are by charity made perfect before God: yet what newe thinge bringe they foorth? For I will alway on the contrary ſide take exception and ſay that we neuer come to this perfection vnleſſe we fulfil all the partes of charity, and thereupon I wil gather, that ſith all men are moſt far frō the fulfilling

of charitie, therefore all hope of perfection is cutt of from them.

9 I will not go through all the testimonies which at this day the fooliſh Sorboniſtes raſhly ſnatch out of the ſcriptures, as they firſt come to hande, and do throwe them againſt vs. For, ſome of them are ſo worthy to be laughed at, that I my ſelfe alſo can not rehearſe them, vnleſſe I would worthily be compted fond. Therefore I will make an ende, when I ſhal haue declared the ſaying of Chriſt, wherewith they maruelouſly pleaſe themſelues. For, to the lawyer which aſked him what was neceſſarie to ſaluation, he anſwered: if thou wilt entre into liſe, kepe the commaundementes. What wold we more (ſay they) when we are commaunded by the author of grace himſelfe to get the kingdom of God by the keping of his commaundementes? As though forſooth it were not certaine, that Chriſt tẽpered his aunſweres to them with whom he ſaw that he had to do. Here a doctor of the lawe aſketh of the meane to obteine bleſſednes, and not that onely, but with doing of what thing men may atteine vnto it. Both the perſon of him that ſpake and the queſtion it ſelfe led the Lord ſo to anſwer. The lawyer being filled with the perſuaſion of the righteouſneſſe of the lawe, was blinde in cõfidence of workes. Againe, he ſought nothing els but what were the workes of righteouſneſſe, by which ſaluation is gotten. Therefore he is worthily ſent to the lawe, in which there is a perfect mirror of righteouſneſſe. We alſo do with a loude voice pronounce that the commaundementes muſt be kept, if life be ſought in works. And this doctrine is neceſſary to be knowen of Chriſtians. For how ſhould they flee to Chriſt if they did not acknowledge that they are fallen from the way of life into the hedlonge downefall of death? But how ſhould they vnderſtand how far they haue ſtrayed from the way of life, vnleſſe they firſt vnderſtande what is that way of life? For then they are taught that the ſanctuarie to recouer ſaluation, is in Chriſt, when they ſee howe great difference there is betwene their life and the righteouſneſſe of God which is conteined in the keping of the law. The ſumme is this, that if ſaluation be ſought in workes, we muſt kepe the commaundementes by which we are inſtructed to perfect righteouſneſſe. But we muſt not ſticke faſt here, vnleſſe we will faint in our midde courſe: for none of vs is able to kepe the commaundements. Sith therefore we are excluded from the righteouſnes of the lawe, we muſt of neceſſity reſort to an other helpe, namely to the faith of Chriſt. Wherefore as here the Lorde calleth backe the doctor of the lawe whom he knew to ſwell with vaine confidence of workes, to the lawe, whereby he may learne that he is a ſinner ſubiect to the dreadfull iudgement of

Mat 19. 17.

eternall death: ſo in other places, without making mẽtion of the law, he comforteth other that are already humbled with ſuch knowledge,
Mat. 11. 28. with promiſe of grace, as, Come to mee all ye that laboure and are loden, and I will refreſh you, and ye ſhall finde reſt for your ſoules.

10 At the laſt when they are weary with wreſting the Scripture, they fall to ſuttleties and ſophiſticall argumentes. They cauill vpon this that faith is in ſome places called a worke, and thereupon they
Iohn. 6. 29. gather that we do wrõgfully ſet faith as cõtrary to workes. As though forſoth faith in that it is an obeying of the will of God, doth with her owne deſeruinge procure vnto vs righteouſneſſe, and not rather bycauſe by embracing the mercie of God, it ſealeth in our heartes the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt offred to vs of it in the preaching of the Goſpell. The readers ſhall pardon me if I do not tarry vpon confuting of ſuch follies, for they themſelues without any aſſault of other, are ſufficiently ouerthrowen with their owne feebleneſſe. But I will by the way cõfute one obiection which ſeemeth to haue ſome ſhew of reaſon, leaſt it ſhould trouble ſome that are not ſo well practiſed. Sith common reaſon teacheth that of contraries is all one rule, and all particular ſinnes are imputed to vs for vnrighteouſneſſe, they ſay it is meete that to all particular good workes be geuen the praiſe of righteouſnes. They do not ſatisfie me which anſwer, that the damnation of men proprely proceedeth from only vnbelefe, not from particular ſinnes. I do in deede agree to them, that vnbelefe is the fountaine and roote of all euels. For it is the firſt departinge from God, after which do followe the particular treſpaſſinges againſt the lawe. But wheras they ſeeme to ſet one ſelfe ſame reaſon of good and euell workes in weying of righteouſneſſe or vnrighteouſneſſe, therein I am compelled to diſagree from them For the righteouſnes of workes is the perfecte obedience of the lawe. Therefore thou canſt not be righteous by workes, vnleſſe thou do followe it as a ſtreight line in the whole continuall courſe of thy life. From it ſo ſone as thou haſt ſwarued, thou arte fallen into vnrighteouſneſſe. Hereby appeareth that righteouſneſſe commeth not of one or a fewe workes, but of an vnſwaruing and vnwearied obſeruing of the will of God. But the rule of iudging vnrighteouſneſſe is moſt contrary. For he that hath committed fornication, or hath ſtolen, is by one offence gilty of death, becauſe he hath offended againſt the maieſtie of God. Therefore theſe our ſuttle arguers do ſtumble, for that they marke not this ſaying of Iam. 2. 10. Iames, that he which ſinneth in one, is made gilty of all, becauſe he that hath forbidden to kill, hath alſo forbidden to ſteale, &c. Therefore it ought to ſeeme no abſurditie when we ſay that death is the iuste rewarde of euery sinne, because they are euery one worthy of the iuste displeasure and vengeance of God. But thou shalt reason foolishely, if on the contrarie side thou gather that by one good worke man may be reconciled to God, which with many sinnes deserueth his wrathe.

The xix. Chapter.

Of Christian libertie.

NOwe we must entreate of Christian libertie: the declaration whereof he must not omitt whose purpose is to comprehend in an abridgmēt the summe of the doctrine of the Gospell. For it is a thing principally necessarie, and without the knowledge whereof conscience dare in a manner enterprise nothing without doubting, they stumble and start backe in many things, they alway stagger & tremble: but specially it is an appendant of iustification, and availeth not a little to the vnderstanding of the strength thereof. Yea they that earnestly feare God, shall hereby receiue an incomparable frute of that doctrine which the wicked & Lucianicall men do pleasantly taunt with their scoffes, because in the spirituall darkenesse wherewith they be taken, euery wanton railing is lawefull for them. Wherefore it shall nowe come forth in fit season: and it was profitable to differre to this place the plainer discorsing of it, (for we haue already in diuers places lightly touched it) because so sone as any mention is brought in of Christian libertie, then either filthy lustes do boile, or mad motions do arise, vnlesse these wanton wittes be timely met withall, which do otherwise most naughtily corrupte the best things. For, some men by pretense of this libertie, shake of all obedience of God, and breake forth into an vnbridled licentiousnesse: and some men disdaine it, thinking that by it all moderation, ordre and choise of things is taken away. What should we here do, being compassed in such narrowe streightes? Shall we bidde Christian libertie farewell, and so cutt of all fitt occasion for such periles? But, as we haue said, vnlesse that be fast holden, neither Christ, nor the truth of the Gospell, nor the inward peace of the soule is rightly knowen. Rather we must endeuour that so necessarie a part of doctrine be not suppressed, and yet that in the meane time those fonde obiections may be mette withall which are wont to rise thereupon.

Lucia, a godles man.

2 Christian libertie (as I thinke) consisteth in three partes. The first, that the consciences of the faithfull, when the affiance of their iustification before God is to be sought, may raise & aduaunce themselues aboue the lawe, and forget the whole righteousnesse of the

lawe. For ſith the lawe (as we haue already in an other place declared) leaueth no man righteous: either we are excluded from all hope of iuſtification, or we muſt be looſed from the lawe, and ſo that there be no regarde at all hadde of workes. For whoſo thinketh that he muſt bring ſomwhat be it neuer ſo little of good workes to obteine righteouſneſſe, he can not apointe any ende or meaſure of them, but maketh him ſelfe detter to the whole lawe. Therfore taking away all mention of the lawe, and laying aſide all thinking vpon workes, we muſt embrace the onely mercie of God, when we entreate of iuſtification: & turning away our ſight from our ſelues, we muſt behold Chriſt alone. For there the queſtion is not howe we be righteous: but howe although we be vnrighteous and vnworthy, we be taken for worthy. Of which thing if conſciences will atteine any certainty, they muſt geue no place to the lawe. Neither can any man hereby gather that the lawe is ſuperfluous to the faithfull, whom it doth not therefore ceaſſe to teach, and exhorte, and pricke forwarde to goodneſſe, although before the iudgement ſeate of God it hath no place in their conſciences. For theſe two things, as they are moſt diuerſe, ſo muſt be well and diligently diſtinguiſhed of vs. The whole life of Ephe. 1. 4 Chriſtians ought to be a certaine meditation of godlineſſe, bycauſe they are called into ſanctification. Herein ſtandeth the office of the 1. Theſ. 4. 3. lawe, that by putting them in minde of their duetie, it ſhould ſtir them vp to the endeuor of holineſſe and innocencie. But when conſciences are carefull howe they may haue God mercifull, what they ſhall anſwer, and vpon what affiance they ſhall ſtand if they be called to his iudgement, there is not to be reckened what the lawe requireth, but onely Chriſt muſt be ſet forth for righteouſneſſe, which paſſeth all perfection of the lawe.

3 Vpon this point hangeth almoſt all the argumēt of the Epiſtle to the Galathians. For, that they be fonde expoſiters which teach that Paule there contendeth onely for the libertie of ceremonies, may be proued by the places of the arguments. Of which ſort are Gala. 3. 13. and 5. 1. theſe. That Chriſt was made a curſe for vs, that he might redeme vs from the curſe of the lawe. Againe, Stand faſt in the libertie wherewith Chriſt hath made you free, and be not againe entangled with the yoke of bondage. Beholde, I Paule ſay, if ye be circumciſed, Chriſt ſhall nothing profit you. And he which is circumciſed is dettor of the whole lawe. Chriſt is made idle to you whoſoeuer ye be that are iuſtified by the lawe: ye are fallen away from grace. Wherin truely is cōteined ſome hier thing than the libertie of ceremonies. I graunt in deede that Paule there entreateth of ceremonies, becauſe he contendeth tendeth with ỹ false Apostles, which went about to bring againe into the Christian Church the old shadowes of law which were abolished by the cõming of Christ. But for the discussing of this question, there were hier places to be disputed, in which the whole controuersie stoode. First because by those Iewish shadowes the brightnesse of the Gospell was darkened, he sheweth that we haue in Christ a full geuing in deede of all those things which were shadowed by the ceremonies of Moses Secondly, because those deceiuers filled the people with a most noughty opinion, namely that this obedience auailed to deserue the fauor of God: Here he standeth much vpon this point, that the faithfull should not thinke that they can by any works of the law, much lesse by those litle principles, obteine righteousnesse before God. And therewithall he teacheth, that they are by the crosse of Christ free from the damnation of the lawe, which otherwise hangeth ouer all men, that they should with full assurednesse rest in Christ alone. Which place proprely perteineth to this purpose. Last of all he mainteineth to the cõsciences of the faithfull their libertie, that they shoulde not be bound with any religion in things not necessarie. Gala.4. 30.

4 The second part, which hangeth vpon that former part, is that consciences obey the lawe, not as compelled by the necessitie of the lawe: but being free from the yoke of the lawe it selfe, of their owne accord they obey the will of God. For, because they abide in perpetuall terrors, so long as they be vnder the dominion of the lawe, they shall neuer be with cherefull redinesse framed to the obedience of God, vnlesse they first haue this libertie geuen them. By an example we shall both more briefly, and more plainely perceiue what these things meane. The commaundement of the lawe is, that we loue our God with all our heart, with all our soule, with all our strengths. That this may be done, our soule must firste be made voide of all other sense and thought, our heart must be cleansed of all desires, all our strengths must be gathered vp and drawen together to this onely purpose. They which haue gone most far before other in the way of the Lord, are yet very far from this marke. For though they loue God with their minde, and with sincere affection of heart, yet they haue still a great part of their heart and soule possessed with the desires of the flesh, by which they are drawen backe and stayed from going forward with hasty course to God. They do in deede trauaile forward with great endeuor: but the flesh partly febleth their strengths, and partly draweth them to it selfe. What shall they here do, when they fele that they do nothing lesse than performe the lawe? They will, Deu. 6. 5.

they couet, they endeuor, but nothing with ſuch perfection as ought to be. If they loke vpon the lawe, they ſee that whatſoeuer worke they attempt or purpoſe, is accurſed. Neither is there any cauſe why any man ſhould deceiue himſelf with gathering that the worke is therefore not altogether euell, bycauſe it is vnperfect: and therefore that God doth neuertheleſſe accept that good which is in it. For, the lawe requiring perfect loue, cõdemneth all imperfection, vnleſſe the rigor of it be mitigated. Therefore his workes ſhould fall to nought which he would haue to ſeme partly good: and he ſhall finde that it is a tranſgreſſion of the lawe, euen in this becauſe it is vnperfect.
